

POOR LAW REFORM COMMISSION (IRELAND).

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE THE

VICE-REGAL COMMISSION

ON

POOR LAW REFORM IN IRELAND.

VOLUME III.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE AND INDEX.

Presented to both Houses of Parliament by Command of His Majesty.

DUBLIN:

PRINTED FOR HIS MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE,
BY ALEXANDER THOM AND CO. (LIMITED).

And to be purchased, either directly or through any Bookseller, from
E. POSSONBY, 116, Grafton-street, Dublin; or WYMAN and SONS, (LTD.), Fetter-lane, E.C., and 82, Abingdon-street, Westminster, S.W.; or OLIVER and BORN, Edinburgh.

1906.

[Cd. 8204.] Price 8s. 1d.

CONTENTS OF THIS VOLUME.

	PAGE
LIST OF WITNESSES, ...	iii
MINUTES OF EVIDENCE,	1
ADDENDUM, ...	992
INDEX TO EVIDENCE, ...	993

CONTENTS OF VOLUMES ISSUED BY THE COMMISSION.

- VOL. I.—REPORT.
- VOL. II.—APPENDIX.
- VOL. III.—MINUTES OF EVIDENCE AND INDEX

POOR LAW REFORM COMMISSION (IRELAND).

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF WITNESSES.

NAME.	Where examined.	Number of Answers.
A
ADKINS, JOHN, ...	Armagh, ...	9310-13
ADAMS, THOMAS, B., ...	Londonderry, ...	756-880
ADAMS, WILLIAM, ...	Tallamore, ...	12318-323
AGNEW, DR. SAMUEL, ...	Armagh, ...	6835-79
ALLEN, ROBERT, ...	Belfast, ...	10282-408
ANDREWS, Right Hon. THOMAS, ...	Downpatrick, ...	12110-282
ANDERSON, GEO., ...	Enniskillen, ...	6848-79
ARMSTRONG, SAMUEL, ...	Do., ...	6880-8
ATKINSON, A., ...	Rosbridge, ...	11702-44
B
BARNETT, Alderman, Lord Mayor of Cork, ...	Cork, ...	25365-81
BARRINGTON, J. B., ...	Lisodick, ...	25623-64
BARRINGTON, MRS., ...	Do., ...	25664-69
BEACON, DR., ...	Newry, ...	12267-26
BEE, SAMUEL, ...	Beckfridge, ...	11726-408
BEGGIE, ALEX., ...	Schindell, ...	22069-66
BELL, DR. ELEANOR, ...	Belfast, ...	10282-707
Do., ...	Newry, ...	12143-66
BELL, W. R., ...	Do., ...	22155-97
BELMORE, Earl of, ...	Brackishan, ...	6141-223
BENNETT, GEO., ...	Dublin, ...	301-15
BLACK, ALEX., ...	Belfast, ...	10110-39
BLAIR, EDWARD, ...	Bantry, ...	28970-88
BORRITT, WILLIAM, ...	Dublin, ...	16593-634
BORRITT, THOMAS, ...	Waterford, ...	16630-77
BOYD, J. D., ...	Londonderry, ...	1207-028
BOYD, JOHN, ...	Belfast, ...	16357-94
BOYLE, C., ...	Lettickenny, ...	4032-3
BOYLE, JAMES, ...	Dunmurry, ...	4174-97
BRADFORD, WILLIAM, ...	Newry, ...	11993-12027
BRADSHAW, DR., ...	Carrick-on-Shannon, ...	and p. 415
BRADY, MICHAEL, ...	Cavan, ...	22003-30
BRADY, DR., ...	Wicklow, ...	8632-45
BRASHEAR-CRAIG, L., ...	Mallow, ...	10432-3
BRENNAN, HENRY, ...	Sligo, ...	93351-78
BRENNAN, PATRICK, ...	Ballyshannon, ...	22005-3
BROWN, MRS. ELLEN MARY, ...	Bantry, ...	22006-32
BROWN, WILLIAM, ...	Londonderry, ...	4301-21
BROWN, B. J., ...	Nam., ...	28833-74
BROWN, MICHAEL, ...	Castibar, ...	28973-3
BROWN, DR. D. J., ...	Londonderry, ...	1630-709
BROWN, FRAS., ...	Longford, ...	17365-320
BRYAN, T., ...	Belfast, ...	23828-35
BUCHANAN, MRS., ...	Dublin, ...	1613-58
BURKE, DANIEL, ...	Bantry, ...	12003-87
BURKE, RICHARD, ...	Omagh, ...	16691-144
BURKE, EDWARD, ...	Tallamore, ...	16633-61
BURKE, THOMAS, ...	Nenagh, ...	399-412
BURKE, PATRICK, ...	Lisnakeilly, ...	28802-32
BUTLER, JOHN, ...	Clonsilla, ...	6217-43
BUTLER, LAURENCE, ...	Nenagh, ...	15704-34
BYRNE, JOHN, ...	Dublin, ...	22023-37
BYRNE, MICHAEL, ...	Wicklow, ...	22705-192
BYRNE, E. J., ...	Do., ...	21173-312
BYRNE, MICHAEL, ...	Waterford, ...	22668-91
BYRNE, THOMAS, ...	Galway, ...	16165-475 &
C
CALLAN, DR. MICHAEL, ...	Danish, ...	11319
CAMPBELL, J. R., ...	Belfast, ...	16326-420
CAMPBELL, CHARLES, ...	Downpatrick, ...	19421-32
CARLSON, OWEN, ...	Castibary, ...	19441
CARNEY, PATRICK, ...	Kilmarney, ...	20561-5
CARLSON, JOHN, ...	Uphill, ...	24478-525
CARLSON, T., ...	Nam., ...
CARR, MICHAEL, ...	Galway, ...
CARR, DR., ...	Lettickenny, ...
CARRON, PHILIP, ...	Do., ...

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF WITNESSES—continued.

Name.	Where examined.	Number of Answers.
CASEY, MICHAEL, ...	Longford, ...	15143-94
CASEY, PATRICK, ...	Ennis, ...	25223-47
CASHIN, SAMUEL, ...	Londonberry, ...	13486-64
CATCHEARE, WILLIAM, ...	Omagh, ...	5855-62
CAWADWICK, RICHARD, ...	Clevedon, ...	21487-71
CELAN, J. B., ...	Ballyhennessy, ...	4267-322
CLARK, MISS F. F., ...	Belfast, ...	11165-48
CLARK, PETER, ...	Omagh, ...	5516-83
CLARK, JOHN, ...	Belfast, ...	10478-509
CLARK, THOMAS, ...	Dublin, ...	16301-94
CLARK, JOHN, ...	Narragh, ...	13457-49
CLARK, JAMES, ...	Carrick-on-Shannon, ...	2332-91
CLARK, CHARLES, ...	Omagh, ...	6779-93
CLARK, PATRICK, ...	Enniskillen, ...	4730-7
CLAR, R., ...	Cork, ...	26030-115
CLIMBERS, R. S., ...	Omagh, ...	8925-75
CLIFFORD, T. D., ...	Limerick, ...	23043-83
COE, EDWARD, ...	Belfast, ...	11995-164
COGAN, D. J., ...	Wicklow, ...	19254-244
COHILL, CAPT. W. C., ...	Waterford, ...	39234-604
COLAHAN, DR. N. W., ...	Galway, ...	24536-87
COLGAN, DR. F. P., ...	Carlow, ...	15041-62
COLGAN, MICHAEL, ...	Dundragh, ...	4057-149
COLLES, JOSEPH, ...	Armagh, ...	4254-5
COLLES, THOMAS, ...	Do., ...	5614-21
COLLEY, BERNARD, ...	Sligo, ...	5622-30
CONDON, DR., ...	Ballyshannon, ...	25114-237
CONDREY, DANIEL, ...	Wicklow, ...	1619-35
CONKELLAN, PETER, ...	Castleblayney, ...	1093-77
CONKELLY, R., ...	Ballyshannon, ...	8995-195
CONKELLY, EDWARD, ...	Crosses, ...	5357-77
CONKELLY, THOMAS, ...	Nass, ...	27391-143
CONKELLY, FELIX, ...	Omagh, ...	17909-25
CONRAD, OWEN, ...	Wicklow, ...	5197-236
CONROY, PATRICK, ...	Roscommon, ...	19218-86
CONSIDINE, MICHAEL, ...	Ennis, ...	23436-45
CONVEY, CHARLES, ...	Magherafelt, ...	25996-19
CONWAY, REV. W., ...	Galway, ...	3056-97
CONWAY, JOHN, ...	Sligo, ...	24126-69
COOKE, DR., ...	Londonberry, ...	22446-60
COOPER, W. R., ...	Enniskillen, ...	1488-361
COSEY, PROFESSOR, ...	Cork, ...	2651-808
CORCORAN, THOMAS, ...	Slough, ...	21749-813
CORREY, J. J., ...	Malton, ...	22663-117
CORRY, VINCENT, ...	Enniskillen, ...	97245-15
CORRY, MATTHEW, ...	Lettcherkey, ...	924-69
COSGROVE, MRS. McDOWELL, ...	Dublin, ...	3753-89
COSGROVE, JAMES, ...	Galway, ...	413-67
COSTELLO, JAMES, ...	Crosses, ...	16743-825
COSTER, WILLIAM, ...	Bantry, ...	24814-50
COTTERAN, DR. JOHN F., ...	Ennis, ...	27129-61
COTTERAN, MICHAEL, ...	Trillick, ...	28740-70
COTTRELL, HENRY, ...	Dublin, ...	29755-7
CRAB, CHARLES, ...	Londonberry, ...	28884-3
CRAB, W. A., ...	Castlebar, ...	26020-62
CRAWFORD, COL. SHARMAN, ...	Downpatrick, ...	26805-20
CRAWFORD, THOMAS, ...	Monaghan, ...	1-36
CRAN, DR., ...	Glenties, ...	2105-67
CRANFORTH, DR. R. H., ...	Ballyshannon, ...	22613-4
CRANON, DR. F. J., ...	Cork, ...	12233-67
CRANWELL, THOMAS, ...	Londonberry, ...	7892-93
CRANWELL, WILLIAM G., ...	Dublin, ...	21030-85
CRANWELL, FLORENCE, ...	Bantry, ...	4413-47
CRANWELL, REV. E. T., ...	Dublin, ...	25317-46
CRANWELL, JAMES, ...	Do., ...	2676-716
CRANWELL, PATRICK, ...	Cavan, ...	17221-519
CULLAN, DR., ...	Castleblayney, ...	28849-441
CULLISTON, L., ...	Maryborough, ...	708-13
CULLINAN, MRS. M. J., ...	Trillick, ...	17156-68
CULLINAN, MARION, ...	Ennis, ...	4476-650
CUMMINS, DR. W. A., ...	Cork, ...	4005-85
CUMMINGS, MICHAEL, ...	Waterford, ...	18138-77
CUMMINGS, JOHN, ...	Galway, ...	12556-716
CUMMINGS, P. J., ...	Do., ...	22346-57
CUMMINS, CHARLES J., ...	Waterford, ...	27077-709
CURRY, JAMES, ...	Cork, ...	28954-35
CURRY, WILLIAM, ...	Narragh, ...	26679-83
CURRICK, TIMOTHY, ...	Limerick, ...	24394-411
DAGG, J. RAULF, ...	Nass, ...	24032-3
Do., ...	Wicklow, ...	20895-922
DALY, JOHN, ...	Ballyshannon, ...	28191-200
		13427
		25535-53

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF WITNESSES—continued.

Name.	Where examined.	Number of Answers.
DALY, JAMES, ...	Castleblayney, ...	8236-317
DALY, JAMES, ...	Castlebar, ...	23466-78
DALY, MICHAEL C., ...	Do, ...	23940-4804
DARCY, J. J., ...	Galway, ...	24223
DARLING, DR., ...	Armagh, ...	9179-324
DAVEY, ROBERT, ...	Sligo, ...	22528-68
DELAHAYE, DR., ...	Dublin, ...	17343-8
DELANEY, HUGH, ...	Newagh, ...	21833-464
DE LA POINTE, Hon. Mrs., ...	Clonard, ...	21006 & p. 727
DEANOND, JAMES A., ...	Letchinny, ...	3724-35
Do, ...	Dunfussagh, ...	4275
DEWSON, GEORGE, ...	Belant, ...	11501-84
DEWSON, J. H., ...	Do, ...	11365-91
DEWSON, T. W., ...	Dublin, ...	13506-17
DEWES, WILLIAM, ...	Kilbarney, ...	18378-420
DEWNEY, WILLIAM, ...	Londonderry, ...	1783-897
Do, ...	Latterkenry, ...	3618-928
DELAN, JOSEPH, ...	Dundalk, ...	12501-046
DONAGHY, JAMES, ...	Castleblayney, ...	8031-04
DONOVAN, ST. JOHN HENRY, ...	Trillick, ...	26501-032
DONOVAN, MISS, ...	Do, ...	26633-747
DONLTY, HENRY, ...	Newagh, ...	25026
DONNAN, JAMES, ...	Cork, ...	28728-48
DONN, WILLIAM, ...	Castlebar, ...	23311-41
DOTY, MARTIN E., ...	Weyborough, ...	18228-43
DOTY, J. D., ...	Westport, ...	19869-925
DOTY, MAURICE, ...	Waterford, ...	26406-78
DOVER, J. R., ...	Do, ...	20783-64
DOVER, Rev. J. C., ...	Dublin, ...	16330-62
DRONOGODA, T. B., ...	Navan, ...	13440-86
DUFFY, JOHN, ...	Ballyshannon, ...	4478-46
DUFFY, PATRICK, ...	Castleblayney, ...	7862-862
DUFFY, JAMES, ...	Do, ...	8075-28
DUFFY, MATTHEW, ...	Dundalk, ...	12913-33
DUNLEVY, JAMES, ...	Londonderry, ...	1943-37
E
EASON, CYRIL, ...	Dublin, ...	16841-448
EDGEWORTH, T. N., ...	Longford, ...	18279-33
EGAN, Mrs., ...	Dublin, ...	17179-94
EMLE, Lady, ...	Limerick, ...	26137-67
ENNIS, M. A., ...	Westport, ...	19486-094
EVERARD, Col. N. T., ...	Navan, ...	12055-128
F
FARR, DR. GEO., ...	Banis, ...	24808-090
FARRON, BENJAMIN, ...	Castleblayney, ...	8006-36
FARRINGTON, Rev. M., ...	Galway, ...	24334-68
FARRIS, J. E., ...	Cork, ...	28146-53
FARRELL, THOMAS, ...	Do, ...	28189-90
FARRELL, T. M., ...	Cavan, ...	8724-37
FARRELL, J. J., ...	Clonard, ...	21313-02
FARROW, THOMAS, ...	Ballyshannon, ...	4696-001
FARROW, THOMAS, ...	Belant, ...	10610-32
FIELD, JOHN, ...	Dublin, ...	16635-72
FIELD, EDWARD, ...	Naas, ...	17790-9
FILCHER, Capt. W. De S., ...	Dundalk, ...	12647-721
FISCH, Col., ...	Croom, ...	27512-16
FISHER, DR. L., ...	Navan, ...	13179-82
FISHER, F. R., ...	Dundalk, ...	13017-8
FISHER, WILLIAM, ...	Mallow, ...	29408-18
FISHER, J. J., ...	Do, ...	29379-004
FISHER, EDWARD, ...	Do, ...	29416-35
FISHER, Lady MARGARET, ...	Westport, ...	20188-001
FISHER, EDWARD, ...	Kilbarney, ...	27005-92
FISHER, FRED, ...	Trillick, ...	26230-68
FISHER, JAMES J., ...	Clonard, ...	21274-3
FISHER, JOHN, ...	Cork, ...	28201-95
FISHERSON, JOHN, ...	Roscommon, ...	23719-3033
FISHERSON, JOHN, ...	Limerick, ...	28612-34
FLANNAGAN, E. M., ...	Enniskillen, ...	6603-881
FLATLEY, Rev. J., ...	Galway, ...	24327-30
FLAVIN, M. J., ...	Trillick, ...	93217-44
FLANNING, JOHN, ...	Armagh, ...	8699-0178
FLANNING, MICHAEL, ...	Wexford, ...	18446-35
FLANNING, DR., ...	Omagh, ...	2816-59
FLINN, PATRICK, ...	Castleblayney, ...	28723-72
FLINN, THOMAS, ...	Do, ...	22783-9
FLINN, E. N., ...	Belmont, ...	22077-108
FOLEY, PATRICK, ...	Trillick, ...	26285-475
FOLEY, Mrs., ...	Trillick, ...	26497-029
FORD, Rev. Canon A. L., ...	Dundalk, ...	18753-79
FORSTER, JOHN, ...	Londonderry, ...	1593-814
FORSTER, The O'DONNELLIAN BLAIR, ...	Ennis, ...	89939-1

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF WITNESSES—continued.

Name.	Where examined.	Number of Answers.
POTTERILL, DR.	Dublin, ...	17002-31
POY, DR. GEO.	Do, ...	188-207
FRENCH, SARGENT, ...	Cork, ...	28400-60
PRYCE, ROBERT, ...	Banbridge, ...	11740-71
G
GAFFNEY, PATRICK, ...	Carrick-on-Shannon, ...	22572-602
GAFFNEY, PATRICK, ...	Do, ...	22773-82
GALLAGHER, DAVID G., ...	Bantry, ...	29033-72
GALLAGHER, WILLIAM, ...	Londonderry, ...	2244-76
GALLAGHER, EDWARD, ...	Glough, ...	2807-921
GALLON, PATRICK, ...	Enniskillen, ...	0778-81
GALTIE, JAMES, ...	Glennel, ...	p. 721.
GAMBLE, WILLIAM, ...	Glough, ...	5128-56
GANNON, JAMES, ...	Navan, ...	12428-45
GANNON, FRAS., ...	Tyril, ...	12229-55
GARNEY, PATRICK, ...	Tullamore, ...	18827-12
GARRAN, EDWARD, ...	Mullingar, ...	14332-72
GARRAHAN, H., ...	Longford, ...	12295-328
GARRY, MICHAEL, ...	Ennis, ...	22127-23
GARRY, PATRICK, ...	Do, ...	24124-5
GERRY, P., ...	Longford, ...	10316-5
GILL, JOHN, ...	Bellast, ...	10826-903
GILLMAN, JOHN, ...	Cavan, ...	2076-89
GINTRELL, MICHAEL, ...	Mullingar, ...	14273-412
GLEESON, DAVID, ...	Waterford, ...	20047-60
GOGANEY, A., ...	Navan, ...	12470-81
GOGGIN, J. J., ...	Dublin, ...	14022-77
GOGGIN, JOHN, ...	Glough, ...	2891-5040
GRAHAM, DR. B. G., ...	Enniskillen, ...	4944-67
GRIMO, JOHN, ...	Londonderry, ...	12220-1200
GREEN, MR. M., ...	Nenagh, ...	2242-52
GREEN, CHARLES, ...	Downpatrick, ...	10902-104
GREEN, JOHN, ...	Do, ...	12302-14
GRIFFY, MICHAEL, ...	Ennis, ...	12475-90
GRUCE, MISS RICHMOND, ...	Glennel, ...	25106-222
GRUCE, JOSEPH H., ...	Do, ...	21513-403
GUTHRIE-MOORE, J. B., ...	Glough, ...	21526-82
H
HACKETT, GEO., ...	Tullamore, ...	12474-767
Do, ...	Nenagh, ...	22212-22
HACKETT, DR., ...	Waterford, ...	20043-46
HACKETT, JAMES, ...	Glennel, ...	p. 729.
HALL, DR., ...	Monaghan, ...	7294-224
HALL, DR., ...	Bellast, ...	11318-52
HALLFERRY, JAMES, ...	Dundalk, ...	12603-5
HALLMAN, THOMAS, ...	Navan, ...	12304-32
HAMIL, EDWARD, ...	Dundalk, ...	12522-12024
HAMIL, PATRICK, ...	Bellast, ...	10100-23
HAMILTON, MRS., ...	Dublin, ...	484-202
Do, ...	Bellast, ...	10226-245
HAMILTON, ALICE, ...	Londonderry, ...	801-42
HAMILTON, DR. D., ...	Do, ...	2648-75
HANLON, PATRICK, ...	Caslow, ...	18772-606
HANNA, W. J., ...	Londonderry, ...	18637
HANSTON, JAMES, ...	Cavan, ...	2217-616
HANSTON, JAMES, ...	Sign, ...	2270-86
HARDY, T. H., ...	Armagh, ...	22149-2
HARDING, WILLIAM, ...	Ennis, ...	22421-21
HARDINGTON, DANIEL D., ...	Bantry, ...	22354-22
HARDINGTON, T. C., ...	Dublin, ...	22927-75
HARPER, S. P., ...	Limerick, ...	14429-29
HARRISON, H. J., ...	Maryborough, ...	22019-42
HARTMAN, MRS., ...	Limerick, ...	18077-112
Do, ...	Cavan, ...	22072-240
HARTMAN, DR., ...	Do, ...	27477-81
HARTMAN, FRAS., ...	Limerick, ...	27472-2
HARLAN, MRS., ...	Dublin, ...	22220-14
HAYES, PATRICK, ...	Limerick, ...	714-22
HAYES, THOMAS, ...	Limerick, ...	22224-224
HEALE, D. J., ...	Limerick, ...	12222-701
HEALE, MATTHEW, ...	Kilmore, ...	2700-212
HEALE, REV. JOHN, ...	Waterford, ...	27121-76
HEALE, WILLIAM, ...	Galway, ...	22746-20
HENDERMAN, FRAS., ...	Downpatrick, ...	24206-26
HENHARTY, DR. ANTHONY, ...	Glennel, ...	12228-201
HENNESSY, JAMES J., ...	Magherafelt, ...	22372-22
HENNESSY, DR., ...	Cavan, ...	2222-172
HENRY, T. P., ...	Glennel, ...	2222-212
HENRY, T. P., ...	Magherafelt, ...	2222-212

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF WITNESSES—continued.

Name.	Where examined.	Number of Answers.
HENRY, DOMINIC, ...	Sligo, ...	22393-414
HENRY, MARK C., ...	Castibar, ...	22342-27
HERBERT, THOMAS, ...	Do, ...	22729-34
HEWITT, THOMAS, ...	Trin, ...	12726-298
HIBBERT, T. B., ...	Galway, ...	24227-23
HIGGINS, WILLIAM, ...	Roscommon, ...	22904-25
HIGGINS, THOMAS, ...	Galway, ...	24433-77
HODGINS, WILLIAM, ...	Clark, ...	p. 942
HOGY, J. O'REILLY, ...	Enniskillen, ...	2222-3
HOGAN, P. J., ...	Ennis, ...	24923-299
HOGAN, JAMES, ...	Lisnack, ...	22368-257
HOPKINS, Dr., ...	Castlebar, ...	24101-2
HORE, JAMES, ...	Wexford, ...	22282-223
HOWARD, Major, ...	Omagh, ...	2415-245
HUGHES, PETER, ...	Dundalk, ...	12240-51
HUGHES, E. P., ...	Carlow, ...	12075-96
HUMPHREY, T. W. D., ...	Londonderry, ...	2705-234
Do, ...	Omagh, ...	2251-4
HUTLEY, DANIEL, ...	Cork, ...	24025-29
HUTLEY, THOMAS, ...	Lisnack, ...	25354-610
HUTTON, JAMES, ...	Downpatrick, ...	12421-500
HYLAND, DAVID, ...	Waterford, ...	20970-25
I
IRVING, JOHN, ...	Dunlough, ...	4146-73
J
JENNINGS, Dr., ...	Bantry, ...	22477-22 2
JENNINGS, THOMAS, ...	Longford, ...	p. 970
JENNINGS, PATRICK, ...	Castlebar, ...	12212-26
JOHNSTON, Dr., ...	Londonderry, ...	22742-53
JOHNSTON, E. H., ...	Cavan, ...	2277-23
JOHNSTON, JOHN, ...	Backbridge, ...	2446-78
JOHN, BENNY, ...	Cork, ...	11222-275
JORDAN, JEREMIAH, ...	Enniskillen, ...	27272-221
JORDAN, PHILIP, ...	Belfast, ...	2017-140
JOSCE, P. W., ...	Castlebar, ...	11605-11
K
KAVANAGH, JOHN, ...	Londonderry, ...	2025-72
KAVANAGH, JAMES, ...	Kilbenny, ...	12721-21
KEAR, BERNARD, ...	Carrick-on-Shannon, ...	22642-22
KEARSEY, J. J., ...	Do, ...	22621-22
KEATING, PATRICK, ...	Clonmel, ...	21223-2
KEELAGHAN, JAMES, ...	Castleblayney, ...	2222-35
KEENE, N., ...	Wexford, ...	20234-22
KELLENB, D. C., ...	Cork, ...	p. 504
KELLY, Most Rev. Dr., ...	Do, ...	22241-222
KELLY, SAMUEL, ...	Trin, ...	12242-72
KELLY, J. H., ...	Bantry, ...	20234-22
KENNELLY, CHARLES, ...	Letterkenny, ...	2072-222
KENNELLY, RICHARD, ...	Neas, ...	12242-22
KENNY, JOHN, ...	Dublin, ...	202-72
KENNY, Dr. J. M. S., ...	Longford, ...	12721-27
KENNY, Dr. R. D., ...	Dublin, ...	12242-22
KING, Dr. LEONARD, ...	Londonderry, ...	1242-22
Do, ...	Enniskillen, ...	2472-224
KIRKMAN, PATRICK, ...	Monaghan, ...	2222-270
KIRKMAN, BERNARD, ...	Do, ...	2222-270
KIRKMAN, PETER, ...	Longford, ...	12242-22
KIRKMAN, JOHN, ...	Waterford, ...	p. 702
KIRKPATRICK, HUGH, ...	Enniskillen, ...	2222-22
KING, MATTHEW, ...	Downpatrick, ...	2222-22
KING, Dr. F. J. G., ...	Wicklow, ...	12242-22
KIRK, Dr., ...	Belfast, ...	1222-27
KIRK, M. E., ...	Monaghan, ...	2222-22
KIRK, Dr. T., ...	Enniskillen, ...	2222-22
KYDE, ISAAC, ...	Omagh, ...	2222-22
L
LAFFAN, Dr., ...	Dublin, ...	2222-22
Do, ...	Clonmel, ...	2222-22
LANE, JEREMIAH, ...	Cork, ...	2222-22
LARSEN, Very Rev. Dr., ...	Longford, ...	2222-22
LARSEN, JOHN G., ...	Letterkenny, ...	2222-22
LARSEN, ALICE E., ...	Castlebar, ...	2222-22
LAVELLE, MICHAEL, ...	Do, ...	2222-22
LAVELLE, Dr., ...	Dundalk, ...	2222-22
LAVELLE, THOMAS, ...	Trin, ...	2222-22
LECKY, SAMUEL, ...	Londonderry, ...	2222-22
LEE, Rev. T., ...	Green, ...	2222-22

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF WITNESSES—continued.

Names.	Where examined.	Numbers of Answers.
LESTER, DR.	Dublin	14133-34
LEWIS, STEPHEN, ...	Nenagh	21948-2601
LINDSAY, H. B., ...	Keshmulla	4234-363
LEWIS, THOMAS, ...	Cork	127745
LOOKART, THOMAS, ...	Beckridge	28345-623
LONG, JOHN A., ...	Londonderry	11871-301
LONG, JOHN, ...	Dublin	1158-239
LONGHEAD, RICHARD E., ...	Cork	17217-26
Do., ...	Malton	27732-40
Do., ...	Do., ...	29315-25 & p. 261
LOUGHER, J. B., ...	Castlebar	23941-719
LYONS, D. E., ...	Galway	24319-42
LYNCH, DR., ...	Belfast	11354-38
LYNCH, WILLIAM, ...	Nenagh	12631-305
LYNCH, MICHAEL, ...	Kesh	27894-339
LYNN, DR., ...	Nenagh	28289-3004
LYONS, R., ...	Armagh	5083-705
M
MACDONALD, REV. H., ...	Castlebar	23720-41
MACDONNELL, J. C., ...	Galway	24328-618
MACDONNELL, DR., ...	Silgo	22470-509
MACINTOSH, DR. JOHN, ...	Belfast	11169-64
MACKEY, PATRICK, ...	Longford	14783-272
MACKEITH, DR. M. B., ...	Belfast	16923-37
MACKEY, MICHAEL, ...	Kesh	23240-33
MACNAMARA, DR. G. U., ...	Do., ...	28248-98
MACQUEEN, S. M., ...	Londonderry	1742-4
MADDEN, JOHN, ...	Malton	28420-8
MAGUIRE, THOMAS, ...	Londonderry	2226-342
Do., ...	Dougal	4841-79
MAGUIRE, DR. E., ...	Dublin	112-80
MAGUIRE, J. E., ...	Armagh	9621-5
MAGUIRE, J. C., ...	Beckridge	11866-82
MAGUIRE, DR. EUGENE, ...	Dublin	523-92
MAGUIRE, MICHAEL, ...	Ballyshannon	4323-67
MAGUIRE, THOMAS, ...	Do., ...	4521-34
MAGUIRE, JOHN, ...	Enniskillen	6738-77
MAGUIRE, FRAS., ...	Do., ...	6738-46
MAGUIRE, JAMES, ...	Nenagh	13330-6
MAGUIRE, PATRICK, ...	Carrick-on-Shannon	22529-71
MAGUIRE, JAMES, ...	Nenagh	23967-68
MAGUIRE, MARTIN, ...	Limerick	26005-18
MAGUIRE, EDWARD, ...	Londonderry	2669-103
MAGUIRE, THOMAS, ...	Killenny	18430-69
MAGUIRE, JOHN, ...	Letchmerry	2477-408
MALONE, THOMAS, ...	Nenagh	13313-26
MANAHAN, WILLIAM, ...	Malton	29364-11
MAPOTHER, T. A. P., ...	Roscommon	22828-96
MARTIN, DR. S. E., ...	Nenagh	11966-63
MARTIN, MICHAEL, ...	Carrick-on-Shannon	22463-89
MARTIN, JOHN, ...	Galway	24073-125
MARTY, LIEUT.-GENERAL, ...	Gloucester	21325-73
MARTINSON, JOHN, ...	Cork	8065-223
Do., ...	Longford	14015-75
MERRAN, F. A., ...	Maryborough	18001-70
MELVIN, M. J., ...	Castlebar	22426-510
MERRITT, W. J., ...	Armagh	6030-42
MICHAEL, MICHAEL, ...	Kesh	23069-107
MILLER, ALAN, ...	Belfast	10427-77
MILES, JAMES, ...	Petrollet	23159-228
MISCAMPBELL, ALAN, ...	Belfast	9609-68
MITCHELL, WILLIAM, ...	Silgo	22415-45
MCKELLY, EDWARD, ...	Belfast	12674-11004
MORAN, THOMAS, ...	Castleblayney	8663-66
MOLLOY, MICHAEL, ...	Carlow	18328-74
MOLLOY, DR., ...	Crook	27482-511
MONTAGAN, R., ...	Armagh	9466-606
MONTAGUE, LORD, ...	Dublin	598-621
MONTAGUE, LADY, ...	Limerick	23094-136
MONTGOMERY, H. DE F., ...	Omagh	4930-8119
MOORE, JOSEPH, ...	Dublin	13928-13974
MOORE, ANDREW, ...	Millingar	13074-14009
MOORE, HATFIELD, ...	Tullamore	16380-800
MOORE, ROBERT, ...	Londonderry	1008-2029
MOOREHEAD, DR. G. A., ...	Tullamore	16708-63
MOOREHEAD, DR. T. H., ...	Dublin	16782
Do., ...	Castleblayney	316-308
MORAN, JOHN, ...	Carrick-on-Shannon	8341-72
MORRIS, DAVID, ...	Killenny	22794-801
MORRIS, MR., ...	Londonderry	26866-7004
MORRISON, JOHN, ...	Do., ...	1698-125
MOTILAN, MICHAEL, ...	Killenny	844-7
MULLEN, J. P., ...	Crook	18848-726
MULLAN, R. A., ...	Nenagh	21687-69
MULLAN, DAVID, ...	Castlebar	22157-33
MULLIN, J., ...	Galway	p. 864
MURPHY, H., ...	Longford	22291-4
		12309-15

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF WITNESSES—continued.

Name.	Where examined.	Number of Affidavits.
MURPHY, DR. D. J., ...	Cork, ...	28355-60
MURPHY, DANIEL, ...	Do., ...	28116-45
MURPHY, N. J., ...	Kilkenney, ...	18321-54
MURPHY, JOHN, ...	Bantry, ...	28003-26
MURPHY, JAMES, ...	Waterford, ...	20065-9
MURPHY, J. P., ...	Cork, ...	27864-72
MURPHY, J. T., ...	Belmont, ...	23280-303
MURPHY, TIMOTHY, ...	Bantry, ...	28766-601
MURRAY, MARK, ...	Mullingar, ...	14281-63
Mc
MCARTHUR, JOSEPH, ...	Londonderry, ...	2717-28
MCARTHUR, DONALD, ...	Belfast, ...	11105-245
MCANER, J. S. F., ...	Do., ...	9708-001
MCANER, OSCAR, ...	Do., ...	11281-227
MCANER, MRS., ...	Do., ...	11430-45
MCARTNEY, JAMES, ...	Timon, ...	13719-36
MCARTNEY, JAMES, ...	Dundalk, ...	13019-32
MCARTNEY, PATRICK, ...	Waterford, ...	20781-819
MCARTNEY, CHARLES, ...	Limetick, ...	25317-44
MCARTNEY, CHARLES, ...	Do., ...	20060-93
MCARTNEY, DANIEL, ...	Bantry, ...	28033
MCARTNEY, PATRICK, ...	Omagh, ...	5704-95
Do., ...	Berrishill, ...	6789-623
MCARD, DR., ...	Castledowney, ...	3319-60
MCCLARNEY, HUGH, ...	Letterkenney, ...	3420-74
MCOSWELL, G. B., ...	Bunclips, ...	11779-95
MCOSWELL, J. B., ...	Downpatrick, ...	p. 430
MCOSWELL, P., ...	Armagh, ...	9536-35
MCORA, J. J., ...	Omagh, ...	8120-37
MCORRY, SAMUEL, ...	Londonderry, ...	1632-57
MCORRIS, RICHARD, ...	Cork, ...	18927-36
MCORRIS, WILLIAM, ...	Cork, ...	27776-602
MCOSWELL, JOHN, ...	Dublin, ...	674-8
MCOSWELL, EDWARD, ...	Castledowney, ...	7821-56
MCOSWELL, DR. H. H., ...	Dundalk, ...	12836-312
MCOSWELL, JOHN, ...	Dublin, ...	16846-658
MCOSWELL, CHARLES, ...	Castles, ...	23331-116
MCOSWELL, THOMAS, ...	Belfast, ...	10131-262
MCOTY, JOHN, ...	Newry, ...	11845-928
MCADDEN, BERNARD, ...	Londonderry, ...	1833-141
Do., ...	Letterkenney, ...	4034-6
MCORR, PATRICK, ...	Cork, ...	23783-94
MCOSWELL, JAMES, ...	Londonderry, ...	2073-61
MCOSWELL, E., ...	Dublin, ...	27120-49
MCOSWELL, JAMES, ...	Berrishill, ...	6747-62
MCOSWELL, THOMAS, ...	Cavan, ...	5401-659
MCOSWELL, JAMES, ...	Do., ...	8811
MCOSWELL, HUGH, ...	Ballyshannon, ...	4513-36
MCOSWELL, DR. J. J., ...	Dunmurry, ...	4133-254
MCOSWELL, HENRY, ...	Downpatrick, ...	18349-806
MCOSWELL, MICHAEL, ...	Waterford, ...	20721-35
MCOSWELL, PATRICK, ...	Do., ...	35165-79
MCOSWELL, WILLIAM, ...	Tralee, ...	26794-894
MCRAE, JOHN, ...	Belfast, ...	16922-626
MCRAE, ROY. B., ...	Galway, ...	24224-35
MCRAE, ROY. M., ...	Do., ...	24226-397
MCRAE, JAMES, ...	Bunclips, ...	11773-7
MCRAE, JOHN, ...	Limerick, ...	28683-941
MCRAE, MICHAEL, ...	Donagh, ...	22002-10
MCRAE, DR. THOMAS, ...	Londonderry, ...	1926-460
MCRAE, DR. J. P., ...	Downpatrick, ...	12441-06
MCRAE, GEO., ...	Londonderry, ...	2163-243
Do., ...	Donagh, ...	4877-040
MCRAE, DR., ...	Belfast, ...	11366-040
MCRAE, JOHN, ...	Sligo, ...	22116-36
MCRAE, DANIEL, ...	Raris, ...	26830-37
MCRAE, JAMES, ...	Armagh, ...	19443-60
MCRAE, JAMES, ...	Maryborough, ...	19882
MCRAE, WILLIAM, ...	Trillick, ...	17929-16000
MCRAE, PATRICK, ...	Cavan, ...	20219-116
MCRAE, B., ...	Do., ...	20357-06
MCRAE, NICHOLAS, ...	Mullingar, ...	8070-600
MCRAE, WILLIAM, ...	Cork, ...	6731-93
MCRAE, MICHAEL, ...	Galway, ...	14070-170
MCRAE, MICHAEL, ...	Letterkenney, ...	25440-55
MCRAE, P., ...	Armagh, ...	24633-31
MCRAE, DANIEL, ...	Omagh, ...	3929-37
MCRAE, DANIEL, ...	Do., ...	6037-35
MCRAE, DANIEL, ...	Do., ...	6096-625
MCRAE, DR. J. C., ...	Dublin, ...	166-87
		10873-742

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF WITNESSES—continued.

Name.	Where examined.	Numbers of Answers.
N
NEARY, JAMES, ...	Roosomon, ...	28040-82
NEELON, DE, ...	Dewinstock, ...	12407-22
NOLAN, JOHN, ...	Enniskillen, ...	4811-43
NOLAN, DE. M. J., ...	Dublin, ...	18078-125
NORMAN, JAMES, ...	Malin, ...	29235-18
NORMAN, DE. COSGROVE, ...	Dublin, ...	81127-74
NOTMAN, DANIEL, ...	Wexford, ...	10978-29047
NUGENT, THOMAS, ...	Cavan, ...	8971-5
O
O'BRIEN, JOSEPH, ...	Carrick-on-Shannon, ...	22700-3
O'BRIEN, JAMES, ...	Cork, ...	27979-28004
O'BRIEN, J. C., ...	Waterford, ...	20726-25
O'BRIEN, JNO., ...	Cork, ...	27929-78
O'BRIEN, CAPT., ...	Limerick, ...	25741-64
O'BRIEN, PATRICK, ...	Bantry, ...	29678-66
O'CALLAGHAN, DENIS, ...	Cork, ...	27741-4
O'CALLAGHAN, DE., ...	Londonderry, ...	2623-33
O'CARROLL, DENIS, ...	Killybegs, ...	18479-329
O'CONNELL, DE., ...	Belfast, ...	19754-848
O'CONNOR, THOMAS, ...	Trillick, ...	26549-54
O'CONNOR, BENJAMIN, ...	Bantry, ...	28771-94
O'CONNOR, JNO., ...	Cork, ...	27719-24
O'DONNELL, JAMES, ...	Cork, ...	27745-68
O'DONNELL, HUGH, ...	Ennis, ...	25180-88
O'DONNELL, HUGH, ...	Letterkeeny, ...	3709-23
O'DONNELL, JAMES, ...	Do., ...	4004-31
O'DONNELL, WILLIAM, ...	Enniskillen, ...	6715-9
O'DONNELL, P., ...	Trillick, ...	20748-33
O'DONNELL, R., ...	Newagh, ...	21865-88
O'DONNELL, R. J., ...	Belfast, ...	23586-10
O'DOWD, PATRICK, ...	Castiblar, ...	23617-60
O'DWYER, W. W., ...	Limerick, ...	23458-82
Do., ...	Malin, ...	25299-303
O'FARRELL, A. K., ...	Dublin, ...	28312-4
O'FLAHERTY, J. P., ...	Galway, ...	16888-8
O'FLAHERTY, THOMAS, ...	Trillick, ...	24221-90
O'GORMAN, D. L., ...	Malin, ...	26475-46
O'GORMAN, PATRICK, ...	Waterford, ...	28036-145
O'GRADY, JOHN SEYMOUR, ...	Nass, ...	20391-729
O'HARA, P., ...	Galway, ...	17037-799
O'HARE, WILLIAM, ...	Belfast, ...	24170-223
O'KEANE, J. P., ...	Do., ...	11204-30
O'KEEFE, JOHN, ...	Croom, ...	9082-10109
O'KEELY, R. P., ...	Nass, ...	27335-8
O'KEELY, CONOR, ...	Castiblar, ...	27340-90
O'LEARY, J., ...	Malin, ...	17827-65
O'LOUGHLIN, D., ...	Ennis, ...	22517-45
O'LOUGHLIN, ED., ...	Do., ...	29439-35
O'MAHONY, R., ...	Trillick, ...	24810-97
O'MAHONY, PATRICK, ...	Malin, ...	25108-20
O'MALLEY, JOHN, ...	Belfast, ...	20824-5
O'MALLEY, P. J., ...	Galway, ...	20146-004
O'MEARA, MICHAEL, ...	Dundalk, ...	22820-79
O'MEARA, DE. W. H., ...	Cork, ...	24527-80
O'MEARA, JAMES E., ...	Maghersfield, ...	12284-85
O'MEARA, JAMES, ...	Longford, ...	18967-19040
O'MEARA, P. J., ...	Dublin, ...	3860-3065
O'MEARA, JOHN, ...	Do., ...	19186-212
O'MEARA, DE., ...	Nass, ...	15790-698
O'MEARA, MICHAEL, ...	Killybegs, ...	37145-216
O'MEARA, PATRICK, ...	Cavan, ...	15585-647
O'MEARA, EDWARD, ...	Longford, ...	8916-31
O'MEARA, GEO., ...	Castiblar, ...	14732-81
O'MEARA, B., ...	Castiblar, ...	23692-39
O'MEARA, THOMAS, ...	Roosomon, ...	8189-225
O'NEAL, JAMES, ...	Armagh, ...	23023-76
O'NEAL, DE. J. P., ...	Chesham, ...	9551-84
O'NEIL, J. D., ...	Malin, ...	21055-172
O'NEIL, J. S., ...	Belfast, ...	29217-44
O'NEIL, CHAS., ...	Nass, ...	11063
P
PATERSON, DE. THOMAS, ...	Londonderry, ...	13233-86
PATON, MRS., ...	Belfast, ...	2313-38
PATON, J. C. C., ...	Do., ...	11296-37
PAULSON, C. H., ...	Wexford, ...	11420
PAULSON, D. C., ...	Douglas, ...	18046-775
PERRY, WILLIAM L., ...	Londonderry, ...	4666-785
PETTY, JOHN, ...	Longford, ...	848-912
PETTY, E. B., ...	Nass, ...	2236-516
Do., ...	Tillamore, ...	14873-915
PEELAN, C., ...	Maryborough, ...	12254-53
		15591-88
		18178-85

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF WITNESSES—continued.

Name.	Where examined.	Number of Answers.
PHILLIPS, JAMES, ...	Longford, ...	12345-69
PIGOT, ROBERT, ...	Limerick, ...	25432-512
POPE, P. A., ...	Wexford, ...	20123-85
POPE, ALDERMAN, ...	Cork, ...	21684-702
POWERS, PATRICK, ...	Londonderry, ...	2104-54
PUGH, J. K., ...	Newry, ...	11964-81
POWELL, DR. CHAS., ...	Dublin, ...	17052-129
POWER, PATRICK, ...	Tullamore, ...	12795-23
POWER, THOMAS, ...	Waterford, ...	22831-5
POWELL, PATRICK, ...	Ennis, ...	25130-54
Q
QUINN, JOHN, ...	Enniskillen, ...	6752-810
R
RANKIN, DR. W., ...	Londonderry, ...	12738-41
REARDON, JOHN, ...	Limerick, ...	2703-84
REIDY, THOMAS, ...	Cavan, ...	24645-71
REILLY, P. M., ...	Longford, ...	27434-71
REILLY, FRAS., ...	Do., ...	14590-700
ROSE, M. F., ...	Armagh, ...	14710-21
ROGDAN, MISS MARY, ...	Cork, ...	9429-65
ROSE, J. W., ...	Belfast, ...	28201-500
ROGERS, WILLIAM, ...	Do., ...	11250-0
ROGERS, MATTHEW, ...	Omagh, ...	11440-02
ROGERS, REV. CHAS., ...	Dundalk, ...	24617-65
ROGAN, MICHAEL, ...	Mullingar, ...	4803-06
ROGATY, F. B., ...	Waterford, ...	15722-52
ROGER, REV. CHAS., ...	Wicklow, ...	14448-231
ROGNEY, ROGER, ...	Ballythannon, ...	20386-40
ROONEY, RICHARD, ...	Dublin, ...	19342-67
ROONEY, PATRICK, ...	Carleton-Rossington, ...	4578-35
ROSE, JOHN, ...	Longford, ...	10278-309
RODGERS, THOMAS, ...	Castletown, ...	22633-9
ROGAN, MISS, ...	Dublin, ...	12284-04
ROGAN, LEUT.-COL., ...	Tulce, ...	23208-401
RODGERS, EDWARD, ...	Bentley, ...	1680-707
ROSE, D. C., ...	Moonehan, ...	781-2
ROBERT, DR. GEO., ...	Clovel, ...	24277-65
RYAN, DR., ...	Cavan, ...	20426-31
RYAN, DENIS, ...	Waterford, ...	7261-325
RYAN, THOMAS, ...	Clovel, ...	21594-12
RYAN, JAMES J., ...	Do., ...	8330-49
RYAN, DR. J. F., ...	Galway, ...	50817-32
S
SCALES, MAURICE, ...	Clovel, ...	21580-404
SCOTT, Major W. E., ...	Londonderry, ...	21405-24
SHANLEY, JOHN, ...	Rosemount, ...	24412-02
SHANLEY, THOMAS, ...	Cavan, ...	21703
SHANLEY, J. D., ...	Londonderry, ...	914-1022
SHAW, ALAN W., ...	Limerick, ...	22610-38
SHAW, THOMAS J., ...	Mullingar, ...	8701-810
SHAW, DANIEL, ...	Killarney, ...	2328-223
SHAW, JAMES, ...	Do., ...	28043-85
SHAW, DENIS, ...	Tullamore, ...	14523-75
SHENAN, JOHN J., ...	Killarney, ...	27177-94
SHENAN, PATRICK, ...	Cavan, ...	27105-308
SHENAN, FRAS., ...	Navy, ...	15234-79
SHENAN, LAURENCE, ...	Trin., ...	27108-50
SHENAN, WILLIAM, ...	Dublin, ...	8250-79
SHOOT, PATRICK, ...	Wicklow, ...	13528-35
SHOENALL, RICHARD, ...	Killarney, ...	13807-048
SIMMS, JAMES, ...	Londonderry, ...	17341-86
SMALL, J. P., ...	Armagh, ...	19423-40
Do., ...	Newry, ...	18783-79
SMILEY, DR., ...	Londonderry, ...	2860-7
SMITH, Rev. R. H., ...	Castletown, ...	0330-432
SMITH, THOMAS J., ...	Cavan, ...	15028-42
SMITH, EDWARD, ...	Do., ...	2728-36
SMITH, DR. BRICE, ...	Belfast, ...	7957-83
SMITH, DR. JOE, ...	Dublin, ...	8031-45
SMITH, Rev. J. PATRICK, ...	Do., ...	8735-82
SMITH, DR. J. C., ...	Cork, ...	11148-68
SMITH, LOUIS, ...	Magdalen, ...	37-113
SMITH, JNO., ...	Enniskillen, ...	505-22
Do., ...	Moonehan, ...	27056-070
SCHAEFER, THOMAS, ...	Dundalk, ...	3513-52
SCHAEFER, DR., ...	Londonderry, ...	0435-02
STACK, WILLIAM, ...	Waterford, ...	7198-840
STANTON, MATTHEW, ...	Castletown, ...	18005-16
STANTON, EDWARD, ...	Ballythannon, ...	2817-48
SCHWARTZ, JAMES, ...	Londonderry, ...	20825-60
		23856-08
		4006-12
		1461-87

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF WITNESSES—continued.

Name.	Where examined.	Number of Answers.
STEWART, WILLIAM, ...	Londonderry, ...	2024-5
STEWART, JAMES, ...	Castletar, ...	2551-5
ST. GEORGE, DR. GEORGE, ...	Belfast, ...	1607-681
STOKES, SIR WILLIAM THOMAS, ...	Dublin, ...	622-61
STONE, Capt., ...	Londonderry, ...	2325-47
STONER, ...		2368
STOFFORD, Lord, ...	Wexford, ...	10770-820
STRATHBURN, R. W., ...	Cavan, ...	5812-69
STRONG, SIR JAMES H., ...	Armagh, ...	1685-61
STRUBB, HENRY, ...	Ballyshannon, ...	4421-45
SULLIVAN, HENRY, ...	Kilmore, ...	27623-76
SULLIVAN, THOMAS J., ...	Do, ...	27079-107
SULLIVAN, DR. F. W., ...	Navan, ...	12257-427
SUMMERS, JAMES, ...	Naas, ...	17262-620
SWINNEY, SAMUEL R., ...	Millinger, ...	14294-324
SWINNEY, N. J., ...	Naas, ...	17221-86
SWINNEY, JAMES, ...	Dundragh, ...	4256-74
SWINNEY, ROBERT, ...	Ballyshannon, ...	4284-90
T
TAYLOR, THOMSON, ...	Enniskillen, ...	7092-12
TAYLOR, REV. J. W., ...	Monaghan, ...	7671-799
TAYLOR, DR., ...	Bachbudge, ...	11823-47
TAYLOR, LAURENCE, ...	Galway, ...	24051-72
TEAKIN, DR., ...	Cavan, ...	8679-95
TEAKIN, P. J., ...	Millinger, ...	16514-47
THOMAS, MISS, ...	Waterford, ...	20989-22054
THOMSON, DR. JOE, ...	Londonderry, ...	2794-7
THOMSON, DR. E. C., ...	Omagh, ...	5694-815
THOMSON, JOHN, ...	Longford, ...	16070-12034
THOMSON, DR. NORMAN, ...	Wicklow, ...	19023-217
THOMSON, J. M., ...	Belfast, ...	11493-590A
THORNTON, WILLIAM, ...	Wexford, ...	62007-134
THORNTON, DR., ...	Enniskillen, ...	20180-7
THORNTON, THOMAS, ...	Monaghan, ...	6264-435
THORNTON, JAMES, ...	Maryborough, ...	7014-144
THORNTON, DR. JOE, ...	Ballyshannon, ...	18180-224
THORNTON, PHILIP, ...	Monaghan, ...	4469-77
THORNTON, JAMES, ...	Do, ...	7230-41
THORNTON, WILLIAM, ...	Enniskillen, ...	7763-90
THORNTON, JAMES, ...	Naas, ...	6990-7
THORNTON, WILLIAM, ...	Ramsey, ...	13182-213
THORNTON, CAMERON W., ...	Belfast, ...	22890-918
V
VANHOOT, GEO., ...	Maryborough, ...	18244-32
VANHOOT, J. S., ...	Millinger, ...	14976-86
W
WALKER, WILLIAM, ...	Belfast, ...	11042-61
WALLACE, ROBERT, ...	Carick-on-Shannon, ...	11042-64
WALKER, JAMES, ...	Dublin, ...	2761-25
WALKER, PETER, ...	Do, ...	16215-62
WALKER, JNO., ...	Waterford, ...	and p. 263
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Castletar, ...	26360-323
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Kilmore, ...	23546-80
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Downpatrick, ...	12523-271
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Navan, ...	12467-75
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	12554-84
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	4757-66
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	3221-89
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	1126-07
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	4841-76
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	2689-221
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	4276-86
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	21816-32
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	408-23
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	208-34
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	703-5
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	17320-49
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	1497-112
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	1622-5
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	7710-12
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	20014-66
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	14771-229
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	21482-260
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	22890-700
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	10004-32
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	18178-35
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	6235-89
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	7769-801
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	7869-8005
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	8692-600
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	10708-62
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	11296-428
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	21473-31
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	2630-69
WALKER, REV. H. H., ...	Do, ...	724-99

POOR LAW REFORM COMMISSION (IRELAND).

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE.

FIRST PUBLIC SITTING.—THURSDAY, JUNE 25TH, 1903.

June 25, 1903.

At the Ancient Concert Rooms, Dublin.

Present:—Mr. MACKS (Chairman), Mr. MURKAGHAN, and Dr. CORY FISHER.

CHAIRMAN.—The Secretary will read the warrant appointing this Commission.

Secretary reads warrant.

CHAIRMAN.—The Warrant which has been just read explains clearly the powers of this Commission, and it may be gathered that the scope of the Inquiry embraces an investigation into workhouses, fever hospitals, and infirmaries—an Inquiry to ascertain whether in some cases fewer institutions at less cost might suffice, without involving hardship to the sick or destitute; or whether in other localities additional hospital accommodation may not be necessary or highly desirable. This Inquiry is the result of an opinion that, owing to changes of circumstances, the administration of the Poor Law might be improved, and that at the same time expenditure might be reduced. Where so many interests are involved, the Inquiry must be patient and thorough; but it is also requisite that no undue delay should occur. The Commission intend to hold a sitting for receiving evidence at the chief or central town in each county, beginning at Derry early in the month of August, and, in addition to a general sitting for each county, supplemental sittings will be held at various other places where it seems desirable. It is the Commission's purpose, clearly understood that their functions are to make inquiries and to report to the Lord Lieutenant, and that no excessive powers have been given to them for carrying out any change, either great or small. As regards the procedure of the Commission, while it would be unprofitable for us here to discuss in detail the origin of the Poor Law or the opinions that were given at the time (though the history of the period will not be overlooked), it seems desirable to glance at the principal conditions that prevailed when the Poor Law was introduced. The population of Ireland in 1841 was 8,175,000, whereas in 1901 it had fallen to 4,458,000, or to practically half of what it was in the first of the great Famine years of 1845-6-7. Absolute destitution was widespread during the years preceding the passing of the Poor Relief Act in 1838. During thirty weeks of each year mendicancy was the sole support of the aged and infirm of the poorer classes in general, and the mendicants with those dependent upon them were at the time estimated to amount in numbers to the terrible total of 2,395,000 persons. This estimate was made by the Royal Commission of 1833, after a three years' inquiry, and on the Commission were some of the best-informed men of the time in Ireland, including the two Archbishops of Dublin. While those well acquainted with Ireland are aware of the very low standard of recruitment, not to say comfort of life, that exists at the present time for a large proportion of the inhabitants of the country, yet it is equally well known that such destitution as prevailed to such a shocking extent in 1833 is now met with in relatively insignificant proportions. This will appear when we come to examine in detail the statistics and classification of those to whom Poor Law relief is now given. Upon the introduction of the Poor Law system in 1838, workhouses were designed for the accommodation of healthy destitute persons who were obliged to claim food, clothing, and shelter, because they were without any means of support and were unable to obtain employment and wages. In every workhouse certain portions were set aside as sick wards, or an infirmary, for such of the inmates of the workhouse as might get ill, just as we now have in many well-managed public schools an infirmary in such institution for any child that may become sick. In process of time the number of able-bodied destitute inmates fell away, while on the other hand the poor who became sick entered the workhouse infirmary in rapidly increasing numbers, because in no other institution could they in such large numbers obtain medical and surgical treatment. So far back as 1855 the Chief Commissioner who had charge of the introduction of the Poor Law reported that workhouses were occupied by the old, the feeble, the sick, the infirm, or the very young, and that there were then practically no able-bodied inmates in the workhouses. This state of affairs has continued, but even to the present day there is a widespread, but erroneous, idea that workhouses are largely composed by lazy able-bodied people. This is not so; but, in connection with traditional knowledge of the past, one is naturally disposed to generalise from individual instances of able-bodied pauperism that one knows. Again, strong impressions are made by the sad cases that are known of infants born in the workhouse. Were it much wonder that, within the bounds of charity, there should be strong indignation against the class known as "tramps," who keep traversing Ireland like a stage army, in endless procession, buying supplies on the march, and as far as possible using the casual wards of the workhouses as their resting-places. The Commission intend to make close inquiries as to both indoor and outdoor relief, and also as regards the condition and classification of all these various classes of workhouse inmates—the sick, the aged and infirm, the inmates of various kinds, the epileptic, mothers with infants, the children, the able-bodied, and the "tramps." Having regard to the public discussions and writings of the past two years, the Commission are confident of obtaining valuable and well-considered suggestions, not only from the local bodies that administer the law, but also from those unconnected with Poor Law administration, who have publicly shown their deep interest in a judicious settlement of the questions that are now at issue. A circular addressed to all local bodies has been prepared, and will at once be issued as soon as the Commission obtain offices. In this circular the local bodies are asked to favour the Commission with their views, and to designate some members of their respective bodies to give evidence as soon as inquiries are held respecting the areas with which they are connected.

I think we will now call some witnesses to establish the numbers and various classes of those who are provided with relief under the Poor Law.

June 22, 1905.

Mr. Henry Courtney.

1. CHAIRMAN.—Mr. Courtney, you are the Principal of the Finance and Statistical Division of the Local Government Board?—Yes.
2. You hand in this return, showing the number of inmates and persons receiving indoor Poor Law relief, on what date?—3rd of January last.
3. That is the number who on that particular day were in receipt of relief?—Yes, the first Saturday of the present year.
4. Now, if you will take your own returns, and turn to the total page, the total inmates of all kinds in the workhouses on that day?—43,600.
5. Of that class how many were sick?—16,666.
6. And how many aged and infirm?—38,617.
7. How many mothers with infants were in the workhouses on that day?—819.
8. Mothers with infants, that only includes the mothers?—819 mothers. Then as regards the children and infants under fifteen years of age, how many?—6,824.
9. Of lunatics, idiots, and epileptics?—2,366.
10. Those include some sane epileptics?—Yes.
11. How many sane epileptics were in the houses on that date?—422.
12. Some of the lunatics are included in the sick?—Yes, about 1,790.
13. In addition to those you have already given us?—Yes.
14. You will not be able to give us these for some little time?—No.
15. But you will further on hand in a detailed account?—Yes.
16. We may take it there are about 4,000 lunatics, as a rule, in workhouses?—About 4,000.
17. Now, the total number of tramps on that Saturday, including men, women, and children?—621.
18. How many men?—416.
19. Women?—819.
20. Children?—85.
21. The only other class that would remain undischarged would be able-bodied—how many able-bodied have you?—4,514.
22. Out of?—A total of 43,600.

Dr. Joseph Smyth.

27. CHAIRMAN.—You have for a great many years been connected with the Poor Law administration in this country?—I have.
28. And for recent years you have been a Medical Inspector of the Local Government Board?—Yes.
29. You have formed some definite opinions as regards the classification of the aged and infirm?—I have.
40. Would you kindly let us know what they are?—I think the acute and curable cases ought to be separated from the chronic and merely infirm and aged and incurable.
41. In most workhouses, or practically all the workhouses you have visited, have you found that classification was not as complete or was not complete at all?—You might omit the word "complete"; there is no classification with the infirmaries; they are clogged with the aged, the infirm, the blind, the lame, the dumb, the deformed.
42. Chronic cases?—Yes.
43. And you would be in favour of keeping in these hospitals only?—I—Suitable hospital cases.
44. For treatment with a view to recovery?—Certainly; not to allow them to stagnate or clog up the hospital wards.
45. I gather that you object to the present system for two reasons, first, as regards the effect it has on the medical and nursing staff in having various classes to deal with?—It is demoralising to both and injurious to the sick; it drains them their rights.
46. You mean because it demoralises the nursing?—Not that merely, but it absorbs a considerable amount of the time and attention of the nursing staff, and it is also unjust to the infirm, who are not fortunate enough to get into the infirmary, and who are practically left in many places neglected; no provision is made for them.
47. That is because there is not enough room in the infirmary?—If they are not fortunate in gaining admission into the infirmary, they are neglected, because there is not proper provision made in the workhouse for the feeble and infirm. I presume the Guardians say:—"Oh, if they require any attention send them to the infirmary."

Mr. HENRY COURTNEY examined.

23. That is, you may say, one-tenth?—Yes, 10 per cent.
24. There are patients of various kinds in extern institutions, asylums for the blind, the deaf and dumb, and for special treatment in surgical and other hospitals—what are the numbers receiving external treatment?—On that day, 906.
25. In addition to that there are children in district schools?—Total, 418.
26. Boys?—229, and 189 girls.
27. Those are in the district schools of Trillick and Glenties, and those are the only Poor Law schools that there are in Ireland?—The only schools extern to workhouses which have been established.
28. Then a few children have been sent to schools certified under the Proper Children Act of 1896?—Twelve children altogether.
29. And those are twelve girls?—Yes.
30. Now for the boarded-out children—give me the numbers?—Males, 1,106; females, 1,115; total, 2,221.
31. You are preparing some further returns?—Yes.
32. You have given us returns of the number of tramps according to the workhouses on the map, which shows really the route of country they take?—On that particular day.
33. I have not quite studied that enough to ask you questions about it, but later on, I dare say?—I should mention that the official returns show that in some workhouses tramps do not remain over the Saturday.
34. And you think we have rather a smaller number in this return of tramps than we ought to have?—It is quite possible.
35. For instance, you think that if on the preceding Thursday the cesses had been taken, the number would have been greater?—I think so. There were no cesses or tramps in several workhouses on Saturday, the 3rd of January last, although many of this class had been relieved in these workhouses during the week then ended.
36. And the number per year is something like 5,000 collective days?—There were about 4,000 tramps, actually 3,006, relieved in the workhouses during the week ended on this particular day.

Dr. JOSEPH SMYTH, Medical Inspector Local Government Board, examined.

48. Well, now, without mentioning any case, if you could take some ordinary workhouse, roughly, that you have in your mind, take a number of patients, whatever it may be, a hundred or fifty, or any number that occurs to you as being a real number, will you tell me exactly how you would work out your classification; take the number of patients in the infirmary and the number of aged and infirm?—I think that in a hospital at present having 100 persons, there would be not more than twenty hospital cases, such cases as should be received into the wards of a hospital fitted up for treatment on modern lines.
49. Then that would mean that eighty should go out?—Of the remaining eighty, I would calculate that at least ten, that is 10 per cent., are unfit cases to be a burden on the rates.
50. At all?—At all.
51. In any ward?—And if they were required to go into the infirm wards of the workhouse, they would leave altogether, they would refuse to reside in the workhouse, and so the rates would be relieved of that number—30 per cent.
52. Well, then, you would have twenty left in the infirmary?—You would have twenty hospital cases, ten unsuitable cases for relief at all.
53. They would go out?—They would go out.
54. Of the number that would be in hospital you would have twenty left, and the others, what would happen to the seventy?—They would be suitable cases for the infirm or feeble wards; they would go to the parlour as destitute, who were infirm or deformed, or suffering from some physical defect or infirmity, and who would receive domestic care, cleanliness, and plain, homely comfort. I believe that they would obtain that at some saving to the rates from the present cost in the infirmary.
55. Do you contemplate that any bed-ridden aged and infirm people should be removed from the infirm ward?—Surely; certainly, they are there for life.
56. That would involve nursing for the infirm ward?—Well, at least, domestic care.

57. Take bed-ridden people?—Bed-ridden people, who would require nursing care, should be provided with it, and if in the infirmary wards hospital cases should arise, as in any institution, they should be transferred to the hospital.

58. As at present?—Yes, as is done at present.

59. Then the twenty would be left in the workhouse proper, and taking that workhouse with 100 sick, about what nursing staff would you have there, in the particular one you have in view?—You mean the staff that ought to be, or the staff that is?

60. The staff that is?—There probably would be from six to eight, or from five to eight.

61. That would be about the average. You would leave some of these nurses in charge of the hospital, and transfer some of them to the aged and infirm ward; you would not want all that for the twenty?—Oh, no.

62. Then with the seventy cases, you would transfer some of the nurses?—Yes.

63. Do you think that would be an economy?—I do.

64. You have looked into it?—Yes.

65. And you think it would be economical to have two nursing staffs and two sets of patients, the more severe cases, and what you might call the chronic cases, in separate wards?—There is a difference in the quality of nursing and an essential difference in the quantity of nursing required, and there must of necessity, when it is worked out in practice, be an economy, apart from the increased efficiency.

66. Owing to the lower dietary?—A number of people get treatment in the infirmary unjustifiably expensive at present; they get comforts, what to them are luxuries, at the expense of the outpatients, which they do not need and they ought not to get, and the temptation is very great to the medical officer, when he is surrounded by a large number of these people clamouring for comfort as they call it, and clamouring for extras which they see their bed-fellows getting, and they are very partisan in their views; they don't see that a bed-fellow might have a necessity for what is denied to them.

67.—One man is as good as another three?—Better; that is the man himself.

68. Then the result of what you say is, that you would separate the infirmaries and hospitals from the body of the poorhouse. I know that at the time of the passing of the Local Government Act of 1880, you had a great deal to say to the idea of district hospitals?—The 10th clause.

69. Would you propose to carry out that idea at all now?—I would, but before I would pass to that, you might permit me to supply an omission. The economy that could be effected at present in the consumption of stimulants, in my opinion, is enormous, and that would be effected very largely by the separation of the real hospital cases from the large mass of chronic and intractable lodgers and schemers.

70. Do you think the doctors as a class are not stimulated enough to resist the importunities for stimulants and extras from the patients who are not really in need of them?—In many places you expect too much from the doctor if you ask him to do all this; in many places they do, and it is contrasting where it is done with places where it is not done that supplies me with figures. I am quite satisfied the saving in the consumption of stimulants, apart from the moral and other good, would be enormous, because the opportunity would be removed and the excuse would be taken away, and it is the constant consumption of the bottle of porter to this person and that person, and the half glass of whiskey, which seems very slight, but which multiplied by every day in the year—

71. That makes the big bill?—If a man received four ounces of whiskey every day for years and years—

72. You know such a case?—Oh, yes, I do. And then these other people, who are the chronic, I know that for many many years they have been lodgers, not patients, in the infirmaries. I meet them in the villages and towns going about message to the post or for papers, and probably they have been there for twenty or thirty years. They are no more ill than you or I; they probably may have a little halt and not walk straight, or something of that kind.

73. Is there anything else you wish to say before passing on to the district hospital?—I think not, Mr. Chairman.

74. You say the poorhouse infirmaries were not intended for hospitals—you mean, of course, for modern hospitals—they were built for sick wards, according to the idea of the time?—They were not built for any hospital, ancient or modern.

75. Oh, they were?—Subject to your correction, they were intended to receive such persons as would be out of health amongst a population mainly considered to be able-bodied.

76. The old hospitals in existence at the same time were not much better, if at all better. Take the county infirmaries?—There is still the indication, even in the worst of the county infirmaries, there is still the basis of the hospital idea, which is not in the Poor Law infirmary at present, and the fever hospitals which were constructed subsequently, they indicated a hospital idea, I don't say modern, but good.

77. Then about the district hospitals, doctor?—Well, I would submit, sir, that the community ought to be afforded hospital provision. I consider provision for hospital treatment is a necessity for the poor who are not destitute, and I think that they ought not to be obliged to seek that hospital treatment for sickness or injuries through the gate of the poorhouse.

78. Quæ pæpæ?—As pæpæ; people who are not destitute either the poorhouse, and I don't know that it would be a wise thing to remove that wholesome feeling amongst the people in Ireland. I think it is to some extent a security against leaning on the infirmaries.

79. How would you carry out that change?—I would carry that out by suggesting that small district hospitals should be provided in the districts that are at present served by the Poor Law hospitals, and that these should be wholly dissociated from poorhouses; that these should be for really hospital cases.

80. And the twenty patients from the workhouse should go there?—Yes.

81. They would not remain in the workhouse?—They would not remain in the workhouse, and any one which might arise would be transferred to the hospital for treatment, and sent back again when relieved or cured. When I said acute and curable, I did not mean only persons who would be restored to perfect health, but people with incurable diseases, presenting a phase of disease that would be relieved or relieved. At present if a person has an attack of asthma once in three months, he is retained in the infirmary his lifetime; or if he have a moraine of the heart, it is a justification for his being retained.

82. These hospitals would be worked, according to your idea, to take the place of the workhouse infirmary?—Quite so.

83. Where would you meet them?—In the centres that are at present supplied by workhouses.

84. Take a union in your own district?—Naas or Athy. You would have a district hospital in the town, leaving the workhouse in the town, but sending the sick to the hospital in the same neighbourhood?—Yes; because I think the workhouse is pretty well situated for the convenience of the community, and I would class these small district hospitals as the county infirmaries are; put them all on the same level.

85. Would you touch the county infirmary?—I would put them on the same level and under the same administration.

86. That would be under the County Councils?—Yes. I would be sorry to see the county infirmary abolished, because they have done good work in the past, and are still doing so; undoubtedly, they have kept alive the high standard of Irish provincial practice.

87. You rather have a hope that private benefactions would come to the rescue?—Undoubtedly; at present that is a very great want in the country, that people who, though poor, are not destitute, but when disabled by sickness or injury, have no place but the poorhouse to go to, and they either that.

88. Or Dublin?—Well, Dublin cannot receive everybody, and besides, Dublin is at a great distance and it would afford a field for the wealthy and benevolent to contribute for the good of their neighbourhood, where they have resided, or where they have made their money.

89. Are you aware of what the practice is about county infirmaries, and the subscriptions to them?—Well, I am sorry to say that the subscriptions are in a small proportion, as far as I know, to the endowment.

90. Do you know whether they have fallen off or increased since the passing of the Local Government Act of 1880?—I cannot speak from personal knowledge.

91. But you would anticipate—you have faith in the generosity of the public—you would anticipate private benefactions?—Undoubtedly; confidently anticipate it.

92. The next matter which you have touched is the question of anatomy, or hospitals for the isolation, care, and cure of consumption?—Yes, sir.

June 22, 1903.
Dr. Joseph
Smith.

93. What do you suggest in that respect?—I should hope that one outcome of this Commission would be to make available a certain number of workhouse buildings.

94. Some workhouses might be closed?—Some workhouses might be closed and converted into sanatoria, if workhouses in suitable situations were selected, and though they were not constructed for such a purpose, still Ireland is a poor country, and I think we ought to try and make the best we can of the material at our disposal, even although it is not ideal; these buildings could be improved at a small cost, rendered much brighter and better ventilated, better lighted, new windows, new stairs. The top wards at present are in many places derelict on account of bad stairways. They could be made easier of access, and a balcony around the upper wards on the sunny side would not be expensive, and would enable the occupants of the upper wards to get out into the open air and sunshine.

95. I think you said also in your notes of evidence that these balconies would be convenient in case of fire?—Convenient in case of fire, which, in my opinion, is a very important consideration. I am sorry to say it is very absent in Ireland.

96. These consumptive homes, under what body would they be placed?—I would place the hospital control in the charge of the County Councils, consumptive hospitals and district hospitals administered by local committees.

97. And these committees appointed by?—By the County Councils; and there certainly should be on them a very substantial representation of the benefactors, subscribers, and others.

98. That would be an improvement for benefaction?—Yes, that is quite consistent with the principle of County Councils at present in the appointment of their committees; they give very large representations, in fact almost equal representation to others in their agricultural and technical committees.

99. As we saw from Mr. Curran's figures, there is a large number, in round numbers 4,000, of lunatics in the workhouses. What do you suggest with reference to them?—I would suggest that some of the workhouses that would be vacated would be appropriated for harmless lunatics who are clean, and only the clean, harmless lunatics; the wet, and dirty, the epileptic, the criminal and the dangerous, ought to be in an equipped asylum with a trained staff.

100. Then you would take them all out of the workhouses?—I would entirely separate the care of the lunatics from the treatment of paupers. I would have the two classes entirely separated, not in the one institution, not in the one building.

101. You also contemplate the possibility of boarding-out lunatics, as in Scotland?—I think the experiment might be tried; there is a great deal to be said for and against. I know that there are many who on moral grounds object strongly to the boarding-out system, but when I was in Scotland, as far as I came across any person who had personal experience, they spoke very highly indeed of the boarding-out system.

102. Do they board out both sexes; do they make any distinction about age?—I don't know that they do.

103. There is no qualification as far as you know?—I don't know; and they are visited by the parish doctor, who is paid a small fee, and they are inspected by the parish officer, who would be represented here by the relieving officer.

104. And inspected by the Lunacy Department?—I believe so.

105. The only other matter is the question of children in workhouses?—I think children of all ages should be boarded out of the workhouses.

106. Except the very infants?—Of all ages, once they get out of the maternity ward they ought not to be returned, and that would set free the male and female school-rooms, the male and female children's dormitories, the male and female teachers' apartments, the male and female children's recreation grounds, and the nurseries.

107. Do you see any difficulty in arranging that children whose parents are in the workhouse should be boarded out?—Of course you would require legislation.

108. Do you see any difficulty?—I don't think there is any difficulty that could not be overcome; how it is to be overcome I am not prepared to suggest.

109. Dr. BROWN.—What would you suggest should be done with the infirm and incurable cases in small workhouses, where there would be only a few of this class?—I don't quite—

110. CHAIRMAN.—In the workhouses where there would be only eight or ten aged and infirm or incurable?—I should suggest that as far as possible such cases should be concentrated in one or more workhouses in the county, so as to help in your object of setting vacant workhouse buildings available for seasons and for harmless lunatics.

111. Dr. BROWN.—That may be one of the ideas why they are in the infirmaries at present. There are only a few of them, and it is not economical to have these treated separately with a separate nurse?—It would not require a qualified nurse of the standing which would be required under any hospital equipment.

112. CHAIRMAN.—What would be your idea with regard to admitting paying patients into cottage hospitals?—I think that people who can pay should not be a burden on the rates as they are at present, because even the payment which they do make does not discharge their liability; many would be delighted to have the opportunity of paying for their nursing, which they could not have at home, and quite willing to pay the fee for their medical attendance, and I think mainly, at any rate largely, the patients' payments should afford the remuneration of the medical officer of the hospital, and I would not be inclined to confine the appointments to one medical officer only; I think the appointments might be open to more than one medical officer in the town.

Dr. E. MAGENNIS examined.

113. CHAIRMAN.—You have been a Poor Law Guardian for a number of years, and you have had experience of Poor Law administration in the North of Ireland, I think chiefly in Armagh and Down?—County Armagh and County Down.

114. You have certain opinions now as to the expediency of dissolving some of the Poor Law unions in Ireland?—Yes, I have. I am afraid in filling your hat of queries, I perhaps, did not just make myself as intelligible as I might have done. My opinion on the workhouse system generally is that I would alter it completely, and perhaps if I were to give you shortly what I would do with the inmates of the workhouse, it might facilitate you.

115. I think that would be the quickest and best way?—In the year 1888, at the Larges Board of Guardians, I brought up a resolution somewhat after this style:—"That in the opinion of the Larges Board of Guardians, the time has now come when the Government should appoint a Commission to inquire into the working of the Poor Law system in Ireland, with a view of introducing some other method of dealing with our poor, or to make such changes in the present system as would lessen the heavy expenditure imposed on the ratepayers, and be more in accordance with the wishes of the people." That resolution was, I am sorry to say, defeated by a very large majority. And I mention this solely to show the public change of opinion on this matter between that year and 1901. In 1901, I brought up at the Armagh County Council, a much more representative body, the same, or almost the same, resolution, and that resolution was not only passed unanimously by the Council, but a copy of the address that I then made was ordered to be sent to each of the County Councils in Ireland, the Boards of Guardians, and the Members of Parliament for Ireland. The mode of dealing with the poor, as they stand, briefly was this:—I would divide the poor in a workhouse into five classes, first, lunatics and imbeciles; secondly, children over three and under thirteen years of age; thirdly, sick and infirm, and children under three years of age; fourthly, able-bodied paupers; and fifthly, tramps or night lodgers or casuals. With the first class, that is the lunatics and imbeciles, I would simply deal with them by dividing them into two classes, sending one to the county asylums, and putting the other into some of the vacated workhouses, making them auxiliary workhouses when necessary and when possible, in order to avoid the extra expenditure on additional officials, and a number of the lunatics should be boarded out after the Scotch system, to which Dr. Smith has referred. The second class, that is the children over three and under thirteen, all these should be boarded out, and in this way children are removed from the baneful influences of workhouse life, and they are generally much better treated than they would be in workhouses,

Dr. E.
Magennis.

June 22, 1905.

Dr. H. Magrath.

and are under proper supervision by the local Guardian or the Inspectors; they are generally very well cared for. In my opinion, they are very well cared for, as a rule. And when one sees the children coming up for inspection that have been boarded out like that, it certainly impresses one that that system of dealing with them is a good one.

124. Yes, more intelligent and stronger than if they remained in the workhouse?—Much better.

127. More likely to make their way in life?—Oh, yes, very much better. The third class, the sick and infirm, and children under three years of age, these I would put all into the district hospitals or cottage hospitals, homes for the sick or infirm. I would not think of calling them workhouses or anything of the sort.

128. What number would you contemplate of those?—It would be a very difficult thing. I could scarcely agree with Dr. Smyth's classification of the two sick classes that he made, that is, the curable sick and the incurable sick. They may be in separate wards, but I think it would be much better if they were in the same building. The difference after all in the nursing is not so very great, and I think the expenditure would certainly be much heavier.

129. But those cases that Dr. Smyth referred to that were able to go out on messages in the villages and towns, those cases ought not to be in hospital?—There are a great number of these in workhouses that should not be there, and I am afraid the officials encourage those, as I probably would do myself if I were an official, inasmuch as they are glad of having some help at hand. Certainly the paid officials are too few, and they are very glad of having any of those handy people, even the doctors, to help them. Well, able-bodied paupers I would certainly not let them into the workhouse at all.

130. We had some figures given to us before you came in. They number exactly one-tenth of the inmates, 4,300 out of 43,000—what would you do with those 4,300?—I would certainly, if possible, keep them out of those places altogether, and I would appoint, in order that these people might have facilities for employment, I would appoint in each district a workmaster or superintendent of labour, and this workmaster or superintendent would have a book, just as they have in an ordinary registry office for servants, containing a list of the persons seeking employment, and a list of the persons wanting employees, and this workmaster or superintendent of labour might have power to afford provisional relief until a person would be able to get employment.

131. Where would they be lodged?—I would lodge them in recognised lodging-houses.

132. Paid for out of the rates?—Paid for out of the rates. This workmaster could give them a ticket.

133. Is it not possible that that might lead to a vast increase in the number from 4,300. If a man had not to go into the workhouse, but merely got the price of his lodging, don't you think it possible you would have a large increase in that class?—I don't think, with proper supervision, it would. I think that in Ireland we should have very few unemployed.

134. That is, there would be work for them, but there might be some who did not care for work?—There is work for all if they would work, and I think if this system were fixed up in some way that it would not be so demoralising on the people; after a few years the people would attain a higher idea of self-respect.

135. The next class that you referred to?—The next class are the tramps or night lodgers or casuals.

136. What would you do with them?—I certainly would have them under police control; there is no doubt at all that the present system of giving relief to this class of people is open to very serious abuse. The relieving officer must give admission to anyone applying, and he just takes the easiest way of doing it rather than have a row round his house, as they often have in the country places; he gives it to them without any word or comment. If these people were obliged to go through the ordeal of a police station—of course, in many cases it would impose a hardship on people who have never been in contact with the police, but really that is not so very much—if these people came and were interviewed by the orderly in the police barracks, who at times has very little to do, he would be able to discriminate the really deserving, and the criminals would hardly go near him; they would rather give him a wide berth.

137. Of course, the class you are thinking of is not the occasional man that is really in need of relief, owing to special stress of circumstance, but the professional tramp?—The professional tramp, and then the orderly could be empowered to give them men a ticket to a recognised registered lodging-house, entitling them to supper, bed, and breakfast. The cost would be about 5d., that is on an average, I think perhaps less.

138. Now as to the amalgamation of workhouse hospitals, county infirmaries, fever hospitals, and other hospitals in the county?—I have always thought that the county infirmary should be amalgamated with the workhouse hospitals.

139. You are proposing to abolish the workhouse hospital and have a district or cottage hospital?—Yes; district or cottage hospitals.

140. Then what would be the meaning of amalgamation then as regards county infirmaries—would you leave them as they are?—No; I would have them under the same government as the district hospital, amalgamate the management, have them governed by a committee, representative of the County Council and District Councils, and let those committees be as small as possible.

141. The District Councils would provide the really working-men, because they would be the residents of the locality?—Yes, and the others would be a sort of check.

142. If occasion required. Then, you think, would be a more economical system for the relief of the poor?—I have very little doubt about it. I think, too, there should be an isolation hospital in each county.

143. An isolation hospital, not a ward in a fever hospital?—Oh, no.

144. The isolation hospital would be for cases of—Of suspected infectious disease.

145. It would have to be in the immediate neighbourhood of the fever hospital?—Yes, or in the immediate neighbourhood of the district hospitals.

146. Dr. Broune.—Do you mean a hospital for that purpose?—Yes, I think it would be necessary in some places.

147. Would it not be expensive to keep up a hospital for a few cases coming in that might be suspicious?—Yes, but if you had a small building.

148. There are officers and staff, you know?—In connection with the district hospital.

149. CHAIRMAN.—As a rule, these cases of infectious disease are not discovered until it is very well known what they are; too late often?—Quite true. There certainly should be a sanitarian in each county for consumption. I don't think, however, that you could make sanitary a workhouse hospital for that purpose, or a workhouse. You see the workhouses were built at a time when there was very little known about sanitation, and the foundations of all the workhouses, as far as I know, are soaked with insanitary matter; their walls have become impregnated with it. The whole atmosphere of workhouses, as a rule, is bad; indeed, I have always thought that operations, in major operations, certainly, should not be performed, if they could be avoided, at all, in any workhouse hospital.

150. There is hardly any hospital where they were done to a greater extent, and I think they were fairly successful, were they not, in the workhouse that you were connected with yourself?—Yes, they have been; but you see the mode of conveyance now is so good that an injured person—

151. May be sent to Belfast, Cork, or Dublin, as the case may be?—Sent to some centre. I think the payment, or contribution in aid of the cost of the treatment of the sick or insane in hospitals, should be more insured upon.

152. How would you set about carrying out that scheme?—Take an example in county asylums. I think in each county system there should be an investigatory committee, a committee consisting, say, of three, whose principal duty would be to go round and visit the inmates occasionally, and to make inquiries about the inmates and their friends as to who would be able to pay and who would not be able to pay.

153. The doctor and a couple of the members of the committee?—Yes.

154. And do you contemplate a fixed payment or discretionary power to such a committee to fix payments according to the means of the person?—Yes; but I would always err on the safe side, and make it as small as possible.

155. You would graduate it according to the means. If a man was earning 23 a week, and a member of his family came in, you would make him pay the full cost, perhaps?—Yes.

156. And if a day labourer, earning 15s. or 16s. a week sent one of his children in, he would be only able to pay—I—A very small amount, but at the same time it would make him feel that he was contributing towards the patient's support.

June 25, 1906.
Dr. J. C.
McWalter.

147. You would give a discretionary power to such a committee?—Oh, certainly; but I would always err on the safe side, and not charge too much. Another thing, too, if workhouses are to have existence, I should certainly say that they should not be so prison-like as they are.

148. Are you speaking from an architectural point of view?—Oh, no; I am speaking from perhaps a sentimental point of view.

149. From the regulations as to going in and out?—I remember when people going into the workhouse, whether they went in as able-bodied paupers or into the infirmary, considered they were going into a prison, out of which they could not get, except by some favour of the officials.

150. Or by taking their discharge on three hours' notice?—Some of them thought they could not get out under those circumstances. I certainly think the old people should be allowed greater freedom, and should have certain hours to return to the workhouse, but should be allowed to go out.

151. Certain privileges?—Certain privileges during the day.

152. You would leave those to the discretion of the visiting committee?—Of the visiting committee. On all these committees I would have as small a number as possible; the most workable committee is a small committee.

153. A committee of one?—Perhaps so. With regard to the dietary scale, I think there is a very great waste. I think it is a mistake to have any hard and fast rule as to the dietary.

154. You would have a certain amount, according to the discretion of the superintendent of the building, issued, carved and cut for the requirements?—Under proper supervision, I think it would be a much cheaper way of doing it.

155. But of course you knew the difficulty, the difficulty is book-keeping. With the ration system, you cease the ration, and the storekeeper cannot issue more, but if discretion comes in, there is a great room for percolation?—I quite understand that, but I think that the comfort of the people—

156. It might lead to greater waste, but carving could be done, and matters of that sort, even with the ration system?—Yes, I think it would be much better, although it might tend to more book-keeping.

157. It could not well be a subject for book-keeping, so far as I see. Do you see any way in which you could have discretionary issues of food in a business-like way entered in books, so as to prevent percolation?—No, I don't know how you could. I am afraid I could not suggest any plan, but under a proper superintendent, who in turn is supervised by the committee, there should be very little—

158. In some of the large hospitals, undoubtedly, the lady superintendent has a very free hand in these matters, to the advantage of the funds of the hospital. I am sure, and the comfort of the patients; one patient would eat a great deal and another very little?—Exactly.

159. Was there anything else you thought of?—At present I don't know of anything else.

Dr. J. C. McWalter examined.

Dr. J. C.
McWalter.

160. CHATELAIN.—You are a Poor Law Guardian of the North Dublin Union?—Yes, and of the South Union also.

161. And you have had very large opportunities of forming an opinion on the administration of the Poor Law in large unions?—Yes.

162. Do you know anything at all of the smaller unions?—No, I don't profess to know anything of the smaller unions. I have not stated very minutely the points on which I desire to give evidence, but to save time, I might say that I agree with most of what Dr. Smyth and Dr. Maguire have said. The points I wish to emphasise are merely certain matters in which I notice, as a practitioner, who practices mostly among the poor, and as a Poor Law Guardian, that the Poor Law system does not give the relief it should to the poorer classes.

163. Do you mean to say that any class is left out, or do you mean to say that the relief is not suitable and adequate?—The relief is not suitable and adequate to the poorer classes.

164. As regards indoor or outdoor relief?—Both. If I might first mention the difficulty about the hospitals in Dublin. In the first instance, there is no hospital in Dublin except the workhouse infirmaries into which a sick person has a right to go. My view is that every sick person has a right to be made well just as he has a right to live; that is what I think the Poor Law was founded to accomplish, that every person had a right to live, and if he had no means of living, they should furnish him with it. In most of the Dublin hospitals it is more or less a compliment to get a person in; in some of them, such as the Richmond, they have a general rule that if a person presents a certificate from a medical practitioner that he is a fit case for hospital, they have a rule that they shall admit him. But the staffs of these hospitals, in the generality of cases, are paid by the fees of the students. There is a necessity, therefore, to present students with cases which are more or less interesting; therefore it is that the staffs are not anxious to make room for ordinary cases of sickness which have no general interest, like cases of acute bronchitis, and cases of that kind. That is the great thing in which there is a need for reform in Dublin. Take a poor man earning 15s. or 20s. a week—he has no proper accommodation at home, he gets an attack of bronchitis. It is a case of obvious necessity to get him into hospital, for if he gets into hospital he will be all right in a week or fortnight. At present, unless one goes under a certain commitment to one of the hospitals, you cannot get him in; your only resource is to send him to the workhouse hospital. You have then and there to make a pauper of him; he has to put on workhouse clothes. And although at first there was a great feeling against the workhouse hospitals, and the families thought it a shame that it could be thrown in their faces that any of the family got relief in the workhouse, nevertheless, after persons have come from there, they don't find the place so bad, and afterwards, when they get a little tired, or anything, they ask for a ticket for the workhouse hospital. I think every poor working man should have an opportunity of going into hospital, where he would have a chance of being made well, and if a man were able to pay a small sum, he should be made to pay it. The Local Government Act, as far as regards the founding of district hospitals, was intended to overcome that vice. I made an effort to have it adopted in the unions here, but there were several very grave objections against it. They pointed out that under the Local Government regulations, if a district hospital were about to be founded, that it would be necessary to call in a number of strangers, and there is a spirit of exclusiveness amongst Boards, and they don't like that. Another thing they said was, you could not have a hospital inside the walls unless it was under the master's jurisdiction; they said, furthermore, you should have a distinct set of officials for the district hospital. Of course, the district hospitals, if they were carried out, would meet most of my views, but there are evidently very serious objections against carrying it out. Then it must be remembered, I think, that much the larger number of hospital patients in Dublin are in the infirmaries of the North and South Dublin Unions. There are 1,100 placed as hospital patients in the South, and between 800 and 900 in the North. Of course, much of this classification is not very exact. The Local Government Board have asked us to rectify it, but the fact is you can only put a person on hospital diet, or the common workhouse diet, and there are many cases not suitable for workhouse diet, and the medical officer then, through feelings of charity, keeps them on hospital diet.

165. These are intermediate diets?—Yes; but I understand when you discharge a person from hospital, he has to be put on hall diet.

166. Not necessarily?—The poor people don't know, and it may be as a matter of form he is put on hall diet, but he is inclined to run away. Then, of course, I contemplate that the persons in the hospitals should be allowed to wear their own clothes.

167. If the clothing were suitable?—Yes, certainly, clean, and all that; that I think is very important, almost the most important matter. In Dublin, in every working summer, there is a very great pressure; certain hospitals close for the purpose of cleaning. The Mater Hospital proceeds to close for two months. Well, obviously, all the patients who go there from Dublin must be provided for elsewhere, and there is practically no place for them but the union infirmaries; thus you have hundreds of people every year made paupers, merely because they happen to be sick; they come back again and again, and the same of absence is lost and the sense of independence.

164. Then you would meet that by a district hospital?—Practically a district hospital, in which a person if sick, or certified to be sick by a practitioner, should be admitted, in which he should be asked to pay the bare cost of his maintenance. We calculate that it costs us between 3s. and 4s. in the union hospital. I would have a working man pay that much and no more. I would not ask him to pay a share of the establishment charges.

165. It is easier for a man to pay for the members of his family than for himself; if he is not earning, there is no money?—It is very hard; in some cases good employers allow their employees a certain amount, or a benevolent society; and thus if a man paid 1s. or 2s., it kept up an air of independence, and no one could call him a pauper. With regard to epilepsy, that has been touched on, and I need not say much about it. The Guardians of Month offered to provide an establishment for epilepsy, and it is a most desirable thing, but when we came to look into the matter, we found we could not take on ourselves the responsibility. Certain Guardians were sent from both unions, and although the Guardians offered to provide a house, there was no provision for maintenance. The only way in which it was proposed to keep these inmates was that probably the Government would give a grant of 4s. a head, and there would be private subscriptions. Some of us, most of the number, did not like to undergo the burden of providing 12s. a week.

170. You had no power to give any undertaking as to how much you would pay?—I think the workhouse would have power to give a certain sum—the absolute cost.

171. When the institution was there?—But there would be still a deficit, and therefore the thing fell through. A sanatorium for consumptives—that has been treated by other gentlemen, and I thoroughly agree with them; there is no doubt there is very great need for it. You send a patient to the workhouse hospital for bronchitis; they are inevitably cases in the preliminary stage of pulmonary consumption, and these cases run into decline, and they are a burden on you for two or three years, and then they die. Lastly, I am informed that, according to the Local Government Board orders, the question of the supplying of what we may term medical comforts to sick people, lies absolutely at the discretion of the relieving officer. I may not be quite accurate, but that is what I am informed.

172. I think you are going now into the Medical Charities Act?—Is not that touched on?

173. No, I am not at all empowered here to take any evidence about dispensaries or the Medical Charities Act?—On the need for increasing the facilities whereby lunatics can be transferred to asylums, there is very great need for facilities in that respect; we have had an enormous amount of trouble about that in both unions. In last July there was a circular from the Local Government Board, saying the cost of providing accommodation for lunatics lay on the County Councils, and both unions decided that they would transfer all lunatics to the asylum on Fern D., as it seemed to them to be the best way of dealing with the problem. There is no doubt it is very expensive in the asylum, but the Guardians said that was not their business—

174. You may take us as knowing all about that difficulty that arose between the Richmond Asylum and your Guardians?—Well, then, I need say no more.

175. What you do wish to say is that you think the lunatics ought to leave the workhouse?—Undoubtedly; and also that we should have facilities; not to be sending them there in a cab and getting them back again.

176. That you should not have them at all?—Presumably the Guardians might have power to remove for extra nursing, but I am informed they have not.

177. You have power to declare the relief as given by way of loan, and then you can recover the full average cost of maintenance?—That is very difficult and tedious; we want some more moderate method. You cannot send a case of delirium tremens to any hospital in Dublin, for they won't take them.

178. You could bring a man into the police court if he refused to pay?—There is a fearful scandal about these cases; it occurs every possible time; no hospital in Dublin will take a delirious tremens case, and as a matter of practice, they are sent to the union hospital in a cab. The master has the responsibility of refusing them, but he does not like to do so; there is extra nursing for them, and they get brandy and everything like that. After they recover, some of them are sent to the asylum, and then they go away, come back next time, and don't pay a penny. Well, the outdoor relief; the greatest possible reform could be made there. The class of persons to whom one could give outdoor relief is limited. Last year the Guardians of the South Dublin Union were discharged 7s. 10d. for some leaves of bread they gave to the family of a man who was in prison. I need not tell you that Guardians have a morbid horror of overcharges; it frightens them fearfully, and the next deserving case that comes up is refused.

179. The limits are very clear and distinct under the law. Would you suggest that any other class should be eligible?—You cannot at present give it to a widow with one child. That is a deserving class, surely; you cannot give it to a woman whose husband is in prison; surely she above all requires it. You cannot give any help towards rent. I am informed in England it is competent for Guardians to pay 1s. or part of the rent of a room.

180. For what class?—Classes that are temporarily out of work; such classes as are relieved at present by the St. Vincent de Paul Society, and other societies.

181. Do you think your Guardians would support such a view?—I think so; they are most anxious. Even last Monday there was a girl and her brother, both working at some small industry. Their sight was gradually failing, and it had failed to such an extent that they were not able to earn enough to keep body and soul together. If they got some little relief, they would be able to work and supplement it, but, as I explained, we had no power to achieve them.

182. Did they go into the workhouse, do you know?—We were told that was the only thing for them. We had great trouble last year about measles; here in Dublin 840 children died of measles, and except you sent them into hospital you had no means of giving them relief that I could see, and that is an expensive thing. I am not sure, we may have power to appoint district nurses and give a little extra nourishment in these cases, but it has not been the practice.

183. That again is the Medical Charities and the Public Health Act?—We have a ward in the North Union altogether devoted to venereal diseases. I think those cases should be treated in the Lock; of course, it is a matter of opinion.

184. And a question of extent of accommodation?—Partly, but we have had a ward absolutely devoted to that particular class of disease, which was never intended to be treated in such a hospital in a city like Dublin; where you have a hospital receiving a Government grant, they ought to be accommodated.

185. Do you know the extent of the accommodation at the Lock?—I know it is limited. Some of us think that the authority of the master in a workhouse is altogether too absolute; it seems to me rather an elastic system. At present if I or any other Guardian chose to walk through the union hospital, the master can tell us to go out. He never has done so, but personally I don't like walking through a place in uniform; he could order me out, and therefore if I do choose to walk there, to a certain extent I am on sufferance.

186. I think he would be very indiscreet?—He would be decidedly indiscreet, but at the same time he has a legal power to do so, and a little consideration there would be desirable. I am not speaking of any master in particular; I am speaking generally, but the point is this, that if Guardians bring things to their notice, they will promise up to a certain point, and if you press them further, they will say: "Well, ladies and gentlemen, you have no power in this matter; it is in my own discretion."

187. AS SOON AS ANY definite case arose in which you thought the master was wrong you could deal with it?—A comparatively small thing was this; occasionally we find it desirable to prevent visitors going to the workhouse, but it is generally understood, for fear of any case of harshness arising, that individual Guardians shall give—it is not a permit—and the master has sometimes disregarded them, and he need not give us any satisfaction. It is not much of a matter, but at all events, those things make it evident to the master's subordination that he is the person to be obeyed, and not the Board.

June 25, 1893.

Dr. J. C. McWalter.

June 25, 1901.

Dr. George Fay.

Dr. GEORGE FAY examined.

183. CHAIRMAN.—Your evidence is mainly, I see, from the abstract you have kindly given us, directed towards the provision for infants and children, and for the epileptics?—Yes.

184. Kindly tell the Commission what your view is about the treatment of the young?—I think, sir, that all children should be nursed outside of the workhouse.

185. Beginning from what age would you say?—Soon after birth.

186. That is soon after weaning, we will say?—No; I speak now specially with regard to illegitimate children coming in, that they should be put out to nurse, and nursed, if necessary, upon artificial food, but that they should be taken away at the very earliest age from the surroundings of the workhouse.

187. Even at the age of a couple of months?—Even at the age of a week.

188. And placed in ordinary homes?—Placed with farmers; placed in the country; given to young married women of good sense, whose respectability could be certified by the district medical officer and the clergyman.

189. It has appeared in recent inquiries that there was a great deal of risk attendant upon sending children out as long as they were in what you might call the bottle-fed stage?—I quite agree.

190. Owing to dirty bottles and want of care in feeding?—And want of cleanliness. This has principally arisen in my experience, and I am in charge of a considerable number of children of this nursed-out variety, in charge of a foundling institution, and to my knowledge these dirty bottles and want of care are due principally to old women who make a profession of nursing. I would change that altogether. I would give the child to the wife of a young farmer living in the country.

191. Who had been carefully instructed on feeding them?—Who would receive careful instruction; and that the nurse when necessary be provided with proper food. I would not spare expense with regard to very young children of that age, because I think it is essential that they should be well fed, that is properly fed, and that they should have sunlight and fresh air; that is why I wish them away from any life altogether. The inspector should be, in my opinion, the mother of at least two children, and consequently conversant with what a child requires, and with the natural feelings of a mother towards a child; and I would require the inspector to have that child stripped and to examine the child's body—its head, to see there was no vermin; its body, to see that there was no rash; its genitalia, to see there was no discharge; all these things should be systematically done and regularly reported. If the child was found in any way diseased, the inspector should at once wait upon the dispensary doctor of the district, and acquaint him with the condition she found the child in; the physical condition of the child, the clothes of the child, and the way the child was kept, and the bottles and food, and all should be seen in. Delicate children, I suggest, should be kept in a home somewhat after the manner which I placed before you. The "Medical Gazette" of Paris gives an account of how they treat such children in the city of Paris.

192. You would have each of these children visited frequently in the course of the year?—Visited at least six times in the year, and always a surprise visit.

193. Then as soon as the child reached school age, it should go, of course, to the school?—As soon as they reached school age, they would become boarded-out children then, and all the children should be trained in handicraft if at all possible.

194. Would you give them the same instruction as the children of the same class receive in the country?—Yes; but I don't think children of the same class receive enough instruction in handicraft.

195. You could hardly propose to give those children a higher course of instruction than the ordinary children of the country receive?—I would, because the State here is in loco parentis, and the other children would gradually come to receive the same. I would level them up, not level down.

196. You would give them instruction of various sorts—technical instruction, and various other things. Then you point out that a child's after-life will be much more healthy, mentally and physically, by having been away from an institution?—And that they would avoid the vicious habits that are so frequently taught to children mixing among adults in workhouses.

197. Now as regards epileptics?—The present view with regard to epilepsy, that it is largely hereditary, I don't think is well-founded, because it may be generally taken, as a rule, that epilepsy that does not develop before twenty-five years of age is, as a rule, curable, and that cases developing after seven and up to twenty, yield the largest percentage of cures. I think that epilepsy is frequently the result, and especially in the poorer children reared in workhouses, of the filthy habits which they are taught by epileptics, and which they receive from those with whom they come in contact. I would divide epileptics into day epileptics and night epileptics, and I would certainly put the night epileptics out with farmers. Reynolds, who gave a great deal of consideration to the subject, considers that such cases are most amenable to treatment, and that agricultural pursuits are particularly suitable for them. I would have every epileptic under very careful medical supervision, and I would give rewards for the largest percentage of cures found with regard to them. Epilepsy is due to so many different causes, and, probably, more than any other disease, it requires careful medical examination; it is a brain disease; we hardly know what it is; the pathological lesions left are very variable; it may be due sometimes to constipation, sometimes female health will produce it, sometimes a slight irritation of the ear. It has been known to follow from inflammation at the root of a tooth; it has been known to follow, not infrequently, from worms. For that reason I say that the cure, which is so frequently obscure, should be always set out. I would certainly recommend confirmed epileptics being sent to the asylum, and epileptics should always be removed from the young, because there is a great tendency to imitation of all these nervous diseases amongst the young.

198. As regards the same epileptics?—Of the type you are referring to now, of the poor?

199. Yes, we have about 400 of them in workhouses?—Some cases epileptics are particularly brilliant men. It is a strange fact that epilepsy does not seem to much influence inheritance. Some mathematicians, and others, are epileptic; some very distinguished writers have been epileptic; but the class of epileptics that would come under the Poor Law surveillance would be principally those of weak intellectual powers; at least, the powers, if they were great, were potential; never developed. And I think those that get their attacks at night might be sent out to farmers. Agricultural pursuits are stated by Reynolds to be more efficacious in the treatment than anything else, and being away from other inmates—because amongst workhouse inmates there is a tendency to imitate epileptics, a tendency to tease and worry in different ways—by sending him out to the country you remove him from all those unpleasant and vicious surroundings.

200. Would you rather have such treatment than putting them in an institution together?—I would not put them in an institution together—I think it is bad—because if you judge the severity of the attack by the number of fits, and the duration of fits, and the after influence of the fit, whether it passes away quickly or not, and put a mild case amongst severe cases, the tendency of the mild case will be to become severe.

201. By a sort of apprehension?—Yes, I don't know how it is, but that has been the experience of medical writers. I, consequently, recommend their being sent to farmers. If a farmer gets a small sum, he will be very glad to take a man whose attacks are at night, and who would be of use and assistance on the farm. There is one thing with regard to children that I would like particularly to dwell upon—it is with regard to the milk. The milk supplied to the union workhouses throughout Ireland is disgraceful. The reports are continually coming to me. It has been my duty for many years to be reading the provincial journals. I find that very frequently the percentage of fat in milk is less than it should be.

202. In fact, I suppose it comes to this, that the percentage of water is more?—I would put it otherwise. They occasionally mix sweet milk with fresh, and it is then very difficult to detect, because all you have deficient is fat; the spent milk mixed with it, of course, the albumen and the solids, and when you reduce the percentage of fat in the way they systematically do in the country, you produce a peculiar disease of the small intestine; the mucous membrane becomes diseased. This was first made plain by the New Jersey Council in 1863; the children die of inaction. It is the same with all mammals; they all die when the percentage of fat in milk falls below a certain amount, or when the percentage of fat is not proportionate to the amount of albumen present in it.

Miss WELBY examined.

June 25, 1902.

Miss Welby.

228. CHAIRMAN.—You are a Rural District Council member and a Guardian in one of the large workhouses in Ireland?—Yes.

229. What is your view of the amalgamation of unions?—I am altogether in favour of it, but I suppose I ought to state that any evidence I give to-day is purely personal and unrepresentative. There has been a good deal of opposition shown on the part of the Board.

230. You are speaking your own individual view?—Yes.

231. As regards amalgamation of unions, you think a great deal might be done?—I do.

232. Has it occurred to you to what extent?—My personal experience is confined, of course, to the South Dublin Union. I did venture to say that even an amalgamation of the North with it—

233. Later on we shall be holding an inquiry in Dublin with reference to the particular area to be dealt with, and in the country. We would not now go into any question relating to a definite area, but general evidence on the various subjects. You have given a list of a number of things here that are quite proper for the present sitting. You say that owing to the falling off in population?—Yes; and, of course, facilities for locomotion—

234. That you believe a great many workhouses might be closed?—Yes.

235. As regards the insane and the epileptics, you have seen them in the workhouse, and you don't like it?—No, and of course the medical evidence has been so strong on that that I feel very mistrustful of anything I could say.

236. But your own observation leads you?—I—to quite agree with them.

237. You think a great many small workhouses might go because the maintenance of a small number of paupers leads to an unduly large official staff?—Yes.

238. On one matter, No. 5, you say you are in favour of local provision in villages for cases of sudden illness. Did you mean hospital accommodation?—If we could, but what I have always before me is the dread of suggesting any reform, that at once arouses opposition on account of the expense; but I live in a small village, and I see the dreadful shortcomings, owing to the want of a local nurse. We have a district nurse and midwife, but we seldom have our village without one or more cases of illness that require nursing. The housing of the people is so defective. I often find cases of patients lying in a house of one apartment; no proper accommodation, no way of separating them; sick and healthy together.

239. What you think is that either a cottage hospital or district nursing would be necessary for humane treatment?—Yes.

240. You mention the abolition of pauper ward assistants, except for scrubbing and cleaning purposes, but there is an order to that effect, and any violation of it, of course, would be noticed if it were brought before the Local Government Board?—Our wards in the South Dublin Union—

241. Without going into any particular workhouse?—The only workhouse I am intimately acquainted with is one where I have noticed a number of ward assistants.

242. You have noticed, even at the present time, that paupers are discharging, to your knowledge, nursing duties?—Well, perhaps not technically, but at any rate, they are in attendance upon the inmates, and I fail to see how it could be otherwise.

243. Well, now, the evidence that you offer to give about the Dublin unions we would be very glad to get from you later on, and about the question of the Guardians that you raise, but it would not properly come up now. We have to issue notices to all Guardians and local bodies when any evidence affecting their own institutions will be received?—One witness, Mr. Chairman, mentioned the dietary as wasteful. I have always thought that myself.

244. Now, you have seen wasteful expenditure?—Yes; I have seen a whole barrow of good bread that was waste after one dinner, owing to the equal scale of rations, the quantity given, and once laid beside a pauper, it becomes waste if not touched, and is treated as waste.

245. How would you meet that?—By not giving the entire quantity at the start, and by allowing there to ask for more. That has been tried with success in English workhouses, and in one I heard of it effected a saving of a ton of bread in a month.

246. Could you give me the reference to that workhouse?—The Carling Workhouse.

247. I would like to find out whether they have any special books to meet such a system?—Then it is the custom in a workhouse I know is cut the bread in very rough chunks, that leads to waste, and in the case of many in the infirmary, makes it distasteful.

248. You think that a lady inspector would be a desirable appointment?—Most desirable. You see, we have such a very large proportion of women in the workhouses, and I have always noticed that in the workhouse I know best, it always shows evidence of man's hand everywhere. I might mention one detail only which came under our notice. When little infants were being sent out to nurse, it was the stewardess who got out their little suits, and we found that they were sometimes dressed without having those garments altered.

249. Then you would have three inspectors at each workhouse—the general inspector, the lady inspector, and the medical inspector?—Yes; I suppose it would be possible for one lady inspector to inspect more than one workhouse.

250. Oh, yes, from twenty to thirty. Then in the last paragraph you point to the importance of keeping children from meeting grown-up paupers?—Yes.

251. And you would like to keep separate the children that go in and out frequently; you would like to keep those separate from the other children?—Who are permanent. It may be a difficult matter, but still I think it would be possible; there must be a good deal of contamination with those going in and out.

252. You would be willing to keep on the schools and not have boarding out?—Oh, I prefer boarding out. I would prefer to have all of the children out of the workhouse.

253. That would make it unnecessary to have any distinction between the ins and the outs and the permanent, if they were all out. Is there anything else in connection with that last paragraph?—I mentioned putting a restriction on the intercourse between the children and their parents. I have come across a great many instances of entire families in the workhouse, and I presume the parents are still of a workable age. All that tends to perperize the whole family and whole generations, allowing them so readily to drift into the workhouse and remain there, and facilities given to them for intercourse with their children, and, at the same time, the feeling of home life and self-respect is gone.

254. Do you think you might safely take those children from their parents and board them out?—I would, unless in very very special cases, subject to the discretion of the Guardian.

Dr. LUFFAN examined.

Dr. Luffan.

255. CHAIRMAN.—You say that the population of Ireland has so much diminished?—It is half what it was at the time of the Famine; that the number of workhouses might be very much reduced?—Yes.

256. That really half of them ought to suffice?—Well, I should not like to say the precise number; but a very large number.

257. Owing to the increase of railway accommodation?—Yes; I think the railways might be made considerably more use of than at present.

258. Circumstances having changed so much since 1840, when they were started?—Yes.

259. As regard your own county, you mention certain things that might be done; but I think we will keep that over until we get down to Tipperary, and hear what you have to say then. You think that for the County Tipperary there should be an auxiliary system?—Yes.

260. As opposed to an annex to an existing lunatic asylum?—Yes; on the ground that the whole trend of medical opinion, and the deliberate opinion of the English Medical-Psychological Society, which, I should imagine, would be a supreme tribunal on the subject, are very strongly opposed to still further enlarging asylums that are already too large for the most part, and that it is very much better, because more healthy, to place the helpless and incurable lunatics in auxiliary, because smaller institutions. On this point the English Commissioners of Lunacy themselves have taken up the same ground. In their last Report they say:—"The Commissioners draw special attention to the need for classification of patients, and for the provision of cheaper institutions for the chronic and incurable classes of lunacy." At the London Epidemic Society, where the question of the prevalence of dysentery and allied diseases was under discussion, Sir Patrick Maxwell expressed himself strongly opposed to great institutions, and in the Report of the Tuberculosis Committee they declared that they felt bound—this is the Report which was adopted by the Medical-Psychological Society:—"We feel bound to enter our protest against the present tendency to build large asylums." Therefore, I am in favour of auxiliary institutions as opposed to building annexes to institutions that are already, from a sanitary point of view, too big. I should also quote the opinion of the great Simpson, who had worked out the matter very carefully; he found, with every increment of patients in the institution there was a distinct increment of unhealthiness. These constitute two or three of the leading lights in connection with auxiliary asylums versus annexes to existing ones. Local people will see great objection to the abolition of the workhouse; whether they may revolutionize in the abstract, when it comes to their own case they have a mighty objection to shut up the workhouse and all its fat belongings; but if here and there these workhouses were converted into auxiliary asylums the money-spending department would still remain, and patients would be very much facilitated.

June 25, 1898.

Dr. Lister.

241. It would break the fall?—It would never then break the fall; for I should say quite as much would be spent in the new department of the asylum as in the old workhouse.

242. Where would the economy come in for the out-payers if you kept the old building on under a new title?—I don't mean that everywhere you should keep the old building on; there would be quite a number of unions supporting a particular auxiliary asylum. Then, with regard to the amalgamation itself, of course the individual cases can only be associated by local inquiries; and further, I would say that the whole thing will only be made practicable by very strong powers vested for the moment either in the Local Government Board or some Board which for the moment would take its place. Local differences and local interests would render any extensive amalgamation quite impracticable otherwise. Mr. Balfour's Bill, some years ago, was assailed because it gave too much power; with all respect, I don't think he gave power enough to the central board. The whole thing would be unworkable unless something closely akin to despotic authority were for the moment put in the hands of some board, not necessarily the Local Government Board.

243. Some means of making a fresh start?—There would be no earthly means of setting it by a conference among the Boards; they would be quite willing to get rid of their neighbour, but extremely unwilling to commit felix de se.

244. As regards consumptive patients?—As regards consumptive patients, some of the localities, which are most favourable having regard to the climate, which, of course, is the thing necessarily most favoured for the treatment of such cases, might be selected for the establishment of a sanatorium; and in the meantime some small provision might be made for the separation of patients—I am afraid it would be a case of separation, not of cure, in the case of adapting a ward in one of the existing workhouses.

245. Where is it possible in the country you do have a separate ward for them?—I find, in my place, it is wholly impossible, except on the female side; we are able to do something on the female side, but nothing on the male side. When the nurse was introduced they took up the small wards—it was a very narrow, short-sighted policy not to build them a house; they have been of immense service to the institution, but, of course, they necessarily must occupy some little room, and that little room was, for economy sake, taken from the smaller wards which existed, and we have every day found how much more convenient and economical it would have been to have built a small cottage for them. But all the workhouses appear to have been built on one of two or three plans. I don't think there is any place where there might be adequate accommodation.

246. Unless the number of patients is very small it is difficult to get a separate ward; therefore you would say allocate one of the closed workhouses for consumptives?—Yes; at Mallow, which had a great reputation, and, I suppose, some place analogous to Glengarriff. And in the interim there ought to be separate accommodation, and also for syphilitic cases—that would mean only a case or two; and ditto with consumptive cases.

247. But you have a great number of consumptive cases?—I don't happen to have, at present, a great number. I don't think there are a great number, unless in very large workhouses; I find it is only a case of from one to four.

248. You think that the able-bodied destitute of two or three unions might be accommodated in one?—Yes; if there was proper provision made by means of giving the able-bodied individual a ticket to go by rail, and having a committee of the united Boards of Guardians to meet occasionally, and see that they were sent on an once-a-week temporary provision for them until they were so sent on. I don't see anything to prevent the able-bodied inhabitants of several unions being collected into one.

249. He would not have any money; just get his ticket. And his ticket would not be paid for unless he travelled?—Yes. Then some temporary provision might have to be made to give him a meal pending his going on to his destination; that might have to be done and it might not.

250. Then, as regards children, you think they ought all to be boarded out?—Yes; but you should first have the place to board them.

251. Even when the parents are in the workhouse?—I am aware there are a good many nice points in connection with that; but the people who are in a workhouse don't very naturally help in the moral development of their own children, and in their case it might be even more important to separate them; but I quite realize that there are inconveniences in taking them out where the parents are in the house, because the worst thing would be for the parents to run away. Still, I think, on the whole, they ought to be out; but you must have a place to put them, and for that purpose the labouring population must be secured as the country, themselves, as it is in their houses they ought to be placed. I am widely opposed to placing them in great institutions; I prefer to put them into cottages, for this reason: it is a very well-known fact that the worst with a poor man can have is a servant who has been accustomed to fall and plenty in a comfortable home; they make very bad wives. I don't say necessarily they always do so, but they do so in a number of instances, because they don't understand that close economy that people in poverty do. And these children brought up in palatial surroundings are not likely to make as good wives as those brought up in cottages and accustomed to some industries. Looking at industry as the end of the whole performance, I think they would be a great deal more industrious and contented with their lot if they were out in the country and in humble houses, instead of in big mansions. For that purpose I think the Labourers' Acts should be made compulsory, because at present they are largely voluntary; and even respectable unions, like the one I am connected with, have merely housed a small fraction of the entire labouring population.

252. You mean the sanitary cottages are insufficient?—Yes.

253. I suppose you have very nearly gone up to your one shilling in the £ at the Cashel Board?—I think it is very near it. The expense of these cottages is outrageous, and that arises from the large way these Acts are drafted; the opposition given by large numbers greatly swells the expense.

254. Well, we are a little off the track now?—I am; but you must facilitate the erection of cottages and the putting out of labourers, if you want to have room enough for the housing of the children and the housing of the aged couples.

255. Still, when children are going to be boarded out there always is a demand for them?—There may be in some quarters, but I am not personally aware of the fact; on the contrary, I am inclined to think—but I am not able to speak positively—that there is an such great demand; you must have a large body to pick from. I am inclined to think there is not where they can be safely put out.

256. Now, about the aged couples?—If you had a wholesale, compulsory housing and lodging of the labourers, as I have called your attention to, these poor people would live in their own little houses and allotments to the end of their days, and be able to pester away at some trifling amount of industry in the shape of digging or helping to till their little plots, and they could be kept out of the workhouse altogether. There is no reason why they should not, because very many of them are able to do some little thing.

257. You would give it by outdoor relief?—I would supplement—I would hope, if they had cottages of their own, they would be able to "induct" on their little allotments to the last, and I would supplement what they earned by some outdoor relief. On that subject the people suffer a great deal more than indoor people, because they live on what is almost humanly impossible to live on, owing to their anxiety to keep out of the workhouse. I doubt if outdoor relief is a benefit to the poor people who receive it.

258. You are speaking of grants of 1s. and 1s. 6d. a week?—Yes; those aged couples should receive something more than that; but they would be able to supplement it.

259. You assume that these people would have a house and bit of land of their own?—Yes.

260. Have they at present?—No; by reason of the defects of the Labourers Act; but if those were made compulsory, and cheaper than at present, couples could end their lives in their own houses.

261. Then you would suggest the provision of houses for the class who are at present in the workhouse as aged and infirm?—Yes, it would be the most effective way of dealing with them.

262. Without any family depending on them?—You cannot turn out the people who are in the workhouse at present, to cottages and allotments, because they would be unfitted for them; but by making proper and adequate provision for the working classes in the future we would weed out the infirm aged who are now in the workhouse, and render it unnecessary they should approach them at all.

263. Would you contemplate these people paying rent for the houses?—Certainly.

264. And at the same time getting outdoor relief?—That is a difficulty. Of course, the quarter-acre clause, I believe, is substantially in existence at present; at least, I have heard a letter read from the Local Government Board pointing out that the Guardians could not give relief to a person with a cottage and allotment. Some provision should be made to cover that class of cases.

265. I was not thinking of the legal bar, but thinking of the wide view of providing houses for an aged couple for which they would pay rent, and at the same time would get outdoor relief?—None the less, I would charge them the rent, and see it was paid, too.

266. You would stop it out of the outdoor relief, I suppose?—I suppose it would come to that; you would give with one hand what you would take with the other.

267. You are in favour of converting the workhouse infirmary into a district hospital in all cases?—I am; and I tried, myself, to get my own one converted, but the interests of the rival hospital caused the thing to miscarry. And I believe the interests of the county infirmaries are really at the bottom of much of the opposition to the conversion of infirmaries into district hospitals, because, of course, the raison d'être of those institutions ceases when the badge of pauperism is removed from the workhouse hospital. There is the greatest possible injury done to the poor by the failure of Sir John Lubbock's scheme; the people will not go into the workhouse hospital, and when they do go in, under great pressure, it is a halfway house to the workhouse; it fosters pauperism in two ways, by depriving the sick poor of the treatment they would receive in these hospitals, leaving even options to become permanent burdens on the rates; and it fosters it in another way by breaking down the barriers of wholesome pride which stand in the way of decent poor going into the workhouse. The workhouse infirmaries ought to be completely converted into district hospitals.

268. Under what management?—Oh, well, I think you know that the Act makes reasonable enough provision for it: they are to be managed by a committee of the Guardians and people nominated by them.

269. What would you do in the case where you break up unions?—Where you break up the workhouse by firm conviction is you will have to retain the hospital. You can get rid of the children and of the old, and you can carry on the adult able-bodied folk to the united workhouse, but you cannot get rid of the hospital; you cannot remove sick people on infirmaries distances.

270. I quite follow you in that; but under what management would the hospital that remained be?—Under the management of a committee nominated by the joint Board; I think that would be efficacious enough; the new common Board would nominate a committee for each of the hospitals. It could not be managed by a Board of Guardians; they could not properly manage two or three hospitals ten miles off, but they can appoint a committee of the Guardians from that district, and add other persons that would be suitable, and let them govern the hospital.

271. And the old workhouse medical officer would continue to act?—He should continue to act; but I think it would be a very considerable improvement if half a dozen of the medical residents in the towns were appointed as a staff. I always was of opinion, and put it forward more than once, that the hospitals, furnishing as they do, great means of instruction, ought to be officered, not by one individual, but by a staff. Amongst other reasons I have in this, that the advantages that are offered at present to the dispensary man by reason of registrations, vaccination, and so on, give them such an advantage over the hospital men that in time no respectable man will take a hospital, because his chance of practice will materially diminish. That would be one reason why I would not put a man in a hospital if I could help it; I would appoint half a dozen, but for the purpose of administration the senior man probably would be the head.

272. We have so many workhouses where there are half a dozen medical officers that there is no difficulty?—That would be my view; there ought to be half a dozen men on the staff. If there are half a dozen in the town or within a reasonable distance they should comprise the staff of the place.

273. Paving words you are strongly in favour of?—I am in favour of them; but I have a very strong opinion that the medical profession has a right to be protected in connection with them. There are a great many philanthropic people that are never half so happy as when plauditing doctors. I remember on one occasion visiting a woman who had 200 acres of land, and was admitted to the local hospital, which lives largely on the admission of such people; and a man, a large proprietor in Co. Tipperary, appeared to think the whole case was met by informing me, "But she is paying the hospital." He never thought for a moment how inconvenient it would be to himself to be asked to supply a bullock for nothing. He did not at all see how unreasonable it was to ask a doctor to give his services for nothing, or rather, have a person who would be his patient, treated for nothing elsewhere. If the public at large want to keep respectable medical men, and at present there is a tendency for the leaders of the class to go into the public service—if they want to keep them they will have to mind their "p's and q's" better than they are exhibiting them. They will have to pay us better; and this system of treating people for nothing will have to be greatly curtailed. You must get rid of the workhouse surroundings. It is all very well where there happens to be a county infirmary in the town; the terrible grievance of passing under the Gaudine Furks does not exist for the poor there. But take the case of Nenagh, which is twenty-seven miles from Cashel; it is a most monstrous thing to think that the decent poor there are obliged to go into the workhouse hospital and be classed as paupers. It is most injurious, and the result is that numbers remain set who ought to be in hospital. With a dispensary doctor, who gets three or four tickets, it is, at the end of the week, a matter of physical impossibility that he could go ten or twelve miles to each of the cases. There are cases where the patients require to be seen twice a day; but if sending them into hospital involves the degradation that it at present does a complete case is made out for making the Gaudine Furks operative, instead of being, as they are at present, wholly inoperative. With regard to the system at present, I raised that question with your Board; and the Nivary people tell me they have, too. No patient in well-to-do circumstances can be legally admitted within the walls either of the workhouse hospital or fever hospital. I know that opinion is not held by others, but I will give my reason.

274. I have known one of the Inspectors of the Local Government Board derive considerable benefit from treatment within the walls of a workhouse?—They had no right to let him in. Originally the workhouse hospitals were intended exclusively for the pauper sick. The fever hospitals, which originally were county institutions, or which were built at the expense of the county very largely—when they were added, as they nearly in every instance were added, to the workhouse, there immediately arose the necessity for making provision for the admission of others than paupers, and accordingly a section of an Act was passed by which the Guardians were allowed to admit others than the pauper sick.—Then the Act of 1878 allowed them to admit persons that were outside that sphere; persons who might be driving a carriage, and sometimes did, had to go into the hospital—get ill at a hotel or one thing or another. But the power was given to the sanitary authority, not the Board of Guardians. Now the sanitary authority is a distinct entity altogether, and I maintain that the Board of Guardians have no power at all. I raised that question with the auditor the other day.

June 26, 1923.

Dr. Loftis.

275. It is a question more of interest from a formal, rather than a practical, point of view?—Those people have no right to admit persons in independent circumstances.

276. It generally happens in the fever hospital, where it is good for the public health, that an infectious case should be treated?—We have no right to be criticised for the benefit of the public health; the public health ought to be regulated according to the principles of justice and of right. We should not be singled out as the solitary victims of the public health, for we do a great deal for the public health.

277. The patient ought to give a good fact—I would re-echo that; but when people can get in without a fee they don't pay it. Then I wish to call emphatic attention to the wearing of pauper clothes.

278. Of course you know there have been various communications made from time to time by the Local Government Board, pointing out that it was most undesirable that the ordinary pauper clothes should be worn, but a special hospital outfit of serge?—They have recommended that as a kind of compromise; but that does not compromise the matter, because people have the same objections to these new-fangled garments as to the old pauper clothing; they act just as much as a deterrent. If the thing were left voluntary—because cases arise where it would be a considerable advantage to insist on their wearing workhouse clothing—they may bring in their own clothing in a state that would make it a great advantage to maintain other clothing. The governors of the hospital should have power to permit the patients to wear proper clothing. I have tried the Local Government Board over and over again, and cannot take a stir out of them. They insist on forcing clothes on the unfortunate patients, and it is one of the greatest grievances of which the despoiled poor have to complain. Now, with regard to the medical men themselves, I have referred to the advantage it would be to have a complete staff for these hospitals. I would say the senior member of the staff ought to have something more approaching fifty of tenure than at present. Dispensary men cannot be depended except for sufficient cases; but it is quite another story with regard to the workhouse medical men. On one occasion I got Mr. Atkinson's opinion. He held the other thing; but they don't agree with him.

279. There is no case on record, is there?—There is Dr. Kenny's case, in which he went into court. The disclosures which Dr. Moorhead was left to make himself, when they ought to have been made years before, were the outcome of that want of security on the part of the medical officers. If they had the proper fifty of tenure that they ought it would not have been left for Dr. Moorhead to have burst upon the country with an extraordinary disclosure as he did, with great courage, but very little profit to himself, I am sorry to say. Then the question of sudden calls is one I raised years ago with the Local Government Board, and it has been raised in England. I say no physician for a hospital ought to be sent for unless there was some suspicion that he was wanted; but as your rules are drawn out he can be sent for without any suspicion at all. I don't say that I have ever been sent for; as a matter of fact I have not.

280. I think that is a question, again, of a formal nature?—If you don't mind points like these you will not have the whole flood of light let in.

281. What I would like light on would be on practical matters?—With regard to the inmates, in the English workhouses—and this refers, not to the conversion of the workhouses into auxiliary asylums, but to increased accommodation for the sick—in the English workhouses, or rather in the infirmaries belonging to the workhouses, they have tried treating a few acute cases with most remarkable success. It is found that to have gone into an asylum bracketed not only the individual, but his family. There are many border cases where the party ought to be, and in this country is, sent in; but in England lately a practice has grown up of sending him into the magnificent infirmaries they have in connection with many of the English workhouses, and the results are something surprising—the necessities, and not only the necessities of the individuals, but the saving of themselves and their families from a brand that means social and moral destruction in numberless cases. I, of course, must, in common with every one who has a workhouse hospital, have from time to time to deal with these acute cases; I have to keep them for a few days, in order to get them into the county asylum; but during that time we have no proper means of dealing with them.

282. What class of infirmaries in England do you refer to?—Infirmaries connected with great workhouses. And the outcome of this new departure there is certainly most gratifying in every way.

283. What department do you refer to?—I mean the treatment of the small number of acute cases of insanity in the workhouse infirmaries—acute mania, for instance. As I gather from the newspaper reports and the medical journals, in most of these cases—they amount to very few—they don't seek to convert themselves into asylums, but the treatment of the few border cases has been attended with a great amount of success, and it has saved the individual and family in many ways.

284. These are very fully equipped infirmaries?—They are splendid.

285. You would not propose, in your own infirmary and infirmaries of a similar class through the country, to do anything of the kind there?—I would propose to have a couple of wards where a few patients could be detained for a week or fortnight.

286. But you have not wards sufficient at present for consumptive patients?—No. With regard to the pay wards you refer to, parties who would be in independent circumstances should only be admitted on paying the full cost that would be incurred by the governing body plus a remuneration to the physician placed over them.

287. According to a scale?—According to a scale which would be ascertained on the inquiry, and which would take into account the legitimate rights of the medical profession, on the one hand, and those of the public on the other hand. With reference to my preference for auxiliary asylums over annexes to already sufficiently large or too large asylums, one of the great arguments used in favour of annexes is, and has been, that £s. a week would be paid out of the Local Taxation Fund if the party were in an annex, and only 2s. if they were in an auxiliary asylum. That can be met by the very simple statement that the Local Taxation Account is a limited quantity, and if all who propose to avail themselves of it did avail themselves of it, the account would become bankrupt in the morning. There is no such sum as would pay £s. a week for all the chronic insane people that might be stuffed into annexes to great asylums; the money would be very soon exhausted, and that account would cease to exist.

288. You are anticipating this. You believe this; but you have not seen the account, of course?—We have the account here. Here are some figures supplied by Dr. Kelly in connection with it; and further, I have here the account for three years, £204,000, and the expenditure was £261,000; next year, receipts, £207,000, and expenditure £260,000; and third year, £200,371 was the income derived from that local account, and the expenditure was £232,375; so there was only £6,000 of a surplus.

289. I don't think your inference is quite correct?—I am quoting from Dr. Kelly, because he worked it up very well in Cork. What I maintain is, that the money, being a limited quantity, would not bear all the burdens that are placed on it.

290. It is not a defined sum; it is still, it is produced by certain duties?—I know; and what, it is not unlimited, because these taxes don't produce unlimited amounts.

291. But you cannot say they produce a certain amount?—No; but the amount is as likely to run below the mark as above it, and we know from experience.

292. All you know from experience is how much you have got?—We may indefinitely conclude it cannot run above a certain number of thousands.

293. I don't know whether you are sound in that?—We can take a number of years, and see where it oscillates between a few thousands; we know it is not going to fly up to millions. About the nursing, I hold very strongly that all these hospitals, unless ones where they run down to thirty beds, ought to be avoided of for the instruction of nurses; but that instruction should be very closely watched, whether the hospitals are situated in the country or in town. There should be a standard curriculum and a standard of examinations.

294. I think the question of training of nurses is altogether out of our view. Nourishing of the sick I thought you referred to?—That is what I mean.

295. But the training of nurses?—One is part of the other. You will nurse the sick better if you have a respectable supply of nurses, and you cannot have that unless you have adequate training facilities.

296. I don't think it comes into this. And some of the evidence you put down is evidence we would be very glad to have from you when we go to Clonmel or Cashel?—There is just one point I was forgetting, which the medical profession won't be much obliged to me if I finish without referring to, and I, I suppose, other officers, too; but, of course, on amalgamation the same course ought to be followed that has been followed in the Four Courts; for instance, when offices are abolished, that the people whose offices are taken from them should be adequately pensioned. There were some cases brought forward by Mr. Dunn, where officers in Donaghmore Union and elsewhere got the magnificent sum of 30s. when their offices were abolished. I say the officers should receive their full pension, with this proviso, that they should have the option of being appointed to any other vacancy that would turn up.

297. That would imply, of course, a power of compulsory transfer?—Yes, of course; if it was left to the doctors they probably would not elect them. Provision should be made in the Act of Parliament that they should have full pensions, or have the option, when they were under twenty years in the service—the option of being appointed as a matter of course to some neighbouring vacancy.

298. In cases where unions were dissolved—in Mr. Munnaghan's own neighbourhood of Gortin and in Donaghmore, some of the pensions were very small; but it was because the particular officers had been only, perhaps, a year, or some short period, in office?—When an office is abolished in the Four Courts a man gets a full pension.

299. In these cases, I think the officers got full pensions otherwise than under the ordinary Superannuation Act?—I think it would have been more just to have given them the option of being appointed to some other union.

300. You may take it for granted that the Commission here would not be likely to recommend anything except generous treatment?—I mention that last on the list, for it is usual for "the point to christen his own child first"; for my own profession would be very ill-pleased with me, and I would be very ill-pleased with myself, if I omitted to mention that.

Mr. GEORGE BENNETT examined.

301. CHAIRMAN.—You are a Guardian in Dublin here?—Yes, sir. If you will allow me to start by saying that I don't represent the Guardians, I simply come on my own account, because there is a feeling on the matter. I am perfectly friendly with my fellow-Guardians; but, all the same, I don't represent the Board.

302. You are speaking personally. What view on the subject of our inquiry do you wish to put before us?—I should like to start at the beginning, about the election of Guardians. Constituted as our Board is, with a great many new men on it—men who have not been in that sort of business before—they are more approachable, and more come-at-able, and more impressionable than men of an older standing. I have nothing whatever to say against the men, but it is simply what would happen to you or myself: they have gone on for the first time into this place, and people come at them of their own class, and it is very difficult to put them off, and the result is, we don't get the class of officials we need. We need men of intelligence, for I hold that one man of moral force is worth three men without it. You have those there, but what can you do. We had a very striking illustration, lately, of a man we got into the place—a fine man, most promising; but he has no intelligence, no intellectual vigour, with the result that he is a perfect failure; and with a sprinkling, unless he is a very small one indeed, of low class non-intellectual officials, it is very hard to get business well done. That, I feel, is a very weak point with us: we have some very good efficient men at the top; our leading officials are very good men indeed.

303. What you are rather distressed about is the quality of some of the officials?—The quality of some of the officials.

304. And the mode of election?—And the mode of election. Owing to the constitution of the Board, which you understand just as well as I do, they are come-at-able, and they have not learned—I am sure they will after a time learn—to make up their mind not to promise anybody.

305. Have you any suggestions in the matter?—I think it would be well if your Board laid before our Board the necessity of being stiffer. I have men come at me, and I am courteous to all; but I never think of binding myself to any man. I hear all he says, and I make notes of it; but I go there, and I am sure other Guardians as well, free to vote or not, as I think proper. We have got some officials that have been a great mistake, and no good can be done with them.

306. Then as regards the medical staff?—With regard to the medical, it is in this way—I would like you to understand me, a great many of our officials require sick leave very often.

307. Doctors?—No; but a great many of our officials, when they require a medical certificate, have too little trouble in getting them: the medical man returns that so-and-so requires leave, his health requires it; but we get no light whatever on what is wrong with him.

308. They would not like to disclose their patient's ailments?—I think the Guardians should have some information; it looks strange.

309. Is there much of that going on?—There is. Our officials are not over-worked men; and sometimes we have a great string of laminae cried out: this man wants leave for a fortnight, that one wants leave for three weeks, and we never hear really what is wrong with the men; and it has been hinted by some of the Guardians that it was due to their own want of steadiness.

310. Have any representations been made by the Guardians to the medical officers on the subject?—I don't think so, we see very little of the medical officers.

311. Or by you personally?—I don't think so. I don't happen to know any of the medical officers. I had occasion to call once or twice to the next man about a patient, but I never made any representation to him, and they don't seem to come in our way. I have often thought we should have had them when we had not. It leads to irregularity. We want not only officials, but officials to do their business, and to be there in right form to do it.

312. I think there is no doubt there are important subjects; but the question is, whether the Guardians or individual Guardians might not be able themselves, without going beyond themselves, to do something towards remedying what they are wrong?—With your permission, I would mention it to them.

313. Oh, no, on your own discretion, please?—I shall be very pleased to do so on my own discretion. I think with regard to the supervision of the whole concern, such as visiting, it would require to be a very strict style of supervision, and it requires a man to go through that place who understands it from one end to the other minutely; he would want to have a general knowledge of the business, and to say:—"So-and-so is not what it ought to be; it requires an alteration." Returns have been made from time to time, and some have been made by myself, but I never heard any more about them. I have been complimented and told: "It was very good of you to do so-and-so," but it would have been better if they had acted on it; it requires a good deal of consideration. There was a part I would like to touch on, and that was with regard to outdoor nursing of children. I highly approve of that, but there should be regular visiting on the part of our lady Guardians often than they have ever been visited before, and the union should make such provision for the convenience of these ladies as would be necessary

June 25, 1896.

Dr. Lefter.

Mr George Bennett.

June 25, 1901.
Mr. George
Bossett.

They can do more in the way of selecting proper nurses, and seeing that the nurses are doing their duty, than any man that I know of; they can give the time and enter into the requirements of the children in the way that men cannot. Hard-headed business men won't do it, even if they had the time, and I think there should be more thrown on the ladies in the way of visiting, but of course there should be provision made for them by the Board of Guardians. There are homes and traps at the workhouse, and I don't see how they could be made better use of.

314. Did you ever raise the question at the Board of Guardians—I have referred to it several times; they did not oppose it exactly; not opposing a thing is one thing, and putting it into practice is quite another. Children in a high-class school or college are affected by the surrounding influences, and why should they not be affected in an adverse form by the influence of the union; they become low and demoralised, and if the thing is not done within a certain time, it cannot be done at all, for they form such habits as never can be eradicated. That is my experience of human nature. We know they are the children, in the main, of parents who did not lead over regular lives, and the sooner they are taken away the better, and put in a way that they are treated properly; and nurses, I don't care how good they are, they require supervision, and supervision of a class higher than is administered by Poor Law officials and relieving officers. They cannot see what a child requires as well as a lady of intelligence will see; she sees very clearly, and in a far-seeing way, what they really require.

315. You have an active ladies' committee there, but you find a difficulty about locomotion for them?—That is it. Somebody said to-day the visits should be visits of surprise. Quite right; but they should be ofteners, and visits to the union need be ofteners. The tendency of human nature is to become lazy, and when we become lazy, sloth comes in, and that will gather about, and unless the sweeping is kept up severely and vigorously, things will get into a bad way.

Dr. T. H.
Moorehead.

Dr. T. H. Moorehead examined.

316. CHAIRMAN.—I think I know your views pretty well. I must now perforce ask you what they are. I shall be very glad to hear from you what you think as regards the breaking up of workhouses—I have not tendered any evidence about No. 1 or No. 2, but as regards No. 3, I am of opinion that if the Classes A and C were adopted, one workhouse would suffice for the destitute poor of the county. The aged and infirm classes are those I am particularly interested in. I have been studying their condition for the last twenty-five years to see if any steps could be taken to ameliorate their condition. I found that the people in the workhouse—the aged and infirm—were in a much more unsatisfactory condition—did not live as long nor enjoy as good health—as the people who were outside of the same class; and for a long time I was of opinion that that was due to bad food, bad clothing, and bad housing, but I am sorry to say that my experience is that even with better housing, abundance of food—more than they could get outside, and the best conditions that we can provide for them—that these same people are not in as good condition; they don't live as long; they don't enjoy as good health as those that are outside under worse conditions. Therefore I was very glad to see in your queries that the question of boarding out might be considered, because I have thought for a long time that if the old people could be boarded out it would be not alone a saving to the rates, because they could be boarded out much cheaper than they can be kept in the house, and it would be much better for them.

317. Have you thought of any safeguards?—I have thought of the objections to it, the objection, of course, that it might be abused, just as outdoor relief is abused; but I suppose the one could be got over as well as the other.

318. Have you thought of how?—I presume the expense on the rates would be a consideration.

319. A very important consideration?—My opinion is that the individual Guardians would be quite disposed to save the rates as far as they could.

320. I don't know whether outdoor relief is very heavy in the union you are best acquainted with?—I am not speaking of my union particularly. I don't know what it is. But in some unions outdoor relief is very heavy, and in those unions I think if people could get relief outside without admission to the workhouse when they are old and infirm, I think you might fear such a very large increase in the number of applicants that it would entirely do away with any per capita saving.

321. Could it not be limited to a certain class?—Certainly; the aged and infirm, and people who had no friends, and, as far as my experience goes, those are the only class of aged and infirm that come into the workhouse.

322. Would you say that people who had been for a certain time in residence in the workhouse might after that be boarded out?—Yes, that would be my idea; but then there is the question of supervision; that is another difficulty.

323. Of persons boarded out?—Yes; in my opinion, the dispensary medical officer would be the proper person to have supervision of them, and should make a quarterly report. I have always thought it unfortunate that the dispensary medical officer was not in charge of the boarded-out children, because after all he is the man who would know whether they were properly cared or not.

324. The dispensary medical officer is the medical officer of health also?—Yes.

325. Have you not found that as medical officer of health he is rather at a disadvantage in reporting on nuisances, lest they might conflict with his practice?—He is at a disadvantage, but I must say for him, as far as my knowledge of him goes, he has done his duty.

326. In the public health way?—Yes, that is my experience of dispensary medical officers.

327. This would put a further strain on him?—Quite so. I think he is able to bear it. Of course, even as things are at present, I think two workhouses out of four would be sufficient.

328. What about the sick?—You could not abolish the hospitals; you have not more than enough.

329. Whenever there is a workhouse you would retain a hospital?—I think you must retain a hospital.

330. You could not ask the sick to go more than ten or fifteen miles?—Oh, no; and besides there are cases where that would be too far.

331. You would not propose to diminish at all the accommodation for the sick?—It appears to me that every day more people in this country will be availing themselves of hospital accommodation; as the hospital improves more will avail themselves of it; they are the repairing shops of the community, in fact.

332. What do you think of people paying their way?—I am entirely in favour of encouraging them to pay their way as far as possible.

333. And making it binding on them to pay their way?—If they are able.

334. Yes, after due inquiry?—I think there should be a sliding scale, a discretionary scale. People who are charged to remain in a long time should not be compelled to pay as much as people whose stay is short, and there should be some adjustment with regard to their means. I know people who would be willing and anxious to pay half the average cost, but are not able to pay the whole. There is the suggestion that one workhouse in each county, or in two counties, should be reserved for a tuberculosis sanatorium. In my opinion, that would not work at all, at least for some years. If we are to use sanatoria as an effort to stamp out tuberculosis you must bring them to the people's doors almost; the sick won't go long distances. I mean those suffering from tuberculosis.

335. Taken in its earlier stages?—Yes.

336. The dispensary doctor will become aware of cases of tuberculosis?—Yes, and he will get that case into a sanatorium that is near, but they won't go far away where they won't see their friends. Possibly in time they may, but not at present.

337. I suppose you find in your own union you have more patients from a five-mile radius than all the rest put together?—That is so, sir. If tuberculosis was stamped out, about one-third of the number of beds would suffice in this country.

338. You are not speaking of consumption, but tuberculosis in general?—Yes. I don't see any reason why it should not be stamped out and made less prevalent.

339. Dr. Bossett.—About tuberculosis, you are referring to tuberculous disease?—Yes.

340. You don't mean to say it is infectious in the same way as tuberculosis?—No; but it is the pulmonary cases that spread the disease.

341. But it would not require treatment in a sanatorium for tuberculosis of the glands?—No; the danger I come from is not a particularly tuberculous district, but I find two-thirds of the hospital cases are of tuberculous disease in some shape or form; that is enormous you know. I don't know whether the suggestion I made as to the convalescent home in each province would be practicable, but I need not tell you that it is often a very great difficulty.

342. CHAIRMAN.—To go to such a distance?—I presume they would be sent by the Board of Guardians.

343. But I mean away from the visits of his friends?—I think when a patient was convalescent and wanted change of air, there would be no difficulty in getting them away. It is very often a matter of getting subscriptions locally to get them away. If there was a workhouse in each province that would be adapted as a convalescent home it would certainly aid greatly in the recovery of patients.

344. And not free a great many beds?—Yes. I don't know whether it is practical, but I put it forward as a suggestion. Then there is the matter of hospital management by the Board of Guardians as at present constituted. I believe that the hospitals could be a great deal better managed, and more economically, by a few men who would take an interest in them and learn the business. At present the Boards are so unwieldy and interchangable that the Board of this week probably does not know what last week's Board has done. No man seems to think it worth his while to take an interest in the business.

345. You would be in favour of having a small committee for the district hospitals?—Yes. I understand a witness here suggested that the County Council should have control, and I would be entirely in favour of that.

346. The County Council through a committee?—Yes.

347. How should the committee be comprised?—I think they should be nominated men—business men—party Commissioners and purely business men. Most hospitals are situated in the neighbourhood of a town where there are always a sufficient number of business men who would devote portion of their time to this, and would understand the working of such an institution in the way that farmers cannot. The only other matter that was referred to by the Workhouse Association was the matter of the tramps. I am of opinion that the abolition of local workhouses would greatly check the tramp nuisance, and the Guardians should certainly have power to detain them longer.

348. Some evidence was given to-day that they should not be received at all—should be handed over to the local barracks?—Well, sir, I will tell you my experience. Some ten or twelve years ago, several magistrates and myself undertook to try and check the tramp nuisance, and we had every tramp that was brought up committed to jail, but after a short time the Guardians refused to permit the prosecution of these tramps to continue, on the ground that they were a greater nuisance outside the inside. However, the Guardians of my union recently adopted the practice of detaining them until twelve o'clock, and I find it is a very good plan; it has greatly diminished their number, because it does not give them a sufficient time to hunt the country round on their way to another town.

349. How much do they do a day—how much distance do they travel?—About twelve Irish miles. The establishment of local sanatoria for tuberculosis appears to be the most important thing we want.

350. You suggest a seaside place?—That is for general cases.

351. Would you for consumption?—I think not; not necessarily.

352. A good healthy site?—I really don't know whether that is so necessary. Give them open air; we can then train them in a very short time not alone to carry on their own cure, but to protect others.

353. Not to spread infection?—Not to spread infection. The Local Government Board issued some little time ago a most valuable poster, and I am sorry it is not indelibly impressed on every boarding in the land, because I find that since that was issued, it has made a great change in the views of the people as to tuberculosis in my county.

354. They look at it more seriously?—And they regard it as curable. The establishment of sanatoria is one of the most important things, to my mind, at the present time.

355. Dr. BISHOP.—Have you had many cases seeking admission for a short time and going out in a short time?—No; they have all remained until I discharged them.

356. CHAIRMAN.—They are generally far-advanced cases?—No, I have only discharged two as incurable. I advised them to go home, as I could do nothing for them; the rest have all remained until I discharged them.

357. Dr. BISHOP.—Why do you say they have sought admission more since the issue of the circular?—Because previous to that it was the worst thing possible to have a case of pulmonary tuberculosis coming into the hospital; they recognised it as incurable.

358. CHAIRMAN.—They thought it was something horrid that could not be cured?—Yes, notwithstanding they recognised it as infectious, and treated it as infectious, and I only wish we had notification.

359. I suppose the dispensary doctors do have practical knowledge of these cases and give them instructions?—As far as they can, but if we are ever to deal with it successfully, it must be in the same way as with specific diseases—notification and disinfection. That is all, sir, unless you have something to ask me.

360. Mr. MURPHY is rather wondering whether you have any views about classification as regards the sick, and aged, and infirm. Are they mixed up at all in your hospital?—In my place they are not.

361. What class of cases have you?—Acute remedial cases.

362. And you don't take in the bedridden or aged and infirm?—No.

363. Where are they looked after?—In the beds of the house. They are as well fed as in the hospital, and have paid attendants.

364. Are any bedridden?—A large number.

365. And they are sufficiently attended to?—Yes; and if necessary—if they get bad at night they can call for the night nurse to see them; or, if necessary, the nurse is sent down. I look upon the aged and infirm as the class most needing extra care. There is another matter; those classed as insane in the workhouse don't at all represent, in my opinion, the numbers when it would be necessary to send to the asylum. As medical officers we are obliged to class any person as insane who is not absolutely sane, for our own protection; but it does not at all mean that they are incapable of discharging the ordinary duties of life.

366. You think it would be safe to leave them there as regards themselves and others?—Yes.

367. Do you mean idiots?—There is no hard and fast line between sanity and insanity, or idiocy and sense; but there are numbers classed as insane and idiots who are merely a little weak-minded—not just as wise as their neighbours.

368. If you had to classify a number of persons you meet in ordinary life you might have to do that?—We might.

MISS BUCHANAN, P.L.S., CONTINUED.

369. CHAIRMAN.—You chiefly desire to refer to the subject of classification in workhouses?—Yes; I consider that the workhouse system, as it is at present, is radically wrong; that is, the mixing together of all ages of people on the ground of destitution. I consider that has a great deal to do with the generating of pauperism; therefore, I think if classification is to be of any real benefit it necessitates separation into different institutions as to make it thorough.

370. Removing certain classes from the workhouse to other institutions?—Exactly; and making the workhouse proper a smaller building, and simply for the able-bodied.

371. Lazy men, who cannot get work?—They are classified, too, of course. But if we could remove the inmates, the epileptics—I don't know if anyone suggested a colony in the country somewhere for epileptics. If there are only about 300 sane epileptics in Ireland, it surely would be possible to have perhaps two small colonies, where they would be treated with some chance of their improvement in the country, because I don't believe a home is the place for epileptics, where they are not allowed outdoor employment.

372. Where there are occupations?—Yes; and at present in the workhouse they are the most hopeless

MISS
BUCHANAN.

June 28, 1902.
Miss
Buchanan.

death, as they are absolutely given nothing to do; and I think we may safely say there are very few of them that don't go to the insane department before very many years.

373. Of course, I believe there is a tendency!—Always, I believe so; but still, they might be given a chance. Meanwhile, their life is perfectly terrible, because of that want of occupation, and the dismal surroundings of the workhouse, for people with a nervous disorder.

374. I think it was Dr. Foy who gave very interesting evidence on that point. He would wish to have the epileptics not together, or in an institution or colony?—That is, of course, difficult. If they could be scattered it would be difficult to get a person to take an epileptic, I fancy.

375. Yes, at all events, would suggest for consideration the formation of an epileptic colony, such as there is in existence in Germany?—And I believe there is one in England. The sick, I don't think I need enter upon; it has been gone into extremely fully by those who have given evidence before; but I certainly think that, instead of having a workhouse hospital at present, it ought to be a district hospital.

376. For large cities you would have it a city hospital, not a Poor Law hospital?—That I would not be prepared to give any opinion on.

377. But I mean you would have it so that it would not be in connection with pauperism?—It should not be a pauper institution. The children, of course, constitute the most important part, in one sense, of the Poor Law question altogether, and they should be entirely separated from all adult paupers after the age of three, or after they are able to be taken from their mothers.

378. Including parents, you would separate them from their parents?—It is a very important question to enter on. We have the orphans, and the deserted, and the practically parentless, which the law allows us to board out, and others, if they have a parent permanently bedridden or in a lunatic asylum. Those children should be boarded out. But many have given evidence that all children should be boarded out. That infers that we would take the children in workhouses away from their parents. Of course, that is a very questionable thing, because we relieve the parents of the responsibility of their children, which, after all, is, to my mind, a grave question, that will have to be considered very thoroughly. If we take these children from their parents and board them out—if the parents have any control the people with whom they are boarded out would consider them a nuisance, and they would be.

379. They would not have the parents going there?—They could not possibly have the parents interfering, therefore they must give up the children; but if a parent—as I believe the law is in England—is proved to be morally incapable of looking after his children, that is quite right; but it is difficult to prove. If we take, as some suggested, all the infants who are now in the nurseries with their respective mothers, and take those children and board them out from infancy, as some would do, we relieve that mother entirely; she goes out at once; and I don't think that is advisable at all.

380. It depends upon under what auspices she goes out?—Well, it does; but if she is allowed to go out free of that child I am afraid she will be in again next year. I think, myself, that it is a very grave question, indeed, to relieve these mothers of the responsibility of their children.

381. Have you considered the question of any religious organisation dealing with these women?—That is a very difficult question.

382. A very difficult class to deal with?—Extremely difficult; but I certainly think, instead of allowing them to go out that it is better to insist that they remain in, and sometimes the salvation of the woman is her love for her child. I don't think it is a wise thing to take away the child from the mother; and, going into the question of boarded-out children, it has not been found that the infants who were boarded out have succeeded remarkably well.

383. That is under one year of age?—Yes. If you leave that child until it is one year old it will be an exceedingly great hardship to take it from the mother; she might not mind parting with it at birth, but I don't think there is one of them that would not feel, at the end of the year, that it was a terrible thing to wrench the child from her. On the question of boarding out, ideally, I think it is a splendid system for all the reasons which have been so fully gone into; but unless it is very carefully supervised it is productive of vast evils.

384. In what direction?—Because those children might not be at all carefully looked after. I, myself, have seen children, or rather, the people with whom they are, who ought to be reported to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. We had those children removed. Some maintain that the lady Guardians ought to have charge of these boarded-out children. So they have; but with the many duties that a lady Guardian has to perform her visits must necessarily be few and far between. She can only go very seldom in the year, as far as we find it practicable; therefore, if boarding out is to be ideal, or anything approaching it, it should be done more, as it is done in England. I would say board them out in the country, not as is done so much in Ireland, within the union; not necessarily, at least. Put them far away; as, for instance, the children from the Bristol Workhouse are boarded out in the Lake district. They have their local committee of certified and responsible persons, and those persons only take a limited number of children.

385. The South Dublin Board send to Keshiderry, and round there?—We have a few, but the majority are boarded out within the union; and they are a perfect colony, so that the schools there are largely composed of these children. Therefore, the paper tent is not lost, as it ought to be. They should be boarded out in larger districts.

386. There is an obstacle to that?—There is not, except the will of the Guardians. But I think it should be insisted on that there was a local committee in charge of these children, under the supervision of a committee of the Guardians.

387. With very good inspection?—Very good inspection. The other children—there are numbers of children who have parents in the house, and we cannot board out every child; but these children should be ideally in small houses, not in a barracks of an institution, because every one agrees that an institution-reared child is not fitted for life. If they were boarded out in small cottage homes, if possible, not even close together, so that there would be only a few, and they would go to the local National school, and another lot a little bit away going to another National school, not to have them all together.

388. You mean cottage homes, owned and managed by the Board of Guardians?—Yes; with a house mother.

389. That is in operation in England. Do you happen to know anything about the existence of that system?—Yes; I believe, in Croydon, it is fairly extensive, all told; with everything, it comes to 10s. 6d. per head—pretty high. That, of course, is an objection to it.

390. And this is rather a poor country?—Yes; but probably it could be done cheaper in Ireland, on a less extravagant scale. And my idea was for the deserted orphans; they really constitute the class among whom the mortality is so high. But it is not unnatural to suppose it should be high, because most of the children were found, probably, at a street corner, where their chance for existence was very small. They don't have much chance of living, in any case; but if sent to women in the country who name their own children, they have an idea of how to feed a child with a bottle. As each deserted baby came it might be given one to each cottage home, and with a capable woman as mother, she might manage to give the child a chance, and make it more humane for the other children.

391. Do you think there is anything in that system superior to ordinary boarding-out?—No; I think it is only because we cannot board out every child.

392. Have you failed ever to get satisfactory homes for boarded-out children?—Oh, yes; I think for the numbers it would be quite impossible. We have about 700 children in one union.

393. But I mean for the number you have to board out at present?—It is not so easy to get homes; there are a great many people not fond of taking children.

394. In some unions there is competition for these children. You don't find that?—No.

395. If you went further afield?—Yes; some say that in Ireland the small farmer class won't have anything to say to them. It would not be so easy; but there must always be a very large number of children who cannot be boarded out.

June 25, 1905.
 —
 Miss Buchanan.

395. What class would they be?—They are the class, for instance, by whom our workhouse schools are at present filled.

397. I mean if the law were changed?—There are children with parents in the house.

398. I thought you were discussing that possibility, if the law were changed?—I don't think the law ought to be changed to deprive the parent of the responsibility of the children altogether.

399. You would leave the law as it is in that respect?—I think it might be extended as far as it is in England; that is, if a tramp's child, or the child of people who were morally unfit.

400. Persons who were formally declared by the Board of Guardians by resolution to be unfit to take charge of the child?—Yes; it may be extended to that extent; but I cannot say that because persons go into the workhouse their children should be taken from them altogether.

401. You say that as regards illegitimacy, as well as legitimate children?—Yes; because I think the parents should not be deprived of responsibility for the children.

402. As regards the aged and infirm?—They should not be in what is called a workhouse. I am, of course, supposing that emigration takes place first, and we could use an old workhouse as a home for the aged and infirm, leaving the workhouse proper and the name of workhouse to the able-bodied. I consider that they should be much better treated, simply on the ground of old age, than they are at present.

403. Apart from their character and antecedents?—Yes. Then I would say that they should be most strictly classified, according to the deserving and the undeserving. Of course, that is difficult; but still, it could be done with care. More thorough investigation into the causes of their coming into the house in the first instance would give some clue to the class of people they are.

404. Our system is not sufficiently inquisitorial?—It is not; there are very few questions asked about what brought the people into the house at all. I think if that questioning were much more thorough we would know something of the circumstances which led to persons coming into the house, and if a person had never been in receipt of Poor Law relief at all up to a certain age, I would say they ought to be considered privileged; and then, according to how the people behaved while in the house, that is, the system of privilege wards in aged and infirm houses, they could be removed into them from a variety of reasons.

405. What about old married couples remaining together?—That is a point on which a good deal has been said in England, and I have found out of about six or eight places where it was tried only one has been a success. I think the privilege ward scheme which I advocate would cover that, because if persons were put into a privilege ward they would be allowed to wear a respectable sort of garments, not the workhouse uniform; they would be allowed to go out every day.

406. It would be union clothes?—They would have to be, I expect; but they might be treated. They might be allowed to go out every afternoon between certain hours, and be allowed to receive visitors every afternoon. That, I think, would meet the difficulty of old married couples not meeting each other; if they were allowed to go out every afternoon together I should say they would do very well with that.

407. The advocates of that system propose they should live together always?—I know they do; but that would necessitate another sort of home. I think the privilege ward scheme would come near enough to meet the wishes of the old people; if they could see each other every day when they went out, and see their friends every afternoon in these privilege wards, I should think they would be very contentedly off. Some people advocate boarding out the old people.

408. What do you think of that?—I am inclined to think it would be exceedingly difficult to find homes where old people would be really comfortable. I think the same danger as applies to outdoor relief would apply; and I think that could not possibly be carried upon, because you would have everybody applying for outdoor relief for their old people. A great deal of that applies to the boarding-out of old people; but beyond that I don't think the old people would be very comfortable: it is different from boarding out children. Old people don't become attached to the people with whom they are, and the people with whom they are don't become attached to the old people very readily whom they never saw before; and I don't think they would be very happy.

409. As regards the matter that you referred to in your summary about Dublin, we might leave that over until we are considering Dublin specially. At the foot of that page you say that under no circumstances should children be left in the workhouse. Supposing their parents are in the workhouse?—That is where I say the children whose parents are in the workhouse should be sent to cottage homes.

410. Quite close?—Comparatively close.

411. The parents would be altogether cut off if the children went to a cottage home?—They would; but, of course, those parents go out, and then they must take the children with them. I would not allow children to come back to the workhouse to see their parents, but the parents might be allowed to go to see their children once a month. And I think, as long as there is any system of this sort there ought to be lady inspectors of workhouses, because there are so many departments that only a woman really can speak on with authority.

412. Is there anything else now that occurs to you?—I don't think there is any other point.

Mrs. ANNA MacDONALD, COCHBURN, P.N.O., examined.

Mrs. Anna
 MacDonal
 Cochburn.

413. CHAIRMAN.—I think I have a short abstract of your evidence. First, you would like to go into the question of pauper attendants on the sick, is it?—No; pauper attendants in the whole house; that is to say, on the aged, the infirm, the children, and the sick.

414. On any class?—Yes; of course, the pauper attendants must be able-bodied; and to have sufficient people to do the work, naturally, the officials—of whom there are not nearly enough—depend upon an able-bodied pauper to do the work; therefore that pauper gets in, and he, or she, gets tips from the aged or infirm, and, from my personal experience, they will do nothing without money, and there is very gross blackmailing: the unfortunate pauper inmates must give their little pennies, or their relations must bring in money, or kind. I know a kind of shop is kept of the good things that are brought into the house. These pauper attendants get extra diet; they are practically thoroughly well paid—extra; they are very highly paid, naturally, from all these tips—they remain a certain time, until they have collected a certain amount of money, then they go out and spend it all in drink and then come in again, and in some occult fashion, which the lady guardians, as far as I am aware, cannot find out, these women or men are in attendance on a ward the next day or the day after they come in. It seems to me that they are a heavy expense to the rates; if they are able to work they should be out earning their bread. My experience is that once inmates have been appointed pauper attendants they never again want to earn an honest livelihood outside.

415. Are they chiefly, or to a large extent, the mothers of illegitimate children?—Very often they are. But there are also men who are drunkards themselves, or who have drunken wives. They are not the respectable class, but are also employed. I think a bad married woman is equally bad for the old people.

416. Now as regards punishing inmates for breaches of the regulations?—That is a matter on which I hold a very strong opinion. Unless it was a very serious case the person should be tried before the Board of Guardians.

417. Or a committee?—Yes; before certain of the Guardians, and then have them sent to the magistrate; but under no circumstances should they be allowed to be drafted by anybody, from the medical officer to the lowest workmaster, to another part of the house, especially to the lunatic department.

418. I don't quite follow that?—As regards the

June 26, 1892.

Mrs. Anna
MacDonald
Congress.

punishment, no inmate in a workhouse should be allowed to be transferred from any part of the house to the lunatic department of the establishment.

419. As an attendant there?—No, as a punishment.

420. Not classed as a lunatic?—Classed as a lunatic. They should not be allowed to be transferred unless at least two doctors certify they are lunatics. I do not think that one doctor should ever be allowed to certify that a person is a lunatic, or to send them to the lunatic wards. Have I made myself quite clear on that point?

421. I think I understand what you mean; you mean that there is, to your knowledge or to your belief, an instance of some person having been classed as a lunatic as a punishment for some offence alleged to have been committed?—Yes. And I think that the same protection should be extended to the pauper as would be extended to an ordinary individual outside that two doctors at least should certify that the pauper was a lunatic.

422. And you believe the pauper was sane?—Yes; or that the pauper were sane.

423. Mr. Macdonald—Is it your suggestion that it is the custom in some union that for punishment a pauper is removed from the same ward to the lunatic department?—My suggestion is that I am not satisfied that it was not the custom—that it has not, and does not occur.

Dr. ENGLISH.—It seems to me a strong statement.

424. CHAIRMAN.—It is a strong statement. Now, as to definitive classification?—Of course, the sick poor are quite apart; that is, the acute diseases in the hospitals. But I quite agree with the doctors who have already said that there are a great many in the hospitals who are not acute cases; but then, these poor bodies want attention: they really are ill, and they are old, and it seems to me that if there was a gentle letting down of them with their cup of tea and a simpler kind of diet, it would be happier for them and cheaper for the rates. Do you mean the classification morally or physically?

425. I was just taking the heading in your suggestions?—The respectable and aged in your unions mix with the others—they are all mixed together.

426. That there is no classification on account of previous character?—No. It seems to me that when they come into the workhouse we ought to know where they come from, what caused them to come in, and then put them into a ward, and if they had previously a good character, into a good ward.

427. Has anything ever been tried by the lady guardians or any person to try the experiment of making such inquiries, and having such a thing as a respectable or privilege ward?—Well, we have very often tried it as far as I know; but we have generally been very seriously beaten at the Board. For instance, yesterday we brought before our Board a very serious case, and we were beaten on that.

428. But it would be possible, of course, for the Board of Guardians, if they thought it expedient?—But you must remember the lady guardians are in such a small minority that it is not always so easy to do that; and it seems as if the law should do it for them.

429. What change could be made in the law?—First, the aged and respectable, after a period of good conduct in the house—

430. Presume when the Guardians shall deem to be aged and respectable?—Yes; and shall prove to be respectable.

431. I am afraid, if it came to drafting an Act of Parliament, you would find it very difficult?—Would it not mean an inquiry before the Admissions Board and a letter from the parochial clergyman, and so on—an inquiry through the relieving officer: the relieving officer always reports at the Admissions Board. It could be done that way, I think, without much extra trouble, and I would like a preliminary ward. I am not at all in favour of far ever drafting poor creatures who come into the workhouse, who have been naughty outside—giving them no chance. That is amongst the aged and infirm, of course. Then the boarding out of the aged and infirm, it seems to me, can be carried out.

432. You would like to try that?—I would; and I think it would not add any extra expense to the rates if the maintenance charge was added to the establishment charges. For instance, one union I know where every pauper costs £20; that would go very far towards the boarding-out of an old person.

433. Then about allowing respectable people to go out—I suppose you mean in and out of the workhouse?—No; I mean the privilege of allowing them to walk out every day after dinner, say, and allowing them to come in before their tea.

434. I have known that happen, in fact, in some loosely managed workhouses. I have been asked myself for charity by such inmates, when they were outside?—You have to remember that these poor old bodies do want a penny or two pence if we have pauper students.

435. You could not let them out for that purpose?—No; but these are the respectable people, and I don't think one would find that with them. And if they came in drunk—in my own workhouse it has always been said, "Oh, they will return drunk"—then for that very act I would put them on a black list for, say three months, and then try again. I think it is a privilege they would not lightly risk, if it was given.

436. It might improve them all round?—I think it would.

437. Then epileptics and lunatics—would you propose to improve their condition in the workhouse, or would you propose to get them outside altogether?—Propose to get them out of it altogether. There are no skilled attendants, they have no industries, they have no employment of any kind to occupy their minds, and from personal knowledge I know they gradually become insane.

438. The next matter you have touched on is the high death rate in the nurseries?—The death rate of the infants is a very terrible death rate. It seemed to me to-day that Dr. Foy, in giving evidence, had more or less struck the keynote when he spoke of the milk, and from what he said the infants all seem to die of diseases which faulty milk would encourage, and it struck me then, even when he was speaking, that many things I had noticed the milk could account for. The position of the nurseries is wrong; they have not enough air; the children are not allowed to tumble about as children in cottages would.

439. I think you did get perturbations for them?—Oh, no, I gave one; I never got one. These little infants—cramped babies, I think, from what Dr. Foy said, died of the milk and of the mothers being with them so much. That is the great cause, when the children are illegitimate, of the high death-rate: the child is an incubus, the mother is a tight-minded girl; she must remain practically in jail while it is alive; she has no love for it, because she is suffering imprisonment on its account.

440. There are a great many exceptions to that; you will find a great deal of mother's love?—I have very rarely found it; I have found it in a woman of the most depraved class, but not often, and never with a woman with her first child.

441. Come, now, to the children's quarantine?—The quarantine I mean is the fortnight the children must be in the house before going to the workhouse schools; during that time they are allowed to mix with the paupers. They have a waxy life, poor little waxy souls; and they learn and carry on to the schools many evils.

442. They go to school at three?—No; I mean the children that come into the workhouse; I am not talking of infants. Any child who enters the workhouse has, for fear of infection, to be kept for a fortnight in the workhouse before being drafted out to Oshana; they are attended by a pauper, and in that time in their miserable little lives they learn a great deal of wickedness.

443. You think the observation ward ought to be a nursery?—I think it ought to be quite away with a paid attendant, and not a pauper attendant.

444. You would say, I am sure, that all the children's wards should have over them a good character paid attendant?—A thoroughly good character attendant, who would be selected by the person who was superintendent of the department. For instance, in our Catholic nurseries we have a nun; therefore I think she should always select the paid attendant for the children, and Miss West should select the paid attendant for the Protestant children.

445. If she gets a good woman she does not mind whether she appoints her herself or not?—That is a very important point—we do not always get in the best attendants.

446. Then as regards the boys and girls children?—It appears to me that it is a grievance that the men and cute children should mix with the children who are in permanent schools; there again you bring in the real influence of the street, and the children who are in permanent schools have no knowledge of the outside world but what is given by the inn and outs, and it seems to me that some house or place should be kept to put the inn and outs children into.

447. Dr. BODGER.—Does not the quarantine step in some extent the inn and outs mixing with the other children?—Oh, no; at the end of the fortnight they are sent on to the schools.

448. The inn and outs very often don't stop a fortnight?—Well a great number of them do. These that are coming in permanently, come in and have the fortnight's quarantine, and the contamination occurs then which I complain of; it seems to me as if the inn and outs should not touch the permanent children.

449. CHAIRMAN.—None of these references of yours to children would apply if the children are to be moved out of the workhouse?—But it applies if there is a school attached to the workhouse.

450. But none of them would apply at all if they were boarded out?—Do you except the inn and outs?

451. If it was possible, as so many of the witnesses have recommended that children should never be allowed to stay in any workhouse, all these references about quarantine and the inn and outs mixing with boys and men, all this would be impossible?—The mixing of boys with men; what I wanted to call your attention to is that if a boy is remanded from the police court, he is sent up to the workhouse; he then is put into a male ward, where he sleeps; it is great fun for the able-bodied people they mix with, or even the old men, to teach them what is not right. These boys are either sent to an industrial school after a while or to the workhouse school, where they mix with the permanent, and teach them the wickedness they have learned.

452. Your suggestion is with a view of preventing the continuance of what you point out in the workhouse, but if the children are to be removed bodily from the workhouse?—I—They could not mix, but then you would have to classify the boys who have been remanded from the police courts from the inn and outs.

453. They would not go into the workhouse at all, I suppose; there would be no children's ward for them?—There is no boy's ward in the workhouse, but in the house for inn and outs you would still have to have a separation ward for boys who are under remand.

454. That is a class we don't recognise in the Poor Law at all. I don't know what brings them there?—A boy who is taken up for thieving, the magistrate remands him, and he goes to the workhouse.

455. In custody?—I am not sure whether he is in custody.

456. The magistrate who remands him would have to remand him to some other place if the Guardians had no place for children?—The Guardians have no place for such children in the workhouse, and still such remanded children are sent to them.

457. Dr. BODGER.—After all it is better that the boys should go there than to jail?—Much better; but it is of classification I am speaking. I am objecting to the poor little corner-boys mixing with the children who must become permanent.

458. Could the Guardians not make a ward for boys?—That is what I wish, but you must remember that in overcrowded workhouses you cannot make wards.

459. CHAIRMAN.—I think all this will disappear if the children are moved out of the workhouse; questions like this would have to be provided for in some other way?—Yes. Then there is the attendance on children by paupers; of course, in the large schools, if a pauper is allowed out to do even scrubbing, she is attending on children; the children are in communication with her, she sleeps with them; it seems to me as if that were a more important point than even the paupers attending on the sick, because it seems as if it were carrying on another generation, with pauperism as their only outlook.

460. It is vitally important to stop anything of that sort; had you any suggestion to make about that?—The bigger boys and bigger girls should do a great deal of helping, but after that I certainly would suggest paid hands; but the schools do not seem ideal for children to be brought up in.

461. You prefer boarding out?—Or certified schools. I certainly would prefer that the children should be sent out to the local parish schools for their daily education and for church, and so allowed to mix with the population, and to have another outlook added which would brighten their little minds.

462. You would not prefer that to boarding out?—Boarding out is a very vexed question unless a little more were paid; sufficient is not paid now to make it worth while for really respectable people to take a child.

463. What is paid in any case that you are acquainted with?—I think about 25, or 27, or 28 a year. It does not seem worth while, but some scheme could be drawn up that when a boy or girl comes to ten they could be put out to a farmer or a carpenter, or somebody who would teach that boy some industry, and the girl could be put to some mistress of a household, even if they had to be paid for, so that the girl could learn to become a domestic servant; and I am sure there are many mothers of families who would gladly take the girls at that age and train them. I know there are many mothers of families who would.

464. You would say higher payments?—I would say higher payments, and I would also try, as it were, to apprentice children over ten.

465. Dr. BODGER.—Is not ten very early?—It is not, to make them work so as to begin life.

466. CHAIRMAN.—You would make them half-timers?—I would; there is no home for a child in the large harrack school; they have no special friend; no one could be a friend to such an enormous number of children, and it seems as if they were put out under proper supervision they would begin to make some friends.

467. The concluding note on your paper is "The influence on their after life"?—My experience of their after life is that at the very first breath of adversity they come back to the workhouse; they have no home, because we have not given them a home; they have got no friends, because we have not given them a friend, and then they come back, and we say: "Where were you reared?" And the answer is: "In the workhouse." And often their mother before them. I know of one case now where the girl's mother was there before her, and she has no interest in going out; she does not want to go out; why should she; life would seem too vast for her. I think in every workhouse there ought to be at least one married quarter. In England, in any workhouse I have been in, there is not a very great demand for them, but still there has always been a couple in, and I think it is a hard case to separate them, if they wish to be together.

Miss WELLS, F.L.S., examined.

468. CHAIRMAN.—You have heard Mrs. MacDowell's evidence?—Yes, she spoke very largely on Crompton's evidence and left me very little to say.

469. Yes, it just occurred to me she was overcoasting on your special head?—I thought that myself.

470. Did you agree with her?—I did in all she said, and always have done so.

471. Was there anything that you wish to add?—About the maternity ward, I think there is very little classification in that; all classes of women come in there and are put into the one maternity ward, and sometimes the class of women that come into our union, they are of the servant class, as a rule, and when they become subjects for that ward they have to be kept distinct months, for, of course, no one will take them when they come in in that state; they are mixing together often for months.

472. Then they are among the ordinary able-bodied?—They are.

473. They are not in the maternity ward?—They are on admission; they are booked to No. 30 ward, and the only class of work they are allowed to do is laundry work.

474. They go to the laundry with the ordinary able-bodied?—They do, they mix with them, and consequently, on the congested state of our house, the respectable women of the middle class and the very bad women are all mixed together.

June 25, 1902.

Miss Withick.

475. You would like to classify them?—The single girls, the respectable married women, and then, of course, there is very often, too often, the very bad, what are called widows, with one or two illegitimate children, coming in. I think they should be separated entirely; they are a great injustice to the respectable poor, and after that they are transferred to the nurseries. We have got a very large block of nurseries in our union.

476. Do you find the young girls who come into these nurseries with their babies remain long in the workhouses?—Too long; in fact, the law is we cannot allow them to go away to a situation without the infant.

477. So the incumbency of a baby prevents their getting situations?—Yes, except they are able to pay for nurses themselves; of course, in former times, there were situations provided for them, and then we found they did not pay the nurses and became a greater burden on the rates.

478. These girls could not pay for their children?—No; so now we have adopted the plan of not letting them out without their children.

479. That keeps them in, unfortunately. I suppose if they go they come in again?—They do; they must stay with their babies until they are twelve months old at least.

480. As to the infant death rate?—It has been very high in our union, I think, consequently on the position of our nurseries for one reason.

481. Want of country air?—The nurseries are very cold in winter and too hot in summer in consequence of it being a wooden structure. They have not got cross ventilation, which is a great necessity in the nurseries. We had other buildings provided for them, and it was brought up at the Board, passed several times, and then other members came forward and rescinded our resolution and broke our arrangement; that is what we have to contend with on these large Boards; if we try to reform anything it is put to the vote, and oftentimes we have not got the majority, we are so few in number.

482. How many have you?—We have only four women, but we have ten or eleven good men who always come with us.

483. Are there any suggestions you would like to make beyond what you have already said?—I don't think so; I think Mrs. Congreve said everything for me.

Miss Hamilton.

Miss HAMILTON, P.L.C., examined.

484. CHAIRMAN.—Your experience is largely connected with rural unions?—Entirely with a country union. I wanted only to say something about the children and the old people. Miss Buchanan has said all I wanted to say about the old people. I think, of course, the amalgamation of unions in the country will be the best way to separate the different classes, but in the meantime I think we should have a great deal more done for the old people by these privilege wards, but unless it is made compulsory I don't think it can be done, unless there was some definite rule authorising it.

485. Have you thought it out practically yourself at all?—No, I have not; I am not prepared to say anything about it, but I think it could be done if we put had room.

486. Want of space would be the only thing that would stop you?—Yes, as far as I can see, in the country workhouses.

487. Did you ever think of boarding out the old people?—I don't think that would do; I don't know that they would be kindly treated.

488. Of course they would know exactly what they were entitled to get, and try to get it?—Of course they would, but people would not care for them so much as they do for children, unless they were their own old people.

489. Unless it paid them to have them, or they were connected with them?—It has been spoken about, having the children all taken out of the workhouses and all boarded out. I don't think that would be possible in a union where there are a great number of children; we would not be able to find homes for them; we find it hard enough to find homes for the orphan children.

490. At all events, you could go on until that difficulty arose?—But I don't think people would be willing to take the children of parents who are in the house.

491. Not if the parents could call in to inspect, of course, from time to time?—No; and there would be great difficulty in supervising so many.

492. It is not much more difficult to inspect sixty or a hundred children than it is fifteen or twenty?—When they are scattered all over the country, it is exceedingly difficult.

493. But generally the population is not scattered very much. I have noticed that in inspecting labourers' cottages you come along a certain line of country, and you have the sites all together fairly well?—I think cottage homes would be better; simple cottage homes, with not more than fifteen children in them.

494. There you would be dependent on having a very good motherly matron?—Yes.

495. That would be a difficult person to get?—It is just as difficult to get a good foster-mother.

496. I should not think it would be as much hardship for the children to take what is going in the ordinary way, but when you have an institution, you have to have it carefully managed?—I would rather have just simple cottage homes. I would keep the children of the ins and outs separate from the other children. I think it would answer better for girls and little children.

497. Do you think the children in the cottage homes would be better citizens in the future than institution-reared children?—Oh yes.

498. How many would you have in the cottage home?—Not more than twelve or fifteen.

499. That would be a large family of girls?—Then we would have some little children with the girls, and then girls sent on to the training school before sending them out as servants. A workhouse girl sent out to a place never does much good; she can only get a very poor place, and cannot get on at all, and they are not strong enough at that age to be sent out. I think if they were sent from fourteen to seventeen from a cottage home to the training school, they would have a good chance in life. We find the girls the greatest difficulty.

500. The boys are more easily absorbed by the farmers?—They are, and the boys do very well when boarded out, but the girls not quite so well, unless they are sent very young.

501. What is the reason why the boys do better than the girls?—I really don't know.

502. Perhaps the open air employment?—I think it is very likely; the girls as they become older are more likely to become household drudges.

The Sitting was adjourned.

SECOND PUBLIC SITTING—FRIDAY, JUNE 26TH, 1903.

At the Ancient Concert Rooms, Dublin.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. COET BIGGER.

Rev. J. PATRICK SMYTH, LIT.D., examined.

503. CHAIRMAN.—You divide your evidence, I think, into three heads—the children, the decent aged poor, and the case of the mothers of illegitimate children?

504. Will you kindly give your views, first, on the case of the children?—I think all the children ought to be boarded out. I don't know that the very young ones ought to be, but when they are two or three years old—a child will not get much workhouse contamination before it is three years of age—certainly after that they ought to be boarded out. But I would like to emphasise strongly that if they are to be boarded out they ought to be sent to a cottage home, and I want specially to emphasise the word a separate cottage home; a home with a kindly housemother, the big and little children together, so that they could go to school together. In Warwick, a lady Guardian, whom I met the night before last, told me they are working that system; they feel very strongly that if you dump down a number of workhouse children in the same neighbourhood—fifty or sixty—and send them to a school, it makes a great deal of difference. The children feel the workhouse taint on them, the other children know that they are workhouse children. What they do is, they have a cottage home in the Lake district, with a housemother; they send fifteen children there. And somewhere in the South of England they do the same; they get shocked amongst the other children; they are never noticed, and they don't feel the pauper taint about them.

505. These places are small institutions?—Not more than fifteen children with the mother.

506. How do they get absorbed?—If you put fifteen children in a school where there are a couple of hundred children, they are not noticed much.

507. How did they get absorbed there?—I meant that they get a start in life; they are not noticed. What they intend to do is, ultimately, they want to get these girls trained; they will put big and little girls in the home together, the big ones to look after the little ones, and they intend to pass the girls on to training places.

508. It is still an institution, though a small one?—Yes; more a family thing. Miss Buchanan said yesterday she feared one of the difficulties would be the extra expense of doing that. My friend tells me they have gone carefully into the subject, and it costs £s. 1d. per week less to do that. They have not only tried it in Warwick, but they have written to ever so many. Five or six workhouses have tried it, and they have found there is a slight decrease, instead of an increase, in the cost, when it is carefully done. I was to have all the papers by this morning's post; but I am quite satisfied the facts are as I say, and I could afterwards hand in the papers to you. That was the chief thing I wanted to say about the children.

509. Would you prefer that system to the system of ordinary boarding out in farmhouse and other houses?—I think you trouble with the boarding out in farmhouses—at least, our Dublin experience seems to be—a number of children get boarded out, and for the convenience of visiting they are put in a comparatively small district; and, therefore, the pauper taint is there. A good many of the Dublin workhouse children are boarded out in some parts of Wicklow, and it is known they are workhouse children.

510. If they were wisely scattered in different homes?—I think, if you could have twelve or fifteen children, with a housemother over them—a nice, kindly mother over them.

511. What would your opinion be of boarding out a few children?—Your trouble then would be what you elicited yesterday—the great trouble of lady Guardians visiting them; your lady inspector could not visit them more than once or twice a year. One lady I know in a Dublin workhouse has been trying to do it, and found it costs her about £5s. for a day's visiting; and if you scatter them it is very hard to get the visits sufficiently done. I remember, many years ago, when I was first ordained, in my very first parish I remember the workhouse schoolmaster saying to me, "We always find the workhouse child gravitate back again; there is nothing for them to do when they get out; they feel it is a home, and whenever they are out of work they come back again."

512. As regards the decent aged poor?—That I feel more important than any of the things we have before us; and if you would allow me, before speaking of workhouses, to say a word about one's outside experience as a city diarist. Since I came to St. Anne's parish—it is a parish where there is permanently brought before me—where there are aged sempstresses, old bookbinders, and other people, who never had enough money in their life to make provision for old age; they are decent, struggling people, but there is written on them "Past work," and you have not the heart to talk to them of going into the workhouse. A case was brought to my notice where a poor lady, who had been the wife of a civil engineer, is in bed in a Dublin workhouse, side by side with a woman who has had forty convictions against her. Of course, this is an extreme case, and the Guardians should not have allowed it to happen. These people are living about us in our parish starving, some of them; I don't know how body and soul is kept together with the odd shillings they get; and I have not the heart to speak to them about the workhouse. You cannot support them with church dues, the trivial things we have to give, and you don't know what to do with them. It is a fearful misery. As for the remedy, I don't think outdoor relief, as at present administered, would ever work with us; I am afraid there would be a great deal of jobbery and degradation, and it would be very costly; everybody would want it.

513. It is almost impossible in a large city?—I think so; and I see the chief reformers in the East end of London are very strong against outdoor relief—much more than I thought they would have said about it.

514. Then there has been a French system suggested of boarding out the old as you would board out children?—I should not wonder if that would work for women; I don't think it would work with men. An old man of sixty-five could not settle down in a home without being very unhappy.

515. I should think that it would be more the other way; the women would miss household control?—I thought the women might mind the children, and take up little interests. Of course, until there is some hope that old-age pension schemes should be formed in the future I should think that what we ought to have would be something like Irish National hotels for the aged—we are very fond of the word "National" in Ireland now, and if we put the word "National" in it will appeal to us much more strongly. Denmark has them, where the people wear their own clothes, have no workhouse connection, and are allowed out in the afternoon; and—it would obviate the difficulty you suggest, of begging from you in the street—they get £d. a week pocket money. I think it is quite feasible, and quite economical, and if it could be done without using up one of your present workhouses for the scheme it would be a great improvement. You cannot get over the workhouse taint; and even if you, by separating the different classes, should cut free, for example, Loughlinstown or Balbrathney, I am afraid that the

Rev. J.
Patrick
Smyth.

June 26, 1901.

Rev. J.
Fitzmaurice
Scrymgeour.

inmate of the workhouse would be still upon it, and I should not wonder if, in Ireland, where there are so many gentlemen's mansions out of use at present, it would be quite possible to buy one and add to it and improve it, and try and get that taint out of it, if it could be done. But if one must be economical I think even a workhouse would be much better than what we are doing at present. If we had one workhouse set free, very little structural changes would accomplish what is wanted, if you had classification of some kind.

515. Not apart a workhouse for the decent aged poor—I would have the common workhouse for the vicious, degraded, and idle, as now, and then Miss Buchanan's suggestion, yesterday, of privilege wards, or something like that, for the aged poor. I would very much rather they were not in the workhouse; that they were outside, in a house, and I don't think it would cost the State one penny more. You asked, yesterday, how we could work classification. I think a rough sort of classification could be done without much trouble; everybody over sixty or sixty-five, who for the last twenty years has never been on the Poor Law or in the hands of the police; that ought to remove them altogether from the common workhouse—that person ought not to be in the common workhouse. There might be a further classification done by a visiting committee; but I think it could be done with us at a very little cost; very little structural changes. In the Inebriate Hospital, at Dennybrook, I have been repeatedly visiting a poor old friend, who is absolutely dependent on charity. She belonged to a decent position in society, but those about her are servants of the very poorest class; but instead of having a big ward they have little cubicles six feet square.

517. A window to each?—No; they are only six feet high. The ward is open at the top; they don't want a window, they have got the light from the top. She was able to receive me, and give me a cup of tea, and close her door, and had the feeling that the place was her home, though she lived with the rest. If something like that was done, and these poor old people allowed to go out from 3 o'clock to 5 o'clock, with much of what Miss Buchanan said yesterday I very much sympathise. Don't let them wear a uniform, for it is unbecoming. Let them come back to meals, and give them 5d. a week for pocket money; and, although one feels that it is not good to make the position of a idle person in the workhouse as good as that of one who is struggling to stay outside, well, these are sixty or sixty-five years of age, and that makes a difference. Of course, if they release the liberty they ought to be tried by the Guardians, and degraded for a period into the common workhouse; and, similarly, you would let the inmates of the common workhouse be promoted up. But let me specially emphasise the point. We are not talking of something Utopian; that was forgotten in the evidence yesterday. Several workhouses have already tried it, and are working it with great success. Mrs. Haslam has given us some of the papers that have been read at meetings of the women Guardians, and in Miss Buchanan's paper there are the rules of Macdonald Union, which has been working this very system.—"All privileged inmates shall be selected by the Visiting Committee. All inmates are subject to the ordinary rules of the workhouse, with certain exceptions. All inmates are expected to attend punctually at meals, except 3 o'clock tea. Inmates are free to go out as they wish after mid-day dinner. Inmates will not be required to dress in uniform. No inmate may bring into the ward, or receive from any source outside, the ward, either wine, beer, or spirituous liquor, and any inmate found in a state of intoxication will be summarily removed to other wards. Any inmate leaving any property of the Guardians outside the house will be removed from the ward. The friends of inmates, by permission of the master, may visit the inmates on week-days, from 3 to 4 p.m. The following are the qualifications for privilege wards:—Aged and infirm over sixty years of age. Those whose character is known to have been good. The destitute through no fault of their own. Those who have never been in receipt of relief. The longest residents in the union (those paying rates for a long time having a claim to consideration). Relief committees to recommend, after investigation, those whom they consider eligible. Applicants who approach nearest to the above requirements to have a prior claim." The Chairman of the Macdonald Board of Guardians writes:—"The scheme of Privilege Wards begun by the Macdonald Board ten years ago has been indisputably successful, and is now in full working order in many unions." That is all I wanted to say with regard to the subject that I think is one of the most important of all, dealing with the aged poor.

518. The other heading of your evidence is the case of mothers with illegitimate children—I wonder if your Commission would consider the question as to the case of mothers with illegitimate children coming in continually into the workhouse, whether your Board could not sweep that class away by handing them over to outside religious influences. There are different Magdalen homes in Dublin—some kept by nuns—and there are two or three of other religious bodies, two Church of Ireland ones. If one or two of these were used for first cases, for a girl who had only her first baby, she might be saved from falling any further, and if you could sweep that whole thing out of the way of your workhouse machinery, you would remove their complications and simplify things immensely. I suppose it does not come before you, the question of the changing of the law with regard to this whole question.

519. Nothing can be done after this inquiry except by legislation.—An inquiry about that difference in the law with regard to these illegitimate children—hastily.

520. Well, of course, if you have anything to say on it, I will hear it.—Is there a very curious thing that in England in such a case the woman has a remedy against the man. In any ordinary court she can get maintenance for the child; here she has no redress except to go into the workhouse, and the Guardians must attack the man at a very heavy cost, and they generally don't do it. I think, sir, that is all I have to say.

521. As far as you know, you think that religious organisations and communities would be likely to take these as boarded-out cases at so much a head?—I think so; it would be a great help to them in one of these Magdalen homes, which are supported at a great cost by voluntary subscriptions, if they had an annual receipt from other sources; it would help them.

522. It would mean that they would have to have a lying-in ward?—Yes, but still you generally pay them well for that.

Dr. Katherine
Maguire.

Dr. KATHERINE MAGUIRE EXAMINED.

523. CHAIRMAN.—The first suggestion you make is that the workhouse hospital should be put an end to as such.—And made into a separate institution, to be called a district hospital.

524. Under what management?—That, of course, is the difficulty. I think that if they were still to remain workhouse infirmaries they should be put under a committee, for which I think there is power under the Workhouse Acts. If they were in any way amalgamated with the county infirmaries, then they should be under the County Council, and worked by a committee.

525. In the same way that the county infirmaries are?—I think so, or something quite similar.

526. You wish to say something about the present state of nursing in workhouse infirmaries?—The societies that I represent are very anxious indeed that workhouse infirmaries should be nursed almost, if not quite, as well as ordinary hospitals. We think that we should not allow the standard to fall below that of an ordinary hospital, and in consequence of that we think that any nurses who are called trained nurses ought to be trained nurses who would be accepted in any ordinary clinical hospital.

527. Do you think the present practice is not quite satisfactory?—I think not, as far as my information goes, and I especially notice that in the qualifications laid down by the Waterford Board of Guardians, which, I suppose, is sanctioned by the Local Government Board—

528. I notice your reference to that, but it was made under a misconception. That was merely for a few existing cases; it merely recognised certain interests

June 25, 1901.
—
Dr. Katherine
Maguire.

that appeared to be wanted—I don't mean that; I mean that they don't insist on the fever qualification for their trained nurses.

522. I thought it was the question of wardmaids!—No; it was the fever qualification, which we feel is very important indeed, especially for Poor Law nurses.

523. Dr. BROOKS.—Do you know whether in other institutions where they train nurses they get the fever qualification?—I think so; any nurse that would be called a trained certificated nurse ought to have the fever qualification.

524. CHAIRMAN.—We get a great number of certificates at the Local Government Board without the fever qualification, and we ask on these certificates that they have not the fever qualification?—I think that would be a great misfortune in workhouse nurses, unless it is absolutely certain they would never have any fever cases.

525. It is certain; the fever hospital is a separate institution?—Then there would be no possibility of the trained nurse being sent from one to the other.

526. The nurse appointed to the infirmary is a nurse for ordinary medical and surgical cases, and is not a fever nurse?—In that case we could not object. We also thought, if it were possible, the head nurse ought to have a midwifery certificate, if it was likely she would have midwifery work to do. You have some nurses who have that certificate.

CHAIRMAN.—We have a large number; all the Belfast nurses have the midwifery certificate.

Dr. BROOKS.—They have some midwifery training, but have not all the six months' course.

527. CHAIRMAN.—The Guardians, of course, when they get candidates with the midwifery certificate, are more anxious to employ them, and in that way it is an inducement to nurses to get the qualification?—Yes; I have known nurses who on that account got the certificate. There are some nurses who never have midwifery cases.

528. Yes, because the town nurse comes in at so much a cost?—The next point was the Local Government Board order about qualified nurses.

529. It is only the title you object to?—I should not wish to encourage a very large number of these so-called qualified nurses.

530. The qualification is the reason?—Another objection I would make is that you have not put down any qualification or any period of training for these qualified nurses.

531. That was deliberately done, for if a proper limit were put down at first, it would mean inability to get any nurses?—If you had put some such limit, you would have done a useful thing by encouraging these nurses to return for a further period of training.

532. Meanwhile we would have had no nurses of any qualification in the hospitals?—I cannot see that these qualified nurses have any qualification at all.

533. Dr. BROOKS.—Do you understand that before an institution is recognised for granting certificates, the Local Government Board examines the institution and goes into the opportunities of training?—But no period is set down.

534. CHAIRMAN.—We won't sanction what is an inadequate period, and you may take it that no one is recognised under a year; but certificated nurses are a good deal better than nurses without certificates?—It is not a pity to call her a qualified nurse, because the public will never recognise that she is not fully qualified.

535. The reason the nurse was called a trained nurse was to entitle her to half the Government grant?—But this nurse is not a trained nurse—not technically trained.

536. They are really trained, but they have not got the full certificate we ask for the purposes of the Act?—The full certificate you ask is only two years' training, which is the minimum for anyone who ought to be a trained nurse.

537. Dr. BROOKS.—That is in a large hospital, where there is clinical instruction?—I think it would be very injudicious for workhouse people to call their nurses anything but trained nurses, and have them really trained nurses. If you have one standard of trained nurses in workhouses and another in the clinical hospitals the confusion becomes greater. I think you ought to abide by that standard and not call these qualified nurses qualified; you could call them some other name.

538. CHAIRMAN.—What could we call them?—You could call them assistant nurses.

539. But they are often charge nurses?—I don't think you ought to allow these nurses to be charge nurses, they are not qualified.

540. But they are qualified?—Then they ought to be trained nurses.

541. We have a distinct grade; the proper thing might be perhaps to call the trained nurse lady superintendent or superintendent of nurses, but the others are qualified?—At the same time you will never make ordinary people understand that they are not really trained, which it appears they are not.

542. They are trained?—If they are really trained nurses why not call them so?

543. Because the word "trained" was used in the Act of Parliament, and we have to confine it to those nurses of whose salary the Government contributes half?—Are you not allowed to call any nurse who has a full clinical certificate a trained nurse?

544. No.—Then it would be much better to change the name of those nurses whose salaries are paid.

545. You would have to change the Act of Parliament; I think there is no real practical difficulty in the matter?—I don't think there is any difficulty either to the Guardians or the Local Government Board, but you often get names not so well qualified.

546. The Local Government Board look very closely into their qualifications; the complaints are that they look too closely. Now attendants?—I really do not know what the word "attendant" is intended to mean there.

547. It is a term that embraces both male and female?—Could you not call them wardresses?

548. So we do in correspondence if we are writing about a particular case?—Would it not have been better to put it into the Order; I think wardress is just as short as attendant.

549. You would have an endless variation of he and she through the Order, which the word "attendant" obviates?—"Attendant" is generally taken to mean a person who is assisting in nursing.

550. The Local Government Board are very strict on that; they are not allowed to do any nursing duties?—I know, but it gives a very misleading impression.

551. Not to the medical officer, not to the patient, not to the Guardians, not to the Local Government Board?—I am very glad to hear that.

552. The attendants are not all members of the nursing staff?—It is a pity to call them attendants then; it would be much better to call them wardresses or waiters.

553. If we are writing a letter about a man we call him a wardman, and if we are writing about a female attendant we call her a wardmaid, but for an Order where you have formal language it is much more convenient to have a substantive of common gender?—Still I think one might sacrifice something for the sake of names.

554. It is the very first time I have heard any objection raised; it is merely a question of words; no difficulty at all arises in the workhouse in the matter, with the central boards or local boards?—Then the pauper nursing.

555. There is no such thing recognised?—Well, is there no such thing in existence?

556. There are three or four hospitals where we are aware that it is going on, and we are fighting strenuously with these hospitals, and it must come to an end?—It is a pity that these are the largest hospitals!

557. There is absolute power to stop it, but you cannot take a corporate body by the throat all at once?—It is a pity that the hospitals where it is allowed are the largest ones.

558. The one I have in my mind is one of the smallest in Ireland?—Still I think it is common in the large.

559. It is practically known on the land?—I cannot, of course, speak as to the country.

560. Pauper nursing is practically at an end?—That would be an important thing if the hospitals were separated from the workhouse; it would stop pauper nursing.

561. The only duties that pauper aids?—I should call them wardmaids.

562. We apply that to the paid people?—Could you not call them pauper wardmaids?

563. Well, their only duties are scrubbing the floors and the stairs and sweeping steps and coals?—I quite know that is theoretically what they are supposed to do.

564. And if the Local Government Board find any breach of that they certainly take action at once; the Guardians, as a rule, are most reasonable; there is hardly any case where there is any resistance; the Guardians recognise themselves now that skilled nurses

June 26, 1901.
Dr. Katherine
Maguire.

ing is the proper and humane treatment, and they are falling in, bodily all over Ireland with the suggestion—Still I am afraid there are very large hospitals in existence where the nursing must be practically done by paupers.

572. I am not going to say there may not be a case or two, but they are very few!—Well, essentially, these hospitals where pauper nursing is in existence contain more patients than a great many of the unions in Ireland put together.

573. You won't find many; that is, I am afraid, all I can say!—The insane and imbecile, of course, I think there is no second opinion about.

574. The question that there was a divergence about yesterday was whether they should be sent to an auxiliary asylum or annexes to existing asylums?—That is a thing I don't think I should like to give a definite opinion about; I think probably that in some cases it would be better to send them to annexes and in some to auxiliary asylums; it would be cheaper, no doubt, to make auxiliary asylums in some cases and cheaper to have annexes in other cases; that would depend on the accommodation in existing institutions. Still I don't think these people should be sacrificed to cheapness. What I wish to lay stress on was imbecile children who at present have no teaching at all, and if put under a better system it would be comparatively easy to have one auxiliary asylum where there would be teachers for them.

575. We are getting figures of the number of children—I don't think they would be many.

576. It would be quite small?—Yes, but even such few as they are they might be improved, and that would be no expense extra to the Guardians.

577. They could board them out in institutions?—Yes, some of them, no doubt.

578. You mentioned Lady Meston's proposal?—About some epileptics; the number of some epileptics in Ireland is not very large.

579. About 400 in the workhouses. Do you think that all of those would be really eligible to go to any special institution? I think it was Dr. Fay who was very strongly in favour of not sending them to an institution, but of having a colony.

580. I meant a colony by an institution?—No doubt a great number of them ought to be; I don't think you could put all the 400 into a colony; some of them would be unfit for it.

581. Those subject to night seizures he thought ought to be put out with farmers?—Perhaps, if you could be sure that they only always take night seizures.

582. He seemed to classify them very clearly into day and night seizures?—I don't know that you could do it so absolutely as that; some get attacks by both day and night, and then there are occasional cases that get attacks of insanity with their fits, and it would be very difficult to classify them as sane, and there should be some accommodation for them in the colony.

583. Lady Meston's offer would only have accommodated very few people; I dare say it would have met the requirements?—Not of more than Dublin.

584. But all the Boards of Guardians were asked?—Yes, with a view of finding out what contribution they would give, but at first Lady Meston's offer would only have been sufficient for Dublin, and we found that unless there was some certainty of Treasury aid—a grant in aid from somebody—it would be very expensive, but a large institution is generally cheaper than a small one per head.

585. Infants, you think, should not be boarded out until what age?—Either two or three.

586. You would not send them as soon as they were weaned?—Yes; or when they are about two I would board them. At the age of two a healthy child ought to be able to eat anything; but I think they ought to be properly provided for in the existing unions, and I don't know that they by any means always are. I believe if you investigate the death rate of infants brought up by hand in unions you would probably find it was high too.

587. Do you know the results of boarding out children under a year old and bottle-feeding?—Yes, but I believe in the workhouse also the results of bottle-feeding are not very good. Was there not an inquiry about that?

CHAIRMAN.—There was one Dr. Higger held.

588. Dr. Bauman.—It is very difficult to hold such an inquiry, because they don't stay in the workhouse, but amongst the minor the death rate is nothing like so high in proportion to the out-door?—Then about the children, I have a paper from Mr. Bauman that perhaps it would be a good plan to give in evidence (pending), regarding the certified schools that have been very slightly used.

589. There are only twelve girls of certified schools?—The society I represent is very anxious that you should increase that as much as possible. The only other point was the possibility of contributing to children in day industrial schools as part of out-door relief, if day industrial schools were in existence.

590. How would that work?—That was Mr. Bauman's suggestion; you do relieve widows with more than one child.

591. The Guardians have it in their discretion?—It was thought that if some contribution was made towards the maintenance of such children in day industrial schools the mothers would be set free to work for the children and the condition of the family would be materially improved; it would be a form of out-door relief not liable to abuse.

592. Such children as go now to national schools?—Yes, but, of course, the mother would be set much more free by a day industrial school where they would get their meals.

LEED MONTAGUE EXAMINED.

593. Before commencing my evidence I wish to say that it is far from complete, owing to the short notice I had of the scope of the Commission, and of the date of the sitting, and to my being absent at the time and much occupied with other public business. There are several points I have not been able to touch at all, while others involve complicated details in reference to which I have not had time to collect the material facts and figures, and upon which, consequently, I could only give a bare outline of my opinions. The time of the sitting also, unfortunately, prevents some of the most experienced members of the Irish Workhouse Association giving general evidence on this occasion, as they are detained in London in connection with the Land Bill.

594. CHAIRMAN.—I hope we will have the pleasure of hearing you and them later on, because there will be other sittings.

I am a landowner in County Limerick, and was for many years an ex-officio Guardian of Glan Union until dissolved in 1893, and subsequently of Rathkeale Union until 1899. I am also President of the Irish Workhouse Association, founded in 1896 with the following objects:—(a) The improvement of the Irish workhouse system by all means consistent with a due regard for the interests of the ratepayers; and especially (b) the improvement of the condition of the sick, the aged, the children, and other helpless classes; (c) the discouragement of vagrancy. The association is non-political and unsectarian, and, acting in conjunction with other bodies with similar aims, has been the means of securing some valuable reforms, as detailed in the memorandum prepared by our secretary, Miss Stephens, which I hand in. I appear on behalf of the association at the request of the committee to give evidence as to the Poor Law reforms they advocate, which may be described in general terms as being:—1. To secure by more thorough classification methods of treatment better adapted to the different classes of workhouse inmates, and where possible in separate institutions, especially (a) lunatics and others mentally defective, (b) the sick, (c) the children, and (d) the aged and infirm. 2. To promote such an extent of amalgamation, as a general policy, as would conduce to this better classification. Vagrancy, we consider, should be dealt with on a radically different system from that now adopted. I proceed to deal with these different branches of the subject in answer to the eight queries issued by the Commission, but before doing so I must explain that our association confine itself to unions outside Dublin, and that most of our suggestions refer only to rural unions.

No. 1. This is a local question which will require different answers in different counties. My committee are not all agreed as to the extent to which amalgamation can be carried as a general policy, and, personally, I should regard with grave apprehension any wholesale change such as was advocated in County Curran at the time of Mr. Trevellick's Commission in 1879, viz., closing all the workhouses of a county except one, and amalgamating all the unions, because I believe this would entail either great hardship to the poor or a wholesale increase of outdoor relief and serious increase of pauperism, which, experience shows, invariably accompanies indiscriminate relief of this kind. There would also be considerable administrative difficulties in the way of such a large change. But we are insistent in desiring such amalgamation as would conduce to better classification by setting free workhouses for the treatment of particular classes, and we believe that in most counties there are one or more small unions which ought to be dissolved for this purpose without any hardship to the poor. The "orrible" accommodation of existing workhouses was stated by Mr. Trevellick's Commission in 1879 to be 147,522, and the actual accommodation was then estimated at about half the certified figure. Allowing for unions dissolved since 1879, I believe there were two.

June 28, 1902.

Lord
Monsieus.

535. There is—We may safely estimate the actual accommodation now to be at least 70,000. The average daily number relieved in all the workhouses in Ireland (1900-1) was 45,136, while the maximum number of inmates during the last twelve months, viz., to 5th February 1902, I find from figures kindly supplied to me by the Local Government Board are only 45,370. Reducing the number of workhouses in the proportion of 75 to 45 would give 102, and I therefore estimate that 57 workhouses could be dispensed with, or, roughly speaking, two in each county, without any increase of outdoor relief, and still leave ample room in the remaining 102 workhouses for those more thorough classification we desire.

536. If you closed one workhouse, allocated it to a special class only, say, turned it into an auxiliary lunatic asylum, then all the aged and infirm of that district would go to another workhouse?—Yes.

537. Would that be liable to lead to any increase of outdoor relief?—Not, I think, in the case of amalgamation of such small unions, which is all I contemplate here.

538. Take Newcastle, for instance, in your own neighbourhood, supposing it was made into an auxiliary asylum?—For my own county?

539. Or any other purpose you like?—I have not really looked into the question closely as regards my own county; I was only taking a general view of the question, but in regard to the County Limerick there is one small union that I believe might be dissolved without any hardship to the poor or any danger of increasing outdoor relief.

540. I think we will wait until we get to Limerick to hear that; the question is whether closing one workhouse would not result in the infirm poor of that union looking for outdoor relief?—If the union were large there might be that difficulty.

No. 2. This is also a local question, and I need only add to my last reply that we consider auxiliary asylums for (a) chronic lunatics, and (b) district schools for pauper children not eligible for boarding out, as purposes for which dissolved workhouses could be utilized with advantage to those classes themselves, and that by their removal better classification in the workhouses that remained would be greatly facilitated. We wish to have a more thorough classification of classes that would reside in the workhouses after removing those classes that can be sufficiently dealt with in separate institutions, and the poor that would be set free by removing those classes could be utilized in that way for more thorough classification. In connection with this subject I may add that there is one class which my association may perhaps more anxious to have removed from the workhouses than any other, but which, owing to the smallness of its numbers, cannot be provided for in separate institutions by any amalgamation within the different counties such as is contemplated in these queries. I allude to the same epileptics who, owing to the representations of our association and others, have been separately committed since the year 1900. According to the last Local Government Board report issued (for 12 months ending 31st March, 1901) there are only 216 in all Ireland. Admittedly, they require separate and special treatment as much as lunatics, and our committee urge that they could best be provided for in a single national institution, receiving the same expenditure, which would only amount to about 25,000 a year. I may say upon that, Mr. Hicks, that I believe Dr. Katherine Maguire gave some evidence with regard to epileptics, and I don't attempt to go into the details as to the distinction between those who are sane and those who are insane, and those who have occasional seizures when they become insane; that would have to be considered by experts. Speaking for myself only, I consider that this class and all lunatics and others mentally defective should, in Ireland, be maintained by the State (as in most foreign countries), and not by any Poor Law or other local authority. I don't think the argument as regards making the locality responsible for the amount of its pauperism applies in this case, because these cases are not subject to any influence of that kind; the community must deal with them, cannot leave them unattended, and therefore I think it is a matter of national concern and not a matter of merely local concern, and I think they would be much better dealt with on national lines and without there being necessarily any increase of cost, and that the charge should be apportioned in proportion to the probable valuation of different counties instead of by number. I also think the auxiliary asylums should be inspected by the Lunacy Inspectors, but that the latter in turn should be under the Local Government Board as regards district, as well as auxiliary asylums. Obviously, these lunatics and people of that class should be inspected by Lunacy Inspectors.

541. They are at present?—They are supposed to be 542. Oh, no; they are 1—I think the inspection is very far from perfect.

543. I see the returns continually?—They are supposed to be inspected, I am quite aware, but I don't think the inspection is nearly as frequent and as thorough as it ought to be; I rather fancy the Lunacy Inspectors agree that it is very difficult to carry out under present circumstances.

544. With only two Inspectors?—Yes, and having regard to the way in which they are all scattered.

545. Yes, 150 workhouses, and asylums besides, but they are all inspected by the Lunacy Inspectors, and really wonderfully frequently having regard to their small number?—I am not importing any neglect on the part of the Lunacy Inspectors, but I don't think they can be properly inspected under present circumstances.

No. 3. By such an amalgamation as I have described it should be possible to provide in separate institutions for the two classes mentioned in my last reply, but this would be hardly feasible "without the dissolution of any union." The question is asked in that query whether with or without the dissolution of any union. But, as already explained, we wish to secure separate treatment for other classes also; let, the sick, and, 2nd, the aged and infirm. It is unnecessary to argue the first point, as the principle of substituting "district hospitals" for "workhouse hospitals" has been already recognized in the 80th clause of the Local Government Act of 1895, which was originally suggested, I believe, by Dr. Joseph Smyth, of Naas, then a member of our executive committee, and which our association was mainly instrumental in getting adopted. That clause has hitherto been inoperative, and the question how it can best be made effective has not been formally considered by our committee, and would differ according to local circumstances, especially as regards the crucial question of distance and means of communication. Moreover, general evidence on this point will be given by members of the medical profession connected with our association. On its behalf, therefore, I will only say that we regard two points of vital importance in this matter:—(a) The separation of the hospital from the workhouse not necessarily by removal to a distance, but by separate entrance and separate staff and administration; and (b) the absolute suppression of "pauper nursing" not only in name but in reality. This can only be ensured by the paupers being replaced by "paid attendants"—a change which, according to the returns I moved for two years ago, had only then been effected in 30 unions out of 150. There can be no doubt that the "attendants" often discharge nursing duties, and if "paupers" are employed as "attendants" it obviously opens the door to "pauper nursing." If paupers are fit to act as attendants they are worth their hire, and should be paid; otherwise they are little better than slaves. If they are not fit they should not be employed.

546. I think you were present when this matter was referred to when Dr. Katherine Maguire was giving evidence?—I heard part of it. In reference to that point I have no personal knowledge on the subject, so I did not attempt to go any further into detail on it, but no doubt her will have further evidence on the point. Before leaving the hospital question I should like to explain my personal opinion in favour of a large hospital consolidation in rural districts which, in some cases, might include a whole county. If that were carried out it would probably be advisable to combine with the county infirmary.

June 26, 1921.

Lord
Montagu.

507. Do you mean one large building?—I mean to embrace the county infirmary within the system. I don't necessarily contemplate having only one hospital for a whole county, but in some counties—some of the smaller counties—one hospital might suffice. In other cases you might require two, and you might utilize the county infirmary as one and perhaps one workhouse of a disordered union for another.

508. One hospital system for the county, but the county infirmary and the Poor Law infirmary managed by the same body on the same system?—Yes, that is what I should like to see. This would greatly raise the standard and increase efficiency. I estimate the maximum number, excluding Dublin and Belfast, at 25,000, or about 400 on the average per county, large and small. The question of distance is very material in regard to the cases of temporary sickness, which are the most important, if not the most numerous, but apart from this the more members would not in many counties be too great for a single hospital. The distance difficulty might be got over by cottage hospitals or district nurses, either or both, which would be much less costly than the existing arrangements, and of much greater advantage to the sick poor.

509. Have you calculated that out in Sperrin?—Not as regards cottage hospitals; I think the district nursing system would be much more economical.

510. That is having nursing in their own homes where the homes would be suitable?—Yes, and, of course, subject to the case being suitable; in cases of infectious disease they ought to be removed. But there are a great number of cases in which people might be nursed in their own homes, and it might have the effect of stopping things at an earlier stage; very often people are reluctant to go to hospital, and won't go until they are very bad, whereas if they were nursed in their own homes the disease might be arrested. As regards cottage hospitals I have made some inquiries on the subject which seem to me to show that they might be very economically managed, and I believe that is the experience in England, but I have not any figures; I might, I hope, go into that on another occasion. The principle of nursing the poor in their own homes is already recognized not only in the "Jubilee Nurses" but in the appointments of dispensary district midwives, but the former are too expensive for the great majority of districts, and the latter have merely any training in general for fever nursing, and are most inadequately paid, and even such as they are, 276 out of 747 dispensary districts in Ireland, or more than one-third, are without them. Their salaries and salary should be raised, and half the latter paid by the State, like the "trained nurses" of the workhouse hospitals. (2) Our committee have not agreed on any policy in detail for the aged and infirm, but generally desire they should be treated separately in institutions of the poorhouse as distinguished from the workhouse type, and that the deserving amongst them again should be sub-classified for better treatment. The distance difficulty would, of course, be much less serious in their case, and in numbers they are also fewer than the sick. I estimate the maximum at 10,000, excluding Dublin and Belfast. There would, therefore, in many counties be no insuperable difficulty in providing for, at any rate, all the deserving members of this class in a single institution, and I would suggest that in Roman Catholic districts the management of such almshouses should be entrusted to the nuns. These reforms would, I believe, encourage Guardians to restrict outdoor relief within narrower limits by freeing the aged poor from the extreme severity of workhouse treatment, though still affording that test of destitution, the want of which renders outdoor relief at once so easily on the whole—however miserable the pittance given in each case—and so demoralizing. One other class certainly requires special treatment though not specially mentioned in the query of the Commission or specially considered as yet by my committee, viz., the infants with their mothers, many of them unmarried. This, however, is essentially a woman's question, and I doubt not will be dealt with by women Guardians in their evidence. I will only, therefore, make three observations on it; 1st, that special arrangements should be made to preserve young women with their first child from contact with habitual offenders; 2nd, that their wards and nurseries should be supervised by lady inspectors, who, indeed, would be a great means of improving many details of workhouse administration, as has been found in the case of the two at work in London for some years past; and, 3rd, there should be a minimum limit of age for boarding out or be fixed at two or three years old. At present there is no minimum limit of age; there is a maximum limit; I think there should be a minimum; it is rather a woman's question where the line should be drawn, but I would say infants under two or three should not be boarded out. I think these require much more attention than at present. The amount of inspection and supervision that is now given is far from being sufficient, even in the case of boarded-out children, and is quite inadequate in the case of infants. There remain only the vagrants, who, as stated above, my committee think should be dealt with on reformatories lines altogether apart from the other classes of paupers, and that this should be done by the police, whose duty it has long been to prosecute them, the offence being punishable by a single magistrate out of Petty Sessions by imprisonment without the option of a fine. But I leave this subject in the hands of Mr. Walter Kavanagh, who has made a special study of it, and whom my committee have asked to give evidence before the Commission. I am afraid Mr. Kavanagh will not be able to attend here this time.

511. Have you any idea how the police should look after vagrants?—Mr. Kavanagh has a suggestion to make on that point; I leave it to him to explain. As regards the numbers, the figures that were kindly supplied to me by the Local Government Board show about 5,000, I think, under the general head of "all other classes."

512. 4,500?—The figures I had were the maximum; I take the maximum in order to be sure we are estimating sufficient accommodation for the workhouses; the total numbers were 45,000, and the number under all other classes was nearly 5,000, and I take these to be mainly vagrants.

513. No; there are only 800 vagrants?—Yes; but then in those figures the vagrants are counted several times over.

514. You are speaking of the nights each vagrant spends in the workhouse?—My point is this, that I find the number of vagrants on any one night, the maximum is 600 odd.

515. I have not the figures as late as these but in the week in which that 600 odd came I think you will find that for the whole week the number referred to about seven times that amount; evidently they go from workhouse to workhouse, they change their shade every night. I think you will find 600 on one night, and the number in the week is 4,000.

516. Dr. BIGGS.—That is the 600 multiplied by seven because they spend seven nights in different workhouses, the same 600?—The figures I refer to, where all other classes are shown, are also for the week, and therefore I estimate that the 4,000 odd were mainly vagrants.

517. CHAIRMAN.—That is not so; we had it all yesterday from Mr. Courtney?—I have the figures from Rathfriland in further detail, and they seem to correspond more or less with the figures I had.

No. 4. I have incidentally answered portions of this question in my reply to No. 3. In addition, I think, speaking for myself alone, the following changes would be desirable in connection with the reforms I have advocated.

Legislation.—(1) Vagrants and parents of the "in and out" class should be deprived of the custody of their children, and the latter should be adopted and educated by the Guardians in district schools. (2) The Irish law as to recovery of cost of maintenance of illegitimate children from the putative fathers should be assimilated to the English "Bastardy Law," as explained by Mr. William Holden in a paper read at the Belfast Poor Law Conference in November, 1921. I believe you have already had some evidence on that.

518. Yes, this morning.

Administration.—The "district schools" should be of a regular "industrial" type, and should be inspected by the Inspector of Reformatories and Industrial Schools instead of as now by the Local Government Board Inspector, whose functions are of a totally different nature. I see no distinction in principle between the children in these schools and the class in industrial schools.

519. Would you rather have boarding out or the district schools?—As regards the boarding out of the class who are eligible for boarding out I greatly prefer boarding out under proper supervision.

520. Would you approve of changing the classification of children who could be boarded out?—Of course

June 25, 1903.

Lord
Mestral.

you are aware it has been somewhat enlarged last year by a small Act that I introduced enlarging the definition, but I don't think that the class of men and women, and the children of men and women, who would be the next class that I suppose might be boarded out, could practically be dealt with in that way; but I think in that case it would be better that they should be in district schools, because there would be great difficulty in keeping them from interference by the parents, and they would be more under the control of the Guardians in district schools. I have not gone very closely into the question, but I don't see at present how you could enlarge the class of children that are eligible for boarding out, and until the system of supervision is made more effective I think it would be dangerous to increase the class, but it is difficult enough now to ensure proper homes under proper supervision with the existing arrangements, and until more numerous and more efficient bodies visiting committees can be organised, which I hope will be the result of the recent appointment of two lady inspectors, until that change has been carried very much further I don't think that boarding out could be safely increased.

Charity.—Outdoor relief should be an electoral division charge, as under mismanagement a system of log-rolling is encouraged; the cost does not come home to individual Guardians, and there is a tendency to leave the whole selection too much in the hands of the relieving officer, with the result that there is not sufficient investigation of the applicant's circumstances, and the relief becomes largely indiscriminate. I may say with reference to this that I have had no personal experience of the working of Boards of Guardians since the Act of 1868, so I am only giving hearsay evidence more or less, what I hear from people who are concerned.

621. How the expenditure goes up in the part of the country you are familiar with?—I believe it has, but that is one of the questions I alluded to that I should have liked to have gone into much more closely, and I hope to do so on another occasion. On the other hand, many of the indoor classes might be charged with advantage on a wider area than the union, as I believe is done in London. I have already expressed my opinion that lunatic and some epileptics should be national charges. I have incidentally answered queries 5, 6, and 8 in my other replies, so far as I have evidence to offer, and other points in them will be dealt with by other witnesses from our association. I have only to say in reply to No. 7 that my committee are strongly in favour of a system of paying patients, and the establishment of separate wards for the same. This we regard as of vital importance in confining to public health and arresting the spread of infectious disease, as well as rendering available for the poorer ratepayers the only hospital within their reach and removing from it the stigma of pauperism. In conclusion, I may say I regard the workhouse as a necessary evil with which we cannot altogether dispense, but which we should steadily endeavour to restrict to those classes which cannot be dealt with by the other means which I have suggested. But we cannot acquiesce in the present haphazard system under which the workhouse is in many respects a nursery, or factory, of pauperism, and the work of our association has been directed to eliminating from this deplorable system those classes which can be treated by educational or reformatory methods, as well as those for whom a more humane treatment is demanded by Christian principles and the public opinion of all civilised countries. I hope to have an opportunity of going more fully into this broad general question on a future occasion. The idea should be to humanise Poor Law relief without pauperising the poor, and in my opinion this can only be attained by classification carried out to its extreme logical conclusion, which is the careful and sympathetic investigation of the individual case, and this investigation in turn can hardly be achieved without the co-operation of voluntary helpers outside the ranks of the Poor Law authorities, local or central. And until we can succeed in more largely enlisting the assistance of the public and the philanthropic classes outside the officials and the regular system of Poor Law relief, I don't think we can attain to the level that has been reached in many Continental countries. That would be the ideal which I should aim at; that we should be able to treat our poor on the more humane system on which they are treated in many foreign countries, such as Denmark and Austria, and I believe also in Switzerland and France, though the system, of course, differs in these different countries, but I believe with the assistance of the public outside, and by arousing the public conscience and getting people to recognise their corporate responsibility, not merely for the maintenance of these people and keeping them from absolute starvation, but for combating with the great mischief of pauperism, with these aids we may approximate to that ideal. But until we can reach something like the foreign standards in these matters—a standard which has not been reached in England any more than in this country, I believe—I am afraid that we shall not get within measurable distance of our ideal.

Sir WILLIAM THORNTON SPOKE examined.

Sir William
Thornton
Staley.

622. CHAIRMAN.—Your evidence is chiefly as regards hospitals of workhouses?—Yes, it is. The first matter I wish to mention is the opinion I hold, and that the society I represent holds, that the hospital should be separated from the workhouse proper; a complete separation made.

623. Different staffs?—Yes, I think that this involves separate authority as regards the workhouse proper and the hospital, that the hospital should be under the control of a doctor and a matron or superintendent, who is a fully trained nurse, and that they should be independent of all district workhouse control.

624. Would you have some committee of management?—Yes; there should be a committee of management, but I think it is desirable, from a sentimental point of view, to separate this hospital as far as possible, because a great many people at present won't go into a workhouse hospital who would, I think, enter it in future under changed circumstances when it is known to have no direct connection with the workhouse itself. Then in that case the medical officer of the workhouse proper and of the hospital should be distinct officers; they should hold distinct offices.

625. It may be the same man?—In certain districts, of course, the same man would occupy both offices, but he would act in each independent of the other and receive separate payment. Mr. Kavanagh proposed a plan in consultation the other day, which he has authorised me to suggest in his name as he is not present, and that is that the medical care of the workhouse proper should be placed in the hands of the dispensary doctor of the district, who would receive some increase in his salary for doing it; that would help perhaps to meet the increased expense of having two medical officers and two salaries, where there is now only one. This person who is not destitute, I am strongly of opinion, should be allowed to contribute to the cost of their support to a degree proportionate to their means.

626. You would leave that discretionary with the medical officer and committee?—I would.

627. Dr. Broom.—You don't propose separate wards?—I think it would be desirable if possible, but I am aware that in a great many districts it would be practically impossible; but where the hospital was of sufficient size to allow segregation of cases I think it would induce respectable people to enter if not put with those who are in the hospital without paying. That is a matter of sentiment, because I am aware they would be just as well treated without a separation of that sort. With the increased efficiency of medical and surgical treatment and the removal of the term "Union Hospital" persons would be induced to seek treatment who at present go to Dublin hospitals. At present large numbers of union patients resort to Dublin hospitals for treatment, being either sent there at the expense of the union or imposed on Dublin charities supported mainly by Dublin people. The average cost that is paid by unions to Dublin hospitals for every patient is 6s. a week, at the rate of 3s. a day, and when you add the travelling expenses of the patient to and from his union, and very often the expense of an attendant coming up to take charge of him, a considerable sum of money is expended that could be economised if these cases were treated in their own districts.

628. CHAIRMAN.—A great many are cases that might be treated in their own unions?—Yes, a great many of them are cases that could be treated in their own unions, and I think that the increased experience and responsibility thus thrown on the medical officers would produce an increased efficiency, and I believe that increased efficiency and consequently more expeditious treatment would result in economy.

June 25, 1909.

Sir William
Thomson
Stoke.

625. Dr. BROWN.—Would you make any suggestion why that increased efficiency might be anticipated?—At present a large number of cases are sent to towns which could, under conditions of ordinary advantages, such as they then would have in improved hospitals, be treated in the country; of course there would still be a certain, but small, class of obscure and difficult cases requiring metropolitan treatment.

626. You mentioned about increased efficiency; would you make any suggestion how the increased efficiency could be obtained?—Improvements in the nursing is one thing, the doctor would then be a man placed in charge of a number of difficult cases, which are now sent away; his knowledge of the work would increase, and consequently the confidence of the people of the district in him would increase. At present there are a large number of men in obscure places who have no opportunity of dealing with difficult and obscure cases; they are all sent to Dublin, Cork, or Belfast, and the doctor loses the advantage of study and cannot study them at home, because he has no proper appliances for treating them, which I hold he would have if the hospital were a separate thing in the way I speak of.

631. CHAIRMAN.—General efficiency all round?—Yes, in nursing, and probably in feeding as well. Then I think the nursing arrangements, although they are very much improved of late years are capable of a great deal of further improvement. I think the different classes of nurses as regards accomplishments require to be defined more clearly. I think the terms "qualified" and "trained" which are used at present in both Ireland and England by the Poor Law authorities are not desirable ones. To call one class trained is to imply that the lower grade are not trained; and to call a person who is not fully trained, qualified, is, I think, a mistake. I think every nurse should be both qualified and trained, although a different degree of training, of course, might be necessary for the higher position in the nursing ward.

632. Dr. BROWN.—How would you differentiate between the nurses?—The half-trained nurse might be called an assistant nurse.

633. I must say the nurses are very well trained?—In the experience of people engaged in nursing schools in metropolitan cities they are not trained.

634. I have got the same opinion expressed by county medical officers regarding Dublin-trained nurses?—Here in the Waterford scheme of nursing, which I understand has been sanctioned by the Local Government Board, and in paragraph 10 it says: "Training in a fever hospital, though very desirable as an additional qualification, is not regarded as essential for obtaining a certificate as a trained nurse." Now everyone engaged in teaching the better class of nurses will include such an idea as that.

635. That is not meant, Sir Thomson, as a general statement?—It is a very particular one.

636. It is meant as regards Waterford; they are doing their best to train nurses there; they have only the small local fever hospital; the nurses will have that advantage, but the Local Government Board and the Guardians did not propose to give a certificate for fever nursing?—Here is the fact; the rule has been sanctioned by the Local Government Board.

637. I was explaining the extent of the sanction, and those nurses who are so certified as Waterford are not certified for fever cases, but for medical and surgical cases only, and their training is given in the society infirmary, the old Leper Hospital, and the union infirmary; they do not get fever training, but I think the arrangements are being made as far as they can?—We hold that a qualified or trained nurse should be trained in all the branches of her profession, and should be competent to go from one case to another as ordered.

638. What the Waterford people and other unions do is, where they have a nurse who has not the fever qualification, they telegraph to Corkinchester or Belfast or the fever hospital in Cork, and they get their nurse, and there is no difficulty in getting a sufficient number of qualified nurses. It would not pay in a union to keep on a full staff of trained fever nurses?—Every nurse trained in a metropolitan city in a clinical hospital gets a training in fever, and we hold a nurse is not fit to undertake general duty unless she has a fever training, and I go further any fever training in an Irish country hospital is the most important branch of learning they have to follow.

639. CHAIRMAN.—Even when she has no fever cases?—She is always liable to get them.

640. No, never; the two institutions are separate; you have the union infirmary, in which no fever cases are admitted, and the fever hospital nursed by a special nurse?—I don't believe any nurse is fit to nurse unless she is qualified for everything. You might as well have a doctor to deal with throat diseases who knows nothing about the stomach.

641. Dr. BROWN.—St. Thomas' in London gives no fever training, and the London Hospital, one of the largest institutions in the Three Kingdoms, has no fever training?—I am not prepared to answer that.

642. I tell you that is so; an ordinary case of typhoid may be treated by them with ordinary precautions, but not treated as a fever case?—I am only speaking about Ireland.

643. About Dublin, you mean?—Take my opinion for what it is worth. I think the terms "qualified" and "trained" very unfortunate ones, for it implies the qualified nurse is not trained.

644. CHAIRMAN.—It was the result of the word "trained" being used in the Act of Parliament with regard to one purpose only, that is the recruitment, and power was given to the Local Government Board to pay back half the salary of the trained nurse, and it further went on to say that the Local Government Board should prescribe the meaning of the word "trained." The Local Government Board were therefore obliged to use the word "trained" for the class of nurses whose salary would be recruited; and they had to find out some other word to use for the nurses whose salary would not be recruited?—I am aware that the Irish Local Government Board has carefully avoided defining exactly what a qualified nurse is; I am also aware that the English Board has tried to define it, and I think most unfortunately.

645. That shows the wisdom of not doing it?—That is a very worldly sort of wisdom. I think all superintendent nurses—I mean nurses who have attendants and probationers under them—

646. They won't have probationers under them in a workhouse hospital; they would only have them in half a dozen hospitals?—I don't see why every union hospital should not have probationers in them; they ought to. Then I think that all superintendents or fully-trained nurses should have had a term in a clinical hospital as part of their training. By a clinical hospital we mean in my profession one where teaching is done to medical students, and I think that nurses should always have a term there—perhaps a year; they never can get the same class of training anywhere else. The nurses stand with the students in the ward and hear the instructions given, and in that way they get a systematic teaching and a height of teaching that never could be given in classes held purely for nurses. In the ordinary Dublin hospital the clinical instruction is going on for three hours every day in the week except Sunday, and the nurses have the advantage of that.

647. That is what our trained nurses really get; we require two years in a clinical hospital for a trained nurse?—I have a suggestion to make about that. My point is that your "qualified" nurse need not have that, and I think no nurse is qualified that has not had it. I think if a nurse is to get training in a clinical hospital, which means in a large town or city, it should be in the first year of her training, because if she is trained in the infirmary school she comes up to Dublin or Belfast with all the bad habits that she ought not to have had, and which arise from defective training, and the first duty of the matron of a Dublin hospital is to try to unteach all the girl has been taught before. I am not speaking of that as a theory, but as a matter of which I have had practical knowledge and experience. The matrons in Dublin have a great objection, as a rule, to take girls who have been in union hospitals, because they find often their faults as nurses are insensible. I notice that in this scheme—the Waterford scheme—it is laid down that a nurse should be taken for a month on trial before it is finally decided to accept her as a probationer. I don't think a month is nearly enough; it requires at least three months for a matron or superintendent to form an opinion about the fitness of a girl for nursing; she may scrape through for thirty days without any of her faults being known, without her health being examined as well as her head. I think there ought to be a trial period, and there is in all the hospitals here, of at least three months. The next proposal I would venture to put forward is this, that if there is to be an equal system of nursing in the unions and county hospitals all through Ireland there ought to be some standard criterion to them all. The Local Government Board, of course, have to approve of the appointment of nurses, but I think it would be very useful if there was an Advisory Board associated with the Local Government Board here in Dublin, whose duty it would be to consider the qualification and fitness of nurses for appointment. For example, there might be two matrons or superintendents from Dublin hospitals that have training schools, one from Cork, one from Galway, and one from Belfast, and the effect of these matrons being called in to consultation with the members of the Local Government Board would be to secure good advice as to the class of training the candidates had.

648. Don't you think there is room for a very much larger scheme than that; a large scheme for the United Kingdom, for making some general regulations as regards the qualification of nurses?—Well, perhaps so; I doubt if it would work. What has happened about the Midwifery Bill would apply there. If you once raise so big a question as that you raise the question as to whether these ladies would not be a sort of initiation doctors; that has been said in connection with the qualification of midwives, and there has been a most angry battle going on, both in Parliament and out of it, on that question for years. I think a local scheme for England and Ireland should be tried first.

649. I mean as regards the qualification?—As regards the Advisory Board.

650. No, for fixing a uniform standard of qualification?—I suggest that could be done with a number of matrons associated with the Local Government Board.

651. That would be merely for union hospitals?—It might be extended to all hospitals under the Local Government Board; this has been done lately in connection with the Army Board, a number of matrons have been appointed to consult with the Advisory Board of the Army Medical Service.

652. Dr. BAKER.—Are they the Nursing Sisters in the Army?—There is one of those, the head of the Nursing Department in one, and either two or three matrons from English hospitals. I forget the exact number, but you may take it the thing does exist and is working. I think, of course, that the nurses should be removed from workhouses and placed in asylums. I need not enlarge on that matter—placed in district asylums.

653. CHAIRMAN.—That is in the existing lunatic asylums?—Yes.

654. No auxiliary lunatic asylums—closed workhouses?—I don't see the necessity for multiplying unnecessarily the number of asylums. I think the fewer asylums you can get to take the insane people of the country the better; I don't think they ought to become overgrown; I don't like the idea of an asylum with two or three thousand patients; I quite admit that there ought to be a limit to the number a district asylum would take, but I am not competent to give an exact opinion as to how big a district asylum might be allowed to become; you must consult men who make a special study of lunacy on that point. My next point is that separate provision should be made for the epileptics and idiots, preferably by settlements such as already exist in certain places where epileptics can be made to fill a useful occupation and be much happier than they are in lunatic asylums or left in workhouses. Then there are a certain number of epileptics who are insane, and it is right to say that insane epileptics are the worst and most dangerous of all classes of insane people; so I think that if a settlement for epileptics were forced—one or two for the whole of Ireland—in the shape of a village, there should be a small auxiliary asylum into which these epileptics could be placed when their attacks came on. Of course there are epileptics who are permanently insane, those I would send to the district asylums, but epileptics who are either sane or who have only intermittent mania are persons whom I think it is very cruel to leave in workhouses or confined in asylums, and I think an intelligent and liberal provision, such as has been attempted elsewhere, should be made for them. Then I think that all healthy children of over—I am not prepared to define the age exactly, I am not competent—but say from two to three years of age, should be boarded out; I don't think a healthy child of over two or three should ever be kept in the workhouse. I have been a good deal about country workhouses in Ireland, and there is no more terrible or lamentable sight than the children who are degenerating into beggars, prostitutes, and thieves by being left in those places, untreated to a great extent, and brutalised, and who, when they become old enough to go out about the world, become criminals, who are constantly coming back to the workhouse, and never do any good in life.

655. Do you mean sent to other institutions or boarded out in families?—I mean boarded out in families. Of course where a suitable institution offers I accept that as a partial solution of the difficulty, but they cannot all be sent to institutions. I think this would involve a very much larger number of women inspectors than at present, and perhaps one male inspector, because if the system of boarding out children became very large and extensive questions might arise from time to time where it would be advisable to have at least one male inspector. The next question—as to dispensary doctors—I propose to say something about it, I understand, one that you have a difficulty in letting me speak about. May I explain to you why I think it is permissible. I propose only to touch on it very briefly.

656. No, 6, dealing with administration and financial changes to secure more economy?—Any changes I propose would be directed to economy.

657. I think that would be rather far-fetched?—I will tell you just what I wanted.

658. We have it here, I think, perhaps, if you would be satisfied with that?—I would like to say that I want to speak of the holidays for doctors, pensions for them, and cases of rearrangements of salaries.

659. Those are under the Medical Charities Act, and these are entirely clear of this Inquiry?—I must accept your ruling.

660. It has been defined very clearly that we are not to go into the question?—Generally to inquire and report whether any, and what, financial changes are desirable in order to secure a more economic system for the relief of the sick and destitute poor.

661. Under the Poor Law Act?—I would just say this, if the scope of the Inquiry should, at any future time, enable me to give evidence on this point, I will ask you to allow me to come before you again.

CHAIRMAN.—Certainly.

Mr. JOHN KENNY (blind), examined.

662. CHAIRMAN.—What evidence do you wish to give to the Commission?—Well, gentlemen, I represent the National League of the Blind of Great Britain and Ireland. I wish to give evidence on the present condition of the blind, and in the beginning I would wish to point out that in 1895 there was a Royal Commission issued to investigate into the state of the deaf, dumb, and blind, and imbeciles in these countries, and their labours extended over four years, in which they examined the various systems throughout Europe, and they unanimously recommended that the case of the blind required immediate legislation. Since that time no effort has been made by the Government to take the matter in hand though we have often endeavoured to bring it under their consideration. If you would kindly examine this paper you will find a memorial to the Chief Secretary from the blind, upon which you might ask me various questions, because it contains all that we require. Of course we came before you merely that you may, in your recommendations, strengthen our case, because we don't actually want to continue under the Poor Law system. We think, as a gentleman here has mentioned some time ago with regard to the epileptics, that they are a class for which the State should provide. We think, also, that we are a class for which the State should provide, and not leave us under the precarious system of Poor Law treatment and voluntary assistance to which we are subject from the charitable public. They are called on from time to time to help the Poor Law system, to keep the blind in institutions, and, of course, to this we have a great objection. We don't wish to be locked up in institutions any longer than to enable us to learn a business, and we wish these institutions, of course, to find us employment afterwards.

663. Are you speaking of Poor Law institutions?—Institutions aided by the Poor Law?—The institutions aided by the Poor Law system provide no employment for the people after they are trained there; we wish a system to be adopted similar to that in England, although it is not perfect in England either, and that is that the children should only be brought to these institutions and there taught a proper education up to sixteen years of age, after which they would be transferred to a workshop in connection with the institution, which they should be compelled to have, and that the children thus transferred to the workshop

June 26, 1905

Sir William
Forster
Stoker.

Mr. John
Kenny.

June 24, 1933,
Mr. John
Kenny.

would become more efficient because they would be stimulated by the efforts which other people were making to earn a living. They are trained up, at present, in the institutions to industries, some of which are no practical use to them—only of use to the institution—because they get no employment afterwards at these industries.

664. What institutions are you referring to?—I am referring specially to the great national institution of Ireland at Drumcondra.

665. We have nothing whatever to say to Drumcondra?—But this institution is aided by the Poor Law.

666. I think not—certain people are sent there and boarded out there?—Yes, they are paid for by the Board of Guardians. Have the Board of Guardians no control over them?—

667. They have not any control—and are they compelled to send them?

668. No. Well, then, in that case—

669. But the Commission, when they are going round the Irish workhouses, will, having regard to the statement you have made, take extra care in inquiring into the condition of the blind who are in the workhouses, and into the condition of the blind who are boarded out of the workhouses?—Yes, sir; but apart from that, could you not, in your recommendations, strengthen our case as far as your recommendations would go, that our case requires exceptional legislation from the State.

670. We will have to deal with the question of course of the blind in Poor Law institutions or maintained by the poor rates, whether the present provision is adequate, and if you could send in any documents on the subjects we will look over them carefully when making our investigations in various parts of the country?—Would it be any information to you to have the report of the late Royal Commission?

671. Yes, we will get that?—It would help you materially.

672. But if you had a report of your own association, an association of which, I see, Mr. John McDermott is chairman, if you had any suggestions in a short compass from that it would be still more practical and valuable?—We have a pamphlet on the subject—on the condition of the Irish blind—which, of course, we could forward to you, and it may help you in the matter.

673. In understanding your views, I am sure it would?—We earnestly hope that in your examinations, when you visit Belfast, for instance, you will find there a workshop established on the lines which we indicate. In this way, that there is no indoor institution, the blind are sent to this workshop as apprentices, many of them are aided in a similar way by the Poor Law system while they are learning their trades. This institution teaches various trades, which the blind follow, whereas in Dublin, unfortunately, there are only two trades, you may say, taught to the blind, one of them is no practical use, and the other is basket-making, at which about thirty or thirty-five people are only earning a living in Dublin. In Belfast it will be worth your while to make particular inquiries into the workshop system carried out in that city, and in your recommendations, if you could recommend that this system should be carried out through Ireland, you would do a great service to the blind.

CHAIRMAN.—We will do as you ask in making a close inspection of Belfast, and, as far as we can, we will do what you ask; we cannot say anything more definite now.

MR. JOHN McDERMOTT (blind) examined.

674. In connection with this case of the blind, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have somewhere of about forty-five or forty-six years' experience. In the year 1859 the institution at Drumcondra was then established in Glasnevin, and I became an inmate of that institution in 1861. I left it in 1863, and when I left the institution I had a little knowledge of the trade I learned in it in a way that I could earn no living by it. I had to go and learn my trade over again. This is a vast institution, all the blind in Ireland are collected in it through the Poor Law—there is no blind man there that is not paid for. I heard you say that the Local Government Board or the Board of Guardians has no control over it. I was more than astonished to hear that, for I think where the ratepayers' money goes that there should be some supervision of this money; there should be some one go there to see what are they doing. They should see what becomes of the inmates when they leave the institution after training. My experience of it is they come out, and out of every twenty there is not more than one able to get a living, the other nineteen go adrift—they go back into the unions again. I have known so much as £340 to be paid for one man to learn a trade. Seeing all these things from time to time I was more than astonished—the idea of leaving a man as a machine for making money and being paid for all this time. I think it is highly wrong to the ratepayers at least, and it is also wrong to him, because you have the brand of pauperism on him. What we want the Government to do is to act on the report of the Royal Commission of 1889, which unanimously came to the conclusion that the Irish blind, deaf, and dumb were in a bad state, the Government as well as the Local institution. The Government has every right and title to legislate themselves, and take the blind, deaf, and dumb under their special care.

675. CHAIRMAN.—You see, Mr. McDermott, this is a special and a very large subject on which a Royal Commission was appointed; this is a Commission for an entirely different purpose, but so far as there are blind in workhouses, we will look into their case, but as to making any inspection or report on the general treatment of the blind in Ireland, it is not our function as all?—I beg your pardon, oh yes, it is. I wrote to a member of Parliament—I have written to many members of Parliament, and got them to put various questions to the Government from time to time, among the rest here is the latest (produced), and you will see you have every privilege to meddle with this question according to Mr. Wymondham. This is only this week before. It was through me it was put.

676. Exactly. I have seen this question and answer before?—It was through me it was put.

677. And it was through me it was answered?—I wrote to Mr. Neenan asking him to put such a question.

678. We will do what is said here and will look into the question?—The ratepayer is at an enormous expense. Imagine £1,019 per annum from the North Dublin Union only; if this be so from the North Dublin area—it is small compared with the South Dublin Union—the South Dublin Union must be £2,000, and only imagine this drain of money from the ratepayer, where we are already burdened with rates to the amount of 11s. 3d. on the pound. And the Government—I need not say I am not going to bring in any vested question, but it is said our already over-taxed local resources is not able to bear it—and the Government have every right to step in; in fact, men of intelligence and intellect say, they have every right to step in. If you just see Sir Patrick Keenan's report—

679. You are going outside the lines altogether, you must be satisfied with what I have told you, and not labour the thing further from that point of view. We will look into the question of the blind who are in workhouses and are maintained by the poor rates. The last witness very kindly promised to let us have some pamphlets and statements on the subject, and we will look into them most carefully, but to take up the question of the blind all over Ireland is not our duty. The biggest part of the blind have passed through the Poor Law institutions.

CHAIRMAN.—You have our decision now.

(Witness).—Well, we are very thankful to you for receiving us as you have done.

Mr. John
McDermott.

Miss A. M. ROYAN examined.

June 26, 1920

Miss A. M.
Royan.

592. CHAIRMAN:—You have kindly supplied the Commission with an abstract of your evidence, will you read it?—I. Under present facilities of intercommunication amalgamation seems advisable. Each rural county being the division, classification to different workhouses would be simple; this would be more comfortable for the poor, and greatly reduce staff and expense of up-keep. A better arrangement of outdoor relief, within a minimum and maximum, could be given to some of those now housed, at a lesser cost to ratepayers. (a.) An aged couple in the house are separated and cost 5s. per week. Five shillings outdoor would in most cases keep them happy and comfortable in their homes. I am talking now not of cities, but of the rural districts, of which I have fair knowledge.

593. If you pay them outside at the 5s. rate you might have a great many more?—No, I think not. I think it could be arranged so that you should not. (b.) Southern Boards give from 1s. to 1s. 6d. as ordinary out-door relief. This is inadequate for support, induces to begging for sustenance, and frequently this is spent on drink. I know that in two or three unions, with which I am fairly well acquainted, the average is from 1s. to 1s. 6d., and you cannot get more; when in illness more help is refused. (c.) Some Boards give popular allowances 4s. per week; these are special cases, and sometimes continue for a long time, and sometimes do not. (d.) A single man, out of work, living at home, 2s. 6d. from Board would keep him per fire. The head of a family of six, under some circumstances, could live on 12s., which is an average poor man's earning per week; they could not do so less without wearing clothes, begging, or borrowing. If this family of six were forced into the house it necessitates breaking up the home, and they could seldom emerge from the pauper wards where they would, for years, cost the union 18s. per week. I have known a family of six brought into the house who were most thoroughly respectable people; the man was out of work through misfortune, and it cost an enormous sum of money. I tried to get the Guardians to give that man out-door relief which would keep him in the respectable status he formerly occupied until things recovered; he never got back his status.

(e.) When a wage-earner is in a union hospital it is usual to give the family 3s. or 5s. out-door relief. When the man is discharged from hospital—well made for work and needing nourishment and rest—he goes home—that is because he won't go into the body of the house—and immediately this wretched hole is withdrawn. This is a serious evil. It entails much suffering. The man goes to work too soon (if he can get it), and probably has shortly to return to hospital, accompanied by another member of his starving family. Some plan of home help should be arranged for convalescents. Also for bona fide labourers out of work through no fault of their own. I think both Dr. Smyth and Dr. McInnes suggested for this a convalescent home, which would be a better idea still, but I was speaking merely of what could be done under existing conditions. If there could be a considerable reduction in the number of workhouses; there are 150 of these houses in Ireland, with 40,000 inmates. When unions were arranged, and workhouses built in Ireland in 1840-43, the population was double what it is now, and paupers were eight times more numerous than they are to-day. At present twenty-four only of these unions have over 500 inmates. In half of them, certainly two in Co. Kerry, there are rarely 100 inmates. The average cost, per pauper inmate, of 1840-43, is 4s. 10s. per annum, the cost of up-keep of the establishment 25 10s. per annum, while the actual sum per head for food and clothes is 410s. per annum, making an average of 290s. per head for each workhouse inmate, a sum which few of our ratepayers can afford to expend on each of their own children.

594. Is this in Kerry or all round it?—It is in Kerry, I take it from the statistics three or four years ago. I had not a report of later years; it was 1868. (a.) Vacated workhouses could be handed over to county councils for other uses, and to avoid medical expenditure on stone and mortar. It would be a great advantage to have in each county an auxiliary lunatic asylum for harmless imbeciles. I must speak very strongly on that subject. There is an imbecile I am very much interested in—a young man who unfortunately lost his reason through influenza when twenty-two years of age. He was a very respectable clerk in an office. He has no father—an orphan—he has been obliged, several times, to be sent to an asylum, from there he is sent into the workhouse wards for imbeciles, which are not fit to receive any human being; the boy won't stay there, it is impossible to keep him in it, he walks home to his mother, and actually starves. He gets no out-door relief, so presently he goes back to the asylum, having got bad again. He has been three times in the asylum, when he gets better they draft him into the workhouse; he won't stay there and he goes home, where he has not proper care.

595. Out-door relief would be your remedy for that?—For that, because he has a respectable parent, an old woman, who has no help whatever. She is hardly able to support herself, she cannot feed this young man, who comes out of the asylum with a very large appetite, she has no means to feed him. Also I think provision might be made for aged couples, past labour, by giving them apartments and a small pension. Most of the doctors seemed to agree with me, and Dr. Foy suggested a cottage home for them, which is a very good idea. I know one place in England where it is carried out. I don't know the expense of it, but it seems to be a very happy arrangement—of course it costs more, which must be considered. III. Boarding out, or pensioning them in their own homes, would be another, more economical, and more comfortable way of providing for aged and deserving persons. Possibly in some districts boarding out would be more suitable than the apartments previously suggested. The privilege ward, which was alluded to to-day and yesterday, that might be a good arrangement. In one union I know they had married quarters for old people, and during five years only one applicant; old folk don't like it; they prefer a general mixing with the people.

596. A sort of sensible life?—Yes; as I don't think it would be worth while going to any expense. (A.) In connection with expense, it is well to state that there are societies which board out persons, notably Protestant Orphan Societies; these children are not brought up as paupers. Few of these have ever graduated to "the union" or the "gaol"; on an average the up-keep of these children until they become self-sustaining is 210s. per annum. Yet, I noted quite recently that the Clerk of the North Dublin Union told the Board the cost per head of the Protestant children at Calra was £12 10s. 4d. A large sum is expended for creating paupers. In most counties Protestant orphans are kept mostly boarded out by a private society.

597. That is what you think the result, not the object of course?—It is the result; it seems to be the object, so long as you insist on children in poorhouses. There was some difficulty made yesterday by Miss Bradshaw. She said it would be difficult to board out children when they came to 32s. I don't know any union where there are so many to be provided for, but there is a difficulty over where there is a smaller number. In the South of Ireland we find very few respectable houses will take these children—they say once they have been in the house they are perfectly incorrigible. I once got a very nice little girl, about twelve years of age, into a very respectable married family; the head of it was a carpenter, he had three little children, averaging from seven down, who were going to school, they lived some distance from the school, the children were too young to go through the town, and the mother asked me if I could get her an older girl who would take her and let her go to school with the children, so she took this little girl, a very interesting child. I went up to see how the child was going on and I found the mistress of the house in a perfect rage—she said the child was quite useless, and a fool. "What has she done?" "This morning I was rather late getting my children ready for school, and I told her to get ready the breakfast table. When I came down I found the loaf in the middle of the table, no knife, no spoons, no forks, or anything else. I asked why she had not got the breakfast ready. She said she had." The child had never seen a cup or saucer in the workhouse; she had never seen a knife or a tablecloth; she brought a put on the black table for them in junks; she thought the loaf of bread was the breakfast. You cannot expect people who are bred to teach children so entirely ignorant.

June 26, 1903.

Miss A. M.
Kerry.

685. Would families be more likely to take them at three years old?—No, because that is additional labour on them; you would have to pay very highly for that in the country.

687. At all events they would have the training of them?—Somebody here said they wanted to put out the infants to nurse with respectable farmers; I do not, from my knowledge of farmers, at least in the South of Ireland, think you would get any respectable farmer's wife to take an infant from the workhouse unless you paid her something quite beyond the ordinary amount.

688. Made the child a paying guest?—Yes, because they have more to do for them, and you must remember a great many of these farm-houses are more or less limited in room and accommodation, they have their own families. (c.) I would, however, urge that all children be boarded out. If this is impossible a school in each county should be provided for workhouse children, to which all children, even those who have parents in the workhouse, should be sent. It is ruinous to the children, the way, in slack times, families come to the house, and go out, to return again in a month's time; this brings up the child to vagrant life. (d.) Workhouse schools are costly, and workhouse education a decided disadvantage to children. By the report of the School Inspector for 1900, the last one I have had the opportunity of examining, I find the following figures given. Number:—

37 Ulster, ...	812 pupils, ...	Attendance 567
19 Munster, ...	1,592 „ ...	1,340
36 Leinster, ...	1,464 „ ...	1,262
23 Connaught, ...	524 „ ...	443
120 Schools	4,422 pupils, ...	Attendance 3,737.

For these schools there are 218 lay teachers; some of these are uneducated.

689. How many?—I don't know. It was not given in the report.

690. I would suggest two as the answer!—There are some antiquated specimens in some unions. The average pay is £20 a head, £4,250 per annum. They are housed and have salaries, or a higher salary in lieu thereof, at least £2,000 per annum more. That is a charge on the country of £5,250 for teaching 3,737 pauper children in a way that hampers these children for all their lives. That amount of money would provide them with much better teaching outside.

691. You have only 194 children in workhouses in Kerry; there ought not to be much difficulty in boarding out 194 children in such a large county?—No, there is not in the rural districts.

692. Do you think you would find much difficulty in boarding these children out?—No. I don't think I would. (c.) And this is not all the cost, as, in twenty other workhouses there are nuns teaching who, of course, are paid, I suppose, at a similar rate.

693. It is a much lower rate?—This would be, at least, another £300, a total of £7,550 mis-spent money on a very injurious form of education—that is to say for pauperising the growing generation. If there is no other arrangement made, all workhouse children should be sent to the nearest national school, and so reduce this expense. There would be no difficulty about this. Take Kerry, the highest number of children is in Tralee Union; they are thirty-seven. Cahersiveen has only three.

694. There are fifty in Killybeg and fifty-five in Tralee at present?—I took this from the report of a year or two ago.

In the whole six unions in Kerry children are given as 123. For these there must be at least nine or ten teachers, as I know there is in Tralee Union a master, mistress, and an assistant, at a cost of £45, £35, and £25, which includes retentions.

IV.—There is an alternative to poorhouses—that is a re-arrangement of "out-door" relief, which would be practicable, but on this point there is an alarming example. This system was practised in England before 1840. It became a great abuse. Whole villages lived, married, and reared families as paupers, refusing to work, while they drew from one to two pounds per week as paupers, and could only obtain one pound a week for labour. I could have given you if I had time a very notable instance of that.

695. We know these cases; they are a little bit of ancient history?—I have known the Poor Law system from the very first. I was at the opening of our own union in Kerry in 1843, and I have been interested in it ever since, so I have some knowledge of it.

696. And now you want to be in at the death?—I want to see the end of it. (c.) Many persons think divisional chargeability checks extravagance in relief. Personally, I believe the union, but under the new scheme here shadowed the remedy should be changed. We all know the largest number of paupers are in big towns. When labour is scarce in the country, men flock to town. It is often impossible to locate some paupers to a division. Sometimes they do not know themselves where they belong to. I heard an applicant for admission to the house, who returned on four occasions within a few months, giving each time a different division as his birth-place, the Guardian for the division named always repudiating him; the man finally insisted that he was born in the last place where he had worked.

V. Hospital accommodation is a very important matter. The number of existing union hospitals might be increased, and certainly existing accommodation should be amplified, and arrangements made for a paying ward in each district. I strongly object to sending a man to pay because he is not a pauper when he is placed in a bed side by side with a pauper; the treatment, of course, must be the same, but it perpetuates a man when he comes out of hospital to have it said of him that he lay in the same ward with so-and-so, who is a pauper.

697. Do you really think that people who go into the sick wards of the workhouse are classed as paupers when they come out?—They are. I have known people when urged to go in say: "I won't go; I would be a pauper ever afterwards." They won't go in. "I will be honest outside." It is hardly fair to charge persons who are able to pay a little—noisy policemen—when they are placed side by side with the pauper who is treated free. They charge policemen more than what I call the actual charge. I think it was life, that is above the actual hospital charge; the police rebuked; they said they were always willing to pay the actual cost, but unless they had a ward separated from the paupers, they objected to pay above the actual cost, and they were perfectly right. Many more poor persons would avail themselves of these hospitals and gladly pay from 6s. to 10s., if there were a special paying ward. The actual cost per head is from 4s. to 6s. in hospital, so that recipients would gain by such an alteration. (a.) Fewer hospitals must, for sanitary reasons, be separate institutions. I do not know that they need to be increased. (b.) I believe, however, that an isolation hospital, which need not be a large or expensive place, would be very useful in large towns and seaports; in fact, it is essential in seaports. (c.) County infirmaries are most useful. They are in large towns, where many doctors are available for consultation in critical cases. Infectious cases are not admitted; accidents and exceptional ailments are here kept under observation. Here paying patients can have separate accommodation. I judge from my own infirmary. Most infirmaries receive their support from old donations, that is, donations they got years and years ago—subscriptions and rates—therefore, there may be a difficulty in putting them on a similar footing to district hospitals.

698. Do you happen to know how the subscriptions are at present for your county infirmary?—Very small. I don't think of late years that there have been very large subscriptions to it.

699. Since the Government lost the privilege of attending under the Act of 1861?—Yes, and before they ceased subscribing very much. And another thing, we have too many committees, I think, at present. There is an infirmary committee under the County Council; also the poorhouse, and the dispensary under the Board of Guardians.

700. There is no dispensary committee now?—No; the Board is the dispensary committee, and there is the fever hospital committee. I don't see why they should not all be under the same committee; it would save a great deal of confusion.

701. Have all hospitals under the one managing body?—Under the one body; it would make a very great saving of economy and friction, but I believe there are these numbers of Boards because the County Council thought they would please a number of persons by putting them on.

702. Under the law there had to be this number—I was not aware of that, but I think they ought to be amalgamated. There has been some idea in some places of closing up infirmaries. I don't think they should be closed up, for persons from all parts of the county are admitted as patients. (d.) With regard to Poor Relief generally, doctors should be better paid. In country places it is impossible that doctors give full time and thought to the poor for the miserable salary they receive. I recently noted an advertisement for a dispensary doctor at £50 per annum. It was a wild, country district, which would require two horses, and all a man's time, if properly worked. A doctor is expected to work at all hours of the day or night, as required. No tradesman would give eight hours a day for the £50 offered to this professional gentleman, who expended somewhere about £1,000 to qualify for the position offered.

703. Did he take it at the £50?—I don't know. There is rather a funny story about that that might amuse you. It was advertised, but not taken up, in the country, but taken by a Dublin gentleman, who accepted it, but I believe he never was able to act in his scientific papers, and there is no appointment made yet. Outdoor sick relief should be more generously given than it is. District nurses should be appointed, and a lady inspector, for all places where women and children are under public bodies. Sick out-door relief is most abominable. I could give you a case where there is a wretched widowed mother with four children; each child full of disease of constitutional description, and unless that woman goes into the workhouse, they won't take her children. She gets no help from outdoor relief, and how they live I don't know. She was with me last week. I have been helping her from various private charities. I said: "I see nothing but the workhouse for you," so I suppose she has gone—the woman and her four children. Tramps and such like cannot be refused shelter. Tramps generally frequent certain localities. They should be housed separately from other classes, and would require small accommodation. The old-fashioned belief that treatment would suffice for these. I am very sorry to say in our town they have done away with the bridewell; it would be a splendid place for putting tramps at night.

704. You have not many tramps in Kerry?—No, I think the suggestion that the police should look after them is very feasible. There are no doubt difficulties in such a reformation of our Poor Law system. Year by year, for sixty years, alterations and improvements have been introduced. Repudiation has been incessantly increased without securing sufficient advantage. We have been patching the old garment, trying to make it do; for the public good, it is high time we did away with the old system and remodelled our poor relief, fashioning it in accordance with modern ideas and requirements. If I may tell a little story:—It is about 100 years ago, not much more, since the first poor laws in Ireland were established from the Poor Office in Dublin to the country. They went then by a man and a horse. He had to be loaded with letters, and he was only allowed to ride at the rate of three miles an hour, on pain of death for fear of killing the horse.

This is in the Irish statistics. Postboys rode laden with letters, which were charged 1s. a piece. Well, we send millions of letters now where one went then, and we send them at one penny, but I doubt whether we could have sent them if we had loaded them on a man and horse, and only let him go three miles an hour.

705. No, they readjusted the system?—Why should we not readjust the Poor Law? No doubt, at the first, Guardians will be adverse to the proposed changes. It will interfere with their patronage; they will no longer have the power of putting Tom, Dick, and Harry into a post at the ratepayers' expense. Now, curious to say, the public generally, and some Guardians, cherish the fond belief that public posts are not a burden on themselves. They vaguely fancy salaries paid to officials, and "Government money," especially, comes as manna from heaven. Few realise that all public funds, no matter how they are dissipated, come, in the first instance, from the pockets of the people. Therefore, all public economies save their own money; money so saved can be individually expended in a more remunerative manner, gradually increasing individual welfare and the country's prosperity. As for the children in the large centres, where there are 700, as Miss Buchanan said, they must go to schools; you could not boot them out. Wherever possible, existing industrial schools should be turned into day schools and made available for all classes of rural children. I think technical schools and workhouse schools should be worked under the one control. The obligations exacted from workhouses at their commencement, included training and apprenticeship to trades, but trades unions interfered with these.

706. Are you quite sure you are right about any obligation under the existing Poor Law to apprentice?—I think we had.

707. Only to send boys to sea?—No; perhaps not to apprentice, but you train them; they were supposed to be trained. If you look at the old Poor Law you will see it.

708. I saw that in your paper, and I looked it up—it is confined to the sea?—That is a mistake of mine; one cannot be always right. In recent years we have discussions about trade, and the trades unions all stopped, and that makes a very great difficulty, which people don't realise, in workhouse training, and I think we will find a little by-and-by in the technical training for the same reason. They are teaching a great deal of carpentry, the carpenters are getting their backs up, and they will not let outside boys into the trade. I was rather amused to hear—that is Dr. Latham who said it—he did not approve of girls except they were trained in mud ovens, because they made the best wives. I cannot say I agree with that. I think the better you bring up your girls, the higher education and the higher ideas you give them, the better wives they make, even for the poor man. But there is a great difficulty in training our girls under the present conditions in Ireland, now that the gentry have to reduce their establishments. At one time we kept thirteen servants; we keep one now. We cannot train girls; we cannot afford the time. Housekeepers want too much done now, and must have regularity, so no respectable house will take a girl to train.

Rev. E. T. Crockett examined.

Rev. E. T. Crockett.

709. I have very little to say, but as I am in connection with Mountjoy Prison I have a number of individual cases that I thought I would like to mention. A woman I visited in prison had been convicted sixty times of all kinds of crimes, and was a very bad worker in every way. I went one day to visit a decent woman in the workhouse, and found her and the woman mentioned in back side by side. I have had complaints from the respectable poor of the dreadful language and frightful conversation they hear in the union hospitals. I would advocate some method of classification by character. And I would keep in one class any woman who lived as a prostitute; they are all known to the police, and it would be very easy to discover that, and any who had been convicted and imprisoned. The prostitute class being confined to a certain district well recognised and well known, by a very short inquiry it could be found out whether they belonged to that class or not, and also anybody who had been convicted and in prison. I could give names in the case I have already mentioned, and in other similar cases. There is another woman convicted 300 times; she has been in the workhouse hospital in Dublin mixed up with the respectable poor. The contamination is terrible when these women are put next young girls, which cannot be avoided, when women of all classes are herded together in the same hospital.

710. Chairman.—It seems exceedingly bad management—I can tell an actual case of one of these women; I saw it myself.

711. Any compassionate person ought to be able to keep a woman of that class away?—They don't always recognise them at first. I do say it was not known in the case I first referred to what this woman's character was, and under present arrangements such persons are only known by their conversation. This woman had come from a better social position, and appeared to be all right, and in the hospital was not known. Another case I have known was that of a woman convicted about thirty times—I found her a wardmaid in the hospital, attending and bringing food to, and giving a considerable amount of medicine over, the patients in the ward. The next class of which I should like to speak are the respectable aged poor. One case in point—I went to see a poor old woman. There was no chair at that time in the ward; she could hardly stand; she was sitting on the iron bed, the mistress of which was turned back. She had fallen and blackened her eye; there was nothing for her to do all day; she was hardly able to mind herself. I made a row about it, and got her sent into the infirm ward. I managed to get an inquiry made into the circumstances of the case, but people very little better than she are often kept in these wards in great discomfort, who have been decent and respectable all their days. I have had the case of epileptics brought very strongly before me. I went to visit the ward. It is in a most awful condition; they have nothing but a narrow yard to exercise in, with high walls. I know the case of an epileptic who is sensible at times, and the mother is utterly unable to support him, and in dreadful poverty. He is very violent at times, but she cannot bear to send him there, it is such a dreadful place, and the whole family are suffering. I think the institutions of the other children are becoming affected by association with this epileptic. Then another class that comes largely under my observation are the vagrant class, and in Dublin a large number of these are not admitted into the union if they are known; this master refuses them admission.

June 26, 1902.
Rev. E. T.
Crosier.

711. They go to the shelter?—They are not admitted to the shelter—the habitual class—and they get into an absolute state of despair; they cannot get into the union, and if they are in the streets after 12 o'clock, they are arrested as vagrants, or for loitering. I know men in prison whom I am trying to lift up; they go out and don't get the money for their bed some night, and then they are arrested and put in prison again for months without any crime at all, but simply found wandering. I don't suggest that all these cases should be admitted to the union, but some arrangement should be made to make the place for vagrants of such a nature as will deter the wandering, but still will admit those who really want shelter.

712. Can they not go into the night asylums?—The free night asylums, as far as I know, will only keep persons for a time, and they are refused admission.

713. They are not very strict?—I know it is the case that they are sent away from the night asylums after a certain time. They have been trying to get work and have not succeeded. They come on a certain night; they are refused everywhere, and then if left in the streets they are arrested. I think a system could be found to relieve this vagrant class which would make it unpleasant for them, but still that none should be excluded. One suggestion is that before getting food they should break a certain number of stones and throw them out of a window with a grating work takes of the size to which the stones should be broken. The other class I would refer to is those men who are sent to prison for cruelty to a wife or children; the man is given six months' imprisonment; what is to happen to the wife? There is a man at present—he is not a bad sort of man—he was drunk and ill-treated his wife and children. He was arrested, and given six months' imprisonment. The wife was a most respectable woman, and the children very nicely brought up. They cannot get outdoor relief, and the whole family will be broken up, and she and her children have to go into the union. It will stamp them for life; so sending the man to prison is the ruin of the wife and family. I think that is a distinct case where outdoor relief should be given. Is it not a case that ought to have some consideration, especially where the woman has been cruelly treated by the man, and then she is more cruelly treated, because she has nothing in the world to do but go into the union?

Mrs. HASLAN continued.

Mrs. Haslan.

714. CHAIRMAN.—It is a long time since you have taken up Poor Law administration?—Yes, for nearly thirty years I have been interested in Poor Law administration, what I visited very frequently both the North and South Dublin Unions as an outsider, and I have seen the most wonderful improvement in these two workhouses in the thirty years. I know the late mistress of the South Dublin Union intimately; and I have taken many a party through the South Dublin Union; and from the first time I went there, before Miss Amner's time, I knew what it was, and I also know what the North Dublin Union was before the changes there. Since 1896 I have visited over twenty workhouses in England and Ireland, including some of the largest in London, Birmingham, Manchester, &c. It was a perfect revelation to me when I crossed the Channel and visited the Holyhead workhouse, to see the children going to school without any caretaker, not dressed as our children are; and the swings and the merry-go-rounds for the children took my heart; and I did it very best, with Lady Thompson and one or two other ladies, to get something of the kind into the South Dublin Union. I don't know whether they have them in the North Dublin Union. I thought it was a pity to see the children turned out into the playground, where they had nothing to play with, and I was the means of getting skipping ropes and other things for them. I have visited several large workhouses in London. I have been in six or eight. The last time I went over I was commissioned by Miss Welgely to look into the question of the bread, as she felt there was a great waste in the South Dublin Union. I was in Kettering and different workhouses, looking into the question of the bread, and I found they did not give out all the bread at once; they gave out 4 oz. in the first instance. I asked the master to weigh 4 oz. for me, and he did so. I found in the Marylebone Workhouse that they made bread of the 4 oz. and hand them round, and when the 4 oz. was nearly finished, the master said: "Anyone who wants more bread, kindly stand up." And he sent down 2 oz. more. I don't remember the saying that the master of the Marylebone Workhouse told me there was in the bread from the adoption of that, and also, of course, with the sick people; and it was served in a nicer way than the crumbs that are handed out here. I consider that the lady Guardians are absolutely necessary in the dietary, cooking, clothing, nursing, and children's departments. Ladies committees are not sufficient in themselves; they have not jurisdiction; they are very useful in their proper place.

715. Is that for boarded-out children?—Yes, in every way that committees are allowed. I know that some hold it is very well to have these committees in places where there are no women Guardians. I suppose it is better than nothing, but when possible they should be under the lady Guardians. I want them very much to visit the recipients of outdoor relief. That was brought before me in Holyhead. The lady Guardian who took me round said that when she was first appointed, after she got to know the workhouse, she visited every recipient of out-door relief on her ward, and was the means of effecting a great many improvements. Some were not getting enough; others too much; and others should not be getting it at all; and the gentleman Guardians said:—"Oh, Mrs. —, won't you visit for us?" She answered: "You should do it yourselves"; and after a while she got all the Guardians to visit the recipients of outdoor relief. There is a lady that I was interested in getting in here in Dublin, and she said to me: "What do you want me to do?" One of the things I want you to do first," I said, "is to visit every recipient of outdoor relief in your ward." She has done some of it, but not all. But I do consider we want a great many more women Guardians, and they ought to take up this question of outdoor relief; there would be a great saving, and certainly more kindness to the poor. Imagine the case I knew of an old woman; three leaves of bread and a quart of milk were given her one day in the week. Of course she sold two of the leaves of bread. No woman would have sanctioned such a thing as that. Lady Guardians are required in every one of our 189 unions in Ireland; and my proposal is that where no women are elected, the Guardians might be empowered to co-opt a certain number. I know some hold very strongly that there ought to be as many women Guardians as men. I don't think I would go quite as far as that. I think if we had perhaps one-third women. The men are absolutely necessary, and I hope in time that the women will be able to educate the men to look after things a little better than they have been doing.

716. I think they are getting better?—They could not but be better under the ladies. As regards the children, I would have them out of the workhouse altogether, and they should attend the National school. What delighted me in Helyhead, the matron was so pleased to show me the Sunday hats and coats the children wore. The matron was very much astonished when I said: "Of course you take these children to school." She was quite insulted. "They are very well able to take care of themselves." In Carnarvon I put the same question. "Of course you see the children safe to school." "I should not think of such a thing; we would not insult our children by going after them in that way; we trust them." Boarding out where possible. I would have a special cottage home for the mixed-outs children near the workhouse. I visited Kettering, Croydon, Birmingham, and Manchester cottage homes. I mentioned before what I consider the ideal cottage home that I visited three or four times, three miles out of Kettering, where all the children, about thirty, are under the care of a foster father and mother. They have an old farmhouse and garden and a little bit of ground; the coach-house is given to the children to play in, and they are allowed to have pigeons-pigeons, guinea-pigs, or anything they wish. They have fowl. The children work in the garden, and, above all, they have pigs; and the children are delighted to look after the pigs, the fowl, and the garden. There is no one to help but the foster father and mother, and one woman under the mother, for these thirty children. The children do up the rooms in the morning, help a bit in the cooking, and help the foster mother to make their own clothes. I think they buy most of the things in the village, and some things may be sent from the workhouse at Kettering, but they have no children in the workhouse at Kettering over two years of age. They are all out; it is a little more expensive. They go to the Board school; and the foster-father was very proud each time to take me to the Board school and see them all, and try and get me to guess "Which are my children." I could not tell, except a couple of them, and when he asked the schoolmaster: "Would you kindly allow my children to stand up for this lady to see," they did, and with a couple of exceptions, I would not have known them from the other children. I think we could very well have the "ins-and-outs" taken care of. I asked that question in Croydon. I was so pleased with the homes I visited there; they have several more cottage homes than they had. I asked what was the cost per head. They said 10s., including matron and principal of the money.

717. Do you know anything about the after-care of these children in the cottage homes?—Well, I found that the farmers are very glad to get the boys and girls as servants. They are kept there with the foster-parents until they are fourteen or fifteen. They have to make the beds and wash the floors and the clothes. But they never have any difficulty in getting situations. Kettering is a great manufacturing place for shoes. It is very hard to get servants, and they are very glad to get these girls.

718. All these children are absorbed into the population, and don't come back as paupers?—No; at Birmingham they have fourteen cottage homes. I went out with Miss Cadbury. One is a hospital, another is a school. I think it is a pity they don't mix with the outside children, but they don't. They are in homes of about twenty-five. When I was there they were about trying to start another home, where girls could be trained for a more high-class service if possible. I don't know how they were going to do it. They had it in their minds to do it. They thought perhaps they could get better situations for them if they kept them a year longer and trained them for servants. I said again in Croydon, where do the children, the "ins-and-outs," go when they first come in. They are sent from the home to the homes as soon as possible. "How often do they see their parents?" "Monthly."

719. Are they brought to see their parents, or do the parents go to see them?—I did not ask that question. "What is about the average time that these 'ins-and-outs' remain in the homes?" "From one or two days to some months." I saw the place which they have for the old married couples, and I took a great fancy to it. A nice room and a table with basin on it, a parcel for themselves, and magazines and books on the table. They all had their rooms where they slept, a kitchen in which to wet their tea; but they got tired of it, and now there are no married couples in it.

720. Were there any at any time?—Yes, I saw them. "Do they make their own tea, and eat their own bread and butter?" "Yes, when they have any." "Are their dinners sent from the house?" "Yes." "Do they appreciate these comforts?" "No." I certainly should like to see better classification, and the privilege wards that Miss Buckman alluded to, and greater comforts for the aged and infirm, and for the married couples, in spite of the evidence I saw after giving. In some of the London workhouses I found several married couples, and one of the lady Guardians told me that an old man and woman that had been in the workhouse for years went out and got married and came back in order to get into the married quarters. I have nearly finished now; but I want to state emphatically the necessity for women inspectors, an adequate number of women inspectors for workhouses, and women nurse inspectors of the hospitals, and of the home for nurses, which I should hope may be established in connection with one of the workhouses here; and then we should have some women doctors, wherever a second doctor for I put the men first—wherever a second doctor is required, it should be a woman evident. In the South Dublin Union there ought to be a resident women doctor, and in the North Dublin Union, and in all large unions where two are required; and I should like to say that the matron ought to be brought more forward at the Boards, and more recognized to be on an equality with the master. I know there is a lady Guardian present who feels on that point very strongly, and mentioned it to me some time since. As regards women Guardians, when Mr. Johnston got the Act through, we had two in 1896; we had twelve in 1897; we had twenty-one in 1898; in 1899 we had eighty elected and twenty co-opted; and in 1902, we had about eighty elected and ten co-opted, or perhaps rather more. I am very glad that there has been a lady co-opted in the South Dublin Union; only by a majority of one, but still it is well to get that, on last Wednesday. She was a lady who had been a Guardian, but was not re-elected. I think unless you have any questions to ask me, that these are pretty much the points I wanted to bring out.

721. You know that there are a couple of lady doctors in workhouses?—Oh, yes, there is one in Lurgan.

722. And in Edinburg?—We tried very hard to get one in the South Dublin Union.

723. You had a candidate?—We had; she had been for five years at Mullingar, at the district asylum, and was most efficient.

Mrs. WYSE-POWER, P.L.C., examined.

Mrs. Wyse-Power.

724. CHAIRMAN.—As regards the amalgamation of unions, you think a good many might be amalgamated, but you would keep on the hospitals?—I would keep on the hospitals for the sick part of such a character as would meet the requirements of infectious disease.

725. Only infectious?—Yes; I would strongly urge that all surgical cases be brought to the infirmaries of the county towns, and if they have properly-constructed sanitariums attached to these district hospitals, that could be very easily carried out.

726. In some counties that would be very difficult, where the distances are long?—Are there not railways?

727. You cannot send surgical cases by railway; you could not send a broken leg by railway?—In any place where it was feasible, because I think in the surgical hospitals there have more advantages than they would get in any union hospitals. Certainly, in the case of towns and cities, all these cases should go to surgical hospitals. I believe the charge in the Richmond Hospital is 14s. a week for surgical cases. Of course, that is in excess of the cost of patients in any union, but then the immense advantage the patient gets, and how very much sooner he may be able to get about, perhaps it would not be so much; it might be economy in the end.

728. There is nothing more you think of saying in that respect. You would keep the existing hospital accommodation, or you would have hospital accommodation; where you break up a workhouse you would not diminish the number of hospitals?—I would not diminish the number of hospitals, but I would have them of such a nature that perhaps the cost of maintenance would not be very great.

June 16, 1903.
Mrs. Wyse-
Power.

729. And you would have pay wards, I understand?
—Yes, I would have pay wards, and wherever it was possible to send patients to other hospitals, I would urge that to be done.

730. You have mentioned something about hospital accommodation at the North Dublin Union being insufficient?—Before I come to that I would like to say something arising out of the evidence I heard here to-day about pauper nursing in the North Dublin Union.

731. As far as we can, we would like the evidence to be general?—I think this evidence would be general. I think it is a general thing I am going to say. Where there are trained nurses there are no paid wardmaids, at all events, in the North Dublin Union, and there are 551 sick people there at present. There are no paid wardmaids in the wards where there are trained nurses and nuns; they are pauper wardmaids and assist in the distribution of the food.

732. Dr. Brogan.—It does not apply to a good many workhouses in the country?—It applies to 601 sick people I know, and they certainly carry food from the nurses to the beds. I saw them yesterday. There is a traffic in food—we know that—and cups of tea at one penny a head, and it is a terrible scandal. I think in connection with that a lady inspector would do very good work. I think she would be able to find out perhaps a little more than a man.

733. It is the remedy we want to get at?—The impression prevailed, after the evidence of Dr. Maguire, that nothing like this occurred with the pauper nurses, that they only scrubbed the floors. I know it is the contrary, in our union, at all events.

734. CHAIRMAN.—The fact is that in very few unions indeed do the inmates discharge any duties that could be called nursing duties?—I am very glad to know that. I wish it was general. I wish there was a general order.

735. There is an order made?—I am very glad to know that, too.

736. It was an order made in 1897?—Well, it is not carried out in the North Dublin Union.

737. Now, as regards the convalescents of the sick poor?—You are not allowing me to touch the hospital accommodation in North Dublin Union.

738. It is more a local matter; later on you will have an opportunity, because there will be a definite inquiry into the Dublin hospitals?—The convalescence of the sick poor is the principal thing that struck me since I became a Guardian. Attending the Admission Board on Monday morning, I found there a very large proportion of people discharged from the hospital—straight out of the hospital—on the previous Saturday evening. All that time their diet was that of the able-bodied—dry bread for breakfast, etc.—and their sleeping accommodation for two nights the wooden sheds. That has gone on to such an extent that the Guardians have unanimously passed a resolution that we hope will correct this state of things. It is:—“That when a patient is discharged from hospital by the doctor the patient be immediately sent to the resident doctor with a view to putting the convalescent on suitable diet and in a suitable portion of the house.”

739. Could not all that be done at present?—But think of the terrible wrong that has been going on until that resolution was passed, and it probably has been going on in every union in Ireland, and we had a great wrangle until that was passed. I think if we had some place to put the convalescents—

740. Or if you got the children and lunatics out of the workhouse?—I think if we got the convalescents into a convalescent home; some place where they could be sent when out of the doctor's hands, but where they could get nourishment and treatment suitable to their condition.

741. It is very difficult now in Dublin to get a patient into a convalescent home?—Most of the hospitals have it. I suppose they purchased their sites.

742. Hardly any of the workhouse patients go to a convalescent home. Do you know whether any of them do?—None go, because each hospital has its convalescent home.

743. There are some general?—There are some general, but then the Guardians would not send them there at all, but it is a very odd thing to find sick people put on dry bread and to sleep in the sheds.

744. As regards consumptive patients?—I think if there is an amalgamation it would be a very desirable thing that I heard suggested, a sanatorium, for although there is in each hospital one ward for consumptives it is not a ward suitable for their treatment.

745. A sufficient number of sanatoria?—Yes, a sufficient number would meet that; that, of course, too, would relieve congestion whenever it occurs.

746. There are a large number of consumptive patients?—A very large number. There is one thing I would like to say a word about, the boarded-out children. I heard Dr. Maguire and Lord Montagu give evidence in favour of keeping the children in the union until two years old. As a Guardian, a woman, and a mother, I pled that the children be sent out as soon as possible. I have lived in the country, and the death-rate in the country of infants is very low, but the death-rate in the unions is appalling, and I think if the children were put out with young women—young married women, who had successfully reared a child or two of their own—the children would be perfectly safe.

747. It seems reasonable?—It is really awful to keep them in the unions; it is said they die from breathing the one air; I don't know what they die from.

748. Would you put them out very young?—I would get them out as soon as I could get a nurse to take them. The difficulty is to find a nurse to take them.

749. Would you keep them until the bottle stage?—I would not; they are fed in the unions on the most scientific principles, and they die.

750. Dr. Brogan.—Did you inquire into the cases you send out?—I have been fifteen months in the union, and there was only one death of a baby boarded out in that time. I would not like to tell you the number that died in the union during the corresponding period.

MISS ROWAN further examined.

Miss Rowan.

I had not said anything about the dietary in the workhouse, which is very extravagant in this way. The very best materials are provided by the Guardians generally, but they are not used to the best advantage, because the cooks are entirely inefficient. For instance, I have known tea made in a cauldron in the morning and ladled out to the poor; then the dinner put in. Soup—any cook knows it requires twenty-four hours to make decent soup—that soup is ladled out at 1 o'clock. The poor get hot water and the pigs get the food. The cooking is not what it ought to be, and therefore good materials are wasted. Bread is also wasted. But it is easy to arrange that where you have the bread baked, as it now very often is, in the house; you can get your proportions made small and replenish them, as Mrs. Haslam described they do in England, and it has been done in one or two places.

751. In Limerick?—In Tralee, when I was a Guardian, with very great persuasion, I got them to build a bakery, and in the year they built it they saved close on £100 in bread alone, because the waste was not so great. What attracted me to it was seeing the bread put on the table; they have no knives; they tear off what they want and throw the remnants on the floor. I suggested it should be divided, and the remnants of bread not used should be used next day for various dishes, puddings, &c. The Local Government Board told us to arrange a dietary, which we did, but it was impossible to put it in force unless we got a new cook. The cook could not do it, but at that very time the cook required an assistant. It was advertised, and the cooks that came up were five men, aged between sixty and seventy, but nobody asked them if they had ever cooked, and a gentleman was finally appointed—a very nice looking old man. I asked the chairman: “Would you allow me to congratulate him, and ask him some questions?” The Chairman said, “Certainly.” “Will you tell me, sir, how have you employed yourself during your life?” “When I was young I was a stone-mason, but I am past my work many a year, and I thought this would be a nice easy job.” “Did you ever cook for yourself?” “No, I lived with my neighbours.” “Do you know how to boil potatoes?” “No.” “Did you ever make mince-ahoy?” “No.” And that is the cook who got the appointment. I advised that they should get a trained cook to teach in the house; it would have cost something for six months' training, but then they would have had their cooking corrected. Until we get a cook we cannot save ration, and I am perfectly certain, from my knowledge of house-keeping, that if the food was properly cooked, we would save one-half of the food of the people, and get them better fed.

752. How is the old man getting on now?—I don't know, for I have not been there lately, but I know if the same old gentleman and assistant cook are still cooking, the soup is made in the same fashion; but how are they to make it better without better appliances; there are only three children; they must put the breakfast in, and then the dinner in, and then the tea, which is very grossly and undrinkable. June 24, 1923

Miss Rowan.

Miss WATKIN examined.

Would it be possible to make the elections of officers or officials connected with the workhouse independent of the Boards of Guardians, because if it were that would go to the root of the matter?

753. CHAIRMAN.—My colleague, Mr. Murnaghan, who is chairman of a Board of Guardians, is rather taken aback by that question.—Your poster's experience of mine is that there is a total disregard of the fitness of a person for any position; it is a mere question of interest. Even with regard to the cooking, we had an assistant cook appointed some months ago at a certain union, and I understood that he was in a large establishment not very far from Dublin, where he was principally in attendance upon men, and could blacken their shoes and clean knives, and because a great deal of food was supposed to be cooked in the establishment, the mere looking at it was to qualify him as a cook, and he was appointed. He had been valet in one house and butler in another, but as for knowledge of cookery, he did not even present any credentials.

754. Was there an objection made to his appointment?—It was put to the vote, but he had made a successful canvass, and he was elected. In another department the female cook had been employed in a drapery establishment, but not as cook. It would be the greatest matter and it would have one effect, the wording out of a number of Guardians whose chief interest seems to be to come and champion certain candidates for posts.

755. Was there a well-qualified candidate on these occasions?—Yes, far better qualified. In other departments, in the same way; with regard to an agricultural instructor, or a steward, even those with very good testimonials were set aside, and persons who had been publicans, clerks, or grocers' assistants were in the running, and were very largely patronised and voted for.

CHAIRMAN.—Our next sitting will be in Derry, sometime early in August. We won't be back in Dublin for some time.

The sitting terminated.

Aug. 11, 1903

THIRD PUBLIC SITTING—TUESDAY, AUGUST 11TH, 1903.

At the Courthouse, Londonderry.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. COEY RIDGER.

CHAIRMAN.—Gentlemen, the main object of this Commission is to inquire and report whether any, and what, administrative and financial changes are desirable, in order to secure a more economical system under the Poor Laws for the relief of the sick, the insane, and all classes of destitute poor in Ireland, without impairing efficiency of administration. Various questions are involved in such an inquiry—for instance, the classification of Poor Law unions; alteration in the boundaries of various areas; the provision of auxiliary sanatoriums; the better classification of the destitute, infirm, and sick; the boarding-out of children; the methods for dealing with casuals or tramps; the erection of additional hospitals in some localities remote from existing hospitals; the best methods of obtaining payment or contributions from such patients as may be considered able to defray the cost of their treatment either wholly or in part; together with various other questions of interest or importance. Such an inquiry obviously goes to the root of Poor Law administration in this country, and my colleagues and I desire, before we begin to receive evidence, to express a hope that no single question of particular local interest, such as proposed changes of boundaries, will be allowed by the various local bodies and witnesses to obscure, if not shut out, from consideration, the other most important questions to be inquired into. It may perhaps be convenient for some who are now present to know that we do not intend to take evidence bearing directly upon the question of the various union boundaries in Derry, Donegal, and Tyrone until the other branches of the inquiry are finished. We think it best to begin with the official witnesses, and to obtain statistical and other information that will facilitate the subsequent proceedings at this inquiry.

Mr. McCay.—I appear for the Corporation in reference to the boundaries question, and all the parties here are represented by counsel. I would ask you to fix a day for taking that question, if possible, because counsel are brought down here at heavy expense by all parties, and if you could fix a day it would facilitate us.

Mr. William Wilson.—I appear for the County Council of Donegal, and I have counsel also. The counsel would be ready to-morrow morning, if you could see your way to take it up to-morrow, and let them away. There are a number of counsel; there are other interests involved also, in which counsel are coming here.

CHAIRMAN.—We might not be able to say that the other branches of the inquiry would be finished.

Mr. Wilson.—If you would say it would be possible to take it up to-morrow.

CHAIRMAN.—Would it be more convenient to say Thursday?

Mr. Wilson.—We cannot stop them now, they are on their way.

Mr. Ross.—I appear for the Derry Guardians; and the cause of the delay is that counsel amongst themselves arranged they would not go into the matter until to-morrow morning, if it so suited the Court, but they are on their way, and will be here this afternoon. There are a considerable number of counsel engaged in it, and if they are not taken on to-morrow it would be a considerable loss.

Mr. E. McFadden, M.P.—I appear for the Lifford Board of Guardians, and would support the application made by Mr. Wilson, to take it on to-morrow. Counsel are all coming down from Dublin to-day, and it would be very convenient.

Mr. Boyle.—I appear on behalf of the Stranorlar Guardians, and as a matter of fact, I have counsel briefed, and he will be here to-morrow morning; and also the witnesses whom we will have in attendance will be here to-morrow as well, and it would be a great saving of expense if you could see your way to have the case taken to-morrow.

Mr. T. Elliott.—I appear for the Stranorlar Guardians. I have a letter from Mr. Denis Henry saying he arranged with other counsel that it would not be taken up before to-morrow morning; and Mr. Hady and Mr. Clancy would be ready to go on to-morrow morning. I would ask you to take up the case to-morrow also.

CHAIRMAN.—Would it be quite the same to you if we were to tell you after the luncheon interval?

Mr. Wilson.—That will do very well.

Mr. Ross.—Major Scott, chairman of the Derry Board of Guardians, is here, and he would be very anxious to get away, if you think he would not be called to-day; it would be very convenient if you could tell him whether his evidence would be taken to-day.

CHAIRMAN.—Our idea was to take the chairman of the Londonderry Council first, and formal evidence to prove a few things, then take the two specially nominated witnesses, Mr. Hamilton and Mr. Morrison; then to go into the Derry Union evidence. That would mean that after getting the statistical information from the clerk and master, we would reach Major Scott, I should fancy, before luncheon.

Mr. Ross.—I think you would.

Mr. McFadden.—Would you allow me to draw your attention to a matter which, I think, concerns this Commission and the matters you are called upon to investigate. I don't know whether you read the Derry Sentinel or not.

CHAIRMAN.—I never miss it.

Mr. McFadden.—I am also a very careful student of its columns, and coming along in the train this morning I read an article which simply shocked me.

CHAIRMAN.—I think it is unnecessary; I have seen it.

Mr. McFadden.—This is not a court of justice; but if it were I should certainly ask you to bring before you the editor and publisher; they say it is a jerry-mandering scheme, promoted in the interests of one party.

CHAIRMAN.—I saw it.

Mr. McFadden.—I think some expression of opinion should go from the members of the Commission.

CHAIRMAN.—Well, I am not prepared to express an opinion upon that until after luncheon, at all events.

Mr. THOMPSON B. ADAMS examined.

Mr. Thompson B. Adams.

756. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Secretary of the Derry County Council?—Yes, sir. This (pencil) is the report adopted by the meeting. These were the answers arrived at by the County Council at a special meeting.

757. Was it largely attended?—We had only ten members of the County Council present.

758. What is the total number?—Twenty-five.

759. In the first query?—Whether, having regard to the extent, population, necessities of the sick and destitute poor, the Council were asked whether they thought it would be well to dissolve any of the unions; and their answer to the first question is—"In the opinion of the Council, having regard to all the matters referred to in the question, three workhouses are sufficient for the County of Londonderry, and one union should be accordingly dissolved." They did not think it necessary to mention what union that should be.—They thought it better to leave that to the Commission.

768. They did not mean the Derry Union?—They did not.

769. "Whether, in the event of any union or unions being dissolved, and of the workhouse or workhouses thereof being no longer required for Poor Law purposes, such workhouse or workhouses could with advantage be taken over by the County Council for an auxiliary lunatic asylum." And they answer—"In the event of a union being dissolved the Council is of opinion that the workhouse thereof should be used as an auxiliary asylum or a building for accommodating epileptic or mentally deficient patients." If Magherafelt or Limerick was dissolved the opinion of the Council is that that union should be used for harmless imbeciles or epileptics?—Yes; the Council did not contemplate that Magherafelt or Derry Union should be dissolved.

770. Does that would accrue it to Coleraine or Limerick?—I don't like to go into that very closely.

771. Is coming to that conclusion in favour of having a workhouse used as an auxiliary asylum, had the County Council before them any statistical information as to the cost of inmates in lunatic asylums as compared with the estimated cost in the auxiliary asylum?—The chairman of the County Council had evidently gone into the matter very carefully, and gave a lot of statistics to the Council as to the cost. It was from the County Clerk he got his information.

772. Yeaghall?—Yes.

773. And he was comparing that with the cost?—With the cost in the asylum.

774. Had he the figures for the cost in the asylum?—I believe it is something like 9s. a head.

775. Have you the figures, or do you intend to produce any evidence on that?—No; the chairman was not able to come. I don't think any other members of the Council had the same information. He seemed to have gone into it very carefully, and told the Council all he knew about it.

776. The next question was, whether by boarding out workhouse inmates better provision might be made for the classification and treatment of inmates, and "The Council is of opinion that the system of boarding out workhouse children should be continued." Did that mean extended also? Do you know, at present only orphan or deserted children can be boarded out?—What the Council meant was that children should not be kept in the workhouse at all.

777. That is an extension to the fullest extent; and the fourth query was: "Whether, in the event of an amalgamation or combination of unions being carried out, or any other arrangements being made for the relief of the destitute poor, any changes in the law and procedure as to administration and in the shareability of relief, would be desirable?" And the answer was—"In the opinion of the Council it would be desirable to limit the area of shareability of relief to electoral divisions." Do you happen to remember whether that question of shareability of relief referred to all kinds of relief, or only to outdoor relief?—Principally to outdoor relief.

778. They were not so anxious that indoor relief should be an electoral charge?—No; I think it was agreed at early on a consideration of outdoor relief; it was pointed out that in former times, when there was district rating, there was much less outdoor relief given than there is now.

779. I suppose you have not the figures for the outdoor relief of the various unions?—I have not.

780. And the fifth query was—"Whether, having regard to the number, capacity, and situation of the workhouse hospitals, county infirmaries, county fever hospitals, and other hospitals existing in the county, additional accommodation is required for the proper treatment of the sick poor in any union, district, or locality in the county, and if other accommodation seems desirable, how it may be best provided without entailing undue hardship upon the destitute or on the sick poor of the union?" And the answer is—"In the opinion of the Council no additional accommodation of the nature indicated in the query is required in the county; but in the event of the dissolution of any union the infirmary of the workhouse thereof should be utilised as a district hospital." What hospitals have you got in the county altogether, including the Derry Workhouse. You first have a lunatic asylum for the mentally diseased, then the county infirmary?—The county borough infirmary.

781. Then you have a fever hospital?—That belongs to the county borough exclusively.

782. That is Foyle Hill; it is situated in the county?—Yes.

783. Then you have the Union General Infirmary and the Union Fever Hospital. Is there any other hospital in Derry?—There is a hospital in Coleraine.

784. But I mean in the city?—No, I don't think there is.

785. Then in Coleraine you have the union infirmary and the union fever hospital, and which other hospital?—There is a cottage hospital at the Courthouse.

786. How is that maintained—is it a voluntary hospital?—I believe it is.

787. You have in Magherafelt a workhouse infirmary and a fever hospital, and you have in Limerick?—A workhouse hospital.

788. Then there is no hospital in Magilligan?—No.

789. There is no other hospital in the county or county borough?—Not that I am aware of.

790. Can you tell me what populous part of the union is most remote from any hospital accommodation of any part of the county?—Well, I should say some parts of the Magherafelt Union.

791. What part of the Derry Union would be most remote?—There is no place more than ten or twelve miles; I think seven or eight miles would be about as far as there is. I deny in Magherafelt Union it might be thirteen or fifteen miles.

792. Query 6 reads—"Whether any administrative and financial changes are desirable in order to secure a more economical system for the relief generally of the sick, the insane, and all other classes of the poor or destitute, without impairing efficiency of administration?" No answer given to that?—None by the local bodies.

793. Paying wards in hospital is No. 7, and the answer is—"In the opinion of the Council it would be desirable to attach paying wards to hospitals, &c., and persons not destitute and treated in such wards should be required to contribute towards the cost of treatment." Do they mean that additional wards should be built?—I think not; but that certain wards in existing hospitals should be set apart for paying patients.

794. I am afraid that would not be practicable?—I don't think they contemplated that any new wards should be built.

795. In most of the Poor Law hospitals space is not sufficient to put aside pay wards; it would mean an expenditure of money in building; but that is what they meant?—That is what they meant; they did not contemplate any building of new wards.

796. No. 8 reads: "What change, if any, seems to be possible and desirable as regards the treatment of the vagrant poor, generally known as 'tramps' or 'casuals'?" and the answer was, that "In the opinion of the Council the provisions of The Casual Poor Act, 1882, should be extended to Ireland." That is, to permit the people who come in frequently by not allowing them to take their discharge for a certain number of days, in accordance with the number of times they have been in the workhouse?—Yes; the first time for two days, and the next time a week.

797. What is the valuation of the entire county?—£338,584 18s.

798. Does that include the county borough?—It does not.

799. I mean including the county borough?—I have not the valuation of that.

800. Have you got that according to unions or rural districts?—I have it in rural districts and unions:—Coleraine—Rural District, £81,357 5s.; Urban, £20,351 9s.

801. Next?—Limerick—Rural, £25,615 10s.; Urban, £5,506 15s.; Londonderry, No. 1, £32,783 3s.; that is the rural district only—the Derry portion of the Derry Union.

802. Have you got the county borough?—No.

803. Do you happen to be aware of what the valuation is?—No. Magherafelt, £25,450.

804. Have you got the particulars of expenditure on various asylums and hospitals made by the County Council during the last year?—I can get the figures for you in a few minutes. I don't know that the accounts have been audited for the last half-year; I can give you the last two audited accounts.

805. I suppose we shall have some evidence from the infirmary?—I am sure you will from Mr. Stewart.

806. And any evidence from the asylum as regards the comparative cost?—Dr. Hetherington, I dare say, will give you information on that.

Aug. 11, 1905.
Mr. Thompson
B. Adams.

Aug. 11, 1902.
Mr. Thompson
B. Adams.

799. I don't know whether the County Council wish to put forward, in the absence of Colonel Clark, some statement of the figures which made him arrive at the conclusion that an auxiliary lunatic asylum would be more economical and better than an extension of the present asylum. I think some evidence on that point would be desirable.—They have an idea that if they had an auxiliary asylum they would be saved building a block.

800. I suppose you have some evidence to-morrow on that point?—I will communicate with Dr. Hetherington. Here (produced) is the resolution of the County Council as to the union boundaries of Londonderry. I put it in.

Mr. Alexander
Hamilton.

Mr. ALEXANDER HAMILTON examined.

801. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the County Council?—Yes.

802. Did the Council go closely into these various matters in the quinquennial?—Yes, they did; it was discussed fully.

803. And the result was you thought that out of the four unions in the county one ought to go?—Yes, that is what I think.

804. The resolution does not say which one ought to go?—No; they left that to be decided again.

805. I suppose the question was discussed as to whether one union or another ought to be mentioned?—Not very much; there was some reference made to Limerick. The question was, whether there should be three or four unions in the county—principally confined to that.

806. But have you yourself formed any opinion as to which ought to go?—No, I cannot say; I am living pretty near Derry here, at one end.

807. Having regard to the geography of the county do you think one ought to go?—From what I hear of the number of lunatics we thought three should accommodate the county.

808. Not distances; all these considerations?—Distances would be the greatest objection, I believe. There would be an objection in the distances.

809. Would there be more objection in the case of one union than another? Which union, having regard to distances, might best go?—I think it was generally considered among the County Council that Limerick would be the likely one to go—it was the smallest one. But that question was left rather open.

810. The idea of the Council was, that if Limerick, or any other workhouse, were closed for Poor Law purposes, it should be used as an auxiliary lunatic asylum?—Yes.

811. Colonel Clark, the Secretary tells us, gave a great many arguments explaining his view that an auxiliary asylum would be better than an extension of the existing asylum?—Yes, not better; he did not say better, but it would relieve the present congestion that exists in the asylum.

812. Was the question considered whether it would be better to extend the present asylum or to have an auxiliary asylum?—No; that question, the one as against the other, was not considered; at the present time it was considered it would relieve the congestion, until the buildings at Grange could be further proceeded with.

813. As a temporary measure?—Not exactly. Col. Clark, from the figures he brought in, said even when Grange was finished, and the lunatics could be maintained at a lower rate at a place such as he described an auxiliary asylum to be. He suggested that even when the asylum was completed this thing would still be useful.

814. Are works being carried on at present for additions at Grange?—Oh, yes.

815. How far is that from the present lunatic asylum?—There is a block or two there in existence already, and there is a contract for an additional block.

816. How far is that from the present building?—I dare say it would be nearly two miles from the city.

817. Is there an additional resident doctor there?—I am not sure that there is. I don't think it.

818. Those are facts that we will find it necessary, I am afraid, to have in evidence?—I am not on the asylum committee.

819. Is Mr. Morrison on the asylum committee?—I think not.

820. If you could, as members of the County Council, arrange that by to-morrow we should have some evidence on these things it would be useful.—You would require members of the asylum committee to go into the question.

821. Some member or official who could give this evidence?—Well, I will see.

822. Then the next question was about the boarding out of children. And you thought the system of boarding out workhouse children should be continued?—Yes.

823. And Mr. Adams said he thought the view of the Council was that it should be extended so that all workhouse children should be boarded out?—Yes, that is about the idea. It was thought they would be brought up more respectably outside the workhouse.

824. That would require legislation to enable parents and children to be separated. You think that would be wise?—So it was thought.

825. The next thing is whether any changes, financial or administrative, might be made with advantage, as regards chargeability of relief, and the opinion of the Council was that it would be desirable to limit the area of chargeability of relief to electoral divisions, to go back to the old electoral division rating?—That is the idea; it was thought taxation and representation would go better together, having the area of charge limited to electoral divisions.

826. An individual Guardian would have more responsibility, and would be slower to spend money, if it was charged on his own division?—Yes; and besides, if a Council had power to vote away an amount of the rates it might not work out so well: a man from a lower rated division would have the same voting power as a man from a division with a large taxation.

827. You would limit that man's power to his own district?—Yes.

828. Of course, the theory always was that relief should be given by the Board of Guardians as a whole, not by individual Guardians for any particular electoral division?—We wish to save men from being extravagant who do not very much contribute to the rates.

829. To go back to the old divisional chargeability, was that intended for all relief, indoor as well as outdoor?—Yes, I think so. That was my idea.

830. Do you think it would be as necessary in the case of indoor as of outdoor. One person is willing to accept the extreme test of workhouse life as a test of their poverty. Do you think it would be as necessary to make that a local charge as in the case of outdoor relief, where no such test is imposed?—I think it was the idea of the Council to make it for all, as far as I remember.

831. You are not at present, are you, connected with any union?—No.

832. Then the opinion of the Council was that no additional accommodation was necessary for the sick—no further hospitals in the county?—No, I think not.

833. And the question whether any changes, administrative or financial, were desirable—that is rather left by the Council to be answered by the local Boards and Commissions concerned?—Yes.

834. As regards paying wards in hospitals, the Secretary thought the idea was that separate rooms in the existing hospitals should be set apart as pay wards?—Yes, that was the idea.

835. If that were not possible, that the present hospitals are not sufficiently spacious, and having regard to the necessary classification into male and female wards, if it were found paying wards could not be set aside, would the Council be in favour of building additional wards as paying wards?—That question did not come up; it was thought the present accommodation was sufficient.

836. The present accommodation for numbers is sufficient, but if they adopt the plan of pay wards I think, from what I know of the existing hospitals, you would find it very difficult to get room?—I think that is quite possible; but the question did not come up in that shape. I have not much experience of the workhouse system.

837. As regards tramps, you think that they ought to be obliged to give longer notice, and you would give power to the Guardians to keep them in?—Yes.

836. You would not go any farther; you did not think it necessary to go further?—No, we thought that was sufficient. Just adopt the English system.

837. Was the question discussed whether the existing accommodation for tramps ought to be abolished altogether, for instance?—It was discussed. We thought it should not be abolished, but that some system of penalising them should be adopted; it was thought it would not be very wise to turn them out loose in the country—they might do harm.

838. If they had not shelter they might go into out-buildings and places where they would be mischievous?—Yes, that was the idea.

839. Did they consider at the County Council whether any provision might be made for the treatment of consumptive patients?—No, I don't think that question came up.

840. A special hospital or special sanatorium?—No.

841. Thank you. I think that is sufficient, but if you could arrange for evidence with regard to the infirmary and asylum to-morrow it would be a great convenience to us?—I shall see Mr. Stewart about it.

Aug. 11, 1903.

Mr. Alexander Hamilton.

Mr. JOHN MORRISON examined.

842. CHAIRMAN.—Now, I think, Mr. Morrison?—Mr. Adams and Mr. Hamilton have given you the mind of the Council pretty fully, and for other facts or figures connected with my district, I think you would connect better with Mr. Long, who is chairman of the Lonsdale District Council, and also a member of the asylum committee.

843. You have heard the evidence that has been given by Mr. Hamilton; does it occur to you that you have anything material to add to it?—No, I don't think I could add very much.

844. You answered in what he said?—Yes, I think he and Mr. Adams have given you the mind of the Council, and we are obliged to express their mind rather than our own.

845. There was nothing said about consumption hospitals so far as you remember?—Nothing said about consumption hospitals.

Mr. John Morrison.

Mr. W. L. PERRY, Clerk, Lonsdale Union, examined.

846. CHAIRMAN.—What is the valuation of the Union of Lonsdale?—£189,866.

847. What have the rates been for some past years; I think you might go back to 1894?—I have them from 1890.

848. Take a few years before the passing of the Local Government Act. In 1894, how much were raised, and on what percentage rate?—£4,593, or equal to 6d. in the £.

849. 1895?—£4,798, or equal to 6½d. in the £.

850. 1896?—£5,410, or equal to about 7½d. in the £.

851. 1897?—£4,486, equal to a rate of 6d. in the £.

852. The half year in the transition period?—I don't think I have that.

853. I have taken it down myself as £2,608, which came to 3½d. in the half-year?—I can get you that.

854. The average for these four years before the passing of the Act would be?—5½d. in the £.

855. Then come to 1900?—£7,042 12s. 6d., equivalent to 8½d.

856. For 1901?—£6,050 12s., equal to about 8d.

857. 1902?—£5,700 12s., equal to 7½d.

858. 1903?—£6,241, equal to about 8s.

859. 1904?—We have not that.

860. You have a current rate?—I have not it here; it is 2d. less than that. Of course these last four are the gross estimates.

861. These amounts were struck after considering the Parliamentary grant?—Not the last; the last is the gross demand on the County Council.

862. Then they would be recouped?—It goes back direct to the County Council now, the Parliamentary grant which we formerly received.

863. You make a demand on the County Council for the gross amount?—Yes, less some trifling matters. The previous year it was a net amount after giving credit for the estimated Parliamentary grant.

864. What is the annual amount of the Parliamentary grant?—When we get it it averaged from £200 to £1,100 a year for all purposes.

865. What is it now?—I could not tell, because it is allotted direct to the County Council; it would be about the same; it might be £1,100.

866. One penny in the £ on this union produces £760 about?—Yes.

867. These sums that were raised year after year, for what purpose were they raised. Since the passing of the Local Government Act?—I don't mean the years before—for what service did the Poor Law Guardians raise these amounts?—For Poor Law purposes and medical charities.

868. Medical charities includes dispensary medical officers' salaries?—Midwives, apothecaries, rents, and all that, and also any superannuation allowances we are liable for.

869. You don't include these in establishment charges?—They are paid out of that rate that I demand from the County Council.

870. They were always, that is nothing new?—No.

871. We have no power here to look into expenditure under the Medical Charities Act, so that it is necessary now to subdivide these gross amounts and find out how much was expended for Poor Law purposes proper, that is indoor and outdoor relief, and the salaries of officers, and some other very small expenses. Could you tell me for each year, say from 1898, how much was expended for Poor Law purposes?—I can: in 1898, £3,274; in 1899, £3,147; that is equal to 6d. in the £. In 1900 it was 4½d.

872. 1899?—4s.

873. 1900?—The amount was £3,550; that would be equal to 4½d.

874. 1901?—£4,502, equal to 5½d.

875. 1902?—£4,916, equal to about 5½d.

876. Can you tell me the reasons of the increase for 1901 and 1902; where the rates got out of the 4½, came into the 5d. and 5½?—Between 1901 and 1902 there was an increase of £400; the excess in maintenance in the house for the year was £345.

877. Was that owing to there being more patients or an improved dietary?—I would consider the most of it owing to the liberal dietary in the infirmary and the number of patients in the infirmary.

878. There was some increase in the number of patients?—There was, the infirmary was pretty full, and we appointed an extra nurse; that is the only reason I can give for it.

879. Subdividing that amount, say for the year 1898, how much did you spend on in-maintenance in that year?—£1,687 12s. 6d.

880. On outdoor relief?—£181 17s. 10d.

881. What does the expenditure on outdoor relief consist of: have you taken in boarded-out children?—I have, that is nearly all boarded-out children.

882. How much of that is for boarded-out children and how much for outdoor relief proper?—I would say about £150 for boarded-out children, or £140.

883. Do you think it is as much for boarded-out children as £140?—I do; there are twenty children; each of them gets two suits of clothes. Well, about £100 would be nearest.

884. Establishment charges for 1898?—£1,437 6s. 11d.

885. Burials?—£77 10s.; that includes ins and outs.

886. Superannuation?—£38.

887. Now for 1899—in maintenance?—£1,548 1s. 7d.; outdoor relief, £195 15s. 5d.; establishment, £1,415 8s. 6d.; burials, £28 1s.; superannuation, £38.

888. For 1900?—In maintenance, £2,039 1s. 2d.; outdoor relief, £158 19s. 3d.; establishment charges, £1,465 12s. 6d.; burials, £27 4s. 8d.; superannuation, £38.

889. 1901?—In maintenance, £2,456 13s. 3d.; outdoor relief, £266 10s. 4d.; establishment, £1,910 12s. 8d.; burials, £24 1s. 6d.; superannuation, £37.

890. 1902?—In maintenance, £2,801 16s.; outdoor relief, £170 15s. 6d.; establishment, £2,044 17s. 3d.; burials, £27 2s.; superannuation, £35.

891. I suppose there was a death?—There was a death.

892. And 887 was for a broken period; death must have been during that half-year?—Yes.

Mr. W. L. Perry.

Aug 11, 1902. 895. Now during those last few years, was there any capital expenditure as distinguished from ordinary expenditure or maintenance?—Within the last few years there was $400 or $500 spent out of rates.

896. Was there any larger sum spent on buildings?—There was. There were loans got to the extent of £5,000 from the Board of Works for the extension of the infirmary.

897. What is the repayment instalment annually?—Some part of it forty years and some part thirty years; it is about £210.

898. Then in this increase of expenditure in those years that I was asking you, about £210 out of the £1,000 would be for the interest on capital expenditure; that would leave about £790. What percentage has been necessary for Poor Law purposes annually since the passing of the Local Government Act; begin with 1890. This would mean what percentage is necessary for the expenditure which we are reviewing here?—I have given you that.

899. Yes, 4½, 5½, 6½, and 6½?—That is since the passing of the Act.

900. I have it here—4½, 5½, 5½, and 6½. I should like to have details of last year's expenditure. In maintenance, £2,601?—That was for 1902; that is the last I made up.

901. How much does the poundage come to, I make it about one-twelfth of a penny in the £ for outdoor relief proper?—About that, leaving out the boarded-out children.

902. Is there any special test for the granting of outdoor relief in the union; is it necessary to get some evidence that the person applying cannot be removed into the workhouse hospital, or is it a question of general discretion?—The Guardians have bound themselves in past years by a rule not to give outdoor relief to any person of whom the doctor gives a certificate that that person can be removed with safety to the workhouse hospital.

903. That is not operative now?—It is, but on one or two special occasions they overruled it.

904. As far as you are aware—you need not answer this unless you like—is there any head of expenditure under which any substantial reduction could be made?—I don't think there is any.

905. Or any heavy expenditure for Poor Law purposes?—I don't think it could be worked more economically.

906. Mr. MURPHY.—As regards outdoor relief: outdoor relief as ordinarily understood does not exist in this union; it is not permissible; it is only where a doctor certifies that a patient is unable to be moved that outdoor relief is given at all?—Yes, you may take it that way. Of course the relieving officer goes in all cases to the party for whom the outdoor relief is asked. If he finds they cannot be removed he gives provisional outdoor relief, and reports to the Guardians, but that is not in every case. In other cases he gives them the option, by sending the man, to go to the workhouse, and if they refuse to go, that ends the matter.

907. Then they get no assistance at all?—Not from the Board of Guardians.

908. They are not looked after any more?—No.

909. CHAIRMAN.—But it would be the duty of the relieving officer to keep an eye on those people if relief were refused?—I don't know that. If the relieving officer does not consider that they are destitute in the first place, or entitled even to provisional relief, he reports that to the Board.

910. Is provisional relief given?—It is.

911. If in a case where provisional relief has been given the Guardians refuse to give outdoor relief, and if there is no certificate that the person cannot be removed, what happens then?—That would not happen. If the relieving officer gives provisional relief the Guardians know it is a case for continuing, and, as a rule, it is continued.

912. Then it would be a case for giving outdoor relief even if the person refuses to go to the workhouse?—The relieving officer would not give it unless the person was unfit to be removed.

913. He would not give even provisional relief?—No, except in the case, perhaps, of a woman that was confined, or where a medical certificate was produced as to sickness for removal.

Major W. E. Scott examined.

Major W. E. Scott. 914. CHAIRMAN.—You have considered the queries that have been issued?—Yes, the queries were before our Board.

915. You are the Chairman of the Derry Board?—I am the Chairman.

916. The first question was whether, having regard to the extent of the population, amalgamation was desirable?—The great majority of the board were of opinion that amalgamation was not desirable; there was a minority, some one or two, not of that opinion.

917. Did they go beyond their own union?—Only what they knew.

918. They did not consider the question of other unions, such as Lonsdale?—They did not express as strong an opinion about Lonsdale, but only as far as they were concerned, joining any part of Lonsdale to us.

919. Did they take into serious consideration the question of an auxiliary lunatic asylum, under the second query?—No, not very much I think, except in as far as the two questions; whether any union could be dissolved, that is the first question. Their opinion was negative on that. Then you ask if any workhouse that was dissolved could be used as an auxiliary asylum. The opinion was negative on that, too. Their opinion was very strongly expressed that for certain reasons Lonsdale would not be good as an auxiliary. Maybe one ought to state the reasons. They thought that for the administration of the Poor Law the districts, if any, are rather too large, that the administration of the Poor Law does not apply only to workhouses, but is very largely concerned with the industrious, hard-working poor outside the workhouses, and their interests are partly overlooked at present and would be much more overlooked if the unions were made larger.

920. In what way does the Poor Law touch that class at present?—By the Medical Poor Law Relief, that is the dispensary. If the Boards of Guardians were broken up it would mean that the dispensary district would be dealt with by a still more remote body. And that is the part where the Poor Law would support and assistance.

921. You would be rather disposed to have more bodies if it could be done without expense?—Not more bodies, but more flexibility given by committees. I think it is a pity dispensary committees were done away with. I would not advocate restoring them, but giving power to the Boards of Guardians to appoint local committees out of their own bodies to look after the dispensaries.

922. Not necessarily composed altogether of members of the Board?—They might be taken in. I would like to see it done by the elected Guardians of each district, that they should form a committee for that dispensary, and the special reason is we have lost all touch with the dispensaries. I was so long connected with it under the old system, and I remember when we had in dispensary committees, we had very great assistance from the dispensary doctor; he was always present, and we feared his opinion and advice most useful. Now we never see him at all.

923. He sends in his book?—We don't even see the books; it is merely a form of signing the books. The opinion is expressed by our Board strongly that there ought to be greater supervision of these districts than there is; that is a very strong feeling. For these reasons you will see that we don't think you could enlarge the unions, unless you take up a system of local management by committees—I mean a committee which will report to the Guardians.

924. Not an executive committee?—Not an executive committee; it would be a very useful committee to report to us on outdoor relief. But about outdoor relief, I am expressing my own opinion; that was not discussed.

925. Mr. MURPHY.—You think the abolition of the old dispensary committee was a loss as far as the administration of relief?—It was in this way, that nothing was put in its place.

926. There is not that close supervision and careful examination that used to take place under the old bodies?—No, I think we have not the information. I sat on these committees very often, and coming to do the work of the Guardians, I got great assistance from being at the dispensaries.

937. CHAIRMAN—Merely a reporting committee?—Principally a reporting committee; we cannot do without it.

938. You think the Guardians would take sufficient interest to go so far to make a report?—I think they would, for their report would have great weight when it came; they might be given a little executive power, I think the Board of Guardians would be only too glad to give it to them. Whenever anything is reported out of order we have to send some Guardians to inquire into it. The present elected Guardians are always most anxious to do their work.

939. The third query?—Well, that is a very difficult thing; we could not come to any universal opinion on that. We are very strong on the boarding-out of children.

940. It really works in with No. 1, if you thought it desirable to break up any union?—Yes, there it would come in. But if Linsavady was closed as a workhouse, they might board their inmates with us, but that would not work very well; it would remove the sick and infirm very far from their relatives.

941. The point was whether if a workhouse was closed as such, it might not be reopened for a particular class—say, that the workhouse in Linsavady should not receive any but aged and infirm from the county, and that the sick of the Linsavady Union should go to the County Infirmary if it were large enough, and another class of inmates might go to Linsavady, and so on, to make such institutions, as far as means of communication would permit, into a place for one class; that was rather the idea?—It might be possible, but it would be great churning.

942. As soon as you come to Magherafelt you would find a difficulty owing to want of communication?—Yes, in some cases it would be possible, in other cases impossible; it would be a very difficult thing to work out.

943. Magherafelt is not directly in connection with Derry?—No, you would have to go round by Coleraine. We also thought it would be very expensive to turn a workhouse into an auxiliary asylum.

944. Have you any statistics on the matter?—No, not statistics, but we went into the general question. It was mentioned that Linsavady would not be at all suitable, for there is very little ground there. It would be cheaper if they were all sent to a large asylum; that was the expression of opinion, but no vote was taken on it. In Glenties there are between 200 and 300 acres; that gives ample room for the outdoor life of the inmates.

945. Then your opinion is, as regards making workhouse institutions for particular classes, that in the County Derry it would hardly be suitable, owing to the want of communication with the most distant union, Magherafelt?—Yes, I don't think it would work at all, the communications are so broken, you have to go up to Coleraine and then down again.

946. It would cost two or three weeks' maintenance to bring a pauper from Magherafelt to Derry?—Yes, and it would be very unfair to the poor.

947. And they would not have their friends to see them?—They would not.

948. Would their friends be likely to come?—No, I am afraid they are very often forgotten, but still they don't like the feeling of being banished.

949. Do you think even in your own union that people from remote parts of the union are slow to come in, or is your union sufficiently compact?—I think they are coming in much better now that we have improved the treatment for the sick and the poor, and they are coming in more willingly, but still they have a prejudice about it.

950. Would it be owing to the word "workhouse," and the associations of a workhouse, or would it be to the disadvantages of being cut off from their friends?—I think it is the name of workhouse. When you first remove them they have great reluctance to be away from their own home, but after a time they have not.

951. I remember when the Gortin Workhouse was closed, I happened to be there, and the people lamented as much as if their own home was being broken up; the idea of going to Omagh was a horrible idea?—At first it is.

952. Query No. 4, what do you say about that?—We are against consanguinity.

953. Do you think any further accommodation is necessary for the sick in the union?—Not at present; ours is a very good workhouse.

954. I meant as regards any other part of the union, a hospital accommodation so remote as to make it impossible for the sick to come in?—No, I don't think it is now; they are always within reach.

955. What is your most distant part of the union?—Fourteen or fifteen miles. We can quite easily send the fever van to part of Bangor, and part of Park. I think I have said too far, fifteen miles.

956. Is that a populous part of the union?—There is a good number up in the mountains.

957. Do they come in an considerable numbers?—I have known cases sent in. Of course there are great objections to coming so far.

958. Do you think it would be necessary to have any separate cottage hospitals?—No, I think we can deal with all the sick poor.

959. No sick poor remain untreated in their own homes, as far as you are aware?—That is the reason why I want dispensary committees. I don't think the treatment of the sick poor in their own homes is what is ought to be. I think we have excellent doctors, and we have good medicines, but that is no use unless the doctor's advice is followed and the medicines are taken; but the nursing is the great deficiency in our union. We have taken a step—I don't know whether you are aware of it—in the direction of getting, as far as possible, district nurses to attend to these cases. We have only had one or two cases of that, and they have been of the greatest benefit to the sick poor. Independent men, fathers of families, who have to go out to work, when their wives get sick they have no one to look after them or the children, and in one or two cases it has acted splendidly and given relief. If we could have the system that they have in some towns, of Jubilee nurses, and have also the power to give them a little extra food during sickness; that might be done by dispensary committees. That is my idea, but that was not before the Board. That is a want in Poor Law relief. I can give the case of a hard-working father, with a large family, and his wife was dying of consumption.

960. Would not this be a good time to consider some provision by a county, or groups of counties, for the treatment of and the stamping out of phthisis?—The question is whether a workhouse is the proper place for consumptives or not.

961. Has that been considered?—No.

962. If a workhouse were broken up, might it not be used, with structural alterations, as a sanatorium for consumptive cases?—I would be slow to give an opinion whether the workhouse would not have to be so completely altered; that would be more a medical opinion.

963. At all events, it would be better than their own homes?—It would be far better, but then they must be suitable places; they must have fresh air, at least, I know from reading and some private experience, a closed workhouse might not be the place for them. It is a great need to have some place in the county for consumptive patients.

964. Nothing of the kind has been publicly broached in Derry?—No.

965. I mean within the last few years?—Not beyond the workhouse providing separate wards.

966. Some Boards of Guardians have?—Yes, but it was not before us.

967. Have you any personal opinion about consumptives?—I think if it were possible they should be separated, but that ought to be for a large district; there are not so many cases, I am glad to say.

968. For a county or group of counties?—A group of counties. The Guardians might have power to send special cases to that.

969. As they do now to extern hospitals?—Yes.

970. They have power to do so, the only thing is they want the institution?—I think, from what I know, the Guardians in proper cases would always avail themselves of them; they constantly send children out for special treatment, and if there was such an institution, I think they would avail themselves of it. With regard to the sick poor, we think we have erected a very good hospital for them.

971. The question is largely whether the good hospital accommodation there is in different places is sufficient for a large area. In some cases the union would be forty miles long with only one hospital; it is obvious in such a case that something might be done?—I can only speak for my own union. I think with the county infirmary we have ample.

Aug. 16, 1900.

Maye
W. E. Booth.

Aug. 11, 1903.

Major
W. E. Sack.

952. How do you think it would work if Derry Union were closed to the sick?—That is a point on which I would not like to speak. We have spent a great deal of money in putting up a good hospital, and we have a good staff of nurses and doctors. My own opinion is that hospital cases would be better treated in a hospital, but that is only a private opinion.

953. Query 6, I think virtually we have discussed that already.—Yes.

954. As regards No. 7, the question of patients' contributions, do you collect much in your union owing to the granting of relief by way of loan?—I don't think there is very much.

955. In fever hospitals you very often get recommendations from people in good positions who go there?—We do, but not so much since there has been a City Infectious Hospital in Derry.

956. Do you think it would be desirable, if a change in the law were made, that payments should be required, say payments in full or contributions?—I think it would; we have that in lunatic asylums, but we very seldom get any payments. I think it would be a great improvement, and especially for fever.

957. Now, as to the question of a "District Hospital," as distinguished from a Workhouse Infirmary. If you leave the various healthy or infirm classes in a workhouse, do you think that the sick would in a workhouse be regarded by the public as a District Hospital, or as an institution unconnected with the idea of pauper relief?—No.

958. In every workhouse you have the sick, fever, and ordinary medical and surgical cases, the aged and infirm, mothers with infants; you have children under fifteen; you have lunatics, and you have casuals and tramps; and you have other classes who are nominally able-bodied; do you think if the sick and the aged and infirm remain in the workhouse, and no other class were to be admitted, you would then have really a hospital?—You would have.

959. Then if we come to consider where and how the other classes are to be dealt with; now mothers with infants, these are very largely girls and married women who come in there, does it occur to you that any means could be adopted for taking that class away from the workhouse?—It would be very desirable if it could be done.

960. There are in Ireland a number of penitentiaries?—They would have to be enlarged very much to meet the evil.

961. They would have to have a large yard?—I doubt whether you could force them in.

962. If the workhouses were no longer available for that class, if unmarried women could not get admission into a workhouse, but if the Guardians had power to board out or pay for them in what might be called an external hospital—a penitentiary—what would you think of such an arrangement?—In theory it would be very well, but practically working with that class would be very hard.

963. Coming in after the first lapse, would they not rather prefer to go, according to their own religious opinions, to a penitentiary conducted on religious lines, with a view to redemption—would they not rather go to an institution of that kind?—The first ones possibly would.

964. I am speaking of the first; then there is a less possibility with the second?—That is so; but when you come practically to work it out there are enormous difficulties.

965. Now what difficulties do you perceive?—You are absolutely encouraging vice and letting off the really guilty person, that is the father.

966. It has been suggested that the law might be changed to the English system?—It is a most difficult subject, we think.

967. But at present you have those women going into the workhouse, and having in many cases numbers of illegitimate children?—It is an immense evil.

968. Do you think it would be a good plan to try and reclaim them after the first lapse?—If you could manage it, I think I would rather leave that to some of the other Guardians who know better. We did try it; the lady Guardians tried to look after that class and failed.

969. You want classification?—We know as a Board that it is very hard to make a decision in such cases, but if we had a good many more of these penitentiaries, and power to send them there, and the legal power to keep them there; they must not go in there and go out whenever they are found fault with.

970. As soon as a woman after her first lapse went into one of these places, the natural object would be to get her into a penitent state of mind, and provide for her by getting her a situation?—Certainly, if it could be done. They are very penitent at first, and as soon as that passes off and any fault is found with them, they will demand their discharge.

971. Yes, so I should expect?—You would have to keep them some little time.

972. Say while they are nursing the child?—Oh, yes; it is a very difficult question you are alluding to.

973. It is a difficult question?—I know many ladies and others have taken it up very strongly to see what they can do as to it, but that is a blot on the workhouse system.

974. Then those mothers with infants, if they could not be got out of a workhouse, it could hardly ever be looked upon as a district hospital?—No.

975. The next class would be children under fifteen; these are largely composed of illegitimate children. Where their parents have deserted them, or they are orphans, they can be dealt with—they can be boarded out, but at present you have in the Derry Union forty-five children under fifteen who cannot be boarded out, their parents or parent being alive; would you be in favour of any legislation towards boarding-out, taking these children away from the control of their parents?—I certainly would. I think the Act requires strengthening. We tried and failed in one important case. Those children are simply brought up as beggars or criminals; they are brought up to a vicious life, and the sooner we can get them away from their parents the better.

976. Then you would be in favour of legislation for taking illegitimate children from the control of their parents and boarding them out?—Or the children of criminals.

977. Now, as to lunatics. You have only fourteen lunatics in the Derry Workhouse: do you think they ought to be there or sent to an asylum?—They ought to be sent to an asylum.

978. Surely there is room for fourteen lunatics in the Derry Asylum?—Not now, but they are building an addition.

979. Then they will have room, and do you think they ought to go there?—I think it would be far better that they should be treated separately.

980. Then the next class are the casuals or tramps; they are a comparatively small class in numbers?—They are in numbers, but they are doing a tremendous amount of mischief in the country; the workhouse makes the life of the tramp possible.

981. How far would you go in proposing a remedy?—I would go pretty far. We all agree that they should not be allowed to demand their discharge at any moment. I would certainly say that they could not demand their discharge in less than a week; that would give them an opportunity of being brought before the Board.

982. You would not allow them to be discharged without a Board's order?—I would not allow them to demand their discharge, but they might come before the Board, and the Board might dismiss them, and, in certain cases, give authority to the master, but the tramp himself or his family would not have a right to demand it.

983. You would practically imprison them for a certain time for demanding admission?—Yes. We have very bad cases sometimes in Derry Workhouse; they go out and live on the very poor; the workhouse makes that class possible, where it would be impossible.

984. Would it be impossible?—It would; because when they come to towns the townspeople—the busy people—are more hard-hearted, then they go into the workhouse, and out of it they go when it is fine.

985. You class among the casuals or tramps in your workhouse people resident in the city who come in for a couple of days and go out again?—Yes.

986. They are not really tramps?—No; we call them casuals.

987. What do you think about that class?—There are cases where they absolutely come in two or three times a week and go out again, and we can do nothing; there is nothing very wrong about the person. There is one woman who takes her children in and out, and we can do nothing with them; they cannot go to school. Sometimes she comes in twice a week. Our lady Guardian, Mrs. Morris, has taken great interest in them, but can do nothing. If we had power to keep them in, first for a week and then for three weeks or a month, we would be able to do something.

988. You would apply to these people the same rule as to tramps, keeping them in with a view to keeping them out?—Yes; the Belgian system is very good:

when they come two or three times they send them to an industrial village.

999. Are some of these people really chronic idle people, who don't work?—Have never from their birth seen a day's work, and don't intend to do it.

1000. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—What would you do with the children of these people?—Teach them; give them instruction.

1001. Take the children off them?—Oh, no, I would not; I would not take them from them unless they were vicious.

1002. CHAIRMAN.—If they were leading really idle wandering lives?—I would prevent them by my system, keeping them in.

1003. But only for a short time?—Yes; but if they came in often I would keep them longer—up to six months. That would require great alteration in the law.

1004. Then there are the other, or so-called "able-bodied," class that it is difficult to know what to do with. In your workhouse you have twenty-one men and twenty-five women who are considered able-bodied. Judging from what I remember of the workhouse here and what I know of workhouses elsewhere, these people, although they are in the workhouse books as able-bodied, yet they are not men that anyone would select for a day's work?—No; but many of them would get a day's work.

1005. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Have you any suggestion to make about that class?—As much employment should be provided as possible for them at farming and general work in the workhouse.

1006. CHAIRMAN.—What would you think of a general institution for that class of people, who are well able to travel, to send them to one institution, say, for half Ulster?—That would be an important change.

1007. Keep them in one institution; nobody there but themselves?—That would be such an immense change in the law it would be really imprisoning them.

1008. It would. They could take their discharge, of course?—They would take their discharge at once and go out again.

1009. Then they would be under certain penalties. They would have to go back to the same institution if they took their discharge; and if they were to take their discharge too often, and put the rates to expense in railway fares you could have a rule something like what you suggest for animals and tramps?—I think by beginning with small periods, a week or a month, would check that.

1010. The object of analysing these classes is to find out how we could reduce them and bring the workhouse to be a district hospital for the sick and weak sick. We have considered all the classes. The mothers of legitimate children, I think, could be dealt with without any difficulty by having a lying-in ward attached to the infirmary. The children under fifteen, juveniles, orphans and tramps we have dealt with. Now we are at the able-bodied. What I wanted to know was whether, in your opinion, it would not be possible to have an institution at some central point—some convenient centre, say Derry or Omagh, for the able-bodied of North-West Ireland?—I am afraid that would hardly do; it would be a jail. I would rather take the sick and the old and infirm and separate them.

1011. The sick you must have near their own homes. This class of forty-six able-bodied people you have, I fancy a good many of them are all-the-year-round residents?—They are, I think so.

1012. So that there would not be a very great hardship in removing them?—It could be done.

1013. With the object of getting workhouses to become in every place really hospitals at refuges for the infirm?—I am afraid you could hardly do it. I would rather, in the workhouses, put a greater separation between the old and infirm and the able-bodied.

1014. How would you do that?—Separate wards.

1015. You would accept the phrase "deserving poor." You would classify them into deserving and non-deserving poor?—I think that is more possible—we have wards in which those who behave well could be put, and get a little better treatment, and if they misbehaved they could be sent into the body of the house.

1016. I think that is feasible as regards the aged and infirm; but when you come to the able-bodied, would you classify them?—No; I would keep them all together, and give them as much work as they could possibly do. If you put them into a central institution for a large area, where there will be work in a thorough way, you could do that. In theory that is the best; and that, I think, is done in Holland and Belgium. They call them labour villages. I saw something of that in East Germany. They are kept there, and not allowed to go out for some time. That might be a step too far; but leaving them the power of taking their discharge, with the consequent penalty of being kept in next time if they go out too soon, possibly that might do. I have very little faith in these, I have seen them so often coming before us.

1017. That is where there are so many classes to be dealt with. It is difficult to apply the same rule all round to different classes; but if you have an institution with only one class you might have a hard and fast rule. What are you to do with the able-bodied man who comes in with a large family?—That is why I think we cannot get rid of the present system; I am just thinking of a case before me, when a man comes in with a whole tribe of children after him.

1018. What class of man would that be?—A very common class; a lazy, indolent man, who does not want to do a day's work.

1019. From whom you would be willing to take the children?—There are cases in which they are hardly so bad as to make them orphans. That is the difficulty, separating them from their families.

1020. Of course, they are separated, now, to a certain extent; they are in a different part of the house, and don't see very much of each other?—They ought not to.

1021. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Do you not think that where a parent does not fulfil his responsibility to his children the State should interfere?—As much as possible.

1022. And provide that these children should make good citizens in future, instead of growing up in a vagrant life. Do you not think there should be some power given to local bodies, some control of that description, to separate parents and children in cases where the parent proved utterly worthless?—You mean visitors?

1023. CHAIRMAN.—Hardly, perhaps, as much visitors as unworthy?—I am quite for that; but a man ought to have a fair chance. It is a serious thing to deprive a man of his children. And again, many parents would be simply getting rid of the responsibility of their children. There is very great danger of people coming in and neglecting them for a time, in order to get rid of the responsibility.

1024. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—You say that frequently a parent comes into the house with children, remains there a considerable time, goes out, and perhaps comes in again. If that is done repeatedly do you think the State ought not to take some action to see that these children are provided for?—I agree with you in that; but you must follow it up by severe punishment to the parent—that the parent should be sent to jail.

1025. CHAIRMAN.—He should not go at large?—Certainly not. If you do that you will have a number of children left on your hands. The man must be, formally sentenced to some term of imprisonment, and then take the children.

1026. Have you carried out the boarding-out principle for children as far as possible in the union, with children eligible for boarding out?—I think so, as the master will be able to tell you. We started a very long time ago in Derry; we were nearly the first.

1027. Do you know, have any of the children come back into the workhouse?—No; there is a great improvement. We have really got a better class of nurses, who are anxious to adopt, and a great number of children have been adopted; and there is the greatest affection shown between the foster parents and the children—I think hardly ever any of them come back to us. But when they are brought up in the workhouse they are incessantly coming back.

1028. As regards the children who are in the house, I think you would, as far as possible, with a view to safeguard against encouraging vice—you would like to take them away and board them out?—Certainly; and we do as soon as we can. The children go to the National schools outside, to try and take them away from the associations.

1029. Dr. BARNES.—Did you ever consider whether your infirmary could be separated from the workhouse, and make it a district hospital?—I think that, originally, would have been the better plan.

1030. Even as it is with your infirmary as it exists and where it exists, have you thought of it at all, or is it possible to separate it from the rest of the workhouse and administer it separately, with a separate entrance, 44p 11, 1904.

Mayor—
W. E. South.

Aug. 11, 1902.

Major
W. R. Scott.

as a district hospital?—The position would not permit of that now; but it would be much better that the sick poor had not the name of coming into a workhouse. There is no stigma in coming to the fever hospital; and indeed, I must say that now a great number have no objection to coming into the infirmary. It is the name of it.

1031. You don't have many patients who pay on coming in, on account of the county infirmary being in the same district?—There are no paying patients in our hospital; it is too small.

Mr. SAMUEL MCCORDY examined.

Mr. Samuel
McCordy.

1033. CHAIRMAN.—You have been the Workhouse Master here for a long time?—I have.

1034. And you have had previous experience in another union?—Yes.

1035. So your knowledge of the management of a workhouse is extensive?—It is pretty large.

1036. I asked you to get for me the numbers that were in the workhouse on the first Saturday of January in the present year?—I made out a list as far as possible, of the separate divisions in connection with the union.

1037. What I want is rather the classes of inmates—sick, aged, and infirm, &c., on the 3rd of January in the present year?—I have not it in that form.

1038. I have it here; and I think you may take it I took it from your own returns. Your own return was that on the 2nd of January, the first Saturday of the present year, there were 89 inmates in the infirmary and 8 in the fever hospital; aged and infirm, 68 males and 36 females—total 104. Can you tell me why there should be so many more men than women?—Yes; in thinking over the cause I considered that there was more employment for old women, in the way of nursing and taking care of the house when the bread-winners are away at work. There are always inquiries for this class of servants. These women over sixty or seventy are able to do a little nursing, and do a little cooking when the breadwinners are at work.

1039. Respectable families?—Yes. There are shirt factories here, and the wife and daughters are generally at work; there is generally employment for the husband; they have no person to keep the house, and they come to us to try and get a suitable person that will be able to do a little cooking and look after children. Their wages are very little, and it is merely for their food. And there are more inquiries for that class of help, and no inquiries for the men at that age.

1040. So that the men are more numerous because there is employment for the women?—Yes; and another thing is, there are more women in the infirmary. When a woman comes to over sixty or seventy she is more infirm, and she is generally ailing, and she is removed to the infirmary.

1041. Because a proper case for the infirmary occurs that a man—a man at that age is generally able to knock about the yard. That is my explanation for that class, and the reason the women are so numerous in the sick ward.

1042. Then you have mothers with infants?—I think there was another query—could I find out any infirm deserving cases? With the matron, we went over that, and we considered that we had in the infirm class about twenty women and twenty-nine men, and as far as we knew, and had known, of their character, they were over the ordinary class of poor—a little better than the ordinary class. Some of them had been brought to the house by old age and infirmity. Of course, I speak of these people a good deal by their character in the house.

1043. Not from previous experience?—That connected with it, as far as we could learn. We studied each person in the whole house.

1044. And out of those ninety-four, did you find many that you would put down, if you were asked to do it on your own responsibility—that you would classify as aged and deserving?—That is what I say—twenty women and twenty-nine men; but I would not say that these people would require separate treatment.

1045. They are not sufficiently good?—Not sufficiently deserving.

1046. You still think they might be kept all together?—I do, certainly.

1047. Do all these people get along fairly comfortably together in the same ward?—They do; we may have had one or two men or women that always create 1038. Mr. MURPHY.—Do you not find that the strong objection that formerly used to exist against going into the workhouse is declining?—I mean to say that the people have not the strong objection to-day that they used to have?—I don't think they have quite so strong an objection as formerly; the treatment is a great deal better; they are very carefully looked after, I must say, in our workhouse, and there is a great deal more attention paid to them; in fact, some people say we are attracting in too many.

a rumour or trouble in the ward, and are never satisfied; but on the whole they all live peacefully and I should say, contentedly together.

1048. Not throwing responsibility or want of respectability in each other's faces?—No; I would say they are contented. That occurs a lot.

1049. Passing on to mothers with infants?—You wanted to know, then, how many were born in the house. That was 18, during the year 1902; 13th illegitimate, 11; legitimate, 4. I made out a list of the women that told us it was their first.

1050. How many of these eleven were the first child, as far as you know?—I would say about six.

1051. And the mothers of the other five, had they been confined in the workhouse on previous occasions?—Yes; one of them had been confined in the workhouse. One woman had two children.

1052. What was the largest family of illegitimate children that these people would have. Have you, in your own experience, knowledge of women having a considerable number?—Yes; there are women in the house who have had more illegitimate children. I don't think there is any woman with more than three.

1053. It is not unusual to have that class coming in having two?—It is usual.

1054. When a woman comes in with an illegitimate child, about how long does she remain in the workhouse?—You don't mean those ones born during that year?

1055. No, but generally?—I think there is a woman in at present; I am sure she is fully two years in the house.

1056. You had eleven births of that class in 1902; on the first Saturday in 1903 you had nine?—Mothers with children.

1057. I was wondering how many of those would be illegitimate and how many of them would be included in the eleven. What I want to come at is, how long would a girl remain in the workhouse when she comes in—she comes in a short time before her confinement?—That class of people have changed. There was a class long ago that used to come in and had their child, and they would stay a good while in the house—I am sure some of them over a year. Now there is so much work for that class outside—

1058. Farm work?—No, factory work; and the wages are good; and, in fact, no sooner have some of them had their child, and stayed, may be, a fortnight or three weeks in the maternity ward, than they take their discharge, and the reason is that they are able to put the child out to nurse, and pay from 2s. 6d. to 3s. a week out of their wages to keep these children outside.

1059. Then you have not many women in this union, as they have in other unions, where, when the mother comes in to have a child, they stay a long time?—We have not; and, in fact, it is only cases of indigent characters that would remain—what the matron and I call tedious ones.

1060. Never have we had?—Little; in fact, the matron says they are not able to score a foot.

1061. But those who can work can get five wages here?—They can. I find a great change in the house.

1062. Where would they get the child supported? Have you followed any of those children?—I have not, except asking the women.

1063. I mean would they be in proper custody—they would not be farmed out?—I have heard that sometimes the inspectors of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children have taken these fatherless children up for not treating the children well, although the woman had given these people good money to keep them—quite enough; in fact, more than what the Guardians give for boarding out. They give some of them 3s., 3s. 6d.; and 3s. would be 67 lbs. a year.

1054. If the Guardians were boarding out, what is the age they begin at—what is the earliest case of boarding out you know of a deserted child?—I brought children under the notice of the Guardians, I may say a few weeks old, because children have been brought in to me who have been found on the roadside, and the Board have directed, at once, the relieving officer to make inquiries to get a proper nurse; in fact, the Guardians endeavour to the best of their means to send them out, and keep none of the children of that class in the house at all. They even board them out to twelve years of age.

1055. But they do board out, even under a year?—They do, certainly.

1056. Dr. BARNES.—Do you know anything about the mortality amongst the boarded-out?—It is only by being in attendance at the Board room and listening to anything—I can say I have not heard of any death; the death rate is very low.

1057. Can you remember how many children have been boarded out young?—I can; a lot.

1058. You don't remember any deaths amongst them?—I do not. I have no books to prove it.

1059. CHAIRMAN.—You know the young children are still living?—Still living; I see them twice a year when they come up to be inspected, and I never heard of any of them saying there was a death.

1060. Passing on to the children under fifteen, there were forty-five in the workhouse: how many of those were illegitimate?—Twenty-one and twenty-four legitimate.

1061. Of those twenty-four were some the children of vicious and unsatisfactory parents?—There are some of them of parents who lead an unsatisfactory life.

1062. Did the twenty-four go in and out much?—We have two or three families that do go in and out.

1063. Are they large families?—One has a family of four or five, another has a family of two, and among those legitimate ones there is one with a family of at least four, but they don't go in and out.

1064. They are chronic?—Yes.

1065. Do the parents of these children when they pass out of the nursery and go into the children's school wards, do the parents see much of them?—They do at prayer time, morning and night.

1066. Have they much opportunity for speaking to them?—Not any other time.

1067. They are not allowed to speak at prayers, are they, just passing to and fro?—Yes, and in the supper room too; it is not always quiet.

1068. The next class—you have only fourteen lads?—Yes.

1069. Are there any troublesome people among those?—No, none, because when anyone gets troublesome we have them removed to the asylum.

1070. There is no difficulty made in this asylum?—Not lately. I get a form, the doctor fills it up, and I fill up the remainder, to the best of my knowledge, and get a magistrate to sign it, and send it to the asylum with a letter, asking that the person shall be received; then I get word, and it is generally that day or at the latest next day.

1071. Therefore all the fourteen lads are really quiet and harmless?—They are.

1072. How many inmates could the wards hold?—I am sure they could hold at least thirty.

1073. But would you have more than thirty inmates when I was here as an inspector you had a number boarded out with you by the Asylum Authorities?—We have only two, but that is to give them all plenty of room.

1074. Cossels and tramps, have you many tramps, as distinguished from casuals?—I would consider in that class people belonging to the city and neighbourhood; there are more than half of them during the year. Not tramps from other unions, considering the size of the place and the opportunity of getting labour, are astonishingly few. A large place like this, with a population having so much work, naturally brings people from other districts. I know when I make inquiries as to the reason for bringing them here, that is the cause.

1075. They are people really looking for work?—Yes, but of course there are among them tramps that we recognise as generally on the run from the North of Ireland to the South; it is the "in-and-outs" are the difficult class.

1076. What would you do with them?—I would have the police to act as relieving officers, and give lines to these people living outside the union.

1077. These are the tramp class?—The tramp class, and make the tramp class prove that they have been in work; not leave the case on the police; and for the "in-and-outs" I would leave a great deal in the discretionary power of the relieving officer. My idea is they should not get a line until they came before the Board on Saturday.

1078. Would they be people who actually have a house or room of their own?—Yes.

1079. When they come into the workhouse, would they leave a home behind them to which they could go back?—Yes, I find, on inquiries from them, that a number of them have quarrelled with their wives or children, and leave on a Saturday night, and go back to the same place next day again.

1080. Mr. MURPHY.—Would it be your view that the tramps would have to go to the police officer to get admission to the workhouse?—That is an idea of my own from what I have read and seen in other places, and to make the tramps prove, leaving the case on the tramp, that they had been at work, and, if possible, they should have a character from their last employer.

1081. CHAIRMAN.—They would not be able to do that, because they had never been at work?—Then let the police take them as vagrants.

1082. Mr. MURPHY.—You think the fact that they would have to present themselves to the police would deter them from coming?—I believe so.

1083. CHAIRMAN.—The next class is what are called the able-bodied—any people that don't belong to any of the classes that we have gone through—they amount to twenty-one males and twenty-five females: would you tell us what kind of people these are—are they hard-working deserving poor?—They are not deserving poor as long as they are an able-bodied class, I consider, but there are a number of that class of men that are under sixty, they are able to do a little work, they are not able to do what you call a thorough day's work; in fact outside they would not be worth their meat; no farmer would keep them about him, and there are a number of women, even though they are young, up to thirty, their rearing or their life before it has made them useless and debilitated from the want of proper feeding.

1084. Then they are not able-bodied; they are only classed as able-bodied?—I would not call them able-bodied or expect them to do a day's work.

1085. If you were an employer of labour you would not take many of these people?—I would not; I would not have them about me at all.

1086. Would you take any of them?—Not many of that class. There is another question about the sick in the infirmary: on going through the infirmary, have I ever had any complaint of their distance from home that they cannot see their friends, my answer to this is, going through the infirmary and talking to the people as they come in, unquestionably I have never heard any objection to the distance they had to come, and another thing is, though they have two days for visiting friends—two hours each day—any friends of the sick people we never hinder; they can come in seven days of the week.

1087. You think there is no inconvenience or hardship to the sick?—I never heard of any.

Aug 11, 1908.
Mr Samuel
McCoady.

Mrs. MORRIS examined.

1088. CHAIRMAN.—I have some notes of the evidence which you were good enough to offer to give—first, as regards the unions in the County Derry, you are in favour of abolishing one union?—Yes, Lincavady. I heard from the Chairman there were only sixty inmates in the union, but a lady Guardian told me there were 250; but even 100 it is too much to have officials for that number. I think they could be divided between Derry and Coleraine.

1089. Then as regards what use you would put Lincavady Workhouse in?—I would leave that to the County Council. I am sure they could deal with that, and it would come in useful for something; at present I would be in favour of converting the workhouses. I think it is a misnomer to call these workhouses; many of the inmates have done no harm. I would convert them into district hospitals for the sick and infirm. At present the really deserving poor have a great ob-

Mrs Morris.

Aug. 11, 1903.
Mrs. Harris.

sion to go into the workhouse; they prefer to get relief outside, and in the part of the union which I represent they are entirely opposed to going into the workhouse.

1100. Which is your electoral division?—The West Ward. I asked outdoor relief for one in that ward last Saturday week, and the Board directed the relieving officer to go and see the person whose address I gave, and he reported she was destitute, but the majority would not give her even 3s. outdoor relief, and she refused to go into the workhouse. She is a very decent woman, one of eleven in family, an old Derry woman, very respectable, and as the workhouse is at present that class of people will not come in. She is not married; she is the last of the family, and she is destitute.

1101. Does she live on charity?—Yes; a woman who knew her gave her shelter, and she goes out to a few friends, who help her in town.

1102. Would you be in favour of boarding out the inmates in dissolved unions?—Yes, I would.

1103. You would board them out with people who would take them in the country or towns?—I believe what they call able-bodied; I know the people in the Derry Union intimately, and there are those in the infirmary who would be very anxious to go out and improve if they got their children taken from them. One of them asked me to get her two children into the Starvelin Home, and she cried and said she would be very glad to go to a place which would keep her. There is a penitentiary in Derry.

1104. I was not expressing any opinion, I was merely making a suggestion. You would be in favour of boarding out the inmates of dissolved unions, all classes, except of course the sick: would you board out the infirm?—There is one class, the tramp class. As to the infirm, if they would prefer being boarded out in preference to living in the workhouse, that is in the infirm wards of the workhouse, I know there are some who would prefer living out, being out in farmers' houses or some families who would take them and give them their food and shelter at so much.

1105. About what it would cost in the workhouse?—Yes, or cost even less.

1106. Then you make the statement that you think outdoor relief is not given with sufficient liberality at present?—It just depends; if the relieving officer is disposed to give outdoor relief to the Guardian who asks it, it may be given, but if the Guardian makes his office a little troublesome for him, sometimes he is not very favourable in listening to the request. The existing rule, you see, is to send the relieving officer to investigate the case, and until he returns the person or persons destitute, out-door relief is invariably refused. There is very little outdoor relief given in Derry.

1107. Yes, when you take what is given to board out children there is very little, a few pounds. You would be in favour of closing the Derry Workhouse fever hospital?—Yes.

1108. And sending the inmates as paying patients to the Foye Hill Hospital?—Yes.

1109. And then converting the workhouse fever hospital into wards for consumptives?—Sometimes we have very few patients in the fever hospital.

1110. You never have many?—One time when I was Guardian it was closed for three months, and it was closed lately, and sometimes we have no fever patients. We have children sent over with diphtheria; they have a reluctance often to come to our hospital; it is still the workhouse fever hospital; they prefer going, and indeed some of our doctors kindly send them, over to Foye Hill, and I would be in favour of converting the present fever hospital at the Waterside into a hospital for consumptives, for they are a most pitiable class. I think it has been recommended that the present children's wards should be converted into a hospital for consumptives, but really the short time they have to live they would not live two days in it; there is no means of ventilation and no possible means of getting in sun unless you knocked down the whole building; I mean the children's ward. It is not habitable, in my opinion, and in the opinion of every one I brought to see it. A very eminent doctor in town said it was an eyre, and I would like to get rid of all these eyres.

1111. Outdoor relief you would give to the sick poor and destitute, and send the inmates to the asylum, so as to reduce the workhouse to the most slender proportions?—I would have no person in the workhouse except the infirm and sick poor. As long as you have a gate for the tramps and all classes of people coming in through the same gate, you would still have an objectionable place for the deserving poor.

1112. You would have pay wards?—Yes.

1113. That would be possible if you had a number of wards vacated, but at present it is not possible?—It would be possible if my recommendation had any weight. I would send the lunatics and imbeciles to Grange; they are not getting proper treatment in the workhouse; they have the doctor looking after them, and medicine and nurses; but really I have visited there several times and have found them lying on the floor without one to give them the least assistance very often, or drink, but after that I believe the doctor visited them next day, but it would take a Guardian to keep a regular watch over them.

1114. You would like these pay wards, and that a fee should be charged in accordance with the ability?—You should leave that to the discretion of the Guardians?—Yes; I know there are patients who would go in if it was raised from the standard of the workhouse.

1115. You are in favour of admitting casuals to the workhouse?—Certainly not. I would instruct the relieving officer not to give tickets to tramps or casuals, because they have plenty of money in their pocket to use badly. They get a bottle early in the evening, and later on they tramp over to the workhouse and are admitted, and they are drunk, and the next morning, or perhaps on a Sunday, they get out after three hours' notice. I am not quite certain do they get out on Sunday, but I have met them several times between Campsey and Derry—five or six of them—basking in the sun on a hot summer day going on to Coleraine. I am not sure are they discharged on Sunday, but they are on Monday evening certainly. I think they should not be allowed into the workhouse at all.

1116. You would like to put an end to pauper students in the infirmary?—Yes, it is most objectionable.

1117. Of course it is most irregular that they should do anything except very manual duties?—I would not have them there at all, because as long as they are there they will be used practically as nurses; they cook the food of the patients, dispense the food, and carry it to the wards.

1118. You consider re-classification of the inmates necessary: what kind of classification do you refer to?—I would classify even the patients in the infirmary. It is a common saying that sickness levels everything, but I have a decided objection to one who has led a very—

1119. I did not think it was sickness that levels ranks?—I don't mean hovelling ranks. I mean that when sickness comes people have very great sympathy for one another, even with those who do lead a very bad life. You must have people there from their childhood up to sixteen or seventeen, and you have girls who have led a bad life side by side with the respectable poor. I would have a ward for the respectable poor separate.

1120. You are opposed to the existing practice of bringing boarded-out children to the workhouse twice a year for inspection?—Yes, there is a committee of women Guardians appointed to look after them also.

1121. I think it is not the usual practice in bringing them to the workhouse?—It has been since I became a Guardian of this union.

1122. It is not a usual thing in other unions?—If you allow me to tell you, when I became a Guardian I asked the Guardians to inspect these children at the dispensary in William-street, to appoint a committee to inspect them, which they did, and we were very grateful, and afterwards, for some little petty motive, they brought them back to the workhouse for inspection, and they have been back there three times since that.

1123. That, of course, is a matter for the Guardians?—They are a very strong body, and everything is carried by the vast majority of the Board, but notwithstanding the fact, you heard from our chairman that a great many improvements have been made.

1124. Is there anything else that occurs to you?—There is very little given in outdoor relief. Well, I think the majority of the Guardians will in future decide on having the children kept away from the evil associations of the workhouse.

1125. You think you have persuaded them to that?—If I can get round them, I will.

After the adjournment for luncheon.

Aug. 11, 1902.

CHAIRMAN.—I don't know, gentlemen, whether you have heard anything from counsel.

Mr. McOg.—Our counsel are here.

CHAIRMAN.—Have you heard anything from any of the other counsel?

Mr. Elliott.—Mr. Henry is here and ready to go on in the morning.

Mr. Wilson.—And Mr. Drummond will be here and ready to go on in the morning, and Mr. Cooke.

CHAIRMAN.—I think we will hardly finish the general part of the inquiry to-night. I don't see any chance of doing that, and I suppose we will want a day for the boundaries.

Mr. McOg.—I am sure we will.

CHAIRMAN.—And some of the counsel have written asking for a postponement until Thursday.

Mr. Wilson.—That would be very inconvenient.

Mr. Elliott.—On the ground of expense it would be an inconvenience to those who are ready to go on.

Mr. Wilson.—I think, Mr. Micks, if you allowed the County Council of Donegal, for whom I appear, to go on to-morrow, whatever time you have done with this other inquiry, say after lunch, perhaps Mr. Drummond, who appears for us, could open the case and go on with his evidence; the other counsel could come in later.

CHAIRMAN.—Once you open the subject everybody would like to be here.

Mr. Wilson.—Most of the counsel will be here to-morrow.

CHAIRMAN.—We have been looking through the list of witnesses, and it would appear that on the general questions we have enough witnesses to last us over to-morrow.

Mr. Wilson.—I think with counsel's statement and the witnesses we have, we could keep you from lunch time.

CHAIRMAN.—I mean there are witnesses on the general question to last over to-morrow on the same lines as to-day. I expect it will really be more convenient in the end to say Thursday.

Mr. Wilson.—Do you intend to-morrow to go into the Donegal part of the Poor Law inquiry?

CHAIRMAN.—No, we will have an inquiry at Letterkenny for that.

Mr. Wilson.—Of course, I know Mr. Henry is here, and Mr. Drummond is coming to-night, Mr. Osborne and Mr. Cooke are here. I would suggest, if you could see your way, to take up the boundaries question to-morrow and let Mr. Drummond open it. I think we could keep you going to-morrow; then Mr. Hinkley and Mr. Glancy would be here next morning.

CHAIRMAN.—I don't think the general evidence on this inquiry will have finished in time for that.

Mr. Wilson.—I don't know, of course.

CHAIRMAN.—I suppose you would want to know some definite time to begin. I think it would be much safer to say Thursday morning.

Mr. Wilson.—That leaves counsel here kicking their heels all day to-morrow. If you could possibly say you would let us begin after lunch to-morrow.

CHAIRMAN.—We may finish the general evidence; but it does not seem at all likely, from the long list of witnesses. It would not do to take one part, without going into the whole thing. Shall we say Thursday? Well then, gentlemen, Thursday morning, first thing. There is one doctor to be taken on Thursday, but he won't be long.

Mr. Elliott.—Would you indicate in what order you would take the case—would the County Donegal open first?

CHAIRMAN.—I have not thought over that.

Mr. Doyle.—I think that is what the advocates would prefer.

CHAIRMAN.—If you agree among yourselves.

Mr. McFadden.—The County Council have applied for this inquiry, and they are the parties to open it.

Mr. Doyle.—The County Council have initiated the whole thing. They were promised an inquiry by the Local Government Board, and this is the first opportunity.

Mr. Elliott.—I think it would lay on the County Council to show why the existing state of things should be altered.

CHAIRMAN.—Then you are prepared to do that on Thursday morning?

Mr. Wilson.—Certainly.

CHAIRMAN.—That is settled now.

Mr. McFadden.—But there is another matter you ought to settle, and that is, this contempt of the Sanitary.

Dr. WARNOCK examined.

Dr. Warnock.

1125. CHAIRMAN.—You wish to give some general evidence as to the improvement of workhouse hospitals and the provision of hospitals in remote parts of the county?—Exactly.

1127. Kindly explain your views on these matters?—I think by raising the standard of the workhouse hospitals that their efficiency would be very much improved; and what I would suggest with regard to it is that the building should be cut entirely off from the workhouse proper; where the workhouse is still retained, that they form a block by themselves.

1128. With separate entrances?—With a separate entrance; that the fever hospital and the workhouse hospital should form a block by themselves and the name be changed to that of district hospital; that wards should be provided in those hospitals for a class of patients who can pay—separate accommodation provided for them; and I think that this would work for economy, because in cases where a man could pay, say, £3 or 10s. a week, the surplus should go towards the alleviation of the rates and the support of the union patients in the hospital.

1129. Under what management would that hospital be?—I would suggest that it should be placed under the same management or board of control as at present controls the county infirmary.

1130. A joint committee?—A joint committee of the County Council and a certain elected member, with a certain number elected locally to control each district hospital, in addition to the number of County Commissioners for the union.

1131. And that they would exercise all the functions of a Board of Guardians?—All the functions that a Board of Guardians at present exercise; but I would suggest that all the hospitals in the county be under the immediate control of the infirmary committee; and for this reason, at present in the fever hospitals very frequently there are not patients for nine or ten months of the year; so in one particular hospital the staff of that hospital—that is the nursing staff—is, of course, idle. During that time an outbreak of fever may occur in another part, and during the term of that outbreak the nurses could be transferred from hospitals where they are not required to assist in nursing where it is required. Take, for instance—I see by the papers, and have heard from other sources, that there is an outbreak of fever in Araraun, in Glenties Union. At present we have no fever in Donegal Union; an increased number of nurses will be required in some part of the Glenties Union. If the nurses were all under the control of the central board the nursing staff could be sent from Donegal, and perhaps Dunfermaw, Letterkenny, and other places, to assist to tide over that epidemic.

1132. The nurses would be servants of the County Council, not of the particular union?—Not of the particular union.

1133. They would go back to the central infirmary after nursing a case in Glenties, and be sent off wherever they were required?—Yes. To show the importance of that, some time ago in the Donegal fever hospital we had a case of fever and a case of diphtheria; there were only two patients in the place. I could not permit one nurse to attend to the two cases, and we had to get a special nurse.

1134. Dr. BOGUE.—Where did she come from?—From Belfast. An excellent nurse she was. We had a very good nurse there; but she could not be permitted to attend a case of diphtheria when she was attending a case of fever. If the idea I suggest were carried out all that would be necessary would be to wire or write to the secretary of the infirmary board and get a nurse from there, without the trouble of getting a nurse from Belfast and paying her.

1135. CHAIRMAN.—They would be salaried, instead of having a high weekly payment and their travelling expenses?—Yes. With regard to the question of providing better hospital accommodation in outlying parts, I think it is excessively important. To take the part of Donegal with which I am best acquainted. I would say an hospital is urgently required at Dungloe or Burton Port; an hospital is also required at Carrick.

Aug. 11, 1908.
Dr. Wernack.

These hospitals may be very small, and as far as the question of economy is concerned they need only be offered when necessary.

1136. By the staff nurses?—By the staff nurses.

1137. What medical attendance?—That raises a large question. For the present, I would suggest that they be attended by the medical officer of the district in which the hospital is situated, with the assistance, perhaps, of an adjoining medical officer if necessary. My idea is that the present Poor Law medical service should be converted into a State service. When you consider the small amount at present levied of the rates towards the salaries of the medical officers, the nursing staff, and medical appliances, I think the Government would act wisely in taking over the whole thing and appointing officers to it by competitive examination, and establish a system of prosecution. I don't think I have anything further to say.

1138. Dr. Brogan.—Would you suggest anything about the county infirmaries—how they could be improved?—Except by the establishment of pay wards in them.

1139. Would you suggest that for the county they might possibly get the major operations performed in the county infirmaries?—Yes; I think that in case of major operations they might with advantage be transferred to the county infirmaries, the doctor of the hospital from which they were transferred assisting at the operation; that is, where the nursing staff of the district hospital was not sufficient.

1140. CHAIRMAN.—Or the appliances?—Or the appliances. Of course, some of these operations require very costly appliances; to provide a hospital with the necessary appliances to perform the work required in modern surgery means an expenditure of at least £500 or £600. An operation theatre is a very expensive item, and the appliances connected with it. To have these in every small hospital in the county would mean a very large initial expense.

1141. It would be hardly possible for a local doctor to accompany a patient to the hospital for an operation?—That would be a matter of arrangement.

1142. He could not leave Denegal, for instance, and go off to Lifford?—That would be a matter of arrangement between the surgeon to the county infirmaries and the medical officer of the district hospital, with the approval and consent of the infirmaries board.

1143. It is not an essential part of the scheme?—No.

1144. Dr. Brogan.—With regard to the treatment of consumptives, what is your idea—what arrangement would you suggest in case of that kind?—I think that a number of counties should combine and provide accommodation for consumptives. It is impossible to provide sanatorium treatment in the workhouses as at present constituted; it would mean very great expense to provide the accommodation and a special nursing staff; it would be much more economical, in the end, to have a large sanatorium to which patients might be sent from two or three or four counties, as the case might be, according to the numbers, the cost, of course, to be contributed in proportion by the counties. The numbers at present are small; we hope they will become very much smaller; they are so small that it would be extremely expensive to provide a nursing staff in each district hospital, or even for one county. I think several counties should combine. It is an extremely important matter, not so much for the immediate treatment of the patients themselves as for the alarming influence it will have upon the patients and the patients' friends; a patient sent to one of those sanatoria or consumptive homes, even for a period of two or three months, will be so educated that, first of all, he will learn the routine of the treatment and how to protect others from his disease, and how to lead a sanitary life himself; he will get rid of the dread of life in the open air; he will get rid of the dread of draughts, and learn the importance of attending to a particular line of diet. These are things that can only be taught practically by residence in a home; no amount of theoretical teaching will have the same effect as a residence in a home will have.

1145. Even a temporary residence?—Even a temporary residence will have a good effect; even a month's residence. There is no reason why a patient treated in one of these homes for a short period should not return to his own home without being a risk to others, and why he should not lead an open-air life and be benefited himself and cured, as far as these cases can be cured. That is one of the things that will impress on people the fact that consumption is as dangerous a disease as fever; that it can be communicated as fever can.

1146. By separating the infirmaries from the rest of the workhouse what advantages would be gained?—The first advantage would be that people of a class would come into the hospital for treatment who do not now come in. That is the chief advantage it would have.

1147. Would a larger number avail themselves of the hospital of the district, and pay for their treatment there?—Undoubtedly; as it is at present numbers have come in, and pay the average cost of the hospital, or whatever sum the Guardians may fix. But a greater number would come, I have not the smallest doubt, with great advantage to themselves and the community at large, if the hospitals were separated entirely from the workhouse.

1148. CHAIRMAN.—You would leave the scale of fees to the managing body, with the advice of the doctor?—Certainly.

1149. If a man or woman comes in—the head of a family comes in—the earning member of a family comes in—nothing could be paid, practically, by him?—Nothing would be asked, I am sure, by the Board.

1150. But if a child came in whose father was earning—one might earn 10s., another 15s., another might be a farmer with a considerable valuation?—I would leave that entirely to the discretion of the local body.

1151. Dr. Brogan.—Not to have any fixed charge, but a different charge?—Not to have a fixed charge, but to have charges apportioned to the means of the patient, according to the discretion of the governing body.

1152. It would tend to save life?—It would tend to increase the reality of these district hospitals, and save the life of people living in the district.

1153. CHAIRMAN.—And reduce the rates?—I have no doubt that it would reduce the rates.

1154. Have you really incense in your charge in the Denegal workhouse?—Not at present.

1155. They have all been taken to Letterkenny?—Yes. We have one or two simple cases; you would not call them incense; one might come under the head of incense.

1156. Would you consider it desirable to draft even these away from the workhouse?—I cannot say there are any at present in Denegal workhouses whom it would be necessary to draft away.

1157. Would you keep any mentally incense?—I would not keep any mentally incense cases in workhouses at all, or in workhouse hospitals.

Mr. JOHN A. LEON examined.

Mr. John A. Leon.

1158. CHAIRMAN.—You are a County Councillor and a member of the Infirmaries Committee and of the Lunatic Asylums Committee?—Yes.

1159. I think you were present to-day when some questions were asked?—I was, sir; if I can answer any of them I will be very pleased to do so. Dr. Hetherington is away from home.

1160. The question was considered by the County Council whether it would be judicious to have auxiliary lunatic asylums, and they apparently thought that a lunatic asylum might be started at Limerick. Is that correct?—I was not present at that meeting; but you have had that evidence from Mr. Adams.

1161. You don't know what statistics were considered. Can you tell anything of the cost of patients in district asylums?—Without making any deduction for paying patients or other miscellaneous expenses, the cost is £25 13s. 1d. per head per year, the net cost is £24 4s. 2d.

1162. Were any figures gone into about what the probable cost would be if an auxiliary asylum was started?—I was not present at the meeting.

1163. You have not heard anything?—No, sir. The County Council are building a block at Granah, at a cost of £22,190, to accommodate 100 male patients. The number at present in Londonderry Lunatic Asylum is 500, and there are 60 of those at Granah; the committee are building a new block to accommodate 100 patients more at Granah, which would be 160 altogether.

1164. Are both sexes at Gransha or only one?—The males are at Gransha.

1165. Dr. BROWN.—Your present asylum is overcrowded?—Yes; 366 the asylum is built to accommodate at present; the actual number, I should say, in the asylum at present is 448.

1166. CHAIRMAN.—That is including Gransha?—Yes; but the daily average number resident in the asylum for 1903 was 699; of course that varies greatly from month to month, as after our Board meets, which is every month, there are a lot of discharges, and it would not be fair to take the numbers on any one particular day, but the average for the year is 500.

1167. In considering the accommodation you have to look to the greatest number?—Yes.

1168. The variation is not very great from 430 to 500?—No.

1169. Dr. BROWN.—Did I understand you to say that it cost £24 per year to keep each person in the asylum?—£24 3s. 6d. is the net cost, after making deductions for paying patients. They receive £365 a year from paying patients; it is £25 12s. 6d. without that.

1170. That is less than 10s. a week?—Yes.

1171. Is that £25 do you include establishment charges, that is, interest on loans, if there are any?—No; the annual average charge, without any deduction for expenditure, is £29 8s. 5d.

1172. What does that include—that includes everything?—Yes; superannuation, repayment of loans, ground rent.

1173. Is there a certain rent for Gransha in that?—We require, now, to charge a rent for it.

1174. And that is included in the £29?—Yes.

1175. Although you are not using it to any extent?—Oh, yes, we made a considerable profit this year.

1176. Not a profit equal to the rent?—Oh, yes, considerably more than it.

1177. Is that counting the labour you get from the asylum?—No, it is not putting any estimate on the labour.

1178. But you are feeding these people, and still charging nothing opposite it?—No.

1179. In the workhouse have you any idea how much it costs for a lunatic to be kept there?—Yes; I should think they don't cost more in the workhouse than the other place; 3s. 6d. in the infirmary and 2s. 3d. in the home.

1180. Do you think 3s. 6d. pays for the upkeep of a patient in any workhouse?—I do.

1181. Do you know how that 3s. 6d. is made up?—That is the actual cost of the food.

1182. Only food, not clothing?—No.

1183. No establishment charges, nothing for the doctors, nurses, master, or clerk?—I should say it would cost 6s.

1184. Do you really think 6s. would cover it?—The only thing I have to guide me in making that statement is occasionally, when a person comes in for treatment in the fever hospital, and wants to pay, I have heard the master asked what, in his opinion, would cover the cost of the treatment that the patient receives, and he usually says about 6s.

1185. That is not allowing one penny for the salary of the nurse or doctor. In the £29, which is the cost of an inmate in the asylum, you include everything, whereas in the workhouse you are comparing the 3s. 6d., which is merely a matter of food?—I was not comparing these.

1186. If you added on all those things you think 6s. would cover it?—I have stated to you the only reason I have for mentioning 6s. is, that the master said, in his opinion, 6s. would be the reasonable thing.

1187. I don't think many Guardians have ever looked at this in that way; they generally take the 3s. 6d. or 2s. 3d. as the cost of the patient, and they never reason beyond that. If you take the capitation grant, 4s., and add it on to the expense of a lunatic in the workhouse, there is no saving in keeping a lunatic in the workhouse?—Is it drawn by the asylum authorities for patients in the workhouse?

1188. Oh, no, it is drawn for patients in the asylum?—I could get you those figures, if you wish.

1189. You are a member of the infirmary committee also?—Dr. Cooke is here, and he can give evidence on that; he is the doctor.

1190. CHAIRMAN.—The Limavady Board of Guardians have considered the queries that have been issued, and they have decided against amalgamation for their own union?—They have; they think it would not be an advantage to the ratepayers or the sick poor, and it would leave them practically no representative; they would be virtually without representation if they had to go to Coleraine or Derry. Those are the main grounds on which we object to amalgamation.

1191. Has Limavady always had a workhouse?—Well, since 1843. I have some statistics here. It was built to accommodate 660 persons, and the fever hospital 32; there has been expended on repairs and improvements since 1867, £215, varying from £203 to £200 each year. The salaries to the officers for the year 1903 amount to £548.

1192. Does that include the value of their food?—A goodly number of them are not fed; it includes the three chaplains, and the clerk and assistant clerk.

1193. Does it include salaries for the resident officers, master, nurses, and matron?—Yes, the cost of the inmates in the workhouse was £1,537 for 1903.

1194. Dr. BROWN.—How many is the average number?—317 for 1903.

1195. Do you mean to say a daily average?—317; the total expenditure for the year was £1,540.

1196. CHAIRMAN.—Does that include dispensary doctors?—No, none of the medical. As compared with Coleraine, Derry, and Magherafelt, the number of persons in Limavady relieved was 1,432, and out of two. The total amount expended in relief was £2,322. As compared with the other unions our poor rate expenditure was 7d. for poor relief alone, and 10d. the total expenditure, compared with 9d. and 1s. 0d. in Magherafelt, 6d. and 10d. in Derry, and 9d. and 1s. 0d. in Coleraine. In Coleraine the average yearly cost of each person was £22 8s., compared with £17 3s. 8d. in Limavady, £22 8s. 4d. in Magherafelt, and £20 0s. 7d. in Derry, showing a very considerable saving in the case of Limavady.

1197. What was your average rate in Limavady?—I don't know from memory.

1198. Are there any other figures you wish to mention?—No, nothing that I wish to mention. I should say that the cost of nursing increased by £140 in six years, including salaries.

1199. Dr. BROWN.—How much was the increase yearly?

CHAIRMAN.—How much did you pay six years ago?—In the infirmary it was £20 six years ago, now it is £35; in the fever hospital it was £15, now it is £30; workhouses £31 now, none in 1897.

1200. Dr. BROWN.—How many workhouse did you keep in 1897?—None apparently; none paid.

1201. You had inmates?—Yes.

1202. Probably three or four?—I cannot tell you; we probably have to keep three yet.

1203. CHAIRMAN.—You are not mentioning that except to show what an improvement has been made?—That is all, and to account for the increased expenditure. There was a very strong feeling among a number of Guardians that they considered the amount of that expenditure was not called for at all, but the Local Government Board insisted on it. With regard to the tramps, I have been inquiring from the master, and it is not considered a very important question in Limavady; they are so few and they are required to do 24 hours' work before breakfast in the morning, and the breakfast only costs one-third of a penny.

1204. What are the commitments of that meal?—I don't know, but the master has told me that you might reasonably conclude the 24 hours' work was worth their breakfast. The Limavady Board of Guardians, however, have decided that it would be better to erect tramp shelters, and not to allow them into the workhouse at all.

1205. Under the control of the Guardians or under the police?—Under police control, using the old beds for that purpose.

1206. Is there a disused hibernian in Limavady?—Yes.

1207. As regards getting contributions from patients, the Guardians are in favour of getting such contributions?—They are.

1208. How do they think payments ought to be charged?—That should be left to the discretion of the Guardians, according to the individual means of each patient.

1209. Would you have any insane people kept in the workhouse?—No, I think the insane should be maintained by Government funds.

1210. And altogether in an asylum?—Yes, if asylums were sufficient to contain them; at present the inmates of the Limavady workhouse are very useful, doing all the work of the farm, which yields a considerable profit each year. There are twenty-nine inmates, and they are very useful.

Aug 11, 1905

Mr. John A. Long

1211. You used to have a number of patients boarded out in the Limerick Workhouse from the asylum; does that go on still?—There are only three of the original patients left; there were eight originally sent down.

1212. But you have some boarded out there still?—Yes, three.

1213. They are not sent any more to you from time to time?—Oh, no.

1214. Did you try to get your lunatics taken by the asylum?—No, we did not make any effort.

Mr. James Gannon, A.S., examined.

Mr. John Gagg.

1220. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Derry Board of Guardians?—Yes.

1221. You were kind enough to furnish me with a short abstract of the evidence you intend to give. As regards union rating, what opinion have you formed?—I have formed a very strong opinion that union rating should be done away with, and each electoral division should be called upon to pay for its own poor.

1222. That is going back absolutely to the old principle?—Exactly. I consider that if this arrangement was made, the representatives would take much more interest in union affairs, and there would be a chance of giving outdoor relief without the risk of having it abused, as, in the case of union rating, everybody is prepared to recommend outdoor relief coming off such a broad back.

1223. You are not speaking of the Derry Board of Guardians in that statement?—I say everyone is more willing to give it when the relief comes off a large valuation.

1224. Not in Derry?—I should say it applies to every place.

1225. 260 a year is not very liberal?—We don't go in for it in the Derry Union; we are very much against it.

1226. You would like to adopt divisional rating to reduce the 260?—No, to add to it if possible. The only chance of giving outdoor relief in a manner that I would call fair to the ratepayers would be by divisional rating. Then the Guardians would have the responsibility if their recommendations were followed; you would fire the responsibility down to a small spot that you could lay your finger on.

1227. Mr. MURPHY.—You think the present practice of the Derry Guardians sometimes acts harshly in deserving cases?—It must be admitted that it would have that effect in deserving cases, but there is hardly a Guardian of the sixty who has not in his mind twenty as deserving cases in his own neighbourhood; yet he would not recommend them, the amount would be so much it would swamp the union, and do away with private philanthropy.

1228. Yet there must be several cases in such a union where the people are really in want of sustenance and cannot get it: is that a fact?—I don't know that it is. I think that would hardly apply to our union. I would be sorry to say that anybody in our union would starve if we did not give outdoor relief.

1229. But the practice is not to give it unless the doctor gives a certificate that they are not able to be removed?—That is the general practice; we are against making outdoor relief general.

1230. CHAIRMAN.—You would suggest that an alteration should be made in the question of rating, so that this outdoor relief might be extended in deserving cases?—I would say that there would be a chance of extending it in deserving cases without inflicting charges on people where they were not interested. For instance, a very small rated division, say one-fifth of the valuation of a large rated division; they send two representatives, and they have two votes, or say ten votes, against two to tax a large division with a lot of cases which they may call deserving, but still when they are run down to a fine thing they may not really be destitute. It is very hard to say where the fair play comes in.

1231. That is the distinction between poverty and destitution?—There is many a man deserving that is not destitute, and still if you give every deserving one, where would you stop?

1232. It is only to be given to the destitute under the law?—That is all. A person that has some little 1233. You don't object to it, because at present they are doing so much useful work?—Yes.

1234. What is the number of children in Limerick?—I think it is six, who are fit for being boarded out; six who are orphans and deserted.

1235. What about the numbers of other children?—I don't know exactly the number, but they are very few—about five.

1236. Dr. BROOKS.—How many children altogether have you?—About five, I think, speaking from memory, but they are very few.

1237. Five, and six who might be boarded out?—Six are boarded out.

thing could not be called destitute under the law, and still we are often called upon when a person has a trifle to supplement that trifle. But I do consider if we went back to divisional rating, and the representative of the division had a say in the matter, and was responsible to the division, they would be very careful about a recommendation.

1238. Of course the recommendation of a Guardian or of two Guardians is not binding on the Board of Guardians?—Decidedly not; but if the Board of Guardians see two Guardians of that division making out a very good case, and know divisional rating would have to pay, I don't suppose the Guardians for the moment would stop them giving relief.

1239. But they might fear it would spread?—I don't think so, as it would not come out of their pockets.

1240. Mr. MURPHY.—You think the practice would be to leave to every division the management of its own relief?—I would say, in a case of this sort, some statement should be made from a representative of the division, and my experience of public boards is that the representation from a division has always full weight. I hardly ever saw it otherwise.

1241. CHAIRMAN.—Sometimes they are allowed even to decide the question?—Sometimes they are.

1242. But you say at the present time there are several people who are willing to vote outdoor relief, knowing it comes on a very broad back?—Knowing they would not do it if it came of their own division. I must say that the District Council I represent are entirely in favour of divisional rating.

1243. Mr. MURPHY.—As regards sanitary matters?—I only refer to the Poor Law at present; of course I need hardly tell you the District Councils are all Guardians. No. 2 in my evidence I think is very important. That power should be given to the Guardians of each union to send a pauper to the union in which he was born, except he is qualified for relief by, say, five years' residence. Only those who cannot be traced to any particular division should be a union charge.

1244. CHAIRMAN.—That is virtually bringing in the English and Scotch law?—Exactly; it is very hard they can ship paupers over here and we have to hold on to those we have got—cannot transfer them.

1245. Do you get any English or Scotch?—Occasionally we do.

1246. You are not referring so much to the Scotch or English as people who might come from 100 miles down the country?—Decidedly. I would even send them to Strabane or Armagh. I don't see why, if an old man came down here and got destitute, or went on a spree here, that we should have to keep them. I mean to stop it all over.

1247. It may be as broad as it is long; you may be getting back some gentlemen that you had hitherto got rid of?—That is exactly the idea. I want to go on the lines of common honesty. I go on the lines that the Guardians should have a very wide discretion in everything so long as it affected their own individual poor.

1248. If one of your people was in Tipperary they would have a discretion to send him back here?—They would, but if they wished to allow him to remain, I would say by all means let him remain; that would give them control of their own internal affairs.

1249. Dr. BROOKS.—But they might not be able to go themselves, they might have to have someone to go with them, which would be more expensive?—That is so, but those matters should be left to the Guardians to do as they wished.

Aug. 11, 1902.

Mr. John
Gregg.

1263. It would not be the Guardians who would be receiving them?—The Guardians who were shipping them off should provide for the transit. If they wished to send them away I say they should have power to do so.

1264. CHAIRMAN.—There has been a great deal said about this question of settlements for many years. You would like to have a law of settlement similar to that in England and Scotland?—Yes. No. 3 is another important matter—that the relieving officer's power of giving lines for admission to workhouses should be done away with, and that all admissions should be at the gate by the master. I think it is only a farce giving lines by the relieving officer; there is nothing in it, and, putting it in another way, it is almost an abuse. A person goes to the relieving officer and demands a line; then they go and do whatever they like until it suits them; then at any hour of the night they go to the workhouse and demand admission. I saw a case recently where a ticket was issued by the relieving officer at 6 o'clock in the evening to an able-bodied woman living in Fahan Street, and she arrived herself about 11.30 at night, then she rapped up the house, showed her ticket, and demanded admission. I think admission should be at the gate.

1267. What duties would you assign to the relieving officer?—I would take that duty off him. I don't say what I would assign to him. Giving lines for admission to the workhouse I would take off him altogether.

1268. In the case of a relieving officer who lived in the relief district in which the workhouse was situated; but would you take it away from a relieving officer living, say, at Clandy: would you not allow the relieving officer at Clandy to give a ticket for admission?—We have no relieving officer at Clandy; we have one for the entire union living in Derry; that a man coming in from Clandy should go to William-street to get a ticket for admission to the Workhouse is, I think, a laborious process. No. 4: Every person admitted should be compelled to put on the clothes provided, in order to have their own property searched. If any money or valuables are found, expenses of maintenance should be deducted. I have known a case within the last two years where one man in harvest time worked for a neighbouring farmer for close on a week, and came in each night and got relief in the workhouse, and on Saturday night when he was paid his wages, he came into the workhouse with it and was not properly searched. Casual admissions must be done away with altogether. Class 5 I consider a very important one. There is in every town of any size, and in country districts in a less degree, a class of loafers, some with a sort of trade, such as tin and locksmiths, strolling musicians, women of loose character, and men of easy drunken habits, in many cases accompanied by children. At present in a workhouse like Derry there are running in and out, in some cases as often as three or four times a week. The number of admissions varies from fifteen to twenty to, in exceptional times, say fifty per week. The Guardians have no power to refuse and no power to detain such people. Power should be given to Guardians to bring all such cases before the magistrates on, say, the third admission, the case to be proved by the workhouse master or porter. That is one of the greatest abuses we have of the relief in the Derry Union. You would hardly call this class tramps, but they make the workhouse a lodging; they very often come on Saturday night and spend Sunday with us, and leave on Monday morning.

1269. Mr. Scott gave evidence that the English law should be applied.—That is what I am coming on to. Vagrancy should be dealt with entirely through the Royal Irish Constabulary. The difficulties and expenses attached to proceedings in the way of summons, evidence, and arrest at present make Guardians allow many to go free who should be taken to jail. It is admitted that the Royal Irish Constabulary have perfect machinery for this purpose, but Boards of Guardians have none. I think the Royal Irish Constabulary could do a lot in the way of assisting us, and keep a lot of these vagrants from coming to the house. The Board of Guardians, on the 17th of March last, passed a resolution:—"Resolved, that the Clerk be instructed to write to Mr. Leathem, County Inspector, Royal Irish Constabulary, asking him to appoint one constable to call at the workhouse each morning to inspect the tramps, instead of a different man each day, as at present. Also asking him to allow his men to arrest and prosecute any vagrants found in the workhouse, such as tramps coming into the workhouse more than once in the year, or deserting children, if any such case comes under their observation or is pointed out to them by any workhouse official who offers evidence sufficient to convict." Our object was to get the Constabulary to take up the prosecutions and save us the cost of going to a solicitor, which made the maintenance of the vagrant a small thing in proportion to the cost of prosecuting him. The Royal Irish Constabulary were in the habit of sending a different man every morning to inspect; we thought that if they sent one man constant he would get to know them. The County Inspector replied, stating he would have one man appointed to call at the workhouse, the other matter had been submitted for instructions. On the 7th of April, 1903, read letter of 2nd inst. from the County Inspector, Royal Irish Constabulary, in reference to the police arresting and prosecuting tramps coming into the workhouse more than once in the year, and stating that going to work in taking over the duties of the Guardians. The District Inspector, however, would be prepared to take up any cases in which he should present. I think the Royal Irish Constabulary could do very much more than they are doing without any trouble to themselves, because they are not a very over-weighted body of men, and they could do a good deal in stamping out vagrants. It is not what these men cost us in the workhouse, but the demoralising effect; they tramp the country for the greater part of their life and generally end in some workhouse.

1290. You would try and abolish these tramps by making the workhouse very unpleasant for them?—Exactly. I think there is no reason why in Ireland, where we have such a declining population and such a number of people wanting labourers in the country, there is no earthly reason why we should have a place for able-bodied inside, and if we commenced to set them to work inside they would see that they had better work outside. The present rule for discharge on giving three hours' notice should be abolished, and the time of discharge, with a maximum and minimum, stated or fixed, be left in the Guardians' hands—maximum, say, one week, or until a Board meeting decides; if such meeting be held within one week, a maximum might be fixed by arrangements of, say, two days to meet exceptional cases; no discharge to be given in any case in less than forty-eight hours. By this change work could be got out of such inmates which is impossible under present regulations as to discharge. A workmaster, who could instruct and organise in, say, at least two suitable trades, should be appointed to each workhouse of, say, about the size of Derry. This officer would be responsible for all labour and nothing else, and would in many cases where the children go out to school, save a schoolmaster being employed, and also take a lot of work off the master's hands. This man should be paid half by the Guardians and half by the Local Government Board, same as the nurse of the workhouse, for by paying half the Local Government Board could and would insist on a properly qualified man only being appointed. In our present workhouse we have a land steward, who acts as a wardman and looks after the advice in the house, and we have also a schoolmaster and a schoolmistress. If a workmaster was appointed, I hold he could do the work of both the land steward and of the schoolmaster; when we are sending the children out to school the schoolmistress could still be retained, who would both look after the children in her leisure hours and also give assistance to the master. It is my opinion that no limitation should be in the workhouse at all, neither do I consider that the county should be saddled with the expense of having another institution at Limerick, because we are getting on slowly with the building at Grangeha, where there is plenty of accommodation; and when it is completed I think it will be a perfect institution. I don't at all agree in multiplying the staff on different places here and there. If you allow Limerick to become a county auxiliary station the Local Government Board would insist on spending a few more thousands adding some more officials; you will have to superannuate the officials who are there at present, and then what will become of the sick at Limerick? I don't think that would be economy. The present system of workhouse hospitals, no matter what confinement is against it, would be hard to beat, taking Derry as an example, in treatment, comfort, and attendance. Cottage hospitals in rural districts would not work out economically owing to small and greatly scattered populations. Something might, however, be done by relief in kind to improve

Aug. 11, 1903,
Mr. John
Dugg.

the treatment of sick poor at home. Infectious disease should in every possible case be treated in a hospital, not only to benefit the patient, but to prevent its spreading. Something should be done to extend district nursing in rural districts.

1251. You say cottage hospitals would not work out economically. Have you only the Derry Union in mind?—That is all.

1252. You were not thinking of a case such as was mentioned here just now, where a union is forty miles long?—No; I am principally speaking from my own observation as a member of the Derry Board of Guardians.

1253. You don't think that any additional hospital accommodation is required in the union?—No, I do not. What I do think we should extend—I think you are aware that we tried to extend a system of district nursing to the rural districts. Of course, the unfortunate thing about it is that the most of the midwives are not exactly capable of taking up the work as a whole; but I believe it was one of the recommendations by a higher authority that it would work by having new appointments made with such qualifications that they could take up the duty. I also consider there should be relief in kind to the sick poor; the sick poor need more things than medicine when sickness comes amongst them; they can get medicine free, but find a difficulty in getting nourishing food and clothing free; but I do believe in having a depot at the dispensary under a committee that would look after the district nursing, and the same committee could look after the dispensary—a sort of dispensary and nursing committee who would have entire control. It is rather too much responsibility to leave in the doctor's hands; one doctor might be very sympathetic and do a lot, but they are human: where we might get one that would be perfect we might get another that would not trouble himself. I think a committee could manage the whole concern: control the district nursing, and keep a depot for little things, sheets or blankets. I know, in our dispensary some ladies provide sheets and blankets for our own dispensary nurses.

1254. You know the Guardians have such power at present?—Yes; but it is not recognised. I believe, if it was officially fostered by the Local Government Board, and they insisted on each midwife appointed having the qualifications of a nurse.

1255. That is not what I meant; I mean they have the power of giving relief in kind?—Yes; but it never would have the same effect as a control committee, or a committee who would manage the dispensary and look after the depot. We have been doing a lot since I became a member of the Board to improve the lot of the people inside, but, unfortunately, we can never get anything done to improve the lot of the people outside. It might be the means of keeping some of the people out of the house.

1256. I fancy the Guardians have power to do all that you recommend in those two paragraphs.—But we have not got the head; we want a committee with a nurse under them to manage the giving of this relief. Those things are never brought to me; we hardly ever know of a case of this sort. And another thing, the dispensaries have never been thoroughly looked after since they did away with the old dispensary committees.

1257. You could hardly expect relief in kind to be given when you have only one relieving officer for the whole union?—If there was a committee and nurse recognised as a district nurse, as well as a midwife and a doctor—a responsible individual—I have no hesitation in saying it could be given out by the committee without going to the relieving officer at all.

1258. Well, a committee to supervise these matters is the central idea of your recommendations?—Yes; a committee for each dispensary, to look after both the dispensaries and the doctor's lines and the medicines, and see that everything was going on right; although the dispensaries may not be neglected—I have every confidence the doctors are looking after them—but all the same, when the Guardians don't examine the books—

1259. If they had a qualified district nurse, and the necessary things were supplied to them, it would be an enormous advantage; that is your view?—Yes; to extend the system of district nursing there is in the towns to the rural districts is my idea.

1260. It is in a considerable number of rural districts?—Unfortunately it is not much in use.

1261. The next question was the workhouse classification?—I don't approve at all of having a different workhouse for a different class.

1262. You don't approve of having one class only in one building?—I do not. I heard it suggested to-day that there should be a sort of reformatory for able-bodied established for a large centre. If a man appears in a district, how would he be shipped to such a central institution—a really genuine case of an able-bodied man that wanted a couple of nights' lodging, how would he be sent to this central institution? Then you would have to centralise the infirm and the sick. A consequence look and forward, and the maintaining of these places on different lines, would never work out economically. I think if you establish more stringent laws with regard to the able-bodied, and give us power to detain them, and not make it so free and easy, in a short time you would stamp these able-bodied out; there are not so many of them coming in now.

1263. I don't know whether they are falling in proportion to the population?—You see the workhouses are so large that they could hold a great many more; in old times they used to pack them like herrings in barrels. If we tried, now, to do the things that were done twenty years ago we would receive a very severe reprimand from headquarters. There were times when we had fifty or sixty patients with one nurse, and that not a qualified one. I say the accommodation in Derry Workhouse is fairly well filled; if you had very much more you would make it rather uncomfortable. Classification should be improved, and a large discretion given to Guardians, who should be the best judges of the circumstances, which vary very much in different unions. I would do away with casuals or night lodgers by a change in the time of discharge; all would then go right into the house on admission. I would have Class 1, able-bodied, male and female, as at present; Class 2, aged and infirm, male and female, as at present. Class 3 I would have a superior aged and infirm class, with better accommodation and separation; but ratifies the same as now. This class is consist of decent people who are driven in by misfortune, and who come with a good character; the Board to select this superior class at admission, as for good conduct in the house. I think the number that would need to go into a class like this would not be more than 25 per cent. at the most, of the entire inmates. So far as the general routine of the house are concerned, I consider them good enough; the only trouble is separation. The ration are better than most people of the class are in the habit of having, and it would be an injustice to decent labourers outside if we attempted to give any class superior accommodation in the house to what any decent labourer can provide for his own family outside. If possible, I would set a good apart for decent old married couples, where they could live together, under special conditions. I think this could be met by sending the inmate to the asylum, and turning our present inmate wards, which are in good order, into wards of this class of superior accommodation. Of course, in giving this evidence my idea is altogether on the lines of economy. It is easy to get up and say establish hospitals here and there, but it all means cost; the people cannot afford to be taxed very much further than they are. The circumstances of each union vary so much that central regulations enforced on all would be an injustice; every labourer should be allowed under a vote of the Local Government Board. I do consider, where Boards of Guardians are instituted—as most of them are—to deal fairly and honestly with the people under their charge, they should be given very great latitude; and I must say, from my own experience of the Derry Guardians, if they sometimes do go out of the beaten track the Local Government Board has treated us very fairly in the matter.

1264. There is a special provision in the rules that any special division or classification you recommend the Local Government Board would very likely favourably consider your recommendations?—But I would like this to take the place of the idea that you would set up a separate institution. I don't think that would work out conveniently or economically; the getting to those separate institutions would be the whole trouble. We want to get one central place, where we can meet the needs of all within an easy distance. I think that is the great thing the Commissioners at starting the Poor Law did; they seem to have taken the map and a pair of compasses, and marked out a centre for each union that they considered a reasonable distance.

Aug. 12, 1903,
Mr. John
Gregg

1285. They were guided by taking a ten miles radius, as far as possible—I think they have done that pretty nearly. That is all I have to say.

1286. About the boarding out of children—I am entirely in favour of that; but I am not at all in favour of going so far as to very extensively take away the responsibility of parents for supporting their children.

1287. Suppose the parents are dissolute, unless people?—You would have to extend—1288. Would you not, for the sake of the children, do something?—I could understand your sending the parents to jail and taking the children for the term; if you gave a man two years I could quite understand your taking the children for that time.

1289. What do you say about illegitimate children?—Where they become homeless we always board that child right away, no matter what age, or what the child is.

1290. You have a number of children in the workhouse in Derry, and their mothers are there, too; would you propose to keep them in the workhouse still?—If they are illegitimate it would be a very serious question; it has been often discussed at our Board. With an illegitimate child the responsibility rests on one party; it is very hard to father it on one, and it is very easy to settle it on the other.

1291. Where you have no knowledge of the father, and can only look to the mother, would you propose to take away that child from the mother?—If she intended to live with the child in the workhouse continually, I would say, "Certainly, yes." But if it was her intention to take the child out and provide for it herself I would say, "Certainly not." I think it would be hard to do so. And then taking children from parents that are dissolute, and you board them out, it would be impossible to keep these children from the parents interfering with them afterwards; they would annoy the people that had the children.

1292. I believe that many such do follow their children?—It is only natural. The only thing you could do with the children, if you take them from their parents, is to send them to an industrial school; but you could not attempt to board them out unless the parents were in jail.

1293. As regards payment by people in aid of their support in hospital, have you considered that question?—As applied to the city of Derry it is hardly necessary to consider it. We have the county infirmary and the Foye Hill hospital, and the question of offering payment to us, I think, has only cropped up about once.

1294. I mean patients who come into your hospital in the workhouse. Some of them could pay a little—I don't know that they could. I am rather inclined to think that any patients that come to us could not.

1295. Take the case of a man's child that comes in. A child consumes a certain amount of food in the week. Suppose it comes in with an illness of a month; the parents are saved some small sum by the Guardians keeping the child. Should they not, at all events, pay that?—That is a very great question whether they should or not. The people who send children are generally very poor people, and I would be inclined to give them every consideration.

1296. Even a little payment, if a child comes in with a broken leg?—To put payments to the full amount—

1297. Not to the full amount. They could not pay that, very likely; but supposing you took as a measure what the child really costs the father and mother?—On the labouring class I would not be inclined to put anything. I think, when they get a misfortune of that sort, by visiting the child now and again, and the worry and necessary expense put on them, for all we would get out of it I am sure would not be the wish of the Board.

1298. It would not be any expense to the parents?—Well, supposing they lived at Gladdy, and sent a child to the workhouse in Derry, the cost of coming to see it occasionally—

1299. But supposing they were people from the city; would you charge them nothing?—Not a person who was only caring a small amount in the city.

1300. It would take away the Poor Law appearance from the hospital?—Anyone that would mind the Poor Law appearance of the hospital, and was worth a little money, never would send a child near it. It is a case hardly necessary to consider.

1301. Then you don't think it would be possible to economise by payments?—I don't believe it would be worth considering, so far as our hospital is concerned. If we get in any person who is able to pay, and know they are able to pay, we do ask them; but to make it compulsory, and try to recover the money, I don't think it would be worth it.

1302. Dr. Broome.—Do you know anything about the Foye Hill hospital?—Nothing, further than that it is there.

1303. You don't know how it is managed or supported?—No; all I know is the general opinion is that we have a much superior one at the Waterside.

1304. Do you think it a good thing that a town of the size of Derry should have two fever hospitals, both supported off the rates?—I dare say it is a sanitary protection for the city.

1305. But is not the city the larger proportion of the rateable value of the union?—It is rather more than half.

1306. And off the same ratepayers you are supporting the two institutions?—Well, we are; but country people are not treated in the Foye Hill Hospital.

1307. The city people are paying for the two hospitals?—I think they are entitled to pay a larger share, considering that 80 per cent. of the inmates of the fever hospital in the workhouse come from the city.

1308. The two cannot be as well managed. Would not one institution be better than the two?—It was the city authorities established Foye Hill hospital; for what purpose I don't know.

1309. Are any members of the County Borough Council here to give evidence?—I don't know; but if they did away with Foye Hill hospital and established a pay ward at the Waterside, it might be different.

1310. Or vice versa, one of the large hospitals might be made into a consumptive hospital, either one or the other; if the other took all the cases?—My idea is, if you are going to treat consumption right, a properly constituted central institution would be the only way to do it, and one of these hospitals might not be in a suitable place. I always do think that it is the Local Government Board should take the initiative and establish such a place, and charge us with the cost of maintenance.

1311. You would be quite willing to pay for the maintenance of the patients?—Yes; but the Local Government Board should erect it on a broad country at large location, because if you want to stamp out consumption it is for the benefit of the whole community.

1312. CHAIRMAN.—You don't mean that the Local Government Board should establish a hospital?—No; but help us to bear the cost, same as they help in dispensaries.

1313. What do you think should be done—that the Government should contribute a certain proportion?—To put up the establishment, and let, say, Ulster, or a large part of the country pay for the management.

1314. Who would manage it?—I suppose it would be managed by an infirmary committee.

1315. Appointed by the Derry County Council?—Yes; if you are going to stamp it out of the country it touches the whole community, and it is a very heavy tax. We, at the present time, are making efforts in Derry to isolate the cases of consumption, but we don't go any further than attempting to isolate.

1316. Dr. Broome.—Would not this idea of having a separate hospital be isolation in a much better sense than you are attempting?—We have only three patients.

1317. But you have a great many patients in the union, and you have not arrangements for them?—I question if they would come even if we had; so long as consumptive people's friends are able to keep them they would not send them into the workhouse.

1318. If they understood it was as infectious as it is, would they not?—Those are matters for the medical men to educate them up in.

1319. CHAIRMAN.—Dr. Bigger's idea is that if the union fever hospital building was recent it would do for an isolation hospital until something better came, without any cost?—We have consumption wards that I hold, will satisfy our own case for the present.

1320. They are not really cut off?—Oh, they are; perfect isolation.

1321. With stairs and grounds?—No grounds. We cannot go so far as that.

1322. You would if you took the fever hospital?—If you had the Foye Hill fever hospital.

1323. The idea in Dr. Bigger's mind seems to be that if any fever patients came the Guardians would let them go to Foye Hill, and let the union pay for them there; and then you would have your own fever hospital without paying a penny for it, and you would be charged less, I suppose, for patients at Foyle Hill?—Do you suggest making ours a consumption hospital?

Aug. 11, 1903.

Mr. John
Grogg.

1304. Dr. BROWN.—Either way?—I consider that the city, when taking away the old hospital for plague at Maghlin, were well instructed or advised in holding Foyle Hill against an epidemic of smallpox.

1305. It still could take your case, for they have a separate hospital for smallpox at Foyle Hill.—It is really a subject I am not prepared to argue. I would like to hear what proposal would be offered to us here. I would say, as a Guardian, whether we would be won in accepting it or not. We try to do the best we can; but we are all very much against adding anything to the rates.

1306. CHAIRMAN.—This is a suggestion to take something off the rates?—If you could show me that I would be very glad to fall in with it. A great many of these things look very nice upon paper, but when you come to work them out there are so many different things added that you can hardly express an opinion.

Mr. J. D.
Boyd.

1307. CHAIRMAN.—The abstract of the evidence you propose to offer is, first, as regards the amalgamation. You are a member of the Limerick Board of Guardians?—I have been a member for eleven years.

1308. It was suggested by somebody that Limerick was a union that might be abolished?—Yes, I heard it has been made; it has been made several times before the appointment of the Commission.

1309. What is your view of the matter?—The first thing I propose to mention is the great inconvenience. We have had this matter discussed on four or five occasions, and like a great many other unions, the Board of Guardians of Limerick approved at first of amalgamation in the abstract, but whenever it comes to be dealt with I find all over the country they immediately change their attitude. Within the past fortnight Letterkenny, Donegal, Magherafelt, and Coleraine, I find that they all disapprove of what will affect themselves. There is one thing I would like to refer to, and that is the action of the Antrim County Council. It was discussed there at great length, and a resolution was carried in favour of amalgamation. It is the only county in Ireland I know in which they approached the detailing of what unions should be amalgamated. It was proposed to amalgamate Ballycastle with Ballymoney, and Antrim with Larne and Ballymena, and although they appointed a day for the meeting of the committee of the County Council for the express purpose of the breaking up of the various unions, the result of the discussion when it was broached was that the committee appointed were so divided that when Mr. Agnew attended to carry out the arrangement, no one attended to meet him at all. I think that is very significant in itself as showing that they rush to the conclusion that amalgamation is desirable without considering the disadvantages and inconveniences. We are not a very large union, but the fact of the matter is that a great many members complain already of the great sacrifice of time and trouble in coming so far to attend the Board meetings.

1310. I suppose the ordinary meetings are attended only by the Guardians in the neighbourhood?—There is an average attendance for the Limerick Board out of forty-one members. Some of them have to come twelve miles, and of course it is a tax for a man not in a very good position in life. The distance from north to south is twenty-five miles, and from east to west fifteen miles. We think that for administrative purposes, if people are to have control of their own rates, the union is quite large enough without being thrown into any other. Of course the object of the Local Government Act was to give representation along with taxation, a thing that the country was calling out for as long as I can remember, and we considered that if we threw part of Limerick into Coleraine and another part into Derry, the ratepayers of the Limerick Union would be practically deprived of any control over the disbursement of their own rates; they could not attend so far. Then the inconvenience again with regard to the patients, even a healthy patient, someone would have to be sent with them at a cost; you could not start them on their way to walk to Coleraine or Derry.

1311. Have you made out a comparative statement of the distances?—Yes; twenty-five miles from north to south, and fifteen from east to west.

1312. That is not exactly what I mean. Take Feeny, that would go to Derry if it was amalgamated?—Feeny comes to us; it is one of our dispensary districts.

Mr. J. D. BORN, x.p., examined.

1313. If Limerick were broken up, would Feeny naturally go to Derry?—Yes.

1314. How far is it from Derry?—About eight miles.

1315. And how far from Limerick?—Thirteen miles.

1316. It is nearer Derry than Limerick?—Oh, yes, it is.

1317. Glenties, that seems to be very mountainous?—It is inaccessible. The Glenties people hardly send any papers anywhere; they have a good system of paying for the upkeep of their own poor at home by private subscription.

1318. Omeagh?—The same.

1319. How far is Dangan from Limerick?—Five miles.

1320. And how far is it from Derry?—About seventeen miles. Then another feature, we considered sending papers out of their own district is not unusual; it makes exiles of them; their friends would never see them if sent from Limerick to Coleraine or Derry, and it is the one bright spot in their lives to have friends coming to see them.

1321. When people go to your place from Feeny, do their friends go to see them?—They come occasionally.

1322. That is thirteen miles?—They will come occasionally, but distance makes them less likely.

Mr. LONG.—It is ten English miles from Glenties to Derry, and it is four from Glenties to Feeny.

Witness.—In any case there would be a great increase in inconvenience in all the unions, I think, at a rate. When we take up this position in Limerick, we take up a general position, because I think as a rule, for administrative purposes and convenience, almost any union I know is quite large enough, if properly managed and controlled by the people who pay taxes.

1323. Is Limerick the market town for the south part in which you live?—It is.

1324. Or is Dangan the market town?—No, it is not a market town at all; it is a good town for fairs.

1325. Is Derry the ordinary market town for Feeny?—Oh, no, but from Feeny a good many people make it their market town. It would rob people who pay taxes largely of a voice in the disbursement of the taxes.

1326. Would the Guardians for Feeny rather belong to Derry or Limerick?—I would take it they would rather belong to Limerick Union, since the Dangan railway has come to Limerick; that makes it much more convenient. If the infirmary would be left at the hospital at Limerick, the matter still becomes more serious, because the whole staff at present existing would still have to be kept at Limerick, and the Limerick ratepayers would have to pay for the upkeep of their healthy paupers at Coleraine and Derry, and there would be no disbursement of the staff. We challenge them to lay their finger on a single officer that could be dispensed with, or that somebody under another name would not take his place if the hospital and infirmary was left at Limerick. The staff is nearly all kept for the convenience of the hospital and infirmary. I can see no advantage, in the first place, in the ratepayers by amalgamation, and in the second, as far as I have heard the matter discussed, I can see no advantage to the poor even by amalgamation. The standard rate for the Limerick Union was the third lowest in all Ireland, and it almost maintains the position still, 6d. 4; for rates we have nothing to complain of, it is economically managed. We are the lowest per head of maintenance in the county, though they are all well managed. We are £17 per head, as against £22 the lowest of the other unions. I heard you ask Mr. Long the weekly rate of maintenance apart altogether from officials, that, averaging the infirmary with the healthy part of the house, is 7s. 2d., and the gross expenditure per head, including officers and everything else, is as near as possible 8s. 6d.

1327. Dr. Broom.—That is when a lunatic costs you 8s. 6d. a week?—Yes, to put them on an average.

1328. And in the asylum they cost a little over 10s. when you count the interest, but there is 4s. in capitation fees out of that; it only costs the ratepayers £18!—But we are very suspicious with regard to converting workhouses into auxiliary asylums, because we have our eye on that 4s. grant, which we lose by converting the workhouse into an auxiliary.

1329. No, but by sending your lunatics into the asylum proper you would be saving money?—We would much rather have it. I hold the opinion strongly that there should be no such thing as a lunatic of any class or imbeciles in the workhouse, and I am borne out in that by the correspondence I have had with some of the best known medical men. Dr. Graham, and Dr. Hetherington, seemed to none, and Dr. Nolan, they all speak strongly in favour of sending lunatics to the central lunatic asylums of Ireland, and they are the only institutions about which there has never been any complaint.

1330. About the management?—I would be strongly against keeping any class of imbeciles apart from the benefits of the central institution, where they have a first-rate trained staff and the means of attending to every case. I don't think there would be any objection about converting the workhouse into auxiliaries; the buildings are entirely unsuitable. In Limerick, where they tried it and asked tenders for converting an empty workhouse as against building fresh buildings, they found the saving was infinitesimal, and they adopted the plan of extending the asylum.

1331. Chairman.—What workhouse did they propose?—I don't know the workhouse.

1332. That was a great many years ago?—Yes.

1333. Was it Glenties workhouse?—Yes, but the argument was brought up at the discussion at the County Council of ANTRIM. If the infirmaries and hospitals are to be retained with all their staff, I see no great benefit. On the other hand, if these empty buildings were converted into auxiliaries, you are only getting rid of one staff to replace it with a more expensive staff still. The same applies to turning it into a district hospital.

1334. You don't approve of that?—I think the hospitals we have, with a very little more attention to their internal construction and a little more extension of the system of trained nurses as head nurses, which has effected a very marked improvement in all the infirmaries over the country, a little more extension would make them supply the wants of the rural districts very well. Take our own infirmary since we got a head nurse put in charge. A person who saw it two years ago would not know it, and there has been but a little increased cost.

1335. Dr. Broom.—It is well worth the money?—Yes, it did not cost very much. I believe the improvements that can be carried out in connection with the infirmaries of the country is more valuable than any alterations in buildings.

1336. Chairman.—The general idea is the conversion of the workhouses into district hospitals, so as to take away the old houses and associations?—There is something, I admit, in the association, but example is doing away with that.

1337. You think the change of management is doing away with that?—The change of management is doing away with it; respectable people have no hesitation in sending in patients to the fever hospital.

1338. Have they to the workhouse?—They don't as often come. They don't ask to come to the infirmary; but if we had the imbeciles out of our workhouse, the treated rooms could, with slight expense, be made into wards for paying patients, and I think they would come, because they would get better attendance.

1339. Dr. Broom.—Could it not be separated from the rest of the house?—The understanding has always been that if a workhouse was turned into an asylum of any kind, the whole hospital system—

1340. I am speaking of the conversion into a district hospital; could you not use your building, have a separate entrance, and call it a district hospital, and place it under a head nurse?—If that could be without expense, it would be a most desirable thing to do; if the thing gets fair play there would not be very many empty beds there.

1341. Chairman.—As regards the difficulty of making improved provision for classification?—I have a very strong feeling about that. I found the question asked at the Coleman Board by a gentleman the other day. He said he would be a bold man who would say that if the workhouse system were now being initiated there would be four workhouses planted in the County Derry. I quite agree with him, but I don't see anything in his argument. I think there would be no workhouses now at all if the Poor Law system was being initiated. I think it was a thing done hastily to meet a want at the time during the Famine, and it ran on wrong lines.

1342. A long time before the Famine?—I say the system came into operation to meet the wants of the Famine years.

1343. Long before that?—The Poor Law Acts commenced in 1838; the only ones we have any experience of.

1344. 1845, 1846, 1847, and 1848 were the years of the great Famine?—Well, 1838 is not very long before it.

1345. It was not in view of the Famine years?—Not in view, but to meet that lots of things were next turned on to local management, which made it a mistake. I hope that this inquiry will result more than anything else in classification of the present class of persons who go for indoor relief.

1346. What kind of classification; what would be the mode of classification?—My idea is that even if you maintain the workhouses as they are, with scarcely any additional cost, that those who should be classed as the deserving poor, that found their way into these places without any fault of their own, because they earned no wages, and when they got old and infirm were unable to earn, and their children having married had their own families to support, people of that class that behaved themselves well I think they should not be kept in the workhouse at all. I would not keep them under the present system of outdoor relief, because I think it is badly abused; but I would advocate the boarding-out of all of that class, together with all children under fourteen or fifteen, with poor relatives or friends in their own position, and I would undertake myself within a month to board out in a satisfactory way all that class in the Limerick Workhouse. I will undertake to have them satisfactorily placed out in that way in a month, and they will have more of a home life, and it is better than any system putting them into almshouses or workhouses. On Saturday last I went through our own workhouse at Limerick, and went in with the master into all the cases. I know them personally. A good few of those I would class as deserving poor. There were nine children under fifteen I would board out, ten women of the deserving poor, and twelve men; in all, thirty-one. There were in the house on the same day, lunatics or imbeciles, thirty; there were thirty in the infirmary, and there were in the house, either through drink, or immoral conduct, or bad behaviour, thirteen, making a total of 104, the exact number in the house on Saturday last. If you deal with that thirty-one in the way I say that I believe it could be done to the utmost satisfaction for the poor themselves, and perfect edify, by putting them under the supervision of your lady inspectors, or other inspectors, who could go about and examine their state and condition, and how they were treated, the same as your lady inspectors do now in conjunction with the relieving officer and doctor. I believe they could be classified very satisfactorily from every point of view. I believe that the 4s. which would be roughly the maintenance cost in the workhouse—

1347. That is as regards the existing inmates of the workhouse?—Yes.

1348. Would you be apprehensive that a number of people in poorhouses would come flocking to you and ask you to board them out?—I would not see any difficulty in that; we could go into their cases just as easily as the thirty that do.

1349. How you had people so very poor that they were willing to come into the workhouse; do you think you would look into cases sufficiently closely and well as to board out other cases who had not shown by their willingness to come into the workhouse the same sign of destitution?—If you maintain the existing test, the workhouse test.

Aug. 11, 1898.
No. 1 D.
Supt.

Aug. 11, 1903.

Mr. J. D.
Byrd.

1380. Dr. BROWN.—Would you make them go into the workhouse for a certain time before you boarded them out?—We do that with a certain kind of relief now. I don't think that would demoralise them at all.

1381. CHAIRMAN.—An observation would?—I would go strongly for removing the decision out of the hands of local people, because the clergy of the different denominations would be inclined to get ruled for those who were poor, and the Guardians themselves, I find, often would advocate relief of that kind in order to make themselves favourites with the electors. I think an conjunction with the doctor and relieving officer, an official of the Local Government Board, who could not be got at by local influences, should have something to say to their cases. They would be taken under observation until he came round, and it would be his business to see that they were properly adapted to that favoured condition, and although 4s. a week is a small sum, with us in our district a labouring man for his whole family will not have more than 9s. close of his home rent. And if it is his old father or mother he has had to let go in there because he cannot keep them, if you add 4s. to 9s., he will have 13s.

1382. He would probably make a profit on it?—Perhaps he would, and he would have someone to look after his family when he was out at work. My theory that lunatics and imbeciles should be removed away from the other class. For the infirm, I would still like them to be properly treated in some infirmary or hospital; whether you make it a district one, or return the present one under improved conditions, it does not so very much matter.

1383. Mr. MURKIN.—Before you pass away from that subject, you are making a strong statement in favour of the amalgamation of Limerick Union?—Against it.

1384. No, but for it; you have said that there are thirty-one inmates in the house that you would desire to see boarded-out in cottages?—Yes.

1385. Then you say there are thirty epileptics who should go to the asylum; that takes sixty-one out of your house—what would you have the house for after that?—I would just have it for the infirmary. I suppose there is no intention of doing away with that.

1386. You have been advocating altogether the wiping out of your own union. You ask that thirty-one should be sent to cottage houses, and thirty epileptics sent to the lunatic asylums, and you tell us there are thirteen people of vicious character, so that the house would be for them and the thirty infirm?—Yes.

1387. Don't you think that would be an expensive thing, to keep up a large institution for forty-three people?—It would be very expensive; but how are you to get rid of it? If there is any way to be shown through amalgamation of how you can get rid of that condition, then I am silenced, but I have not seen that suggested by any person. You may get rid of it by district hospitals, but that is creating a more expensive hospital system for the small number of thirty; you must get cheaper before you reject it even, for the number is small. Say you shift them to the district hospital at Coleraine.

1388. When you get rid of the two-thirds we will have to look for some place for the other one-third?—Then you take them out of the control of their own ratepayers, Guardians, and people, and do away with representation altogether, and there is no good, even in that case, that there would be any great saving. Even go further, and leave only the thirty, the existing number in the infirmary—even if you were to keep it there for the thirty I would go further, and keep those that brought themselves into the house by drink or immoral conduct, I would keep them under a stricter discipline or less favoured circumstances than the boarded-out ones; or I would adopt a plan of making arrangements with some other union for keeping our paupers at so much a head, and I would not have any hesitation in dealing with the immoral class in that way, because you deserve to differentiate between them and the respectable ones, and I think it would be a hardship on them that you would remove them from their friends by sending them to Coleraine, Ballymoney, or somewhere else. I think they deserve that difference.

1389. CHAIRMAN.—You prefer divisional rating, I see?—Yes.

1390. You had experience of the old system, and you have had experience of the new, and you would like to go back to the old?—I had four years of the old and seven of the new. I was in favour of the new system at first, until I saw it tested. I have expressed myself so; and that is pure a sense of responsibility, it kept a particular division from passing upon some other division some change that they thought they could do, without passing upon them, because it cost those who proposed it nothing themselves. But I find in the working it acts the other way: makes them careless. And it operates far worse in the District Council than in the Board of Guardians, because there is more room for abuse, with regard to labourer's cottages and sanitary work. I have seen wonderful attempts, because it was coming from broad lands, to get something done; whereas if it was divisional rating they would have to pay for their own case. There is the matter of the tramps I have heard discussed here.

1391. Query 51.—That is with regard to changes in the existing hospitals; I have already expressed my views. I would say, however, in connection with that, that no doubt there will be amalgamation of some workhouses, if the people are allowed to get their own way, and perhaps the proposal to convert existing empty workhouses into district hospitals. I think it would meet the common desire, especially of those who might be paying patients, better if the same amount of money was expended on a more modest district hospital in each dispensary district.

1392. A new building?—Yes. I made a calculation that it would take about £3,000 in our own district.

1393. For how many beds?—About twelve beds would be quite sufficient, both to accommodate paying and pauper patients—about £3,000 in each dispensary district; but, of course, you will see that it would bring the poor much nearer their own friends and homes to have them in their own districts; and the dispensary doctors are crying out they are not well enough paid, and if they were made the head medical officer of each of these hospitals you could afford to double their salary at any rate. With one trained nurse, one matronly nurse, and wardmaid, it would take, in Limerick, a sanitary rate of 7d., as well as providing for the boarded-out and the unimpaired. At the same time, my impression is that to plant one district hospital would cost quite as much. I may be wrong in that. I know the cottage hospitals are the favourite places to go, wherever established, for paying patients; and I believe a very considerable amount of income could be got from that.

1394. Dr. BROWN.—Have you any personal knowledge of such a cottage?—Only with respect to Coleraine—from respectable people going there.

1395. From your district?—Oh, no. But if they were planted in the dispensary districts they would be just as near.

1396. You think there should be one for each dispensary district, or one for two dispensary districts?—That would be a matter of arrangement with regard to convenience.

1397. Would not that be expensive—one for each dispensary district?—Yes. This is also in the abstract. I am not looking at it with the possibility of Limerick being wiped out. I preferred this with the statement that I had no doubt there would be here and there workhouses affected as the result of this Commission, and I only made the suggestion that might be an alternative scheme for providing hospitals instead of one large central institution; that was all.

1398. CHAIRMAN.—What, now, would you do with the tramps?—I think the claims of humanity require that something should be done—some shelter. I go for what I would call tramp shelters, outside the workhouse, because I think those people are a class of people, as a rule, in my experience of them, that ought to be kept in very close touch with the police, and workhouse authorities have no right to be troubled with them. The expense is not very great; the average expense for all Ireland is only 2d. per head per night, and in Limerick it is only about 1d.; and it would not be on that account. But half of them are people that the police will look out for, and I think they should be discouraged from coming about in every possible way. I remember, when I was younger than I am now—thirteen years of age—there was a Bill brought in by Mr. MacCarthy, who was member for the Co. Tyrone, for the amalgamation of workhouses, and the tramp difficulty, when raised in the House of Commons, was what made him withdraw the Bill. It was just at that particular time that the bedwells were being abolished altogether—about forty-five years ago—and I thought that they might be utilized, with a very slight addition, at that time, for tramps, and I think so still. I think, in many places, either the town hall or the bedwells could be utilized as a tramp shelter. I made inquiries in Scotland, where, under some of their old laws, where the towns are governed by a provost and magistrates, they adopted that there, and it worked very well; they took no trouble; they brought the tramps into these shelters rather than have it said that the tramps were allowed to perish through cold or hunger, gave them a bread bench and a blanket, and in winter a fire, and some bread and water, and next morning turned them out. I think the same thing will meet the want still. I wrote recently to the town of Edinburgh to see if the system still prevailed; and although it worked well enough it did not now exist, because the Local Government Board in Edinburgh found out that the law did not give them any right to shut out of the Burgh Rates for the provision of these people. I would have all these places connected by telephone with the police barracks, so that if there was any disturbance the police could be brought on the spot. I think at present all the workhouses should be connected with the police barracks, because there are rows sometimes. In my capacity as a magistrate I have sentenced two tramps to a month in jail. They came in three times within the last three months. I don't think they deserve any commiseration. With regard to the right of admission, I don't think they have any right; I don't think the workhouse authorities have any right to be troubled with them at all; they have been seen going up to the workhouse and taking halfpence or money under a stone, and coming back next morning and carrying it away. They put their wives into common lodging-houses with £d., and go themselves to these places, and their wives would keep the money for them until they came out. But like the Scotch people, I would not like to see them perish; but I would make a very small provision do for them. We had a division on the question of amalgamation before our own Board a fortnight ago, when by seven to seven they voted for every proposition I have put before you.

1361c. Had you seven in favour of amalgamation?—We had seven in favour of amalgamation and seven for it.

1362. I did not know you would have had any for it?—Yes; but within the last two years they voted the other way, until they began to look closely into the matter, like the Antrim County Council.

1363a. Mr. MURRAY:—They voted for amalgamation previously?—They did on two occasions, and on two another way; but on the first two occasions by very narrow majorities.

1363b. Perhaps the recent change was due to your discharges?—Oh, no, they are men able to think for themselves. All the arguments for that they attempted before was simply that the house was built for 700, there are only 100 in it now, and therefore there must be a change, and there must be a saving in amalgamation. I never heard anything better than that.

Aug. 14, 1903.
Mr. J. D.
Boyd.

Mr. SAMUEL CHASEY examined.

1363c. CHAIRMAN:—You are a member of the Urban Council of Lonsdale?—I have been a member of the Urban Council for twelve or thirteen years, and the Council are unanimously against amalgamation.

1363. You heard Mr. Boyd's evidence?—Yes, sir, I did.

1363a. Do you agree pretty much with him as regards the arguments against amalgamation?—Yes, I do.

1363b. Have you anything further that you would like to add?—Well, no; the Urban Council as a whole do not consider that it would be to the advantage of the poor to be amalgamated, as it would put them under very great inconvenience and hardship in being removed from their friends; and they did not consider it would be to the advantage of the ratepayers to be amalgamated. That is the reason they very much prefer matters to remain as they are. With regard to the expense of the upkeep of the establishment, it is wrought on very economical principles; there is a small farm connected with the union, and the master is able, on an average, to make a clear profit of close on £200 a year, and therefore it is not considered to be very extravagant.

1364. Have they their own cows there now?—Yes; they keep a number of cows, and labour this farm to great advantage, and use the produce for the feeding of the cattle, and the potatoes for the house.

Mr. Samuel
Chasey.

The sitting was adjourned.

FOURTH PUBLIC SITTING—WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 12TH, 1903.

At the Courthouse, Londonderry.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman); Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. COBY BAKER.

Dr. THOMAS McLAUGHLIN examined.

Aug. 12, 1903.

Dr. Thomas
McLaughlin.

1365. Dr. BROWN.—You have been appointed by the Derry Board of Guardians to give us evidence?—Yes.

1366. Is there anything you would wish to state to us?—I am not in favour of any amalgamation.

1367. Why?—I think the pension claims would be rather a sort of counterbalance to any benefits arising from amalgamation.

1368. If there was not such a thing as their dying out?—It would be a long time before that.

1369. Would not the benefit be an increasing one?—Well, I suppose it might in time.

1370. Regarding the different classes that are in the Derry Workhouse, have you any opinion to express as regards some of the classes that might be removed?—I would like to see a better classification of the infants, and with regard to the aged couples coming in I would like to have them a little better cared.

1371. Give them separate apartments?—Yes.

1372. Do you know that in some of the workhouses in England that has not been a very great success?—I don't know; I think it ought to work. It is a great pity to separate aged couples when they are driven to the workhouse.

1373. About the children?—Boarding out, by all means.

1374. Would you be inclined to increase the boarding out?—If it were possible I would have no children about the workhouse at all.

1375. About removing children from the care of their one parent, illegitimate children?—I would say a good deal would depend on the character of the mother; but, in the first case, I would hardly go so far as to take the child away; but if the mother was showing signs of leading a vicious life, or of falling again, I would take the child from her.

1376. CHAIRMAN.—You think it would be prudent to take discretionary power?—I do.

1377. Dr. BROWN.—Regarding the lunatics?—I think they should all be sent to the asylum; the workhouse is not the place for them at all; they would be better looked after in the asylum.

1378. You would remove them entirely from the workhouse?—Yes.

1379. Have you any ideas on the point of making a diseased workhouse into an auxiliary asylum?—I would not approve of it; you would require an extra staff to look after them. I think the best place for them is the asylum.

1380. On financial grounds, what have you to say about the removal of lunatics; have you gone into it?—No, I have not very specially.

1381. Have you gone into the cost at all?—I have not.

1382. CHAIRMAN.—You know how much they cost in the workhouse?—Indeed I could not tell you.

1383. Dr. BROWN.—About the criminals and tramps?—I think things should be made a little more stringent than they are at the present time. I would be inclined to not let them out on giving three hours' notice. I would extend the Criminal Act of England, and I would be inclined to be even a little more stringent. Let them keep them in for two days, but on a second offence I would increase it from four to seven days; and another thing, too, I would be inclined to make the distances walked a little longer than at the present time. I would not allow them to walk from Derry to Limavady and get admission there, and from Limavady to Coleraine. I would make them walk from Derry to Coleraine.

1384. You said you were not in favour of amalgamation; now you say you would not have the different workhouses open for tramps?—No.

1385. You would exclude them from some workhouses?—Yes.

1379. You have not thought of any plan how that might be carried out?—Not specially.

1380. CHAIRMAN.—One witness suggested the police and the bridewell instead of the workhouse?—I think the police should have something to say to it; to give a little more assistance than they do.

1381. Do you think it would be possible to head that ever altogether to the police, or do you think desperate people could come more fully to the workhouse?—That is a very broad question.

1382. Dr. BROWN.—I see there are four patients in extern hospitals from the Derry Workhouse. What is your idea about sending patients from the workhouse to extern hospitals?—You mean from the workhouse to the infirmary.

1383. There are four patients at present in extern hospitals, that is other hospitals than union hospitals, and the Derry Guardians are paying for them?—I would approve of that. With regard to operations, I would not have any operations performed except in case of extreme urgency in the workhouse. I would have them all sent to the infirmary; that is in surgical cases.

1384. You would have all sent that were capable of being sent?—Yes.

1385. Would you give any reasons for that?—Well, the infirmary is better for any capital operations; of course there are some small operations performed in the Derry Workhouse. We have furnished an operating room there with an operating table and sterilisers.

1386. Is that more for minor operations?—For minor operations.

1387. For operations that could be performed on patients that could travel some distance before being operated on?—Yes.

1388. You would deal with those in the workhouse?—I don't think so. I would be inclined to have them sent to the infirmary.

1389. You have a fever hospital in connection with the workhouse?—Yes.

1390. I understand it is very often closed, and for long periods?—It may be closed for a month at a time; it is empty at the present time.

1391. Then there is the fever hospital for Derry?—Foy's Hill Hospital.

1392. Could you give us any information of how patients are admitted to Foy's Hill; what class of patients are admitted?—I think all classes are admitted. I know there were dispensary patients admitted some time ago, over which there was a law suit.

1393. What was the law suit?—It came before the Recorder. The Corporation claimed maintenance of the Guardians, and said the patients should be sent to the workhouse fever hospital.

1394. Were they able to sustain it?—I cannot say whether the Recorder has given a decision or not.

1395. Would it be possible for some arrangement to be entered into by the Guardians and by the Corporation whereby Foy's Hill might be made available for all the fever cases of the union?—I am afraid if you did so Foy's Hill would require to be very much enlarged.

1396. CHAIRMAN.—Is it capable of enlargement?—Oh, yes.

1397. Dr. BAKER.—You have a smallpox hospital there?—Yes; I think there should be an arrangement between the Guardians and the Corporation.

1398. In case some arrangement was entered into, would the fever hospital at the workhouse be at all suitable for the treatment of consumption?—It would be very suitable.

1399. A little expenditure would make it suitable?—It would not require much.

1400. Would that increase the number of consumptives going to the workhouse?—It might, because there are a great many cases of consumption through the country.

1401. And in the city too?—Yes; they could be better treated there than in their homes.

1402. Have you any idea of the proportion of deaths from consumption?—It is very large. I could not give the exact statistics.

1403. You are not a member of the Corporation?—No.

1404. But, as a medical man, you are conversant with the arrangements on which patients are admitted?—Yes.

1405. CHAIRMAN.—If fewer cases could be treated in Foye Hill for about the same amount as in the workhouse, would you approve of making arrangements with the Foye Hill people to take all fewer cases?—I would be inclined to do so if they could be treated as cheaply.

1406. Dr. BAKER.—Have you two nurses at Foye Hill?—Always two.

1407. Day and night, and a servant?—I don't know that.

1408. There is a porter of course?—Yes.

1409. And a staff practically there for any ordinary cases unless there would be an epidemic?—Yes.

1410. There is some ground about the fever hospital; I mean the workhouse fever hospital; do you know the extent of it at all?—I cannot tell you.

1411. Do you think that accommodation could be increased for consumptives if consumptives were admitted to the fever hospital?—I am sure it could.

1412. The grounds are suitable, or could be made suitable?—Yes.

1413. Are the Guardians at present doing anything in the way of isolating wards for consumption?—Yes, we are fitting up a couple of wards at the present time.

1414. What do you think of those arrangements?—I think they do very well as a sort of stop-gap.

1415. CHAIRMAN.—Better than nothing?—Yes.

1416. Dr. BAKER.—That is they protect other people; would they be any benefit to the unfortunate patients?—I think they would.

1417. Is there any ground available for their own exclusive use?—I think the consumptives that are in hospital at the present time are confined to bed in an advanced stage.

1418. Do you think medical men would be inclined to send them in earlier if there were suitable arrangements?—I think they would.

1419. And in that way the number of consumptives would be increased?—Yes; there are only about two at the present time.

1420. You are a member of the county infirmary staff?—Yes.

1421. CHAIRMAN.—You are aware that there has been a great deal of consumption in Derry?—A great deal.

1422. And the fact that there are only two or three cases in the workhouse is no efficient?—No.

1423. Dr. BAKER.—Dispensary doctors and other doctors when they know there are not proper arrangements of course won't send patients in. You have an idea about the cost of keeping patients in the county infirmary?—I could not tell you.

1424. You approve of the management of the county infirmary?—Oh, yes.

1425. CHAIRMAN.—Are there any arrangements about sending patients; do you often send patients from the workhouse infirmary to the county infirmary?—Sometimes; there is an occasional case sent over, but not often.

1426. Dr. BAKER.—Do the Guardians pay for the cases they send over?—Dr. Cooke will be able to answer that question.

1427. CHAIRMAN.—Do you approve of the bearing out of children as distinguished from keeping them in the workhouse?—Most decidedly.

1428. You have 15 boarded out at present; are you aware whether any of the 45 who are now in the house could be boarded out; whether they are orphans or deserted children?—I cannot answer that question.

1429. As far as you know, does the master bring the Board any eligible cases?—Yes.

1430. Would you be in favour of extending the powers of the Guardians for boarding out other children?—I would. I would not have any children about the workhouse at all that were capable of going out.

1431. The people who came in and out for a short time and took their children with them, would you suggest any method of dealing with those?—That is a point that has been discussed pretty often before the Board; we have some characters answering to that description, and we have tried every means in our power—the law and other arrangements—but we have signally failed. I think that more power should be given to the Guardians to take charge of the children in the case of their parents being of a vicious character.

1432. Would you take legal conviction as the test?—I don't think that legal conviction seems to have any effect in the present cases.

1433. Would you consider that a disqualification for people to have charge of children if there were legal convictions against them for cruelty?—Certainly; drunkenness and vice.

1434. There was a discussion yesterday as to the best method of dealing with women who have illegitimate children, who come into the workhouse and have illegitimate children. One of the ideas mentioned was that it would be better for those girls that they should be sent to penitentiaries under the management of religious persons of their own persuasion, rather than have them brought into the workhouse?—Do you mean before the confinement?

1435. That there should be a lying-in ward attached to these penitentiaries, and they should never come into the workhouse at all?—I think that would be a very good idea.

1436. With a view of reclaiming them, and that the Guardians should pay the cost of the maintenance of those people?—Bringing them about the workhouse has a very demoralising effect.

1437. And you would be in favour of sending them out?—Decidedly.

1438. You are satisfied now with the arrangements in Derry for nursing of the sick?—Perfectly; we have three probationers in training; one of our nurses resigned the other day—the fever hospital nurse; we have an assistant trained nurse in the infirmary, and we have appointed one of the probationers to be an assistant in the fever hospital when required, and we are not appointing any trained nurse.

1439. Dr. BAKER.—This assistant has been some time under training?—She has been six months under training.

1440. If you had cases there you would require trained nurses?—But we have a trained nurse; there were two trained nurses.

Mr. JAMES STEWART EXAMINED.

1441. Dr. BAKER.—You are Secretary to the County Infirmary?—Yes.

1442. Would you tell us the number of admissions during the last year, and the cost per patient?—There were 652 patients treated last year, the year ending 31st of December, 1902, in the infirm department.

1443. You have an extern too?—We have an extern department also.

1444. CHAIRMAN.—Do your nurses do anything in the extern?—Oh, yes.

1445. I mean visiting houses?—No; I mean there is a dispensary in connection with the hospital for treatment of cases not attended in the house.

1446. They don't do any distinct nursing?—No.

1447. Dr. BAKER.—You have the numbers of the cases treated in the extern department?—I have; 1,187 last year.

1448. Do many of the extern patients come from a distance do you know?—You must ask the doctor on that point; probably I should say from the city.

1449. About the intern cases, do you know the number of operations performed?—There were 280 operations performed.

1450. About the cost of the upkeep, how are you supplied?—We get £1,454 per annum from the city, the county borough £1,350, and from the county at large £244.

1451. Is that an old arrangement?—No; that was made under the Local Government Act. There was a Commission set and took evidence on the subject of the fair contribution to be levied off the city and county in respect of the number of cases admitted from each; they took evidence on that point and fixed the amounts to be paid by the city and county. Formerly under

Aug. 12, 1903.
Dr. Thomas
McLaughlin.

Mr. James
Stewart.

Aug. 12, 1903.
Mr. James
Stewart.

the old Act the county at large, which included the city, paid £1,434, but it was levied according to the rateable valuation, so that the far end of the county paid a very large proportion and got very little benefit. This is an arrangement which was looked upon as equitable both by the county and city; it is considered fair by the county, and the county considered they were unfairly treated before; the city got largely the benefits and did not pay in proportion to the benefits they received. I think the county is satisfied now.

1462. What other means have you?—Voluntary contributions, which amounted last year to £485.

1463. That was for maintenance only?—Voluntary contributions.

1464. Does that support your county infirmary?—Like all other hospitals, we are always getting the devil by the tail for money, but we manage to get the money—we have got a good deal of money this year.

1465. That is for structural alterations?—We get it for maintenance as well as structural alterations. We get a good deal of private money for structural alterations. We got over £2,500 within the last couple of years for structural alterations, which we are at present engaged in.

1466. Have you reckoned at all the cost per patient?—Yes; the total cost, that is the daily cost of each patient, including all the expenses, last year amounted to 2s. 6d.; it varies between 2s. 9d. and 3s. per day.

1467. That is the total cost of everything—upkeep, maintenance, and small alterations?—Everything.

1468. Is the dressing for extern patients included in that?—Everything; the cost of the extern department is added on to the daily cost per intern patient. We don't keep any separate account of the extern amount.

1469. CHAIRMAN.—It is comparatively trifling, I suppose?—It is principally made up of dressings, which are very expensive.

1470. Dr. BROWN.—There were 1,100 cases?—Yes; that means cases; the attendances amount to over 5,000.

1471. So that there were 5,000 dressings?—They may not all be cases for dressings.

1472. Does the county infirmary limit the class of cases they take in?—They admit cases on lines from the governors, and it is then for the doctor, when the cases come in, to say whether they are suitable or not.

1473. The county infirmary is situated in Derry, very near Donagall?—It is just on the border.

1474. Do you get many cases from the County Donagall?—We get a considerable number of accidents, which we always admit without question as to where they come from, and we get a great many cases of accidents from Donagall.

1475. Do you ask the Donagall County Council to contribute to the upkeep?—No, we have not.

1476. Did you ever approach them?—We have not.

1477. You don't know whether they have power, do you?—I believe they have power. In point of fact, I know they have power, because we got it put into the Local Government Act that two or more county infirmaries could join together, but I don't think it works, or is likely to work.

1478. But as to every case coming from Donagall?—If a case comes in from Donagall, we don't take a case from Donagall unless for payment, except accidents.

1479. You do take them if the patients themselves pay?—If the patients themselves pay, and we have room for them, we take them, but we would not give them a preference.

1480. Regarding these accident cases coming from Donagall, what is your idea with regard to them?—My impression is the fair thing would be that the district that they come from should pay the cost.

1481. So much per day or per week?—Yes, until they are cured. If a Donagall farmer comes into Derry and falls off his cart and gets a broken leg I think the County Donagall should pay; or if a Derry farmer is in the vicinity of Lifford and breaks his leg there I think the County Derry should pay; either the county or the district.

1482. That would not interfere with the management or anything of that kind?—No.

1483. Regarding the management, what committee have you?—25.

1484. Do you think that is sufficiently large?—Quite large enough.

1485. What is your average attendance at your committee meetings?—We must have a quorum of seven. We occasionally cannot get a quorum, but there is usually a quorum.

1486. About supplies, do you advertise?—We advertise for everything.

1487. Are your accounts audited?—By an auditor appointed by the Board.

1488. They don't come under the County Council audit at all?—Not so far, but I understand they are to be.

1489. CHAIRMAN.—You did not ask to have them audited?—We did some years ago, but they refused.

1490. They do audit the Casual Infirmary accounts?—I am not aware.

1491. By invitation?—I thought under a recent Act there was some clause.

1492. Was anything done last session?—I had a sort of an idea that there was some clause in an Act with reference to it.

1493. Dr. BROWN.—Regarding the class of patients that are admitted to the county infirmary?—I think the doctor could tell you.

1494. You have never considered the advisability of establishing a nursing home in connection with your county infirmary?—We used to send nurses out for payment.

1495. Was that some years ago?—Some years ago, and there were some ladies collected a sum every year for us to establish it, and then the collections dropped off; it did not pay.

1496. That was a sort of district nursing?—No, private nursing; there is no such thing as district nursing; we never had anything of the kind.

1497. Do you know is there any district nursing in Londonderry?—There are the Jubilee district nurses; a very active body; five or six nurses.

Dr. Cooke.

Dr. COOKE examined.

1498. Dr. BROWN.—You are the Medical Officer of the County Infirmary?—Yes.

1499. Have you held that position for some time?—I am surgeon for the last three years.

1500. Then you are conversant with all the details regarding the county infirmary. What class of cases are admitted?—The majority of the patients come in on governors' lines. When we have spare beds available and paying patients apply to come in a better class of people—we take them in without any governors' lines, and they pay the charges.

1501. What are the charges?—Either the bare maintenance—that is, roughly speaking, 3s. a week—or the average total cost of 3s. a day—a guinea a week.

1502. You rarely charge more than one guinea?—We never charge more. We have no separate accommodation for paying patients; they go into the general wards.

1503. What is your idea about treating paying patients along with free patients in the general wards in the infirmary?—My personal opinion is that unless the hospital was supported by paying patients as a means of income, of making money, when, of course, they would have to have completely separate arrangements, and a separate part of the hospital—separate wards and separate nurses, but carrying on a hospital on such lines as we do it is very desirable for all concerned that paying patients should be in the general ward. For one thing, it does not induce a class of people who would be taking advantage of the hospital—the bare cost of living—to come into the hospital, as the staff take no time for work done in the hospital from any patient, and it is good for the very poor class of people, of whom we have an enormous proportion, to see the better class of people willing to come into the wards and take the same attendance as they do.

1504. Have you ever heard complaints from the better class that they should be treated along with the poor?—No; I have had people coming in, paying patients, who did not come in when there was no separate accommodation.

1505. After they are really in the wards, have you heard complaints?—No.

1506. CHAIRMAN.—Would not paying patients really be happier in an occupied ward after the first day or two than they would be in a private ward by themselves, cut off from everybody?—It would be my idea that they would, but there are some people so con-stated that they would not like it. We get as many paying people as we can deal with, and they don't complain of it.

1467. Dr. BROWN.—Regarding your staff—the county infirmary staff—would you let us know some of the particulars regarding the mode of appointment, and also the emoluments they have, if there are any?—The way in which the place has been worked since the late surgeon's death in 1905—he was paid a salary of £300 a year—

1468. Did he live in the building?—No; he had no home in the place.

1469. Since his death?—Since his death the government made another arrangement. They had under the Act of Parliament to appoint a surgeon to the hospital, and they appointed me as surgeon to the hospital, giving me a salary of £150 a year, and requiring me to reside in the hospital, but allowing me to do consulting practice in the city; that fulfilled the requirements of the Act of Parliament. They then appointed an honorary staff of two surgeons and two physicians, who are not paid anything, and an anaesthetist, who is not paid anything.

1500. That is five of an honorary staff, who receive no emoluments?—Yes.

1501. Was there any competition for the post?—There was for the physicians' positions, but there was not for the surgeons' positions.

1501a. It was a foregone conclusion who was going to be appointed?—Yes.

1502. If it had not been, do you think there would be a competition?—I think there would be.

1503. The experience they gain and the name and so on are really of great value to them?—Yes; and the practice. The honorary staff and myself are on a complete equality as members of the hospital staff.

1504. But you look after their cases in their absence?—Yes; I am the executive officer.

1505. CHAIRMAN.—There is not a midwifery ward?—No.

1506. What midwifery accommodation is there for Derry besides the workhouse?—As far as I know, none.

1507. Dr. BROWN.—Mr. Stewart mentioned about the number of internal and external patients; in the case of the 600 internal patients, were there many operations performed?—Yes; the major and minor operations totted to 390.

1508. Does that mean that chloroform was given?—Anaesthetics were given in 133 cases.

1509. Then there is a considerable amount of operative work?—There is.

1510. Which requires a good deal of attention from the surgical staff?—In this year up to now there have been 225 anaesthetic cases; it is steadily increasing.

1511. So that the honorary staff give their services ungrudgingly to the infirmary?—They do, most ungrudgingly.

1512. Do you get cases from the workhouse?—No, they never send us over cases.

1513. They don't pay you as an extern hospital?—No, they never send them over at all.

1514. You get cases, that is instead of going into the workhouse the dispensary doctor and others would send the case direct to you?—Generally.

1515. Do you limit the class of cases that are taken in?—Of course patients coming in with government lines have the first claim, and then the others, if they are suitable cases and there are beds for them; the committee hold me responsible for the suitability of cases applying for admission.

1516. Do you really only take in acute cases?—We are not by way of not taking in chronic cases, but we really cannot keep chronic cases from the number of our beds; we always have a chronic case or two. We take in chronic cases sometimes, but when we find they are chronic we discharge them.

1517. How many beds have you at present?—We have two wards closed on account of alterations, but before the alterations were begun we had fifty beds.

1518. But when the alterations are completed?—That will give us sixty-two beds, as well as more sanitary accommodation and an operating theatre.

1519. Would not that be sufficient for the county and city of Derry?—It depends on how many the county would be disposed to send in; many parts of the county rarely send in cases, the neighbouring portions of the county do send in cases.

1520. Have you made out any statistics on the matter, that is within the ten miles of the hospital how many cases, and how many within twenty miles?—We never keep any statistics of that sort.

1521. Have you any knowledge of the statistics?—I don't think I could give you any information that would be worth while.

1522. Could you give any idea?—I would say the Coleraine cases are very few.

1523. CHAIRMAN.—Magherafelt?—Very few, or Maghera or Desperstown very few. County, Fenny, and Enniskillen, those parts of the country send in a good many cases.

1524. What is your maximum number of cases, say in Winter?—What was the largest number at any time?—When we have stretches up we might have fifty-two or fifty-three patients, but our daily average—

1525. I meant the maximum?—That would be full beds of course.

1526. And you have that sometimes?—Yes.

1527. Dr. BROWN.—Have you ever refused cases on account of your limited space?—Oh, yes, occasionally.

1528. CHAIRMAN.—Could you add to the building; does the site permit any addition?—It does.

1529. Dr. BROWN.—What is the extent of your ground?—About three acres. There is a good large garden behind the place.

Mr. Stewart.—I would say 2 acres or 2½ acres.

1530. Dr. BROWN.—But you have refused cases on account of not having available space?—Occasionally.

1531. And frequently you are working even above your maximum number?—We are.

1532. You would rather put up a stretcher than refuse a bed case?—The class of cases we have to deal with you cannot refuse, even if sometimes you have to put them on the floor; when a bad accident comes in it must be admitted, and usually when there is a rush of accidents we get a little bit overcrowded.

1533. What is your hospital staff?—Eight nurses, a superintendent and matron, seven female servants and one man servant, in all seventeen.

1534. How many do you calculate it would really take to work your extern department: have you one always on duty?—We will have to increase our staff when we have additions; there will be a new theatre.

1535. You would really require a nurse to look after the theatre and instruments?—Yes.

1536. Does the extern add to your nursing and require you to keep an extra staff?—We could keep a nurse going there. The way the extern is worked is, any case of injury or surgical case requiring immediate treatment is treated in the extern without any questions being asked. We give the first dressing to every case; we don't prescribe there at all; it is a surgical extern there altogether. When anybody gets a first dressing, if I see they are a class of people that ought not to be a charge on the hospital, I say, "Go to your own doctor." If they are a class of people that ought to be treated, or the injuries are of such a class that we could treat it better than it possibly could be by an outside doctor, I tell them to come back for dressing. The dressing hour is 11.30, and often lasts till 1 o'clock.

1537. You have two nurses there?—Two nurses.

1538. As to the cost of the extern?—It is a thing I cannot accurately tell you, but I have roughly estimated it at about £50 or £55 a year. I speak roughly. It is all dressings.

1539. You don't take any consumptive cases into the county infirmary?—We occasionally get a case in, but we have not any place for them.

1540. Would you let us know your ideas—have you thought of the subject at all—what might be done about a sanatorium for the County Derry?—I have thought a good deal of it; consumption is terribly prevalent in the town, largely on account of the young people working in shirt factories. The death-rate, as far as we can make out, in the town appears to be from tuberculosis about one in six of all the deaths. Of course, that is very much under the real amount, because a great many cases which are considered to be bronchitis and pleurisy are really consumption; about 35 per 1,000 living.

1541. Has there been any discussion about providing for the treatment of these cases?—We are not a rich enough community here to provide for the treatment of these cases by subscription. It would cost an immense amount to get up such an institution, and keep it going.

1542. Do you think such an institution is urgently required?—I do, very badly required; some place where the people would be taught a commonsense way of treating consumption; a place where there would be plenty of space and ground and open air, and where the patients would be under supervision as regards their expectoration. I think the drift the people would get under these circumstances would be of enormous practical benefit. I cannot think anyone would be so criminal as to deliberately spit about when they have consumption, if they had been taught the danger of doing so. I think the drift in a well-managed sanatorium would be of enormous benefit.

Aug. 19, 1905.

Dr. Cooke.

1543. CHAIRMAN.—You think it would be an enormous benefit if in the fever hospital of the workhouse they made a beginning there without much cost?—I don't know the fever hospital of the workhouse, but I should imagine any place with plenty of air about it and a suitable staff to work it is bound to do a great deal of good, and I think if it was only taking away these people even for a few months from their friends, it would be a very good thing. I don't think the death-rate given for Derry represents the actual death-rate from consumption. Factory girls come in from the County Donegal; they live in lodgings, and as long as they are able to work they go on with it; they get weaker and weaker and come to us; they don't care for going to the workhouse, and they stay in their lodgings for a while. The lodging-house people turn them out because they cannot pay for their lodgings, and then they go to the country and die there.

1544. Dr. Broome.—You think many get the infection in Derry and go home to country places?—I know a great number of girls, when they can get no other place to go to, drift home.

1545. CHAIRMAN.—Is there any medical inspection as regards the factories to prevent the workers who have consumption from continuing to attend at the factories?—Not that I know of. The factories are very well ventilated.

1546. There is no public health inspection?—I don't think there is with regard to consumption. We, the local Society for the Prevention of Consumption, tried to get the sanitary authority of the town to adopt a form of notification, and undertake the disinfection of houses where consumptives live. If the people were willing to notify the cases, we asked them to undertake the disinfection of the houses, but we did not succeed in getting anything done.

1547. Dr. Broome.—In your county infirmary do you allow patients to wear their own clothing?—If they have clean good clothing; otherwise we give them hospital clothing. We don't give them a coat or trousers, or that sort of thing; we lend them things, of course, if we have them. Their nightshirts, and that sort of thing, if they have them clean and good, we allow them to wear them.

1548. Do you train your own nurses?—Yes.

1549. Give them lectures?—Yes.

1550. Mr. Stewart mentioned that sometime ago you had a nursing home?—Yes, we used to send out nurses, but it was found that there was occasionally a rush for nurses, and when the cost per nurse was added up it was found it was not paying. We had very bad accommodation for them.

1551. Do you know that some other county infirmaries make money from their nursing home?—Very possibly; we had not the accommodation; we would want a lot more buildings, which would mean a large initial expense, and when we did nursing outside it was largely supported by private subscription.

1552. Do you know anything about the extern case that came from a distance—a radius of eight or ten miles round the town?—They do come that distance.

1553. At the same time they avail themselves of the treatment in the county infirmary, with very little cost to the infirmary?—Very little cost; farm labourers getting injuries to their hands, and things of that sort.

1554. Which in another place, if they did not have an extern, would require a bed inside the infirmary?—If they are not properly attended to that class of case goes wrong very quickly.

1555. If there were not an extern department they would perhaps have to be intern patients?—Yes, but they don't come as a rule further than they can conveniently walk.

1556. Have you any idea of the number of intern patients you get from Donegal?—I could not tell you exactly, but the number of accident cases from the county in the last twelve months would, roughly speaking, be about twenty. Most of them intend to pay, but they are taken in at a risk. The clergyman of their parish perhaps will pay something, or their neighbours; most of them in the end pay something; we don't, of course, press them.

1557. Regarding the payment, do you take some payment from them?—No; the only scale of payment we have in the hospital are the two charges, and the police pay 1s. 6d. a day—12s.

1558. 10s., 14s., and a guinea?—Yes.

1559. You don't take a small fee from a person who sends his child in, at a few shillings a week?—No; I think it is rather a pity myself that they don't take a few shillings; they would get some money.

1560. CHAIRMAN.—Better than get nothing, would you not take almost anything—say what a child or a young person would cost in his own home?—Yes, roughly, about 5s. a week; a child might cost less. It is not altogether fair to say that those patients don't pay something; often a person goes away given something, but we cannot put it down as paid money because it is not our scale of pay.

1561. Dr. Broome.—A sort of subscription; it is not good that a person should feel they are not taking charity?—I feel that very much. I think the small farming class would be better satisfied if they were paying a small amount. I would not compel them to pay it, but I suggest it.

Mr. John Foster.

Mr. JOHN FOSTER examined.

1562. CHAIRMAN.—You are the only Relieving Officer for the Derry Union?—Yes, sir.

1563. Take the beginning of this year: there were 306 persons in the workhouse, of those there were ninety sick—where did they come from mainly?—I don't know just at present, but speaking generally, I would think that two-thirds of them or more came from the city.

1564. Would the same proportion apply to the infirm class—ninety-four?—I believe it would, and to all the classes.

1565. When you get out to the more distant parts of the union, do you get any considerable number of cases?—Very few.

1566. What are the most distant populous parts of the union?—Clandry is the most distant populous part.

1567. Have you many patients from Clandry among the aged and infirm?—Very few.

1568. What do they do: how do you account for their not coming in?—I cannot say. I think in the country they have a better spirit of independence, and they don't run to the workhouse.

1569. And would you say get more help from their neighbours?—I believe that also.

1570. Are you as relieving officer often asked by people for outdoor relief owing to unwillingness to come into the hospital or into the workhouse from those distant parts of the union?—Sometimes, not very often. Of course, nearly all the people who come into the workhouse if they could get relief out would prefer it.

1571. Is there a special reluctance among people at a distance to come in?—Yes, there is a sentiment, and the further you get away from the workhouse it is the stronger against the workhouse as a workhouse.

1572. Are there many applications for outdoor relief made to you?—No, not many.

1573. About £20 a year is paid for purely outdoor relief?—We are just paying 32s. a week as present.

1574. Where would that be chiefly paid?—It is all round the union in the rural districts. There is only one case inside the boundary; that is a blind girl.

1575. Is most of that outdoor relief given to extreme distant parts?—It is pretty well scattered all over.

1576. What class of cases are they chiefly?—Generally of the decent labouring class.

1577. Would they be old?—Old with the exception of three widows with young children.

1578. What would be given to those widows with children?—4s. in two cases, and 3s. in one case where there is a girl working; that woman gets 3s.; she had got 4s. previous to the girl going to work.

1579. That is the largest amount that is given?—No, we give 5s. in some cases of an old couple, and the lowest we give is 2s. 6d. We give pretty generously when we do give.

1580. You don't give any grants of 2s. or 1s. 6d.?—Nothing so small.

1581. How many cases are there on your books at present?—Twenty-one—also cases of twenty-one persons.

1588. That is pretty much an average state of affairs—Yes, just about the average for the last twenty years.

1589. Are there many applications made and refused?—No, no applications are refused; we give them provisional relief, either in the workhouse or—

1590. I mean applications for outdoor relief: you offer them the house sometimes when applications for relief are made, and they don't take it?—Quite so.

1591. When they wanted there was outdoor relief: were many cases refused outdoor relief?—Not very many; they don't apply, as a rule, here. I had a case the other day that applied for outdoor relief, and I offered the woman the relief of the house, which I thought suited her best; the result was she did not get it, and she is now in the hospital. These cases, when they find they cannot get outdoor relief, go to the hospital; the majority of the cases are old people, who need nourishment and some person to clean them and look after them, and they are much better in the hospital, and when they get to know what treatment they get in the hospital, they come in, and when they see for themselves what it is like they are satisfied.

1592. Are there any cases in which you recommend outdoor relief being given and which the Guardians refuse to grant?—Oh, no; in all cases where I find it necessary I give provisional relief for a week and report, and the Guardians as a rule confirm it.

1593. Mr. MURKIN.—And then what happens: if you give provisional relief and these people don't come into the workhouse, what happens?—The Guardians generally continue the relief in money, and it goes on to the end of the year.

1594. When you give provisional relief you only give it for a week?—Yes.

1595. Then when those people don't go into the workhouse, what becomes of them; you stop paying money after the first week?—In all cases where I give provisional relief, if it is necessary to continue it, the Guardians do continue it in a grant of money. There are some cases where the relief is only temporary, in the case of sickness for a week or so, and in that case, as soon as they are better, the relief is cut off.

1596. CHAIRMAN.—But it is very strictly watched by the Guardians?—It is.

1597. You visit the house always in these cases?—Oh, yes, the first thing I do.

1598. Mr. MURKIN.—I suppose you have in your mind that there is no use in applying for outdoor relief, because the Guardians have a general rule against giving it unless there is a doctor's certificate that they cannot be removed?—The Guardians have a general rule to that effect, but each case is treated on its own merits before the Board.

1599. But practically that rule is enforced?—It is.

1600. And the people know that won't get outdoor relief, and come asking for it?—It may be that is the case.

1601. Don't you think such a stringent rule often acts very harshly?—I don't think it acts so harshly as it appears, because my experience of unions who go in largely for outdoor relief is that it does not lessen the number in the house. Take Strabane. I think our population is larger than Strabane, and their numbers in the house are pretty well up to what we have in the Derry Union of paupers, and they pay a very much larger amount in outdoor relief. I think it is something like a railway company advertising cheap fares—it increases the traffic. If you begin to give outdoor relief largely it will be largely availed of.

1602. There must, from what you have said, be cases in which outdoor relief would be an absolute necessity; for instance, in those cases where you give provisional relief, do you not think that that provisional relief is necessary?—Yes.

1603. Suppose those people that got that don't come into the house, don't you think when it is cut off from them they must suffer?—I don't know a case where it is cut off. The Guardians always confirm in money if I recommend it, if I give provisional relief in kind.

1604. Your recommendations must be very few when you have only nine cases over the great extent of area?—Certainly they are few cases, because the applications are few.

1605. Because they think they would not get it?—That may be the conclusion you come to, of course.

1606. CHAIRMAN.—As regards boarded-out children, there are fifteen in the union, and as a rule they are very well managed by their foster parents?—There are eighteen at present; they are better brought up than those children would be in an institution.

1607. Do you find they are healthy children, apparently well nourished?—Yes.

1608. Look happy?—Yes, they look happy and contented, and would not wish to part with their foster parents; as a rule they all remain on with them.

1609. The boarding-out has been in force a long time, Mr. Scott told us yesterday: have you followed the career or life of many of these children?—Yes, I know a good many of them, men and women.

1610. Who are doing well?—Yes, the great majority—there are only one or two exceptions—have turned out very well for their class in society.

1611. Have any of them gone back to the workhouse as ordinary adult inmates?—No, I never know a single case to go back.

1612. Have you known many of the workhouse children to go back as adults?—I And as a rule you can never get them away; they look upon it as a home, and at all set times when they are out of work they generally turn in again.

1613. There is one class of workhouse child, that is the orphan child, who was not boarded out: do you find that these children come back to the workhouse in the same way as the children of families come back to the workhouse?—I don't know of any case of orphan children who were not boarded out; we board out all.

1614. In some unions they find these children less likely to come back; I thought you might have had some experience of them?—We heard out all orphans and deserted.

1615. Do you think it possible to board out any other class of children if the law were changed?—I think it would; there are some children in the house who might be boarded out but don't come under the law as it stands at present.

1616. If the law were changed, what class would you be disposed to board out?—I would hardly take it on me to say whether it would be better to take these illegitimate children from their mothers—

1617. And let their mothers go to work and board out the children?—I think that is a matter for the Board, but they could be as well brought up, and I think brought up healthier in the country.

1618. You have some cases, I dare say, of the children of virtuous, dissolute parents: do you think it would be for the public good to take those children from their parents?—I think it would, if you could take the parents from the children.

1619. If you could keep them apart?—Yes, but the difficulty would be to keep the parents away from them, and that the foster parents should not be troubled with these characters calling on their children.

1620. They would be sure to find out where those children were?—I think so. I knew a case where a woman troubled a nurse so much that she was near giving up the child.

Dr. D. J. BROWN examined.

1621. Dr. BROWN.—You are Medical Officer of the Londonderry Workhouse?—Yes.

1622. And have been that for a number of years?—Yes.

1623. You have made a good many improvements in the nursing?—Oh, yes.

1624. Do you think the nursing staff now a good one?—I do; I think it a very good one at present.

1625. It meets the wants of the union?—Yes, it does.

1626. Do you perform many operations in the workhouse?—Yes, we do.

1627. Minor operations?—Yes, and sometimes major operations.

1628. Have you got any extra assistance?—Yes, my son assists me now.

1629. If the case is a large one, would it not be better to send the patient on to the county infirmary, if he was able to be removed?—Yes, it would be better for them to go to the infirmary.

1630. Better arrangements, and a better operating theatre on modern lines?—It is; they have made great improvements at the county infirmary of late in that line.

Aug. 12, 1928.

Mr. John Foster.

Dr. D. J. Brown.

Aug 12, 1905.

Dr. D. J. Brown.

1625. Regarding the treatment of consumption, I think you stated that there are only a few cases of consumption in the workhouse?—At present there are only three cases.

1626. These cases, it has been stated, are advanced cases?—Well, yes.

1627. Do you ever get cases in the early stages of consumption?—Occasionally, but seldom.

1628. The dispensary doctors don't send in cases?—Not for treatment.

1629. It is only when a person has no home or no other place to go to?—That is it; where there are members of the family sleeping in the same room, they are sent then to get them away from the other members of the family.

1630. Not to any extent?—Not very much.

1631. You think that might be increased with advantage?—Yes, if there was proper accommodation.

1632. At present you don't consider the accommodation proper?—We are getting up two small wards at present; merely for isolation, not for treatment.

1633. Do you think the patients would be much benefited by their staying in these new wards?—It is not so much for the benefit of the patient or for the protection of others.

1634. There has been a suggestion made that possibly the fever hospital might be made a place for the isolation of consumptives?—Yes, the Guardians asked me to devise some method for treating these cases, and I made that suggestion to them, to send the fever cases to Foyle Hill, and have the fever hospital at Waterford for consumption; that was a few months ago.

1635. Did they take any action upon it?—Yes, I think they asked the Corporation to take them, but the conditions were such they could not comply with them.

1636. What were the conditions?—I don't exactly remember, but it was something about supplying them with food, attendance, and nurses. The conditions were such they could not comply with them.

1637. Do you consider that suggestions of that kind were made seriously?—As far as I remember that was it.

1638. That you should send your nurses from the workhouse and feed from the workhouse to Foyle Hill, a distance of how far?—It is over a mile.

1639. CHAIRMAN.—And pay how much?—I don't remember exactly. I think if the Corporation and the Guardians could agree on that it would be a good idea. There is no great necessity for two fever hospitals in Down.

1640. Dr. BROWN.—You think it would work for the benefit of the recipients?—Yes, there is accommodation there for both pay patients and paupers.

1641. You don't consider a patient going into a fever hospital a pauper?—He is not looked on in that way. But he is treated sometimes in that way, because when unwell he is supposed to put on the clothes, and I think that is a mistake. They should supply them with a suit of tweed or serge that they could put on. The same thing would apply to patients coming from outside into the workhouse infirmary for treatment.

1642. Paying patients?—Yes, or even coming in for treatment, and that is not like to put on those clothes. It is not fair to ask them when they are coming in ready for treatment.

1643. The same class of persons going into the county infirmary for surgical treatment for an accident, and the same person taking fever and going up to you, is then called a pauper?—They look on it like that themselves, and that is the reason they object to come then; there is a lot of sentimentality.

1644. CHAIRMAN.—You have a number of people of independent means who have to go in there to be treated for fever sometimes?—We often had people of that class some years ago, but since Foyle Hill Hospital was opened they go there.

1645. Dr. BROWN.—Regarding the fever hospital at the workhouse, would it make a useful place for consumptives?—For that it would require to be entirely separated from the workhouse.

1646. CHAIRMAN.—Is it not?—No, it is a separate building, but still it is in communication with the workhouse.

1647. In what way?—By walks and telephone.

1648. Dr. BROWN.—That is more sentiment again?—Then there is a workhouse nurse.

1649. CHAIRMAN.—You can have any nurse you like?—You would require to have a separate staff.

1650. Dr. BROWN.—If it were recognized as a consumptive hospital with a separate staff and separate grounds?—Yes; a separate opening from the street.

1651. CHAIRMAN.—That is all possible, owing to the situation of the place?—Yes.

1652. Dr. BROWN.—Would there be much ground apportioned off?—Yes; there is a wall opposite the fever hospital that could be taken down, and there could be an avenue made from far up the Glendormet Road to it, and there is as much ground as they want there right opposite the door of the hospital.

1653. Would that increase its usefulness; would many cases be likely to go in there if it was generally known?—I expect if it was entirely separated from the workhouse and it was known it was fitted up for that sort of cases there would be a good many.

1654. CHAIRMAN.—How many beds could be put up there?—There is room for fifty beds and plenty of air space.

1655. Dr. BROWN.—And at present are you sometimes two months or three months without a few patients?—Sometimes; not often.

1656. CHAIRMAN.—It is a good airy situation?—It is.

1657. No objectionable surroundings except the workhouse?—It is a good distance from dwelling-houses; I never knew any harm from it.

1658. Dr. BROWN.—Dispensary doctors would be likely to send in cases then?—They would.

Mr. William Brown.

MR. WILLIAM BROWN EXAMINED.

1659. CHAIRMAN.—Would you kindly let us know your views on the various subjects that are in this abstract?—The first is on the amalgamation of unions. I do not think honest poverty is a crime, and I am of opinion that it would penalise poverty to dissolve a union and bring people to a distant union and deprive them of the only comfort they have—that of seeing their friends and relatives.

1660. You think that if a workhouse were dissolved the best solution of the difficulty would be that the aged and infirm classes should be boarded out?—Yes.

1661. Suppose the Limerick Workhouse were broken up and the people were to get outdoor relief in the shape of being boarded out it would be likely to lead, one would suppose, to a great number of applications for similar relief from persons who would not go into the workhouse?—That would be the abuse of it.

1662. On your view of any way in which that abuse could be guarded against?—It is very hard to guard against that abuse, except that the sons of these people might be made compulsorily to contribute for their maintenance.

1663. Suppose the son is the very first who tries to promote the granting of the relief, so that he may have his father and mother boarded out with him?—In that case I don't think it would be fair.

1664. Suppose he is a man with a small income, and that he would pull along somehow and support his father and mother; but if this plan of boarding out old and infirm people were adopted, would you not have that man and a very large number of other people looking for support from the Guardians for their own relatives?—Undoubtedly that would be the abuse.

1665. On any way in which it could be guarded against?—I do not, except you might try to keep that man in his house for a couple of shillings a week.

1666. Then you would be giving them what they looked for?—I am afraid the abuse would be heavy.

1667. That is what I would be afraid of; if you could see any way of getting round it, any test?—There is a very good provision made for them in the workhouse—an improved dietary.

1668. For that reason you would rather keep open all the workhouses?—Yes; because abuses would follow if they were boarded out with relatives.

1669. Do you think it might be a test if an old person had to be provided for under the Poor Law, and if the Boards of Guardians were to advertise for tenders from persons to know for how much they would maintain the present workhouse inmates?—I think something like that would prevent this abuse, and a respectable person might be willing to take them for a small sum.

1670. The rate for the average maintenance of an inmate does not represent what the inmate costs the State. Now you have this about the chargeability, you would like to go back to the old divisional charge?—Yes, sir; I find that with the Derry Board of Guardians there is a rule that has been in force for over twenty years that no person would be entitled to outdoor relief except the doctor sent a certificate that such a person could be sent to the workhouse. The Guardians held that they are not compelled to receive an application for outdoor relief. I remember one case that came up in Clonady.

1871. You may remember the case in your own mind, but you need not go into the particulars—I think that where the representative of the division make an application for outdoor relief it can be given without any abuse, because he is responsible to his own constituents if he has abused the grant of outdoor relief.

1872. They got to know how much is given?—His constituents would know whether the case was deserving or not.

1873. Do you think under the old state of things the representatives of the district got to know what people in the divisions were on outdoor relief?—Yes; they all have a local knowledge of it from the relieving officer calling at the houses.

1874. You would like to tell us something about district nursing?—I think Mr. Gregg put a very admirable scheme about nursing before the Commission yesterday—having a depot attached to each dispensary.

1875. You cordially support his views on that?—Yes; I know district nursing has done a large amount of good in Derry city, not alone to the individual, but gave practical knowledge to the people attending the sick.

1876. You think the Guardians are not sufficiently liberal in adding a family when the breadwinner is stricken down by disease?—No, sir. I know of my own knowledge that if it were not for the fact that every religious denomination round here have to look after their own sick and poor serious consequences would have followed the interpretation of this rule by the Derry Board of Guardians. It means every religious denomination have to look after their deserving poor, and these people are already paying for the poor through the rates.

1877. They are not paying anything, practically, for outdoor relief?—No, but they are paying rates, and they are also assisting religious denominations.

1878. You would not think that there ought not to be any charitable aid given; you would not say that everything given to a person in need should be through official organisation?—I think once a case is strong enough to merit something from a charitable organisation that that is a case for State aid.

1879. This is not the law you see at present?—It may not be the law.

1880. The law is destitution as the test, not poverty.

1881. You think that some children are badly in need of food?—Yes.

1882. The children of reckless or extravagant parents, you say?—Children who, through the energy of the Inspector for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children—

1883. And the School Attendance Committee?—Are compelled to go to school, and sometimes they have to go to school hungry. I think the teacher should have power to give such a child as that a ticket to secure a meal from the rates.

1884. At present does the child remain hungry?—Except some person comes to know about it. I think such a rule as that is in existence in England.

1885. And you would like to see that rule applied in Ulster?—Yes; if they want children to go to school they must feed them.

1886. Would you propose that the cost of the meal should be paid for from the rates in the first instance, and then recovered from the reckless and improvident parents?—Yes.

1887. There is a paragraph in your abstract about the fever hospital at Foyle Hill?—That is a grievance that has cropped up here among the people of Derry. A man takes ill—

1888. With fever?—Yes, and he is only a pauper because he has not the fee for Foyle Hill.

1889. Have they charged a fee?—Yes.

1890. Under what authority?—I cannot say, but there were some proceedings in court to recover it. And if they cannot pay the fee they must get someone to give security for it.

1891. This hospital was established for the prevention of fever in Derry, but unless a person can pay the fee he is allowed to infect his neighbourhood?—That is not the case now; there was a case before the Recorder.

The people have a feeling that they are prospered if they go to the Waterside Hospital.

1892. You were a guardian for a number of years?—I was.

1893. You are acquainted with the situation of the fever hospital?—Yes.

1894. If that hospital were closed, as Dr. Bigger suggested, for consideration; if that hospital were closed as a fever hospital, and all fever patients paid for by the Guardians at Foyle Hill, do you think that would be the solution?—It would be a solution that would meet the views of all classes in the city.

1895. Dr. Brown.—If the fever hospital at the Waterside was turned into a consumption hospital do you think they would avail themselves of it?—I do; I believe that in time they would. When I became a guardian I knew the sentiment that was amongst the people, and I requested the Guardians to change the name of the new hospital when it was finished, which they kindly did. They changed the name to the Waterside Infirmary.

1896. Is that what Dr. Brown's hospital is now?—Yes; Dr. Brown calls it the Waterside Hospital. Taking the sting out of the name is taking away a good deal of the sentiment. There have been fifty or sixty people there.

1897. Do you think better nursing has anything to do with it as well as the name?—Certainly; I believe Dr. Brown thought that if the consumptive patients were made wear a different garb—

1898. CHAIRMAN.—That is in the power of the Guardians, and they have been recommended to do it?—I remember putting that question to Major Scott.

1899. As regards tramps, you would be rather slow, I judge from the abstract of your evidence, to do anything against them?—Well, there is a small minority of tramps that are bona fide tramps; there is nothing to be said against them.

1900. Bona fide; is that the tramps that have travelled three miles?—No; I know that two-thirds of the people who occupy the workhouse belong to the city, and use the workhouse as a lodging-house five or six nights a week, and early in the evening they secure a ticket from the Relieving Officer, they beg money up to a late hour of the night, and then they arrive drunk at the workhouse. I believe that this particular class should be made pay when they have money, or that the master should make them work it out, or that they should be kept in for at least a week. I believe they should not be in the workhouse at all, but bound by themselves.

1901. Dr. Bigger.—In charge of the police?—Yes.

1902. CHAIRMAN.—And in a building under the control of the police, not the workhouse?—Yes; I think it would be good.

1903. The people that you think ought not to be interfered with are the people who are really and honestly looking for work?—That is what I meant when I say bona fide—a man who would be travelling through here looking for work, an artisan who found himself without any money, and who would have to go from one town to another. There are sometimes men of that class.

1904. And they will come to a place like Derry, which has the name of being a place where employment is plentiful?—Yes. About the children in the workhouse, no person can advocate anything better than the present system of boarding out, but there are a number of children who go from town to town, and I believe it would be a mercy to these children to take them and rear them up, not in the workhouse, but outside with other children. It would be a mercy to take them from the father and mother.

1905. Do you think they would object?—They should have no right to object; they should be compulsorily taken from them and reared up as good men and women, because otherwise they come to live in the workhouse.

1906. I think it was said yesterday that if the case was as bad as to make it desirable to take away the children the parents ought to be put in jail as long as the Guardians had charge of the children?—That is a very strong remedy.

1907. As regards the infirm classes, you think the stronger ones make it uncomfortable for the feeble ones?—As the workhouse is at present constituted, as far as I could see of it, there is one class called the aged and infirm that occupy a separate place by themselves; there is another class still called the aged and infirm that occupy the sitting-room with the men, and

Aug 21, 1898.

Mr. William Brown.

Aug. 22, 1893. take their meals with them, and I have frequently board complaints that the strong able-bodied ones kept them away from the Sea.
 Mr. William Brown.

1708. Is not that rather a matter for the wardman or the workhouse master?—The wardman in that case is a pauper.

1709. The workhouse master?—Well, if he is called upon by the wardman.

Mr. SAMUEL LONEY examined.

Mr. Samuel Loney.

1710. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Clerk of the Coleraine Union?—Yes; I was also master for five years, and relieving officer for fifteen years.

1711. Are there any of your Guardians here to-day?—No, the committee appointed had important engagements for yesterday and to-day, and it was arranged that when I had their views I should come to the Commission and give their views, as far as possible.

1712. What are the views of your committee?—On the first question of amalgamation of workhouses, the Guardians are unanimous on the question of amalgamation of one of the workhouses in the County Derry. They think one ought to be taken up. If that workhouse can be utilized for an auxiliary asylum, and relieve the pressure on the present asylum, and stop the expenditure on Grange. The Guardians had thought among themselves, although they did not suggest it, had thought generally that Linsavady would be the workhouse most suitable for that purpose, and that it could be utilized without appointing a separate staff. It could be made an auxiliary by having a staff that would be suitable for it without going to an extravagant staff for simple lunatics only. I think it was said at the meeting of the County Council, of which two of our Guardians are members, that there were sixty people in the asylum that could be transferred to Linsavady if it was an auxiliary, as well as a few that are in the workhouses, and then it would not be necessary to have a very efficient staff, that is a staff with great knowledge of the treatment of lunacy. They are mostly idiots and people who would not want exceptional treatment. Any case that would want exceptional treatment should be kept in an asylum. The Guardians are of opinion that no lunatic of any description should be kept in the workhouse.

1713. From your experience as workhouse master, would you cordially agree with that?—Most undoubtedly; it is a great deal better now than it was twenty years ago, but still a workhouse is not the place for the treatment of lunatics, and I do agree with the Guardians that Linsavady as a workhouse might be done away with entirely, and even as a hospital; a general infirmary ought to take its place—a district hospital. It was said here in evidence—and I took it up yesterday as a good suggestion—that thirty-three of those people in Linsavady are lunatics, who would go to the asylum, of course; the remainder are children who could be boarded out and otherwise disposed of. That would practically leave only about thirty people—people in hospital. Fifteen of these Mr. Boyd said could be disposed of by boarding-out. I don't care for the boarding-out system, but take it far granted that they would be, that would only leave about thirty. Take it that fifteen of those thirty were people that had not much connection with the district that is always the case in workhouse infirmaries; one-half of the people have no connection with the district farther than that they were there in their youth and come back when they are old—these people could be removed to Derry or Coleraine, the remaining ten or fifteen could be accommodated in a cottage hospital, and to that could be attached two wards for paying patients, which would be very useful in Linsavady; we have one in Coleraine, which is very useful.

1714. How is the Coleraine one supported?—By voluntary subscription.

1715. Do you mean you are against boarding-out grown-up people or the children?—Grown-up people; it is open to so many abuses.

1716. You are in favour of boarding-out children?—Most undoubtedly in this way; it is the best system that is being adopted now, much superior to treatment in the workhouse, but I have in my mind—I don't know whether the Guardians would agree with me—my personal opinion is that it is not the best system in this county. It is not nearly as good here as in Armagh and Monaghan, where they have small farmers who will take the children for a small fee. In this county—I speak especially for Coleraine—we are depended for the boarding-out of our children on the labouring classes.

1717. Won't the small farmers take them then?—We have really no small farmers to take them. Our farmers are farmers that would not be troubled with having children about their houses; would not nurse them for pay. Some would adopt a child, but that would be a different thing altogether.

1718. Does adoption really mean they would adopt them as a member of the family, or merely take them to get work out of the child without paying them?—It would be a case where a child would be adopted for the sake of having a child.

1719. Where there would be a children family?—Yes. We have sixteen children that are nursed, mostly with the labouring class; that is the class they come from.

1720. That is right, is it not?—I don't agree with that. We are bringing up orphan children in the same position as they were before. We put them in the houses of the labouring classes, where they have not the means of learning to be industrious; they have not cows and cannot learn to milk, in the case of the 19th girls, and they have not horses. When girls come to twelve or thirteen they learn to sew, and they are useless for anything but sewing.

1721. Are not the girls employed by neighbouring farmers?—They are, but not until they come to fifteen or sixteen. A child brought up in a labourer's house, and going to work with a farmer, is expected to assist in milking the cows. And they don't then get into the farmhouses; they mostly go to shirt factories and large towns, in private house service, and even then, in the rural districts in Coleraine, a great many people keep cows, and it is impossible now to get a servant girl to milk a cow. That is one of the things that would lead me to say—if it were possible in each county—to have a separate part of the workhouse set apart for an industrial school that would be entirely free from the other part of the workhouse. Appoint a thoroughly good schoolmaster and schoolmistress; let them not mix with the other part of the house; be entirely off it by themselves—sleep by themselves—and be altogether separate, and learn to milk cows and wash clothes, and other things, and not leave them to sit with their hands folded when they are not at school, and not learn the ordinary work of servant girls. I think they could be properly trained in several institutions.

1722. You think you could in an institution rear up a little boy or girl to be as useful as in houses outside?—I am of opinion that they could, much better than in a labourer's house. I remember a school under the control of the Society of Friends, in the County Down, at Brockfield, where the children of small farmers were brought in there and educated.

1723. How long would they stay there?—From five to six years.

1724. It was a boarding school?—Yes, it was kept for a very small fee—in some cases a couple of pounds—and they were clothed, and these children, children of parents who were poor, they all turned out to be house servants and farm servants, and a great many that were intelligent came to be land stewards; and I don't think there is anything to hinder a school under the Poor Law being managed the same way. I think, as far as amalgamation is concerned, the Guardians think Linsavady might be done away with, and that the amalgamation of one workhouse in this county would be good. We would answer the second question, if the workhouse could be utilized, and I think there is nothing to hinder that.

1725. The third question does not arise, because they don't want to join any union?—No, and I would not agree with the boarding-out of lunatics. We pay between £600 and £700 a year for outdoor relief; it was double that amount twenty years ago, and it was greatly abused, but I think at present with as it is not abused. It is given in every deserving case where the relieving officer—an independent man—reports, and the Guardians are guided by his opinion.

1735. Query 4: is there any change in the law that the Guardians think desirable?—I don't know that the Guardians have considered the question very much.

1737. They have not asked you to say anything on that?—No, I have my own opinion upon the question of union charges.

1738. As clerk of the union, I suppose you would rather keep up the union charges?—No, sir; if divisional charges can be made as a whole, by all means make everything divisional charges, but I don't think it would be desirable to make divisional charges for outdoor relief or maintenance. When I was appointed relieving officer in 1855 the outdoor relief was between £50 and £30 a week. The Guardians found it coming very heavy on them, and the idea then was that every Guardian that came up from his division and presented an old woman and said, "I want outdoor relief for her," the Guardians gave it to her. But after I was appointed the Guardians generally set their faces against it; memoranda were brought to Guardians, saying—"Get such a woman outdoor relief." I always did invariably oppose, it was so badly abused, and the Guardians were glad to get out of the responsibility. The Guardians who are advocating the cost of outdoor relief as a divisional charge will find afterwards they will be glad to get rid of the responsibility.

1739. Your experience is that there was double the outdoor relief when there was divisional rating at Coleraine?—That is so, and the Guardians themselves say it was abused, and did away with it.

1740. There is no additional hospital accommodation, is there, required in Coleraine Union?—I think not; we are very well off for hospital accommodation.

1741. How far from the workhouse is the most distant part of the Coleraine Union?—Seventeen miles—Tamlaghtbeg—were we have a contract for an asphalting.

1742. Is that a populous part of the union?—Fairly populous, but very healthy; not many come in. The Guardians, whenever they have an old man or woman that can be comfortably kept out, give a little outdoor relief. They very seldom give outdoor relief except in the case of an old man and woman living together, who have a comfortable house, but when they get sick they come to the workhouse, and we send a four-wheeled ambulance, and, where necessary, a trained nurse.

1743. Are there many pauper patients?—There are in the fever hospital, but not in the infirmary; our district is a healthy district.

1744. If the Guardians were given power to charge what they in their discretion thought would be fair, having regard to the circumstances in each case, do you think it would be a good thing to have a small fee, say from 6d. or 1s. or 2s. 6d. a week, up to whatever the actual cost would be?—I think it would be if the Guardians could charge it, but I don't think it would be very much avoided.

1745. I mean if it were practically made compulsory?—If it was, it would keep a good many out.

1746. Do you really think so; supposing you were sitting as a member of a committee, and the child of a man earning £1 came in—supposing he had a large family you would say: "This child at all events costs him 1s. a week at home, and we will charge him 1s. a week"—do you think that would keep that child out?—I don't think it would, but we have very few of those cases about Coleraine; generally speaking it would be a good thing in Derry but not in the rural districts.

1747. Who are the people who come into your hospital chiefly?—People suffering from accidents, and old people generally who are wearing down.

1748. You don't think from your class of inmates that very much could be got in the way of contributions?—I don't think so. We have arranged with the medical officer, and we have one ward better done up than the rest, and where a patient wishes to pay, the fee is so small, he gets the accommodation of that ward. In both these wards we have men and women who pay; that ward is never taken up with anyone except respectable poor people.

1749. Do you think any improvement ought to be made as regards the treatment of convales?—I think a great deal more is made of the tramps than is necessary. I think if the general law as to vagrancy was thoroughly carried out by the police, and the regulations of the place strictly carried out, there would be an improvement, but I think a great deal of the tramp system is encouraged.

1750. Do you think it is right that a man should be able to claim his discharge after three hours?—In some cases I would keep him longer, but I think generally that if the regulations are strictly carried out, that they come into the workhouse at 7 o'clock at night, and the master sees that they are dressed in workhouse clothes and washed—not necessarily in cold water—and their clothes are taken from them, and their pipes and tobacco, and they go to bed and are up next morning at 6 o'clock, and that they wrought for three hours and get their breakfast, there would not be much trouble. The casuals are the worst, I think the principal part of them—the loafers—should be kept in the workhouse at least a week, and if they continue, increase that time.

1751. As soon as they would have a character for being casual loafers?—Yes, keep them in. There is one other class which is a great trouble in inland parishes, and it has not been touched on by any witness—it is the class that brings itself for treatment to the hospital from drink. Speaking of the Coleraine Workhouse, from an experience of over twenty-three years, we have those people coming in five or six times, and in fact their whole lives they are suffering from drink; they come in and get patched up, after a great deal of proper nursing and care and trouble and expense; they go out and perhaps come back in three weeks the same way again. I think where a man or woman comes to the workhouse hospital more than twice in his or her life, I think the second time they come, and have brought it on themselves, they should be punished as vagrants; give them a month in jail or six weeks. It is a great nuisance not alone to the officials, but it is a nuisance to the other patients; they have to be held in bed, and they are a great trouble to the other patients. It is a thing as to which the Guardians have had time after time to see if anything could be done, and nothing could be done. I think that the tramps don't cost very much, and if you make any hard and fast rule with a tramp, you then put him that he will lie down in a haystack, and perhaps set fire to it, which would cost the country far more than keeping him. About sending them to jails, I don't agree with that; if a man is really destitute, it is better to make a mistake in admitting him than to put any poor person to the trouble of going to the police and getting the stigma of being a criminal. I think in all cases of casuals and tramps they should go direct to the master of the workhouse, and not to the relieving officer. My experience as a relieving officer in Coleraine was that a tramp came to me at 5 or 7 o'clock and got a line; he immediately started begging through the whole town, and turned up at the workhouse very often at 10 or 11 at night nearly drunk. The master could not refuse him. In some cases I know the master did refuse him, and was reprimanded for doing so, and rightly, because they were left at the gate, but if the master of the workhouse was the only person who could give a line to the tramp, they would go there in proper time and be admitted. I think it is a thing that should be looked into.

Mr. E. M. Macneary examined.

Perhaps you would allow me to say a few words as one of the members of the Londonderry County Council, and a former Guardian of the Londonderry Union; it was merely with reference to our County Council that recommended one of the workhouses in the County Derry to be dissolved; with that recommendation I entirely agree. It would appear to rather point to the Londonderry Union as being the Union that should be dissolved; I quite agree with that, too. But as a member of the asylum board, I hardly agree with the recommendation that it should be converted into an auxiliary asylum, owing to several reasons, with which you are no doubt all conversant, that is the State grant, and cost and difficulty of providing attendants. I think an asylum should be concentrated, as far as possible, and having regard to the fact that we have got a very fine piece of ground at Glenties—

1752. CHAIRMAN.—Where you have already undertaken considerable works?—Where we are undertaking considerable works, and have already located thirty of the inmates. At present we are building to accommodate 100 inmates, and ultimately the entire asylum will be moved down there, but I rather think that the Londonderry workhouse, if it is dissolved, might be very

Aug. 12, 1902.

Mr. Bennett
Looky

Mr. E. M.
Macneary.

Aug. 12, 1903.

Mr. S.M.
Macrory.

advantageously turned into an agricultural school, and I might in that connection point out the fact that we in the County Londonderry had the most useful agricultural school that existed in Ireland, at Templemore. I daresay you have all read Thackeray's "Irish Sketch Book." The last chapter of that gives probably the very best description of Templemore, and Mr. Thackeray passed a very favourable criticism on the management of Templemore; and from my own knowledge I believe that school did more good to the County Derry, and nearly every other county in Ireland, than anything else we had. If something of that sort could be established in Limerick I believe it would be very greatly to the advantage not only of the County Derry, but also to the whole North of Ireland.

1763. The land at the workhouse is very well situated?—It is. Owing to the recent death of a lady, the late Mr. Alexander's farm behind the house—sixty or seventy acres of land—is now available, so in every way it would be very desirable for that purpose. That is really all I wish to say about the matter.

1764. The matter has not been considered locally in connection with the Agricultural Department, I suppose?—It has not. I mentioned the matter to Sir Horace Plunkett last Autumn, and I think he seemed disposed to look at it favourably. I also advised him to read Thackeray's "Sketch Book," which he did not appear to have read, in connection with the school we had at Templemore.

CHAIRMAN.—There are no other witnesses, I think, here to-day. We will sit to-morrow at 11 o'clock and take up the boundaries.

The Sitting was adjourned.

FIFTH PUBLIC SITTING—THURSDAY, AUGUST 13TH, 1903.

Aug 13 1903.

At the Courthouse, Londonderry.

Present:—Mr. MACKS, (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. COREY BOGGER.

CHAIRMAN.—There is one general witness whose evidence will take a short time—a doctor who could not attend until this morning. It will only delay the boundaries question by a few minutes.

Dr. LEONARD KING examined.

Dr. Leonard King.

1743. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Surgeon of the County Fermanagh Infirmary?—Yes, sir.

1746. You attend here to-day to give evidence on the question of hospitals; would you kindly state what you wish to say on that subject?—Well, broadly, Mr. Chairman, my conclusions are these, that there are too many hospitals of all sorts, and I base my reasons there:—The population of Ireland is 4,484,000; the united population of Dublin, Belfast, and Cork comes to 123,000, and for my purpose I take the rest of the population of Ireland as rural—that leaves a rural population of 3,750,000. It is admitted by authorities that the standard number of hospital beds in the rural population is one to 1,000. There are peculiar circumstances in Ireland; an unusual number of crippled people of one kind or another left owing to the tide of emigration, so that possibly this standard had better be raised to one bed in 800. That means you would require as hospital beds for hospital patients, distinguished from aged and infirm in workhouses, 4,750 beds. The question is how is this to be grappled with. To be on the safe side, make that 5,000 beds. The average occupation of a bed in Ireland will be thirty days, and 5,000 hospital beds ought to provide in the year for 50,000 people. The means that at present exist are—there are some thirty county infirmaries outside Cork and Dublin. I include Antrim because the county infirmary is in Larchmont, and there are 150 workhouse hospitals; lump them all at an average of fifty beds and you get some thousands of beds too many. We want to provide for 5,000 beds. There are thirty county infirmaries, with an average of fifty beds—that is 1,500 provided for—and only leaves about 3,500 to be provided for in union hospitals; that will be met with by taking seventy of the union hospitals from the 150, in my opinion, leaving some eighty that may be eliminated altogether as hospitals distinct from villages for the aged and infirm; but for pure simple surgical and medical purposes there seems to me there are some eighty hospitals too many. I think the county infirmaries, or the best of the union hospitals converted into district hospitals, should be raised to a very high standard of efficiency, constructed, equipped, and furnished on the most modern lines for surgical cases, and all the grave cases of each county and district should be concentrated in these central hospitals. You will probably require also a certain number of union hospitals, less expensively equipped, for less severe cases and chronic cases. But acute medical and surgical cases, to secure their having the full advantage of the advance of science, should be concentrated in a central hospital, possibly the county infirmary, or the best of the union hospitals, situated in a convenient district; and, I take it, that under ordinary circumstances, one such hospital, at all events in the smaller counties, would be sufficient. There may be some of the counties would require two such hospitals, possibly Cork or Tipperary, and two or three other counties may require two each, but the majority of the counties would be amply served by one hospital of about sixty beds, without the use of the union hospitals, provided that in outlying districts a certain number of small cottage hospitals were supplied and put in charge of the doctor of the district.

1747. Then you would close the workhouses and put cottage hospitals in their place?—I would close up, I should think, some eighty union hospitals.

1748. Have a smaller number of beds in smaller centres?—Precisely so; a limited number of cottage hospitals with eight or ten beds as the locality required.

1749. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—Leaving them in charge of the dispensary doctors?—Leaving them in charge of the dispensary doctors.

1750. Dr. BROWNE.—You mentioned the proportion of one bed to 1,000; where did you get that statistic?—I cannot give you the statistics, but that is accepted as a fair average, by hospital authorities, for rural populations.

1751. For infectious diseases?—No, I am talking altogether of medical and surgical beds.

1752. You would require that proportion for infectious diseases alone; that is the proportion laid down by all sanitary authorities?—But I should think that would scarcely apply to rural districts.

1753. Is not that the number provided in any well-maintained institution?—I think it is.

1754. If that is so for infectious diseases, would it not require a larger number for all the other cases?—I don't think it would, because a great many people come to hospitals in Ireland, simply because there are no out-patient departments.

1755. CHAIRMAN.—No place for dressing wounds regularly?—Quite so; constantly people in the country come to hospitals for treatment of chronic cases which could be managed at home.

1756. You think a smaller number of beds spread over a small district would meet your views?—Yes.

1757. Is there anything else on the hospital question?—Dr. Bogger referred to the fever hospitals; I can only speak about Fermanagh. There are three fever hospitals in Fermanagh; these are frequently without a patient at all, and the area of the county is such that there would be nothing to prevent fever patients being transported to one central hospital, which would serve the entire county for fever, assuming that the hospital were constructed on proper lines, and I think any fever hospital should be constructed so as to treat infectious diseases without risk of contact—at least three varieties of infectious diseases in each case—and if that were the case, one central fever hospital in such a county as Fermanagh would be ample to serve the whole county.

1758. Dr. BROWNE.—For three diseases it would need at least seven or eight wards, male and female, and for isolation purposes?—It would; but then the question arises, what are you to do in the event of an epidemic. It would be much cheaper to provide for an epidemic in case of emergency than to leave large, permanent buildings idle waiting for an epidemic.

1759. As regards nursing?—My idea is that each county should be self-contained, with regard to the nursing arrangement, and that each county hospital or district hospital, which is brought up to the standard of the efficient county hospital, should be regarded as the local training centre; that is that each hospital must be brought up in construction, equipment,

Aug. 13, 1902.

Dr. Leonard
Kidd.

furnishing and the means at their disposal for teaching to make them efficient training schools for any nurses that may be required in that particular county, and each hospital should have a staff somewhat larger than is required for its immediate wants, so that extra hands could be sent from the parent hospital to the local hospital when they are wanted, and be available for private nursing and add to the income of the institution in such a way; such an arrangement as that, especially for those out-lying hospitals would be a material factor in introducing district nursing, which would reduce the number of people who now apply for hospital treatment.

1760. Was there anything else with regard to nursing; it should be a county or a group of counties?—Yes, but personally I prefer to see each county self-contained. I think that, too, involves a question of hospital payment. I think as persons should be admitted free to a rate-supported hospital. I draw a wide distinction between a rate-supported hospital and one supported by charitable contributions. I am not prepared to defend the system of payments in charitable institutions, but in rate-aided hospitals every person should pay something, no matter how small, and that charge should be based, not on what it costs the institution to maintain the individual, but rather what it would cost that person to live at home. If a man has a sick child I think he should pay 2s. 6d., 5s., or whatever it may be, a week.

1761. Or is it?—He should do that; if he does not do that, you put a premium on sickness, and that man is escaping the home maintenance of the child. I would relax the rule as far as possible; but in order to keep your rule let him pay 1d. a week.

1762. But if he had no means?—He has got to live at home, and he cannot live at home for 1d. a week. If he were sick and treated at home it would cost him a great deal more than 1d. a week. I have worked out some figures with regard to the Farmingham Hospital.

1763. CHAIRMAN.—Perhaps you would hand them to the Secretary?—The next question is the question of tuberculosis.

1764. You were going to say something about the aged and infirm paupers?—I think considerable economy might be effected by boarding out a considerable number of aged and infirm people who are now in the workhouse. Personally, I am totally against boarding out the children, but I am not against the boarding out of people in the other extreme of life, but I am aware that if you go to the workhouse and ask these people how many have friends willing to take them at a small sum it would only reduce the aged and infirm about 10 per cent. The average cost of people in the workhouse appears to be 3s. 6d. a week.

1765. That is merely for food; it runs up to 5s. or 10s. 1—Well, I think that many of those aged and infirm people might be kept by their friends if they were given 3s. or 4s. a week, but that should be done under the most rigid inspection by relieving officers assigned for the purpose, and where there is out-door relief there should be the same rigid inspection.

1766. You see the danger of it?—Quite so.

1767. That would be the only test you could suggest?—I would give no out-door relief except for work done.

1768. But if people are not able to work—say a woman with three or four young children?—But as a rule there are some members of the family who can work.

1769. A great many of the cases who get out-door relief are cases where the person cannot work?—There are very often some members of the family who do something. I think, as far as possible, it should be a broad principle that no out-door relief should be given except in receipt for work done.

1770. That would be an abolition of out-door relief?—It would reduce it very much, I think.

1771. Why do you object to the boarding out of children?—For this reason; as far as I can judge, the chief reason for taking children away from the workhouse is owing to what is called the "atmosphere of the workhouse," "the taint of the workhouse." A workhouse has no business to have these "atmospheres" or "taints," but in the next place I think it would be better if children were separated from the ordinary workhouse and concentrated in separate establishments, called industrial homes.

1772. Institutions?—Institutions of that kind; and from the time they are three and a half years old their education should be conducted by people who are properly fitted to teach them at that age; and so soon as they are fit for it, every child, male and female, should be technically instructed in some trade. As far as the means at my disposal permit me I want to visit in my district the children who are boarded out. They are brought up in the worst habits of idleness, and ignorance, and dirt of the poorer class Irish peasantry. I only speak of what I have seen myself. One woman told me, "If I keep these children the way the lady inspector wants me, the sum I get from the workhouse—25s. a year, is 11d. a week—would not do it." and, as far as I can see, they are taught nothing. Their latest ambition seems to be a cattle head or farm drudge, and they are not taught to be a good cattle head or farm drudge. I think there is a great responsibility on the people who have charge of the poor; I don't see why they should not be lifted and their whole tone raised.

1773. Above that of the ratepayers?—Yes; I don't see why they should not be, because eventually, although the Guardians may say these children are better educated than our children, it would raise the status of the whole country.

1774. Dr. Broom.—Farmers will always require labourers?—Yes; but take the ordinary Irish servant in your house; she does not do anything right. A trained domestic servant who has been properly trained will do twice as much work, and much more cleanly, than she would. Girls come into my hospital to do work and begin to clean the grates, and then they put their black hands on the painted wall; they don't know how to do their work, and somebody else has to come round and clean up after them.

1775. CHAIRMAN.—What are your views about epileptics and lunatics?—I think they should all be taken away from the workhouse, and that raises the question as to whether workhouses should be turned into auxiliary asylums. I don't think they should. I think all epileptics and insane should be concentrated in the asylums, which should be sufficiently large to accommodate them, because the risk of turning the workhouse into auxiliary asylums is that they might be left without regular attendance, and that leads one to the question of providing an extra medical staff; it would not do to lock them up in a place like the Zoo; they should be under careful medical inspection.

1776. Dr. Broom.—Would it be cheaper?—I think it would be cheaper to put them into the asylum.

1777. CHAIRMAN.—You wish to make some suggestion on the question of tuberculosis?—There are two things that have occupied my attention very much as doctor to the infirmary—the first is the appalling amount of tuberculous cases of one kind or another that come in—surgeon tuberculous, not lung tuberculous—and also the extraordinary number of people who come suffering from blood poisoning, due to the defective condition of their teeth. If these two things could be grappled with it would prevent the crowding, and there would be much less demand for hospital beds, and it must be admitted that prevention is better than cure. The only suggestion I could make is to make consumption notifiable, not with the idea that they should be brought to hospital, but that cases not sufficiently bad to go to hospital should be under inspection and obliged to report themselves to trained inspectors, in order that they may receive instruction as to how they could diminish the risk of spreading pulmonary consumption, which is contagious, preventable, and curable, and why not lay ourselves out to meet these three broad facts.

1778. First you would have it notifiable; then as regards its isolation?—As far as possible at present, but you could not compel every tuberculous person to go to hospital in Ireland, but a great deal might be done to prevent the spread by having them in their homes under expert inspection. The two chief causes of the spreading is the unsanitary and unswept condition of their houses, and they should be taught how to improve their houses, surface drainage, and the proportion of the size of windows and size of doors, and while these trained inspectors are going round these houses, a great deal might be done by inspecting the members of these families with regard to the condition of their teeth, which would reduce disease in this country by an enormous extent. As regards the treatment of tuberculosis in the urban hospitals, I think they are quite unsuitable, and the only way to manage it would be by selecting specially suitable sites in certain districts, and that creation of groups of counties should join together in maintaining a sanatorium not only for the treatment of pulmonary tuberculosis, but also surgical tuberculosis; and I fancy once these institutions were started the receipts from patients in these, and other hospitals, would do a great deal towards supporting them, and they in a large measure would become convalescent homes for surgical hospitals. A case of tuberculosis goes into a surgical hospital and remains there for nine months or ten months. I should suggest that if Sligo, Donegal, Tyrone, and Fermanagh were joined, these four counties could obtain such a place in or near Bundoran, and the arrangements for that could be provided by the receipts from the patients of these various hospitals.

1779. Dr. BROOME.—You mentioned one large hospital or two for some counties: what about the staff of these hospitals?—My idea about that is if you do away with a considerable number of union hospitals, it at once creates a grievance with regard to the medical officers. I think the better class of hospitals should be situated either in the county town or the largest town of the district, so as to have a staff of two or three medical men, and a great deal of the grievance of doing away with the union hospital would be met wherever it was possible by transferring the doctor of the workhouse to the staff of the county infirmary, or wherever this large hospital was.

1780. Do you think that would do for all purposes, for instance, large operations?—Quite so. I have an average of thirty-two beds occupied daily, and it takes a great deal of time. I have to ask for assistance, depending on the generosity of my colleagues, when I have any operations.

1781. Every medical man in the country is not qualified to be an hospital surgeon?—Quite so; but I would like to see provision made in the county infirmaries to attract charitable contributors. Under the present Act they are under a committee—a certain number of the County Council and a certain number selected from private subscribers. County infirmaries were originally supported by private money, and the Local Government Board have capitalised this, and allowed a certain proportion of annual subscribers to sit on the board, and I think that is a wise conclusion, because if you put them all under the control of the County Council you kill whatever charity other arrangements would draw forth, but I think there is one list in the present arrangements—the question of appointments unless the service becomes a State service. I think any man who subscribes £5 a year, or gives a donation of £20, should have a voice in the election of medical officers. At present there are many men who are life governors of my infirmary, and they have no voice whatever in the election of an officer.

1782. CHAIRMAN.—You recommend going back to the old system?—Not altogether, but for the purpose of administration, the Board might be made a composite Board, elected every three years, and every paying governor need not necessarily have a seat on that board, but in the event of an election he ought to have a voice.

1783. Is there anything more?—The only other thing I want to say with regard to the payment by hospital patients is, there is only one way that this can be collected in a businesslike way, that these payments must be small and collected weekly in advance. That is a more matter of routine work for whoever is registrar of the hospital.

1784. Dr. BROOME.—Have you any idea of how much you would raise in that way from the county?—When I was appointed the average was about £20 a year; we have got it up now to over £80, and the individuals are charged less than they used to be, but there are a larger number of people paying smaller sums.

1785. CHAIRMAN.—Now the boundaries question?—I would like to add that I have calculated in my hospital that on the average computation of thirty-two beds, without the smallest hardship on the people who come, we can easily collect an income of £300 a year.

1786. You estimated that?—Yes, and on that scale only two of these thirty beds would be charged 10s. a week, and the majority under 6d. a day.

Mr. M. DETHMUND, K.C. (instructed by Mr. Wm. Wilson), represented Donagall County Council; Mr. T. M. HEALY, K.C., M.P. (instructed by Mr. William O'Doherty), the Inshaven Board of Guardians; and Mr. J. J. CHANCE, M.P. (instructed by Mr. Edward O'Fallon, M.P., and Mr. James Boyle), the Letterkenny and Stranorlar Board of Guardians.

Mr. D. S. HENRY, K.C., and Mr. R. E. OSGOOD (instructed by Mr. Stuart Ross), represented the Londonderry Board of Guardians; Mr. JOHN COOK, K.C., (instructed by Mr. John S. McCay), the Londonderry Corporation; Mr. A. L. HOBSON (instructed by Mr. Stuart Ross), the Londonderry No. 1 Rural District Council; Mr. LARSEN (instructed by Mr. S. Ross), Londonderry No. 2 Rural District Council; Mr. D. S. HENRY, K.C. (instructed by Mr. Thomas Elliott), also appeared for the Stranorlar Board of Guardians.

Mr. DRUMMOND.—I am instructed to appear before you on behalf of the County Council of the County Donegal. Three of the unions in the county—Inshaven, Letterkenny, and Stranorlar—will be represented; Mr. Healy appears for Inshaven, and Mr. Chaney for Stranorlar and Letterkenny. We are all in reality acting in the same interest, but my duty will be to place the condition of the county as far as this inquiry is concerned generally before you, and Mr. Healy and Mr. Chaney will go more minutely into the circumstances of the unions for which they appear. I understand from the public notices that the object of this inquiry is to improve the Poor Law system, and make it more effective and more economical, and I understand the two questions that will be before you will be the advisability of dissolving some of the existing Poor Law Unions and the question of altering the boundaries of some of the existing unions. My object here to-day is in reference to the alterations of the boundaries of certain unions in the County Donegal, but in passing I cannot avoid saying a word to you on the other point, namely, the dissolution of some of the unions, and I sincerely hope that in making the recommendations finally in your report, you will see your way to reducing the unions of Donegal by at least one-half. They are at present eight, and I think anybody who knows the county will conclude that at the very most four union workhouses would be quite sufficient for the necessities of the county. A continuation of the present number is an unnecessary and oppressive imposition upon the ratepayers, who are already burdened to an extent that they can hardly afford. Now the broad principle I take up is this: It is provided by the very first sub-section of the last section of the Local Government Act of 1890, that "A council shall be established in every administrative county, and be entrusted with the management and administration of the financial business of that county, that is the County Council. The object of that Act was to make the County Council the governing body for the purposes of administration and taxation of the entire county. But the County Donegal you will find to be in this anomalous condition. The valuation of the entire county is £303,723. Out of that eight unions have to be provided for, and although that is the valuation of the entire large county, there are two districts, one known as Stranorlar No. 2, and the other known as Londonderry No. 2, which represent valuations, one of £42,700 and the other of £24,700, which are cut out of the county, by far the two richest portions of the county, and one is thrown into the County Tyrone and the other into the County Londonderry. Why this was done so far back as 1823 it is impossible now to tell, nor would the consideration be very profitable, at this time of day, but from time to time complaints have been made about this injustice. It is not a matter that has arisen recently; ever since the Local Government Act was passed the County Council has been constantly agitating about this. But the complaints about this anomaly did not arise then, because twenty years ago it was agitated in this county and brought before the public, and a gentleman who represented one of the divisions of the county, Mr. James K. O'Doherty, felt the injustice of it, but there was no opportunity of remedying it. There is an opportunity now through this Commission, I hope, of remedying such a gross injustice, and it is my duty to ask your attention to a few figures that will place it in a very striking way before you. Of course you understand what the effect of this is upon the County Council; it confuses their book-keeping. For instance, the County Council of Tyrone sends in a demand saying they want so much for this

Aug. 12, 1903
Dr. Leonard
Kidd.

Aug. 12, 1895

large area of Donegal that is placed improperly under their jurisdiction for Poor Law purposes. The County Council of Donegal has then to strike a rate which will include that, and they have to collect it, which has to be collected for the richer county, Tyrone, at the expense of the County Donegal. The County Tyrone demands it and they must get it. In like manner the union of Derry sends in a demand, and the proportion that they call for must be collected by the County Donegal. There are ten rural districts in Donegal, and the bringing back of these two districts that I have alluded to from Tyrone and Derry, respectively, will reduce the number to eight, but it will do far more than that, because these being very highly valued and the very richest districts in the county, the bringing of them into the county will facilitate a readjustment in reference to the remaining districts, and will facilitate the reduction of the number of workhouses, which cannot be done as long as this anomalous state of things continues. Again, to show the inconvenience of it, these two particular districts, Strabane No. 2 and Derry No. 2, hold certain meetings; the county surveyor has to attend these meetings, and one of the reasons he gave for demanding an increase in his salary, which was made, and had to be given by the County Donegal, was because he had to attend meetings of these two districts for road purposes and other purposes. The valuation of the Londonderry Union at the present time, including, of course, this piece of the County Donegal, is £109,000, and when you take from the valuation of Donegal the valuations of these two portions, it will leave only £224,000 of a valuation, and when you divide that among the eight Poor Law Unions, it leaves a valuation of about £28,000 each. And I understand that the Derry Union, which has this enormous valuation, is coming in to oppose the amalgamation of this portion of Donegal with the rest of the county, although they have this great valuation, about eight times as much as some of these Poor Law Unions that have to go to all the expense of keeping up establishments in different parts of the County Donegal. The valuation of the Stranorlar Union at present is £24,000, of the Letterkenny Union, £28,000, and of the Inishowen, £41,000. There are ten electoral divisions in the County Donegal in what is called Strabane No. 2, which is the name which is applied to the portion of the County Donegal which, as I said already, is put into the County Tyrone. There are nine electoral divisions in what is known as Londonderry No. 2—that is the portion that goes in with the Londonderry Union. The Strabane Union has a total valuation of £113,000, and of that £42,661 is the valuation of the portion of Donegal that they have amalgamated with their union. The population of this particular district, known as Strabane No. 2, is 35,000. What the County Council of Donegal desire is that of the electoral divisions that are thrown in with the Strabane Union, seven should go to Stranorlar and the remaining three should go to Letterkenny. The valuation of these seven is £50,000. I will just give you two or three figures to show a reason, if there was no reason in the general policy of the Act, why it would be for the benefit even of the ratepayers of Strabane No. 2 that this amalgamation should take place, that the alteration we seek should be made. There are at present in the Strabane Workhouse an average of 280 indoor paupers; of these fifty belong to Strabane No. 2; the average cost of the paupers in the Strabane Union is 3s. 4½d. per week; the whole at this rate is equal to a rate of 4½d. in the £ on the valuation of the entire Strabane Union. The number of paupers in the Stranorlar Workhouse is sixty-five on an average, although they have a place for two or three hundred, and if you take the fifty Donegal paupers who are in the Strabane along with the sixty-five, it would make 115 altogether; this, at the ordinary Strabane rate of 3s. 4½d. per head, would come to £1,665, and this on the combined valuation of the Stranorlar Union and Strabane No. 2 would be at the rate of 3½d. in the £—that would leave a saving of 1½d. in the £ on Strabane No. 2. The expense of the workhouse is divided into three portions—there are the indoor paupers, there is the outdoor relief, and the expense of the establishment. On the support of the indoor paupers a saving of 1½d. in the £ would be made upon the ratepayers of Strabane No. 2. Now let me look at the outdoor relief.—In Strabane Union, £1,325 a year, that is 3½d. in the £; the outdoor relief in Strabane No. 2 is £438 a year, and the outdoor relief in Stranorlar is not over £104; if Strabane No. 2 is added to Stranorlar, the outdoor relief would be 1½d. on the combined valuation, and that would be a saving to Strabane No. 2 of 1d. in the £. If you take the establishment charges, the establishment charges in the Strabane Union cost £1,779—that is 3½d. in the £ on the valuation. In the Stranorlar Union at the outside it is £220, and in the last audited half-year it is not half that. Now if Strabane No. 2 were attached to the Stranorlar Union the rate on the combined valuations would be 3½d. in the £, and that would be a saving in Strabane No. 2 of 1d. in the £, so that the total saving in these three upon Strabane No. 2 would be 3½d. in the £. There are various reasons why it should be a benefit, for the people of Donegal in Strabane No. 2 are contributing to the cost of disbursements in Tyrone. Strabane runs out twenty-five miles into Tyrone, and the people of Donegal, who are united to them, must be contributing to all the expenses connected with that vast area. Why these people come in to object to this I don't know; there must be some other reason beyond the saving of the rates; it will be a saving on the expenditure to themselves. What reason they have, a number of individuals—for I am inclined to think it will be more the opposition of a number of individuals than of the people—it cannot be a bona fide opposition on the part of the ratepayers, and when I come to say a few words about Derry, you will see it is on the same lines. With regard to the question of convenience, taking the advantage of the poor people into consideration, the Strabane Union comes down to within three miles of the town of Stranorlar—that is thirteen miles from Strabane—so that you have parts of the County Donegal at the door of the Stranorlar Union, who are brought thirteen miles down to Strabane because this arrangement was made long ago in 1838. The electoral divisions of Strabane No. 2 are distant from Stranorlar on an average from three to eleven miles. Stranorlar Union only goes fifteen miles in any direction, while the Strabane Union extends over twenty-three or twenty-four miles in the County of Tyrone. Now we come to the Londonderry Union.—The valuation of the Derry Union is £189,000. The Derry No. 2 valuation, that is the portion of the County Donegal that is thrown in with the Londonderry Union, is £34,727. I am instructed that the average number of paupers in the Derry Union is about 290, and it seems almost incredible, but I am instructed to state it to you, that the number in the Derry Workhouse out of Donegal is, on an average, about five or six. From a portion of Donegal representing a valuation of £24,700 there are five paupers in the Derry Workhouse; it happens to be a rich district; it happens to be the richest district in the county. So the districts that are rich are taken away from Donegal altogether, one given to Tyrone and the other given to Derry, and the support of the poor of the entire county is thrown upon the very poorest parts of the county, the remaining eight unions, which, as I said, represent about £23,000 valuation each. That is a very extraordinary state of things. You are familiar with an Act passed not many years ago on reference to the city of London, where, although in a vastly greater way, the same state of things applied. There was an Act passed making the rating apply to the whole of London, so that the rich parts should help the poorer parts, but in Donegal the rich parts of the county are entirely excluded and given over to two counties, either of which is far richer than Donegal, and the support of the poor for the entire county of Donegal is cast on the portion least able to bear it. Why this was originally done it is hard to understand; there may have been some reason in 1839. The population of Donegal and of all Ireland was double then what it is now. The population of Ireland that was over eight millions, it is now only over four millions, and I suppose those districts were cut off because they might have thought it would have been a great burden in consequence of the great population in other parts of the county. That is, unfortunately, reversed now, and the population of the other parts of the county is growing less year after year, so that if there were any justification or excuse for making this unreasonable division, the only thing the Derry Union can say is this—they have got an advantage, they are making no return for it, there are no paupers coming from this district, they are doing nothing for the people of the district. It is a peculiarly selfish position the Derry Guardians take up, because the people of this district of Donegal get their labourers and servants from these poor districts—they get the advantage of proximity to these districts—while they are making no return at all, and the poor rate leviable or collectible from them is to be handed over to the

Aug 25, 1890.

Londonderry Union, who have already this vast valuation that I have drawn your attention to of £129,000. What reason is there why with five or six parsons out of this part in the workhouse of Derry, what reason is there why this state of things should continue, that the richest part of the whole county should continue to go into Derry. There is no reason or justification whatever for it. The County Council of Donegal think that of the nine electoral divisions which are now united with the Derry Union, six should go to Inishowen—Belturbet, Burt, Fahan, Inch, Killybeg, and Three Crosses—and three—Castledward, Killybeg, and Newtownabbey—should be handed over to Letterkenny. The distances of these six electoral divisions from Inishowen vary from ten to sixteen, and from Derry from nine to thirteen, miles, so that no question arises. That will facilitate such an arrangement as will enable you to recommend a reduction from eight parsons to four; some people think even less than four. I think there ought to be some readjustment of the area of the unions that you would recommend the continuance of. Probably the four that you would recommend, looking at the convenience of the county, would be Donegal, Stranorlar, Milford, and Inishowen.

CHAIRMAN.—Those are the four you think might be done?

Mr. Drummond.—Those are the four I think you might continue; however, that merely occurs to myself.

CHAIRMAN.—That is not the opinion of the County Council?

Mr. Drummond.—No, I am not expressing any opinion on the part of the County Council; there will be conflicting views on the County Council. I can voice their opinion in one respect, namely, that the number of eight should be reduced. It is unnecessary to have eight workhouses. The County Council think that four would be quite enough, whatever four you may recommend. There will be no doubt at all that it will be necessary for you to have the whole county included in your scheme, in order to enable you to recommend such an adjustment as will lead to a diminution of the number and, of course, a diminution of the very great expense that is connected with the keeping up of all these establishments. It is unnecessary for me to point out that the making of railways has altered altogether the conditions of the county. When the Act of 1828 was passed there had to be considered the question of the convenience and carriage of sick and poor people; are you have a railway running up to Stranorlar.

CHAIRMAN.—The sick are not carried by train.

Mr. Drummond.—In the vast majority of cases the question of sickness does not apply. When you are bringing people to workhouses, at all events, so far as convenience of conveyance is concerned, the trains have altered the position of workhouses altogether. You have trains to Letterkenny, Stranorlar, Derry, and in different directions that did not exist at that time; they have altered the whole thing. When you look at the train running up the Finn Valley line, the idea of moving up within a couple of miles of Stranorlar and bringing persons back to the Stranorlar Union is too absurd to be seriously entertained for a moment. I am instructed that with regard to the keeping of the accounts of the County Council, it will lead to a reduction of nearly one-third of the clerical staff, because they have to keep a special account for each district, and here they have two districts in regard to which they must keep special accounts, and the chairman of the Finance Committee will tell you what very great trouble and difficulty they have when making out the estimate for the Tyrone and Derry Unions, and the terrible expense it entails on them, and it is a most unjustifiable thing that not only should the rich parts of Donegal be taken from them, but additional expense be thrown on the poor part. The Derry Union includes the city and nearly half the County of Derry, because it goes back to Dungannon. Why should a large part of Donegal be thrown in along with that, to which they are giving no value whatever, from which they are practically receiving no papers, with which they have nothing to do. There never was a more unreasonable thing than that the Londonderry Union should have this piece, or that Stranorlar, which includes a vast tract, running up to twenty-five miles in Tyrone, should have this large slice of Donegal now that there is a railway running through that district to Stranorlar. Considering the convenience of the people, the advantages to the poor, the expense to the ratepayers, or from any possible way you look at it, there is no reason why this thing should be done, and I ask you now to take the broad principle that it was intended by the Local Government Act that there should be an administrative council for each county—that the county should be an independent entity for administration or rating purposes in itself. It is wholly inconsistent with the spirit of that Act that the County Tyrone should have a large part of the County Donegal and the city of Derry on another tract. I ask you to say that these should be restored to the County Donegal in such a manner as you think right, and by doing so you will be conferring a great advantage and making a great saving of expense. I will ask the chairman of the Finance Committee a few questions, and also the clerk of the County Council, and they will tell you much more clearly than I can the disadvantages which the county suffers from the present state of affairs.

Mr. WILLIAM DOHERTY, F.R., examined.

Mr. William Doherty.

1287. Mr. Drummond.—You are a member of the Donegal County Council?—Yes.

1288. And you have been so, I believe, since it was established?—Yes.

1289. Do you represent the Inishowen district, Glenties?—Yes, I am returned for about a third of Inishowen.

1290. Have you been acting as chairman of the Finance Committee of the Council?—Yes.

1291. And in that capacity I suppose the consideration of the striking, and lorrying, and collecting of the rates comes before you?—Yes.

1292. You know this district, No. 2 Stranorlar—I do.

1293. That is the portion of Donegal thrown in with the Stranorlar Union?—I have a slight acquaintance with it geographically.

1294. You know the Derry No. 2 portion?—Yes.

1295. In your experience as chairman of the Finance Committee, does the separation of this district from the county lead to unnecessary expense, in the first place?—It does.

1296. Now, just give us your view?—By increasing the clerical staff somewhat, it leads also to confusion.

1297. How?—If the Finance Committee asked the secretary as to the state of the finances of the county at large, he would require two or three days to prepare the answer before he could give it—would require to communicate with the Stranorlar and Derry workhouses—and we are never properly conversant with the entire finances of the county so long as there are administered in another place out of our effort.

1298. Has the County Donegal to bear the expense of collecting this rate demanded by Stranorlar and Derry?—Yes, we have appointed collectors, but I am not certain that the fee does not come out of those districts. The County Donegal has to pay them, of course, because we call them two districts the County Donegal.

1299. Do you know how many parsons out of this large district go into the Derry Workhouse on an average?—I got the auditor's abstract for three or four half-years prior to the passing of the Local Government Act, and I made up the calculation myself, and I found that there would be an average of five parsons from Derry No. 2, or the Donegal portion, going into Derry—that is to say five for the entire year. I think the number individually might be ten or eleven, but when I found the number of days each of them went in, it is equal to five parsons for 365 days.

1300. You are aware of the reduction—nearly £26,000—of that district?—Yes.

1301. Would you give your own idea: you can convey the feeling of the County Council of the manner in which the electoral divisions of that district ought to be united with the Donegal council?—We arranged that and passed it to the County Council. We passed a resolution of the County Council in reference to the apportionment. There are six divisions that are really

Aug. 18, 1906.

Mr. William
Doherty.

Inishowen, and have always been in the hands of Inishowen, but are attached to Derry—Three Trees, Birdstown, Burt, Fahan, Inch, and Kilderry.

1802. Would it be an advantage in connecting or re-constructing the remaining unions to have them thrown as with Inishowen?—It would.

1803. How?—It would raise the valuation of every rural district in the county, as well as the three divisions that are the chief complaints, because each of the divisions of the county averages about £20,000 valuation. I believe one of them is only £13,000. It is considered cruel to the ratepayers to have an establishment supported by a £15,000 rating.

1804. CHAIRMAN.—Which is that?—Dromahaire. At the time it was started it was only £10,000.

1805. Mr. Dromahaire.—How much does the rate come to on the valuation in your district?—Our valuation is only £40,000; the standard union rate was 1s. 6d. in the £.

1806. What is it now?—I think it is a little less. I think the Derry rate was 7d. in the £, but I cannot understand how it can be such a figure. I think there must be some mismanagement, surely, when on a valuation of £100,000 they have only half the rate we have to pay on a valuation of £40,000; that is something anomalous.

1807. You don't consider they are acting too economically?—No, because they have not any more poor to support than we have, and they have only half the rate on £100,000 of a valuation. I don't see how their rate should ever exceed 3d. in the £ if properly managed.

1808. Do you think the number of workhouses in Donegal is unnecessarily large?—Yes, and so did our Council at its last meeting unanimously agree that four workhouses for the entire county would be quite sufficient.

1809. In order to be able to effect that reduction, which would be a great reduction on the taxation of the county, do you consider the amalgamation of these districts would be necessary?—It would relieve the county of the establishment expenses of four workhouses, which would be a considerable saving.

1810. Is there a considerable expenditure upon these two divisions themselves?—There is, but it is enriching Londonderry No. 1 and Derry city at our expense, because they have only five of our poor to support.

1811. CHAIRMAN.—Did the County Council, in considering the scheme for amalgamation, indicate what unions might be dissolved?—No, sir; they have left that, I think, to be under the guidance of you, gentlemen.

1812. They have not given us any assistance by any suggestion?—They did not like to go into it, because the entire Council was not there that day, and it would be unfair to ask you to abolish workhouses where there was no representative there, but four was the number that they wished to have.

1813. Mr. MURKIN.—How many members were present on that occasion?—There were only ten. It was in answering these queries that your Commission put before them that they came to that conclusion.

1814. The members could not possibly be aware that the question of amalgamation might come up?—It was not on the agenda at all; it was an ordinary meeting of the Council.

1815. Mr. DROMAHIRE.—At that meeting, or other meetings, how many members of the Donegal County Council were at or opposed to this amalgamation that you seek?—Five or six.

1816. Are those the members for these two parishes?—Whatever members live in Derry No. 2 and Strabane No. 2.

1817. And is all the rest of the county in favour of it?—All.

1818. And there are thirty-two other members?—Yes, there are members of Derry No. 2 that attend the workhouse in Derry. There are several members of that Council living in Derry No. 2 that are not against this change of boundaries.

1819. Mr. MURKIN.—The change would increase their rates very considerably?—It is not so much the increase of rates or decrease of rates that I look on as important.

1820. Notwithstanding that they know it would add to their rates, they are willing to throw in their lot with the rest of the county?—They are; they say they will not perpetrate this injustice.

1821. Mr. DROMAHIRE.—How much is paid into the Derry Union by Derry No. 2?—They pay 7d. in the

£ on that valuation of £35,000 belonging to the County Donegal.

1822. Is it £1,000 a year?—We have it on the evidence of an ex-Mayor of Derry. He said if they lost the Inishowen part their rates would be increased by £1,000 a year.

1823. Then they are getting in the Derry Union £1,000 a year, and they are keeping five paupers at £ a head per week?—Yes.

1824. How much is Strabane No. 2 paying in road numbers to Tyrone?—On a valuation of £40,000.

1825. Am I right in saying they are paying over £3,000 a year?—I am sure they would be paying, on that valuation, £3,000 a year.

1826. Do you know Mr. William Gallagher, the County Councillor for Strabane No. 2?—Yes.

1827. Does he oppose the amalgamation?—No, he is in favour of Donegal getting its own back, although a member of Strabane.

1828. You and he have discussed the convenience and the expense, and everything?—Yes.

1829. Mr. Henry.—The conversation between you and Mr. William Gallagher may be very interesting, but I don't think it would help us very much. The question of rating is a more solid issue?—It is.

1830. What is the real issue?—The real issue is, I consider the first Act for the relief of the poor was that it was intended that the rich should support the poor, and it was immediately reversed in this case—the poor were left to support the rich.

1831. Your complaint is that portion of the Strabane Union goes within three miles of Stranorlar?—I said I did not know so much about the geographical position of Strabane as I do about Derry.

1832. Is not the city of Derry the market town for the entire of Derry No. 2?—It is, and the market town for the entire of the Inishowen Rural District, because we claim that it made Derry.

1833. And Derry claims that it is supporting you?—Have you any idea what proportion of the people in Derry are really Donegal people?—Well, I think the most respectable part.

1834. There are I understand that the respectable portions of Donegal have left it, and the people who are left behind are not so respectable?—Oh, no. The Blacks and the Cocks and all the respectable people of Derry come from Donegal.

1835. A large proportion of the Derry people come from Donegal?—They do; a large proportion of the money they make comes from Donegal.

1836. As I understand, you would throw the six divisions adjoining Inishowen into Inishowen?—Yes, I would ask that Inishowen should get back its own.

1837. And you would throw the other three into Letterkenny?—Yes, that is the decision of the County Council.

1838. I observe my friend did not favour us with a map showing the position of the district. (Thapsus on map). Now indicate the three divisions that you consider should go to Letterkenny?—The three furthest from Inishowen.

1839. Newtownhamilton, Castleforward, and Killesno?—Exactly.

1840. So that patients living in Killesno, within a very short distance of the boundary of the city of Derry, should be brought to Letterkenny?—Certainly; it would pay me to bring them in a coach-and-four.

1841. And patients from Kilderry, Birdstown, and Burt should be brought from Burt, as against their present journey to Derry to have (Carnadoagh)?—They will get a railway that will bring them there.

1842. How many miles is it from the centre of Burt to the workhouse at Carnadoagh?—I am not quite certain, but my idea is about eighteen miles.

1843. Would you be surprised to hear that, via Buncrana, it is 2½ miles?—I would, and I would say it was not right.

1844. As against 6½ to Derry?—I think you mean statute miles.

1845. Now we have heard from the counsel to the County Council that it is a monstrous thing that paupers should be brought three miles from Stranorlar, which would be Cloghward or Castlefinn, into Strabane instead of Stranorlar. If your scheme is carried, will not paupers be brought from Lifford on the other side of the bridge in sight of Strabane all the way to Stranorlar?—Yes, but they have the railway the whole way.

1846. And does not the train run from Stranorlar to Strabane right across the district?—It does.

1847. So your theories as to the advantage to the paupers are entirely based on bringing them by rail?—There are vans for the sick; but my theory is that the sick should never be brought to the workhouse, and the infirmaries should be somewhere else.

Mr. Drummond.—And the county infirmary is at Lifford.

1848. Mr. Henry.—I am much obliged to my friend for that interruption—that is the county infirmary at Lifford?—Yes.

1849. Is not that on the other side of the river from Strabane?—I will say that the principal issue is that it is our county.

1850. Then the principal issue is that Donagel wants, for sentimental reasons, to get it?—No, but for administrative reasons; we require to get the whole county or none of it.

1851. Is not the system at present of getting contributions by the Guardians of the Lendwardery Union from the Donagel County Council this: the expenses are fixed by the Guardians and divided according to the valuation?—That is of the union.

Mr. Drummond.—That is of the five parishes.

1852. Mr. Henry.—Are your figures based on the assumption that there are five parishes in the Derry Union from Donagel?—Yes.

1853. Is not the system a system of division according to valuations?—Yes, it is what is called union rates.

1854. And it is not the clerk of the Lendwardery Union in the one case, and of the Strabane Union in the other forwarding to your secretary the particulars of the estimated expenditure?—For Derry No. 2, only.

1855. I am speaking of the County Council portion; and do you then strike a rate or add that to your ordinary rate for the purpose of meeting it?—Yes.

1856. Except that it will be the clerk of Strabane No. 2, in the County Donagel, that will forward it to the same officer, will you suggest to me any additional advantage to be gained in the matter of saving time or trouble?—No; but I will still object to that amount be claimed being sent over from the County Donagel to be expended in the County Tyrone.

1857. That is another question; but on the question of confusion or inconvenience can you suggest any difficulty or inconvenience except the fact that it comes from one workhouse instead of another?—It would be much more convenient if we had all those parishes at our own office in Lifford.

1858. Will you have them in Lifford if this scheme of yours is carried out; won't you have them in Stranorlar?—But we have the Stranorlar accounts. It would be sufficient to have Stranorlar and Strabane No. 2 combined into one rural district instead of two.

1859. Your office are at Lifford?—Yes.

1860. That is a short mile from the workhouse in Strabane; how far are they from Stranorlar—sixteen miles?—Yes, but we have all the particulars; we have the District Councillor there from Stranorlar to tell us all about it.

1861. Are you not putting it, so far as the convenience is concerned, are you not putting the headquarters of Strabane No. 2 fifteen miles away from where they are at present?—We have two sets of accounts to go into instead of one.

1862. In other words, instead of receiving two documents for the purpose of striking a rate you will in future only receive one?—Those two documents have to be separately made up; all these things mean pains—additional clerks.

1863. You say you have to communicate with the Strabane and Derry workhouses?—If we want the information we often require?

1864. Won't you have, equally, to communicate with the Stranorlar, Lendwardery, and Inishowen workhouses?—We have all these entered in the secretary's accounts in Lifford already.

1865. And you consider that the advantage of this whole question of writing three or four letters in the year counterbalances anything else to be said on the other side?—Not at all. I told you it was only a side issue—all these things about rates and expenses.

1866. Rates are a side issue; the inconvenience of communicating with Strabane and Derry are side issues too?—The worst feature about it is that those are the richest electoral divisions in our county, that they are monopolised by other counties and we require them; our county is not so rich.

1867. You want to put a just proportion of rates on the richer division?—We want the whole county.

1868. Mr. Drummond.—Does the existence of these two divisions necessitate additional road seasons and a number of attendances of the county surveyor and assistant county surveyor?—It does; there are eight for each, and not only the county surveyor but the assistant surveyors have to attend all those places.

1869. Mr. Henry.—He will have to attend still?—But he has a double attendance to make here. If it was only one union he would only have one-half of the attendances, and he urged that as a reason for the increase of salary which he got.

1870. Mr. Drummond.—If you would add Strabane No. 2 to Stranorlar you would only have the one set of attendances, and vice versa; add Derry and Inishowen he would only have one attendance?—Yes.

1871. My friend traps you into saying rates are a side issue; don't you think it would mean an increase for the whole county?—On a particular district I said.

1872. You are looking to the whole county; don't you think it would be a saving; a great saving; it is not purely sentimental at all.

1873. Mr. MURPHY.—Since the passing of the Local Government Act I suppose you felt that this anomaly is greater than it formerly was owing to the fact that the road seasons are now held in Strabane?—We do, but we always felt it a great grievance for forty years, but we never had the means of remedying it.

1874. You feel it has been accentuated by the passing of the Act?—It has by the consolidation of the two rates; the county ones and poor rates—it has made it almost impossible to understand the finances of the county, how we stand.

1875. And the fact that a portion of the work of the upkeep of the roads of the county is being looked after in Strabane you fancy causes inconvenience now?—Inconvenience and increase of cost.

1876. Mr. Drummond.—I suppose when the baronies existed under the old system it was not so troublesome as it is now?—No; we had one session for the whole.

1877. Mr. Henry.—The witness is in error in saying that all the road work is done in Strabane; it is done in Lifford, in Donagel?—I am now a witness for the County Council in this case.

1878. Mr. Drummond.—Sixteen separate attendances have to be made by the county surveyor and his assistants—eight for each division?—Yes.

Mr. COOKE.—I appear for the City of Londonderry.

Mr. Drummond.—I respectfully submit the City of Londonderry has no right to be heard here.

CHAIRMAN.—It is a separate body and part of the Union of Londonderry.

Mr. COOKE.—We propose to show we will be specially hit by any alteration of the boundaries.

CHAIRMAN.—We are rather of opinion that Mr. COOKE should be heard.

1879. Mr. COOKE.—You referred peculiarly to Donagel having made the City of Londonderry?—Well, not peculiarly; I say it has more to do with it than the County of Derry has; Derry has other cities to keep up.

1880. I gather from you that you think the City of Londonderry is really the capital of North West Donagel?—We never regard it as such.

1881. When you say you made the City of Derry, do you mean to imply that the population from the north-west of Donagel flows into the City of Londonderry seeking employment?—No.

1882. Is it not the case that they do?—No; they get more employment in Derry No. 2, with the big farmers.

1883. Then part of your population goes into Derry No. 2?—Yes.

1884. Does not a large proportion go into the City of Londonderry seeking employment in the factories?—Yes, I think so; what I meant by saying that it made Derry?—

1885. Don't you know perfectly well that an enormous proportion of the hands employed in the Derry factories come from Derry No. 2 and Carradonagh as well?—Certainly, and therefore Derry is more indebted to Donagel.

1886. And are we not indebted to Donagel for the poor that come in and fail to get employment in the city and find their way into the workhouse?—I don't think the poor will thank you much for that, for the more respectable poor would never like to enter a workhouse.

Aug. 13, 1903.

Mr. William
Doherty.

1887. I quite sympathise with that, but we are here in a Poor Law Inquiry; my point is, don't many of the poor from the City of Derry, who go to the workhouse, come originally from Derry No. 2, and Inishowen?—Not at all; but what we complain of is the very worst of your tramps from Derry come down and take lodgings in our workhouses.

1888. Are you aware that the average distance of these six electoral divisions that you wish to throw into the Carradagh Union—the average distances from Londonderry is seven and a half and from Carradagh, sixteen miles?—Yes.

1889. Are you, in addition to that fact, aware that there is a mountain barrier—the Sloop mountains—that separates Inishowen from the basin in which the City of Londonderry is placed?—It does not separate the County Derry from the County Donegal.

1890. Does it not separate this very division from the Carradagh Union?—It does not separate Upper Fahan; you go within a mile from Burninnowe.

1891. Is it not the fact that there is a barrier of mountains separating this division from the Carradagh Union?—Not at all; there is a way round on both sides; the mountains is only an ornament.

1892. Do you suggest that a tramp in Derry No. 2 would tramp over these mountains to the Carradagh Workhouse when he can get within seven miles to the Londonderry Union?—I know a tramp will leave on the fair day of Carr, he will leave the night before, and spend his night in the Carradagh Workhouse, and they will fight on the road as to whether Derry or Carradagh is the best workhouse for a night's lodging.

1893. Do you think it seriously enters into the surveyor's head as to which union he should prefer; does a patriotic precept from Donegal or Derry say "I am a patriot, I will go back to the Carradagh Workhouse, and make my friends in Donegal pay for me"?—I don't complain of language—that will be arranged on another system—we are on boundaries now, and are only speaking of five poor that you support in Derry from Donegal.

1894. Is it not a fact that paupers in the City of Derry, to a large extent, come from Derry No. 2 and Inishowen?—It is not; but the workhouse.

1895.—Mr. Drummond.—As regards the poor, are they treated with extra kindness in the Derry Workhouse?—When fighting among themselves the verdict is always in favour of Carradagh.

1896. Is the Carradagh Union, are there several mountain ranges through it?—Certainly, and we are very proud of them, and in addition we have plenty of lakes.

1897. Is not Donegal filled with mountains from end to end?—Certainly we have got the mountains, but they take the valleys to other counties.

Mr. HERBERT M'FARREN examined.

Mr. Herbert
M'Farren.

1898. Mr. Drummond.—Are you Secretary to the Donegal County Council?—Yes.

1899. Of course you know this district—Strabane No. 2?—I cannot say I know it very well; I know some of it.

1900. Do you know what is the amount, or about what is the amount, that is paid by Strabane No. 2 into the Strabane Union?—It varies from year to year, but all depends upon the demand made by the clerk of the union.

1901. What is it as a rule?—I can get you the rates but I could not give you the amounts; I can get you the rates from the time before the Act came into operation.

1902. Am I right in saying that about fifty is the number of Donegal paupers sent into Strabane?—I don't know; I have no connection with the workhouse; the clerk of the union can tell you—the clerk of the Strabane Union.

1903. Do you agree with Mr. Doherty that the separating of these two districts entails expense and trouble upon the Donegal County Council?—As far as the support of the workhouse is concerned, but I don't agree with Mr. Doherty that it would affect my clerical staff very much. The number of ratings has been made out and they could not reduce the number of ratings; but perhaps in other respects—

1904. Take the county surveyor?—It certainly would reduce the meetings by sixteen.

1905. There are the assistant surveyors and county surveyor?—Yes; there are four quarterly meetings and four adjourned quarterly meetings in the year for each.

1906. Did this raise the salary of officials?—They made claims after the Local Government Act for increased remuneration on the ground that they had an extra number of meetings to attend.

1907. As far as the distance from Stranorlar of this particular electoral division is it quite convenient to Stranorlar?—About the mileage I could not say, but the clerk of the Stranorlar Union will give you all the information about distances.

1908. Does it entail any extra expense upon the collectors having two additional districts; supposing each of these was amalgamated, one with Stranorlar, and the other with Inishowen, would that be a saving of expense and trouble?—If they reduced the poundage fees it might be less expense, but if they kept the poundage fees as they are it would not reduce the expenses very much.

1909. I suppose you have not considered much the effect upon the rest of the county of bringing in these two areas?—No; I have not considered it very much; it is a question affecting the unions more than the County Council.

1910. Mr. Henry.—At present you get a demand note from the clerk of the Strabane Union giving the amount that Strabane No. 2 should contribute?—Yes; about the end of February, the Guardians estimate the expenditure necessary for the year and it is signed by the chairman and clerk, and the demand is forwarded to me.

1911. And it is distributed according to the valuation?—I think so.

1912. You estimate that on your rates?—Yes.

1913. You don't estimate that any reduction in the clerical staff would come from the change from Strabane to Stranorlar?—I don't think so, unless some circumstances arise that I don't anticipate.

1914. In Stranorlar you have a Rural District Council?—Yes.

1915. Have you any other Rural District Council there?—No, the same men act as Guardians.

1916. So far as the Rural District Council, where the county surveyor attends for road purposes, the chief would be that Strabane No. 2 would meet in Stranorlar, assuming this to be carried?—Yes.

1917. And would not the county surveyor have to attend their meetings at Stranorlar instead of at Lifford, as at present?—Yes, but if Strabane is abolished.

1918. The Rural Council will not be abolished, it may be amalgamated with Stranorlar, but the Rural District Council would still remain for Strabane?—Yes, and the surveyor would have to attend all the same. If there is a quarterly meeting of the Rural District Council, the county surveyor is bound to attend it.

1919. And at present when they meet as a Rural District Council for road purposes at which the county surveyor's presence is necessary, is not the meeting held in Lifford?—Some of the meetings are held in Lifford, I am not sure.

1920. So that he will simply be changing; assuming they meet in Stranorlar, he will have to attend a day in Stranorlar instead of Strabane or Lifford?—That would be a matter of arrangement.

1921. And the same would apply in the case of Inishowen or Lettishowen?—I don't say it would.

1922. Where does the county surveyor for this district reside?—It runs into both county surveyor's districts.

1923. Take Derry No. 2?—He resides in Derry.

1924. So that according to this promised scheme for a saving of trouble, the gentleman who resides in Derry would be hawked down to Inishowen and back?—Assuming the meetings to be held in Carradagh, he has to go.

1925. You don't suppose it would be much saving there?—I don't know.

1926. Were you present at the meeting of the County Council of Donegal last Saturday?—I was.

1927. How many members were present?—There was a quorum of eight.

1928. How many voted for opposing and how many against it; had you to telegraph in order to get the ninth member?—I think there were nine.

1929. Had you to wait and telegraph for the ninth?—I telephoned.

1930. How many voted for and how many against the resolution to appear—was it five against four?—Yes.

1931. Mr. Drummond.—Do you know that with the exception of the four or five who represent these two districts the rest of the entire Council is in favour of this scheme?—According to the resolutions they have passed previously.

1932. Now with regard to the meetings of the District Council: supposing Strabane No. 2 was abolished and there was only one Council for Strabane and Stranorlar, would there not then be a saving of 4000 money there would. Do you mean the rural districts? I don't quite follow you.

1933. Supposing what is known as Strabane No. 2 is abolished altogether, speaking of it in reference to the union, and it is combined with Stranorlar, would there not then be a saving of time and trouble?—If there was only one rural district there would be.

1934. The collection of the rates, of course, are county charges?—County-at-large charges.

1935. So that they are paid out of the county-at-large for the collection of these rates that go to Strabane and Derry?—Yes.

1936. Mr. Henry.—Then it is levied off each district, and each district pays its own portion?—Yes, it is a county-at-large charge.

1937. Mr. MURKIN.—What is levied off the county-at-large?—The collectors' fees for their salaries.

1938. Mr. Drummond.—With regard to that meeting the other day, where you telephoned for a member, was that to make a quorum for ordinary business purposes?—Yes.

1939. And did the two men who came up vote against it?—Yes.

1940. It was not to pass this resolution you got them together?—No; it was absolutely necessary to get a quorum.

1941. Has not this thing been resolved on over and over again before at other meetings since 1899?—Yes, and before I became secretary.

Aug. 12, 1905

Mr. Bernard
McPadden.

Mr. JAMES DUNLEAVY, Solicitor, examined.

1942. Mr. Drummond.—You are Chairman of the Donagel County Council?—Yes.

1943. Am I right in saying that with the exception of four or five who represent the two districts in question, the entire County Council is in favour of this change?—Yes.

1944. Have they been so since the passing of the Local Government Act, and do you agree with them?—I do.

1945. Do you think it would be a benefit to the county to have these amalgamated with the rest of the county?—I do; I think we are entitled to our own portion of the county.

1946. If Strabane was amalgamated with Stranorlar, would there be only one District Council then?—That is all.

1947. It would reduce the expenditure from ten rural districts to eight?—It would.

1948. Are you aware that the County Councils are in favour of reducing the unions to four?—At the last County Council they came to that conclusion.

1949. Mr. MURKIN.—Was it on the agenda?—No, but on the queries sent by this Commission.

1950. Mr. Drummond.—Am I right in saying that you were unanimous as to the reduction of the number of workhouses?—We were.

1951. Was the last meeting a meeting for ordinary business purposes?—Yes. There were sundry items on the agenda of all classes; we found we had not a quorum, and we telephoned for two members.

1952. And the two gentlemen telephoned for were opponents?—They were. The only question that arose at that meeting was the appointing of counsel and the directions to be given to counsel. That was the only point that arose at the meeting in reference to this question.

1953. You think as the whole, and you know the county very well, it would be a benefit to the county in more than one respect, to have this amalgamation made?—To have the whole of the county for administrative purposes.

1954. Mr. Henry.—How do you propose in the case of Derry No. 2: do you propose to split the existing rural district into two and add one to Letterkenny and the other to Limavady?—Yes, we do.

1955. When were the queries you refer to answered?—At what meeting?—At the last meeting of the County Council.

1956. Was that the meeting of the ninth?—At the ninth meeting.

1957. Did they at all specify what four unions the County Council would like to retain?—No, we did not go into that.

Mr. Drummond.—These are the only witnesses I propose to call.

Mr. James
Dunleavy.

Mr. T. M. Huby, M.C., M.P.—I appear on behalf of the Lishowen district, and I have at the outset to thank you and the other members of the Commission for giving us the adjournment that Mr. Clancy and Mr. O'Donoghue and I asked for for our personal convenience. The position I take up has been to some extent stated by Mr. Drummond, and really I would suggest to you it is more a matter for your consideration than the examination and cross-examination of witnesses that has gone on. Supposing we were drafting a scheme to-day for the delimitation of the boundaries of Donagel, would anybody dream of the system of boundaries that is at present? Donagel of the "thirties" or "forties" was a county without railways; to-day it is perhaps either in one or more one of the best rail-road counties in Ireland, a thing that has been established altogether within the last ten or twelve years. And with the passing of the Local Government Act of 1898, a fatal sense has quickened in the people on the subject of their local boundaries. Any man who contemplates the appalling rates of this country, not to speak of the taxes at all, must come to the conclusion that it is this terrible system of local administration that is really at the root of a great deal of the emigration and destitution of the country, and the question that any sane body of administrators would address themselves to would be in what way, given the necessity of poor relief, and rates, and other local administration, in what way shall we give the people the best value for their taxes. If you could invent a manner by which you could give the people the worst value for their taxes, you would adopt the system which prevails in Donagel.

The old plan of Robin Hood was, he robbed the rich to give to the poor, but under the system here prevailing it is the poor who are robbed for the benefit of the rich. Now let me go back to me what was in the mind of the Legislature, and those acting under its administration, at the time these unions were established. I have, in the first instance, the return dated the 22nd of April, 1841, which was presented to the House of Commons as being the views of the Poor Law Commissioners addressed to the Assistant Commissioners in Ireland for dividing the unions into electoral divisions. That is not quite this question, but there is a very far-seeing observation which is well worthy of attention to-day. They say: "The question as to the size of unions has been much debated"—during that time there were only Bannock's case, and with the exception of the Kington railway, there was not a single railway in Ireland—"some persons contending for small unions of four or five miles radius, whilst others prefer the larger size of ten miles. Without attempting to decide this point at present, it may be sufficient to remark that the larger the union the smaller will be the establishment charge, and the provisions introduced in the House of Lords for lowering the rate upon each electoral division, having also removed one of the objections to large unions chiefly insisted upon, it will now, perhaps, be generally considered that so long as we take the resort to a market town as our guide, we shall not be far wrong; for the people who frequent the market will find no difficulty in attending at the union workhouse, whether as Guardians, or applicants for relief, or for any other purpose." Then they say that.

M 2

Aug. 12, 1902.

"Taking the above principle as our guide, it will still be our duty to attend to local interests. In the formation of unions as well as in establishing the electoral divisions, the boundaries of property should on all occasions be observed, as far as may be compatible with the general interest and convenience; but it is highly important that all the unions should be formed as compact and complete as possible, for when the country shall have been worked up into unions, each having an organized machinery and a principle of self-government, and with the market town as a centre or little capital, it can scarcely be doubted that they will be made available for other purposes, as well as for the administration of the Poor Law." The people had to wait sixty years before that prophecy opened in the Local Government Act. I find that in a circular of 5th of November, 1838, printed in the Poor Law Commissioners' 5th Annual Report, they make this observation:—"The Board now desires to state, for the information of the Assistant Commissioners, that although in forming the unions they are not restricted to county boundaries, it is yet essential, as regards ulterior duties which may possibly hereafter be devolved upon Boards of Guardians, to observe these boundaries in arranging the electoral divisions, so that no divisions shall comprise portions of two counties. For the same reason also the Board considers it desirable that parochial boundaries should be observed in forming the electoral divisions, wherever this can be done without causing material inconvenience or great inequality in the district." Concise the position in which Irishmen stand at this moment. If we were instituting—as I think we must consider that since the passing of the Local Government Act, 1898, we are in that position—if we were instituting local government for the first time in this district through the means of this local system of administration, what is the first thing which should be considered in a county like this? It is very largely a mountainous county, and wherever you have mountains you will have poverty; the plains of it are, to some extent, rich, and no human being—given the condition there is for travelling at this moment, and given the fact that there is no longer that huge population, this population having sunk by at least half in the fifty years that have passed by since then—no human being would to-day think for a moment of gravitating or aggregating—whichever you like to say—into one nucleus all the rich portions of the county, and leaving all the poor portions to bear their own burdens. What is the result? In the Derry Union, as I am informed, there is practically no outdoor relief. It cannot be want of Christian charity in the Guardians; it must be that it is due to the exceptionally rich conditions under which that portion of the union is situated, but in my poor district of Innishowen, a mountainous district, no less than 288 persons are in receipt of outdoor relief, and the burden of the 268 persons an outdoor relief is borne by some of the poorest ratepayers in the county. You have heard that the Union of Derry embraces a valuation of something like £189,000; is it conceivable that you would establish a system by which one union would have £189,000 valuation, and that the richest portion, and the other eight or nine divisions should have valuations like this:—Ballyshannon, £38,500; Donagall, £34,000; Donaghny, £17,000; Glenties, £40,000; Innishowen, £41,000; Letterkenny, £21,000; Millfeld, £32,000; and Stranorlar, £23,000.

Mr. Elliott—£31,000.
Mr. Healy—So that Derry has a valuation in itself equal to six or seven of the unions of Donagall. The average of the Irish unions, as far as I can make it out, seems to be something like £40,000. So you have the Union of Derry 4½ times above its average, and, therefore, when you are asked, as you are asked here, to give us back, or rather give us up a portion of the Derry Union which belongs to the County Donagall, you have more things to consider than the length of the road. My learned friend Mr. Kenny has been strong on geographical inconvenience, but, if it existed, that geographical inconvenience must be considered in relation to the half-a-dozen paupers who come from this particular wretched area. Ask any man is there not something else besides the convenience of the paupers: what about the convenience of the people who are not yet paupers, but are on the high road to becoming so by the heavy rates they have to pay. Is it tolerable then that portion of the Innishowen division which geographically, and I may say also, socially, belongs to the Carnadoagh Union, should be allowed to remain where it is because of the convenience of half-a-dozen paupers. But then it will be said they have acquired a vested interest—I will be told perhaps that the standard rate in any union is 1s. 4½d. in the £, and the standard rate in the districts that we seek to annex is only 7d. in the £; that it will be an injustice to the ratepayers of this portion which we propose to annex, to burden them with a burden that they have not hitherto had to bear. I say that, on the contrary, if they have escaped hitherto by the manner in which the county was divided, it is time that justice was done; the fact that justice has been delayed in their regard is no argument that it should be delayed for ever. They ought to rejoice that so long they have escaped, but instead of giving that as a reason why they should escape for ever, the real strength of the argument will be that the earliest warrant should be found for laying upon them a due proportion of the expenditure of the County Donagall. They are the rich people—they have not been driven to the mountains—they enjoy the plains, and their forefathers have enjoyed them, and they have acquired wealth in them, or such wealth as is possible in the case of a farmer whose profits are generally poor enough; but at all events they are the better off portion of the community, and we say it is no injustice to them that now, for the first time for sixty years after the Poor Law was established, they should bear the common burdens of the borough of Innishowen. There are two or three other topics I would like to touch upon in that connection. It is certain that if the view which prevails in Donagall be carried out, namely, that the Unions should be reduced to four—I am only expressing my personal view; I am only sorry that the County Council has not seen its way to reduce them still further, because I think in the end, before many years, the ratepayers will rise up in revolt against this workhouse system, which brings so little comfort, joy, or happiness, or even relief, to any human being, and generally succeeds in relieving the most undesirable class of the community—if you succeed in reducing the unions to four, it is certain that the ratepayers of the portion to be annexed will really have to pay a bigger burden. I suggest it is not. I suggest the probability is otherwise, that with the condensed system of administration such as you will then have, you will ultimately get rid of these staffs and of the upkeep of these buildings, and I hope, too, when we hear of these contests between tramps as to in which union they will spend the night, I hope they will have to trudge a little farther on the road, and that these tramps may not be innumerable with these posts, who will be obliged to work, or else go to jail and be supported by the Irish taxpayer, which, in my opinion, is the true mission for that interesting person. The people of these localities rise in protest and revolt at the existing system of administration. The result is this, that practically to maintain 300 paupers in Innishowen with the outdoor relief which they have to provide, it costs something like £3,000 a year for union purposes alone, altogether independent of the county rates to the very poorest section of the county. I have not in the least degree touched upon the case of my learned friend, who will have similar remarks to make with regard to his own area. My learned friend, Mr. Drummond, mentioned, and I think it is not unimportant, that Parliament has taken up an entirely new view in regard to the question of rating when it passed not merely the Extension of Rates Act for London, but it entered in Dublin a contribution from the richer outlying areas of Rathfarnham and Pembroke to the finances of the city. The rich man may wrap himself up in his cloak and surround himself with the fortress and say he has no interest or concern with the woes and burdens of his poorer neighbours, but it is an extraordinary fact that whereas East End, London, is largely the home of Jews and foreign aliens from every clime and country under Heaven, that Parliament, without even the remotest of the House of Lords, compelled the rich area of East-end-square and Berkeley-square, and all the other rich portions of London, who never even see the people in the East End, who know nothing of their modes of life, that there is no community of any sort or identity between St. Giles and St. George, compelled them to bear a substantial portion of the burdens of East End, London. That being the modern view in regard to a city which outnumbers in its population the entire population of Ireland, is it not a priori when you come to consider the case of a county like Donagall, whose local government has, since the passing of the Local Government Act, been made dependent upon the area of the administrative county. I am not going to touch upon what more properly belongs to the sphere of my learned friend as to how it would affect the general county administrative charges, but this I will say: it must strike anybody as an anomaly that when the county has been selected as the unit for local government, so large a portion of Donegal should find itself hampered by being administered from Tyrone on one side and Derry on the other. Now, I am happy to think that while any report you make to His Excellency must, of course, be in the nature of an independent report, apart from any contention that some of your honorable members may have with the Local Government Board, at the same time I think your decision must be of considerable weight with it in any decision which the Local Government Board may take; and I desire to point out, with regard to some of the questions that have been asked here today, that this is not a question considered for the first time at a scratch meeting at which men had to be telephoned for within the last two or three days. Scarcely had the Local Government Act passed when not only the people of Donegal, but the people of Inishowen in particular—so far as to say that instead of this matter being sprung or started within the last day or two upon the County Council, that you will find that the people of Inishowen, as well as the County Council of Donegal, have been agitating this question for over five years, and they lodged complaints with the Local Government Board again and again that nothing was being done. I find that the Local Government Board required a prima facie case to be made out on the 31st of January, 1868. They state:—"I am directed by the Local Government Board for Ireland to inform the Board of Guardians of the Inishowen Union that they have instructed their Inspector, Mr. Richard Kelly, to hold an inquiry on oath in regard to the proposal that the portions of the unions of Londonderry and Strabane, which are situated in the County Donegal, should be transferred to the unions of Inishowen, Letterkenny, and Binnaclear. Due notice will be given by Mr. Kelly of the time and place he may fix for holding the inquiry." That is signed by Mr. Swaine. Over a year and a half have elapsed since that and nothing, I believe, has been done. I believe Mr. Kelly himself was a gentleman connected with this district to be amalgamated, and therefore it was considered undesirable he should hold the inquiry, because I find in the month of February it is stated that the Board have decided to postpone the inquiry until the close of May or June. That inquiry never was held; that is not our fault, and it disposes of the suggestion that this is a new matter sprung by us recently upon either the County Council or the unions of Donegal. I am sorry to have to say—of course, it must have come under the notice of everybody—that a political tinge has been given to this case by some attacks that have been made with a view to prejudicing this inquiry in the Press. I think it is a poor compliment to pay to a body like this, holding the commission of the Viceroy, to suppose that they would be in any way affected by newspaper paragraphs. But I do say that you will decide this matter entirely from the point of view of fiscal benefit and fiscal justice to the county and to the ratepayers as well. I myself don't know any ground upon which it could be suggested that there is anything like what is called jerry-mandering in connection with this scheme. I cannot myself see what political effect it could have, one way or the other, if the County Derry were compelled to disgorge these portions of the union which do not properly belong to it. But whether that be so or not, while the conveniences of the poor must undoubtedly be given effect to, the conveniences of those who are very near the verge of poverty is, I conceive to be, also a most important matter connected with this inquiry; and I venture to say that whether by the amalgamation of unions or by the cutting off from the union of Derry of the portions that do not geographically appertain to it, this Commission will strive to do justice to the ratepayers of Donegal. The only other remark I would make is this, that I think I gathered from the slight view I had of the map which my learned friend produced, that the union of Derry contains districts much further distant from the city of Derry than any in the two districts would be from Carrindagh, if added to it. (Explains as way). But at any rate this principle I would lay down in conclusion, that the interests of the richest portion of the barony where the poor are concerned are not so closely affected by any question of propinquity as would be the case if this were a poverty-stricken area. It is not a poverty-stricken area; paupers are far less likely to come from it, and that alone, to my mind, if the fiscal argument is with me in the other way, entirely overbalances the suggestion of distance. And, lastly, let me say that we have in Carrindagh a most efficient infirmary, and surely, from the point of view of the restoration of health, persons coming from the Rural District No. 2 Derry will be much more likely to be benefited in their health amongst the breezes of northern Donegal than in the shams of Derry; and, therefore, on the question of the balance of advantages and the balance of convenience, whether upon the ground of fiscal equality or the other topics I have touched on, I say if you were legislating on this matter de novo, as substantially you are, all the arguments are in favour of the proposition in favour of which I ask you respectfully to report.

Aug. 22, 1868.

Mr. ROBERT MOORE examined.

Mr. Robert Moore.

1858. Mr. Hooley.—You are the Clerk of the Union in Inishowen?—Yes.

1859. You have been so for over fifty years?—Yes.

1860. Am I right in saying that for several years past the Board have been passing resolutions in favour of the absorption of the portion of Derry No. 2 which they claim?—Yes, the District Council, principally.

1861. Now your valuation, I think, is 24,145?—Yes.

1862. And the valuation of the electoral division proposed to be taken from the Derry Union is 22,497. Now the distance from this electoral division to the Derry Workhouse is about ten miles?—So I understand.

1863. And to the Inishowen Workhouse the farthest point is about eighteen miles?—Eighteen Irish miles.

1864. The total population of the union of Inishowen at present is 25,343?—That is the last census.

1865. And of the part of the union of Derry proposed to be transferred to Inishowen is 5,425. Now the number of paupers in your workhouse is 103?—The present number is 95, but 102 was the average for the last year.

1866. How many paupers are there in Derry Workhouse from the part proposed to be transferred to Inishowen?—There are five charged to the electoral division, and I assumed there would be about five under-charge from information I got from the relieving officer.

1867. Your standard rate in Inishowen is 4d. 4?—Is 4d.

1868. And the standard rate in Derry, I understand, is 7d. 8?—So I understand.

1868a. Now with regard to the question of outdoor relief, how many persons are on outdoor relief in your union?—At present about 258.

1869. What is the average per head they get?—I did not strike the average; it is about 1s. 6d. a week.

1870. Have you an excellent infirmary at present in Carrindagh?—We think it pretty good.

1871. What hospital accommodation have you?—We have forty-nine beds.

1872. How many are occupied?—At present, fourteen.

1873. Would that provide ample accommodation for any possible amount of sickness that you would anticipate from the district proposed to be annexed?—I think it would, except times got very bad.

1874. I understand the district is largely poor and mountainous?—We have also a fever hospital in addition.

1875. That is for infectious diseases?—Yes.

1876. Am I right in saying the present district is largely poor and mountainous in Inishowen?—Principally mountainous.

1877. And the district proposed to be annexed is much richer in character?—It is.

1878. And the valuations accordingly are very much higher there?—The valuation is much higher according to the area.

1879. Your District Council, or Board of Guardians, is unanimous in claiming these electoral districts?—Yes.

1880. And you have been urging this on the Local Government Board for many years past?—For some time past, especially since the passing of the Local Government Act.

Aug. 13, 1903.
Mr. Robert
Moore

1961. Do you anticipate that if this proposed amalgamation of unions were carried out, and the annexation of the electoral divisions granted, that the rates in your district would be considerably reduced?—I do.

1962. And you think the proposition made by your Board is fair and equitable to all the ratepayers?—I think it is equitable on our side.

1963. You think it is an equitable thing to ask the persons in the district proposed to be annexed to bear a share of your burthen?—We think they should.

1964. In your barony; they are all in the barony of Inchmahon?—They are, and they are the best part of it, and it would lighten our rates to get the best part along with the bad.

1965. Mr. Henry.—You have an excellent infirmary you said: is there a water supply to the workhouse?—There is.

1966. Where from?—From the river.

1967. Is it a pipe supply?—It is taken by a pipe from the mill-race into a spring well, and then pumped.

1968. No filtration or anything of that kind?—No.

Mr. Healy.—One of the present Commissioners has condemned the Derry water.

1969. In the fever hospital, how many wards are there?

Witness.—It is divided into four wards.

1970. Mr. Henry.—Is there a bath in the whole institution?—Yes, three or four.

1971. Hot and cold water?—They can make it hot.

1972. You have 268 at 1s. 6d. a week on outdoor relief?—I don't know exactly the 1s. 6d.

1973. Suppose you succeed in this, how many representatives of these nine electoral divisions do you think would go down to attend your meetings in Inchmahon Workhouse?—I expect they would all go, for they look pretty well after the business.

1974. At the present day they do, but if you brought them eighteen miles there and eighteen back to Carrindrough?—They go there sometimes without business.

Mr. Healy.—The return ticket is 1s. 6d.

1975. Mr. Henry.—Did you ever go on the line—you would require to be paid by time: how many representatives are there for these nine electoral divisions?—Two to each division.

1976. Then you would get twelve: how many members of the Board of Guardians in Carrindrough itself?—Forty-eight.

1977. Is there any connection in the way of business or in the way of markets between any portion of this electoral division and the town of Carrindrough?—Not much.

1978. Is not the entire tendency of all the population of this division to make Derry their centre?—Principally.

1979. I suppose I would not be far wrong in saying that the great percentage of the people in these nine districts have never been in Carrindrough in their lives?—I could not say. I don't think they would be living there long without paying a visit to Carrindrough.

1980. To use the infirmary there and the other equipment?—We had a great number last week.

1981. Mr. Cooke.—Derry is the market town for this district you propose to annex?—I think it is.

1982. It is superseded by a range of bills from the Poor Law division of Carrindrough?—There are hills between.

1983. And all the Guardians from these divisions go to Derry as their market town; it is no inconvenience to them?—Naturally they would go there.

1984. Mr. Healy read out the instructions to the Commissioners in 1839, to the Commission, and apparently with approval, if you took that guide, these should remain in the Derry Union. Derry is their market town?—I think so.

1985. Has there not been a large migration from the Inchmahon Union to Derry city—that is to say, people go there seeking work in the factories?—Some of them do.

1986. Do you know of your own personal knowledge the circumstances of these six districts in the Rural Division No. 2?—I know them all by reputation.

1987. You don't know the larger portion of the population go to Derry city to find employment?—No, I don't know that.

1988. You said the great advantage in this change of these six divisions to Carrindrough Union would be that it would reduce the taxation of the people of Carrindrough Union by 2d., or something like that, in the 6s.; have you estimated how much it would be?—It would reduce it 5d. or 6d.

1989. How much would you throw on to the people that you are bringing into you that they are not now paying; would you increase their rates by 2d. or 3d. for the pleasure of associating with you in the Carrindrough Workhouse?—We would.

Mr. Cooke.—So that it is simply putting it on these six divisions.

Mr. Healy.—How is my learned friend interested in this; he represents the Corporation of Derry.

CHAIRMAN.—It is a constituent part of the Derry Union.

Mr. Cooke.—Surely if the City of Derry has to pay it is interested.

Mr. Healy.—I submit not; the corporation is a county borough.

CHAIRMAN.—We have given notice to all the local bodies concerned.

Mr. Healy.—I think there are limits. My friend may be entitled to ask some questions; he is not entitled to ask all questions.

Mr. Cooke.—We were invited to attend here. The first term in the warrant of your Commission is whether any Poor Law union could be dissolved with advantage to the ratepayers. We are the ratepayers of the union proposed to be dissolved, and we propose to show that it would increase the rates on us.

Mr. Healy.—My friend is entirely wrong.

1990. Mr. Cooke.—That may be. At all events you know that it would increase the rates on this division by 2d. or 3d. in the 6s.—I think it would.

Mr. Healy.—This would not increase the rates on the corporation of Derry in any other way.

Mr. Cooke.—It would.

Mr. Leech.—I appear for No. 2 Connell—the Dergal post proposed to be taken over.

Mr. Healy.—Your duties have been discharged by Mr. Cooke.

Mr. Leech.—Mr. Cooke may discharge as many duties as he likes, but he cannot take mine away from me.

Mr. Horner.—I may state that I represent the Lonsdownery Rural District No. 1, but I don't propose to ask this gentleman any questions.

2011. Mr. Leech.—In the event of a male case of scarlatina coming to your hospital, where would he be put?—Into the scarlatina ward.

2012. Suppose you had him there, and a case of typhus fever comes in, where would you put him?—In the typhus fever ward.

2013. Suppose a smallpox case comes in?—We have still another ward.

2014. How many male wards have you in the fever hospital?—We have four altogether.

2015. Do you mean you would put him into one of the female wards. Have you two male and two female wards?—We have just four wards we can use together.

2016. Supposing you had a male patient—one or more in scarlatina, and one or more in typhus fever—and suppose you had the same number of females, would you tell me where you would put them?—We would be bound to provide accommodation.

2017. But when the last one—a smallpox patient—came in, where would you put him?—We must provide accommodation.

CHAIRMAN.—This objection applies to all the smaller hospitals in Ireland.

Mr. Leech.—But we have the accommodation in Derry.

Mr. Healy.—My friend, Mr. Clancy suggests to ask him where he would put persons affected with gonorrhoea.

2018. Mr. Leech.—That is not an infectious disease. Have you a children's ward?—Just got the four wards, and have found it amply sufficient.

2019. Have you an operating room and a steriliser?

2020. Mr. Healy.—Have you the X rays. Is it true that Carrindrough is the best town for fairs and markets in the North-West?—We think it is the best market.

Dr. O'CALLAGHAN examined.

2021. Mr. Hanly.—I think you are the Medical Officer of the Carndonagh district?—I am.

2022. And also Medical Officer of the Inishowen Workhouse?—I am.

2023. Have you considered, from the point of view of the convenience of the sick poor, the question of their removal to Carndonagh in the event of the Inishowen part of the Derry Union being transferred to the Carndonagh Workhouse?—Well, yes; I see there are worse journeys already in the union.

2024. You have got well-equipped ambulances?—Yes; two very fine ambulances.

2025. And, of course, there is a railway?—There is.

2026. And in any case the number of sick poor coming to you would be very few?—They would be.

2027. Not half a dozen in the twelve months, I understand, of paupers altogether, and the sick paupers would be still fewer?—Yes.

2028. Now, the accommodation in Derry Workhouse itself, I believe, is nothing to brag about?—I believe it is more congested than ours; the infirmary is more congested.

2029. Whereas I understand you have very good hospital accommodation in Carndonagh?—We have.

2030. And your hospital is never more than half full?—Very rarely filled, or the fever hospital either.

2031. And you have ample accommodation in both for any demands that might be made by this extensive?—I think so.

2032. And, of course, as regards the comfort of the poor, once they were in the hospital the pure mountain air of Carndonagh would be preferable to the rather foul air of Derry?—I suppose so.

2033. Have you a well-equipped infectious diseases hospital at Carndonagh?—Yes.

2034. Would there be any difficulty in segregating the various patients according to their disorders?—None; I never saw it.

2035. And, taking the question altogether, you would not apprehend any difficulty either by the removal of the patients into Carndonagh in point of view of the hospital accommodation, nor to the patients themselves?—No.

2036. You think it is infinitesimal; any chance of it?—I do.

2037. Of course there would be far less risk of infection spreading in a country district than in a town, if they are brought into town?—Certainly.

2038. Mr. Hanly. Would you say there are worse journeys at present in the union than there will be when these districts are brought in?—Longer journeys.

2039. What distance?—Fifty or sixty miles.

2040. I may take it it is not desirable to bring patients long distances if it can be avoided?—That would depend a great deal on the ambulance.

2041. Take Burt; don't you know that the distance by road from Burt to Carndonagh would be twenty-three statute miles?—I would rather travel from Burt to Carndonagh than from Strule to Carndonagh.

2042. The centre of Burtstown is twenty-two miles from Carndonagh?—That may be.

2043. The centre of Kilderry is twenty-five from Carndonagh?—As possible.

2044. So that to bring each case into Carndonagh you would have to go something like forty-four miles?—That would be a rare occurrence.

2045. If any illness took place there it would occur?—Yes.

2046. Do you remember having four cases of typhus from near Omelone?—Yes.

2047. How many days and how many journeys did it take to remove the four cases?—I think it was three journeys.

2048. Or four journeys in four days?—I think it was in three days they came in, but I am not sure.

2049. What is the average number of cases admitted in each year to the infirmary?—That was the largest number in the fever hospital since I came to it—four.

2050. And into the general hospital, the average admissions in the year?

CHAIRMAN.—The average number of beds occupied?—I should say not more than twelve.

2051. Surely you had more beds occupied?—We have accommodation for forty.

2052. How many are there, as a rule?—Never more than a dozen; they are in other parts of the house, which carries extras.

2053. You don't visit them daily?—As a rule I do.

2054. Are you the only medical gentleman practising in Carndonagh?—Yes; but there is another quite close to me.

2055. Do you know the average number of admissions to the general workhouse?—I do not.

Mr. JOHN KAVANAGH examined.

2056. Mr. Hanly.—I think you were a Guardian for a number of years before the Local Government Act passed?—I was.

2057. And after it passed, a District Councillor for Glenties division?—Yes.

2058. And you were Chairman of the Union?—I was the first chairman.

2059. And in right of that chairmanship you also held the position of ex-officio member of the County Council?—I did.

2060. Was this question mooted frequently at your District Council Board?—Very often.

2061. It was a burning question among the people?—It was, since I became a Guardian.

2062. Did you pass that resolution (proposed). Just give the date of it?—

Extract from Guardians' Minutes of 12th March, 1900.

The letter of the Local Government Board dated 24th February, No. 58,555, having been read,—

Proposed by Mr. McGLINCHY, seconded by Lord. O'D. Browne.

Resolved:—That we reply:—If the decision of the boundaries between Inishowen and Londonderry Unions has left to the Londonderry Board of Guardians they will naturally possess the important connection of the rich portion of the County Donegal to continue. The fact of few paupers in the portion of Donegal annexed to Derry Union was the prime cause of its annexation at a time when might overcame right. Neither shall the majority of the ratepayers of the divisions in question desire a release of the economy, as they have been accustomed to pay a smaller poor rate by their connection with a union in the richer county; yet, if they could see it, the amalgamated rate which combined county rate, will be less in the future in Inishowen than in Derry. As to the convenience to the destitute and infirm poor, a conveyance by rail which will now run through the entire length of divisions in question will be to them much more comfortable in going to Inishowen Workhouse than going by peeper and to the County Derry Workhouse; and if the feelings, as well as the convenience, of the poor be worthy of consideration, then even poverty, pestilence, and infirmity do not press so heavily on the patient as the thought of being exported out of his or her own barony of Inishowen into another county beyond the Foyle. That the greatest evil of the existing arrangement is that the amalgamated rate under the new Act, the union charges, district charges, and county charges, are so mixed up that district councillors, county councillors, clerks of unions, and county secretaries, cannot without enormous expense of clerkship, satisfy either themselves or the public that the fiscal business of the two administrative counties is performed with due accuracy. We wish to point out that though the whole question of the restoration to the Donegal baronies of the richer parts of them annexed by some extraordinary measures to Derry and Tyrone at former times is in the hand of the County Council, which has no doubt convinced the Local Government Board of the clear justice, financial and other grounds, of the demand.

The question really is—Should the unjust and oppressive taxation of the poor ratepayers of the mountain parts of Donegal, and the practical annexation of the richer parts of the amalgamated unions from their fair share of the burden of the poor, be continued under any fair system of Local

Mr. John Kavanagh.

Aug. 15, 1903.

Mr. John
Kearney.

Government; and it seems to us that it is with the County Council, which has several unions behind it in its demand, and not for one union, and that on a dishonest side issue, raised by the Derry Board of Guardians, that the discussion should be that it is a dishonest plea put forward is perfectly evident. There is no readjustment which might not be met by such a plea as this. But in this case, with a railway now running through the entire length of the divisions in question, the convenience of the poor is simply provided for on the score of convenience, to which, we presume, your letter refers.

2053. You passed that resolution, and it was upon that resolution that this inquiry was granted, as I understand it—Is that so?

2054. Then the Local Government Board thought a private forte case was made out, and directed an inquiry to be held. It was afterwards not proceeded with. You are member for Greenacres?—Yes.

2055. Am I right in saying that Greenacres is as far, or further, from Carradough than any of the districts of Londonderry No. 2, which would have to come into Carradough if annexed?—I think nearly all the division of Greenacres would be the extreme end of the union, and owing to its being so hilly in this particular part it would make it more difficult to take a patient out of Greenacres than it would out of this part we wish to get annexed to the union.

2056. Again, of course, I take it that your division is much poorer than Londonderry No. 2?—I am sorry to have to admit that it is ever so much poorer.

2057. And it is a congested district?—It is.

2058. There would be far more patients from your area than from the new area?—Yes.

2059. Mr. Henry.—How many miles is the centre of it from Carradough?—Fourteen or fifteen.

2060. And, of course, there is no workhouse nearer than Carradough?—No.

2061. You would be very glad if there was?—I think not.

2062. You would prefer the accommodation of Carradough—like the troops—to accommodation nearer to you?—We don't want any more workhouses; that is one thing certain.

Mr. James
McGlinchey.

Mr. JAMES MCGLINCHAY, J.P., Chairman Inishowen Union, examined.

2073. Mr. Hooley.—As we know, you can carry your mind back for a considerable number of years?—I can.

2074. Do you remember the foundation of the workhouse in Carradough?—I remember it, although I did not live there in those days.

2075. I think the boardings were held out by a number of Englishmen and Welshmen who came over to this country, and did not know anything about it?—So I understand.

2076. And the general body of the sub-payers at that time had no voice in the representation?—None.

2077. I understand the system was, they piled all the mountains, bogs, and lakes into your division?—The existing boundaries of Inishowen certainly contain all the mountains and bogs and poor lands.

2078. And the profitable land largely lies outside it?—Yes.

2079. As I understand, the whole of your division is unanimous in favour of this change except the few interested gentlemen in Derry No. 2?—Undoubtedly so.

2080. Would there be any difficulty from any point of view in accommodating the poor from Derry No. 2 in your union?—None whatever.

2081. And no evil results would arise to the sick or destitute in any way?—None whatever.

2082. You have ample accommodation for them?—More than ample.

2083. It has been suggested that Guardians would not come from Derry No. 2 if it was amalgamated with your union; do you think that is so?—I think they probably might not come very regularly, but they would come as often as occasions required them.

2084. They would give an effective attendance as the Guardians from any other district?—Almost as much.

2085. Am I not right in saying that markets and fairs are held in Carradough?—No doubt about it; it is the capital of Inishowen.

2086. And the fairs and markets are well attended?—They are, particularly so since the advent of the railway.

2087. Has not the introduction of the railway made a complete change in the division in the point of accommodation and convenience?—Undoubtedly.

2088. It is no longer out of way or segregated from the rest of the county, as formerly?—It is not.

2089. Mr. Henry.—In the portion of the division other than Derry No. 2 they are quite unanimous in getting hold of Derry No. 2?—They are quite unanimous in getting back what was wrongly taken from them.

2090. I suppose they would take the city of Derry too, and come down to the Foyles?—I don't know that, but they have been suggesting this for a long time.

2091. Do you suggest Carradough is the market town for Burt or Fahan?—I don't suggest it is, but the Fahan people come occasionally to Carradough; they come to markets.

Mr. Edward
March.

Mr. EDWARD MARCH, J.P., examined.

2092. Mr. Hooley.—I think you are the Chairman of the Inishowen District Council?—Yes.

2093. And also a member of the County Council of Donegal?—Yes, being Chairman of this Council.

2094. You have heard the evidence that has been given here by the Inishowen gentlemen do you agree with it?—I do.

2095. May I ask you this—from your knowledge of the District and the County Council affairs do you think economy would result from the annexation?—I think that it would be more economical.

2096. Would you tell the Commission why you think it would be more economical?—In the first place, it would prevent complication in the County Council offices, as they have to keep separate books for these districts in the County Council's offices, and besides the deputy surveyors have to attend double the number of meetings they would have to attend supposing these districts were annexed to Inishowen, and on this account they applied some time ago for an increase of salary, which they got.

2097. May I ask whether you yourself favour the amalgamation of some of the unions with others, as put forward by the County Council?—I do.

2098. How many unions do you think could be done without?—Four unions for Donegal would be sufficient.

2099. With regard to the longer distances which people have to come from Derry No. 2, do you think there is anything substantial in that?—I think there is nothing in it.

2100. And, besides, the people that would have to come from it from the end of the district are very few indeed?—From the districts that it is proposed to annex to Inishowen I think they would be very few.

2101. Mr. Henry.—It would be a great advantage to persons to be brought down from near Londonderry at the head to Carradough, which is the fact—I think the fares are very low in No. 2 district.

2102. Don't you know the reason they are low in No. 2 district is because they have a habit of finding their way into Londonderry and going into the workhouse from the city; did that ever occur to you?—I cannot say.

2103. And don't you think they will continue to do so and find their way into the city still, although the rates from No. 2 will go down to Inishowen?—That is a question.

Mr. PATRICK PORTER examined.

Aug. 18, 1905.

Mr. Patrick Porter.

2204. Mr. Henly.—You have been a District Council in this division of Inishowen for some time?—Yes.

2205. Have you observed great inconvenience to the county officials in the discharge of their duties from the present condition of the boundaries of Derry?—I have.

2206. What is the inconvenience you have noticed?—The surveyors are not able to give the proper attention we would expect to the division of Inishowen, and we believe it would be a great saving at the same time, because one of the reasons for their increase of salary was that they had to attend to meetings in both divisions. If this proposed part was taken to Inishowen it would save an extra meeting in each quarter—one meeting would do for all.

2207. I am told that you live on the borders of the district proposed to be annexed?—The division I represent borders part of Fahan, Bardsboro, and Kilderry.

2208. There are no main roads in Derry?—There are very few main roads.

2209. Do the people from No. 2 district legally use the roads in Inishowen district?—They do, the local roads especially, and they contribute nothing to keep up the roads. The roads are set up by the people of the other division; it was only last week we had a complaint about it.

2210. For these districts do they bring coals from Burt?—They do to Buncrana.

2211. Is Buncrana their market town?—To a large extent it is; they sell their produce in Buncrana and take their goods home from it.

2212. Supposing they had to pay anything extra, do you think they would have any objection to come into your division?—Personally, they would not have the least objection, as far as any I have been talking to, only the question of a little extra £ s. d. They would be very glad—the majority of them—if the rates were going to be the same, to come there.

2213. If the rates were lowered in Inishowen, do you think they would be very glad to come in?—I am sure they would not have the least hesitation.

2214. So the objection is not the convenience of the port?—That is only a side issue; there is nothing in that at all.

2215. Then it is cash and not coin?—It is nothing else.

2216. Is there a very strong feeling amongst the people of Inishowen against the rich portion of the barony being excluded?—There is, because the majority of the people are very poor. It is a mountainous district the most of it, and they think it is not fair that the rich part of Inishowen, part of their own peninsula, should be taken to another county. They think those other people should pay their share of the upkeep of the large establishment in Carradough.

2217. They feel the original boundary was made on a wrong basis?—They feel it was made at a time when they had no representation.

2218. And the fact that the railway has been made into Carradough is an additional reason for making the change?—Some fifteen minutes extra would bring the councilors of that division—the majority of them—to Buncrana, and they could be just on the same train that we have to go by in the morning by fifteen minutes under rising.

2219. Do you think there would be any difficulty about these councilors coming into Buncrana?—Not at all.

2220. Mr. Henly.—You are complaining of the use of your local roads by people from Derry No. 2?—Yes.

2221. Does Inishowen not use the roads in Derry No. 2 to get across to Derry and get things?—That is different. We have to make a special arrangement for these roads.

2222. Don't you know that they pay for the repair of the roads that you use?—Yes, but these bog roads are very hard to keep up.

2223. Don't you think you get as much as you give?—We do not.

2224. When they are going to Buncrana they have to spend an hour and five minutes in the train?—No, they have not.

2225. Perhaps the time-table is wrong, 8.45 to 9.00. You propose to amalgamate, as I understand, the No. 2 Rural District Council with the Rural District Council of Inishowen?—Yes.

2226. Won't it be a nice business to bring road contractors and their two stretchers all the way down from Burt and that district to get their heads filled in the town of Carradough, when they could run into Derry?—No; we have a special arrangement in Carradough that the bonds can be filled the day after in Buncrana with the clerk of the union.

2227. It is felt that it is at present so inconvenient in Carradough that they have fired on Buncrana?—When they send in a tender for any work they have to bring stretchers with them, and in order to prevent them having to bring their stretchers to Carradough it is given out in the notice that the bonds will be signed next day in Buncrana.

2228. They are never signed at the meeting?—They are if they are there.

2229. But in the case of people far away you get it signed next day at Buncrana?—No; but if it is more convenient for them.

2230. A procedure which you know is illegal?—It is not illegal if the council make the order.

2231. That is done for the convenience of road contractors?—For the convenience of the bailiwick principally.

2232. Where do these road contractors and bailiwick come from?—From different portions of the division, it is in order not to have them lose the two days.

2233. Mr. Leach.—If what you suggest is carried out, and No. 2 is taken over, will there be less paupers in the Derry Union?—There will be less if they send them down to us.

2234. You say these five will go down to Carradough or Letterkenny?—We will take them with open arms.

2235. Take Kilderry, the centre of which is nine and a half miles from Derry, twenty-five from Carradough, and twenty-nine from Letterkenny, how are you going to send the paupers from that place?—At the present rate of paupers in No. 2 they will be few and far between.

2236. How are they to get to Carradough or Letterkenny?—They can get by car.

2237. Who is going to get the cars to drive them thirty miles?—That is the business of the union authorities to send the car.

2238. Who is to pay for the car?—The ratepayers—the whole union.

2239. Who is to pay for the car driving them from Kilderry?—It will come out of the rates the same way as taking them from Horn Head to Carradough.

2240. What rates will pay for it?—The rates of the whole of the Inishowen Union.

2241. That is what you call economy—paying the fare to drive them twenty-nine miles?—They are so few and far between that when we have got these five from Derry it may be ten years before there is another.

2242. Do you think that these paupers bring comparatively close to Derry, and such a desperate distance from these other places, do you think they would not go to Derry Workhouse?—I don't think they would if they could get to Inishowen.

2243. Is there anything to keep them out of Inishowen at present if they presented themselves there?—They don't belong to our division.

2244. Can they not get in?—They can, usually.

2245. Do you think that if this change was made, because there has been a change as to who was to pay for them, that instead of coming to Derry, where they have always gone before, they will go to Carradough, thirty miles away?—It is a very small comparison between the number of paupers and the rates No. 2 pays.

2246. Will they get into the Letterkenny Workhouse or be carried off to Carradough?—We will convey them to Inishowen, of course.

2247. Will they come first to Derry?—Certainly not.

2248. How are they to be brought?—The same as we bring them from the rest of the division.

2249. Take a person that is not ill—a strong pauper—when a pauper in Kilderry wants to get into the workhouse, how is he to get there?—If he is a strong, able-bodied pauper he will walk it.

2250. And suppose he walks the nine miles to Derry, what will happen then?—They will take him in there for the night, I suppose.

2251. Mr. Henly.—Kilderry is only fourteen miles from Carradough?—Fifteen miles.

2252. If a man is ill the ambulance is sent for him?—Yes.

2253. And if he is well and able to walk it is not too much that he should go in order to live free at the expense of the ratepayers?—No.

2254. Mr. Leach.—Where is the ambulance sent from?—From Carradough.

Mr. CHARLES CHAIN EXAMINED.

Aug. 18, 1907.

Mr. Charles Chain.

2155. Mr. Healy.—As I understand, you are a member of Derry No. 2 Rural District Council?—Yes.

2156. And therefore of the district proposed to be annexed?—Yes.

2157. You have a large farm in Inch?—It is not very large.

2158. Are you in favour of annexation to Cerdonagh?—Yes.

2159. And can you say whether there would really be any inconvenience to the poor if the annexation takes place?—Well, I don't see that there could be any inconvenience where there are no paupers; we can go to Cerdonagh in a very short time; we have no paupers from my district at all here.

2160. And you think it would only be right that you should share the rates with the rest of the division of Cerdonagh?—I think that we are in the very rich portion of the county; there are very few poor in our district; they are all big farmers and big employers, and I think it is too bad that the wealth of the county should cause Derry and the poor districts not get a fair proportion.

2161. Mr. Healy.—What size is your holding?—It is a small farm.

2162. Roughly?—About eighteen acres.

2163. Your rates won't trouble you much?—I may tell you that in proportion to my pocket these men have the pick of the land. I am a small farmer, and these men are better able to pay rates than I am.

2164. You are the only gentleman I have had the pleasure of seeing here from No. 2 district?—There are several gentlemen in the house here.

2165. In this happy district of Inch, that has no paupers, are the big employers in the habit of making a collection for the poor people to keep them out of the union?—Yes.

2166. Is that a regular thing in this district?—Yes; there is no relief given by the Derry Board of Guardians to our people, and it is inherent principally with us. If a cottier man with a small family applies for relief he must go into the house, and that is the last thing a decent, honest man likes to do. They won't give relief for the nine or ten weeks that would tide this poor man over, so that we have to make up subscriptions in some cases.

2167. That explains why Inch has no paupers?—Practically speaking, there are no paupers in it.

Mr. Healy.—That is our case.

Mr. Chain.—I have to thank you, sir, in conjunction with Mr. Healy, for having adjourned to enable us to be here to-day. As you have been informed, I represent the two unions of Stranorlar and Letterkenny, and I don't think that I can mix their cases up. I propose to begin with Stranorlar. My learned friends, Mr. Drummond and Mr. Healy, have relieved me of the necessity of saying a good deal that I intended to say, because the general considerations which my friend, Mr. Drummond, presented to you also occurred to myself, and Mr. Healy has brought out in regard to Inishewan certain facts and circumstances which also apply to both Stranorlar and Letterkenny in their inferences. The difference between the three cases is this, that Stranorlar is, I should say, by far the strongest case of the whole lot, and in point of fact I don't understand on what ground the claim of Stranorlar can be resisted at all. I would say, in the first place, as a general consideration, that the policy of this Local Government Act, and indeed of all the other Acts relating to boundaries, has been to make all these rating and taxing areas as far as possible coterminous. We have plenty of examples of that. We have the provision by which unions if possible, are to be coterminous with rural districts, and in several places you will find throughout Ireland that unions are actually identical with the rural district of the same name. But in addition to that, the enactments and provisions regarding alterations of boundaries are such that I submit on a fair construction of the statute, you are bound, if you can, to in every case adjust union boundaries so as to have every union within the county. And it is a matter of some importance that the Local Government Board itself has taken that view of the case. If you look to page 79 of Vannion you will find a note by Mr. Vannion. "At the time of the passing of the Act there were forty-six unions in two counties, and thirteen in three counties. The effect of orders made by the Local Government Board since the passing of the Act, in exercise of the powers under the Poor Law Act, is to leave thirty-eight unions in two counties and eight unions in three." That is to say they diminished, I presume, on the application of the local authorities concerned; they diminished from forty-six to thirty-eight the number of unions which were situated in two counties, and they diminished by five more the number of unions which were situated in three counties; and I venture to say, and I challenge contradiction upon the point, that there is no case in which they have pursued the opposite process, that is to say, extended the union or contracted it so as to make a union which was in one county wholly before now in two or three. There is no such case I venture to submit. Of course I am speaking to gentlemen who have full sources of official knowledge, and I venture to submit most confidently that no case of the process of spreading a union over more than one or two counties can be produced save the passing of the Local Government Act, and, on the contrary, the uniform practice of the Local Government Board has been to confine the union, like the electoral district, like the rural district, like the urban district, to one county. It has done this in thirteen cases altogether. I say that one consideration alone is a very significant of the intentions of the Act of Parliament, and is certainly conclusive as to the manner in which these intentions have been interpreted by the Local Government Board. Now, passing from that, I should like to know what can be a stronger case than that of Stranorlar. My learned friend, Mr. Henry, has been asking questions which assume that the effect of altering boundaries of unions might increase the real ex-pensiture. Well, whether or not in one or two little particular cases it might make any difference, does it not stand to reason that if you have a union spread over not merely one county, but two counties or three counties, if electoral districts, rural districts are spread over two counties or three counties, if you have these overlapping units all over the country, I venture to say that it would be perfectly intolerable, and an Act of Parliament would have to be passed if there were not power to alter that state of things. But because it does not exist all over the country, but exists in certain special cases, is it any the less conclusive, is it any the less plain that the overlapping of this area and union is a inconvenience in itself; that everything would be plainer and straighter if you had every union within a single county; is it not perfectly plain that everything would be easier—the administration of the county, the estimates of expenditure, the estimate of rates, the keeping of accounts. Does it not stand to reason, without giving any instances; does it not stand to reason that this would be much easier if instead of having these overlapping areas you had them all regularly coterminous, and had every union within a single county, and every union coterminous with every rural district. Therefore, for my learned friend to ask what difference would it make if this change takes place in the rural districts for grand jury purposes; I say on the face of it it is an inconvenience not to have these districts self-contained so that there shall not be the necessity for keeping different accounts—more books than are necessary; that there shall not be the necessity for estimating and making cross-accounts. I take it to be perfectly plain, whether or not you can prove it by particular instance, there is much or little difference in the result; that at all events there is some inconvenience in every case; that wherever overlapping exists to any considerable extent it is positively plain the inconvenience must be in proportion. As far as Stranorlar is concerned, there is one fact that stands out in the face at once, and that is that so far as instances are concerned there is a clear case that disadvantage exists at present in the case of the portion that we seek to annex to Stranorlar, and great advantage will accrue if the change were made. I have here a table, and it will be proved by the clerk of the union, which settles the matter so far as Stranorlar is concerned. The townland of Cloughard, the nearest portion of the division which we seek to annex, is four and a half miles from Stranorlar; the furthest townland in that division is seven miles. The nearest townland to Stranorlar is six miles and the furthest is ten miles; but a half is the nearest to Stranorlar, the nearest to Stranorlar is seven, and the furthest from Stranorlar is ten. The electoral division of Castleknock, the nearest townland to Stranorlar is three miles; the nearest to Stranorlar is three and a half; the furthest from Stranorlar is eight miles, namely Ballylister, and the farthest from Strabane is thirteen miles. Take again the electoral division of Urney West, the nearest to Stranorlar is six miles, and so on. This will be handed in, and I need not now go through it all. The return comes to this that in almost every case, I think there are just one or two exceptions, the nearest townland of each of the electoral divisions is far nearer to Stranorlar than it is to Strabane, and the farthest from Stranorlar is much less distant than the farthest from Strabane. I don't understand what answer they can make to that case. If it stopped there you would be bound to take those figures into consideration, and if you took them into consideration there is only one inference—that Stranorlar is the proper headquarters for all these electoral divisions which we seek to annex; I had better give you their names. The divisions we seek to annex are:—Castleduff, Cloghward, Cloghfield, North and South; Fugart, Raphoe, and Urney, West. It is impossible for my friend to get over the fact that Stranorlar is the proper headquarters for all these townlands, and not Strabane. In the next place Stranorlar has an additional advantage. It might be said you have a railway to one place and you have not a railway to another, but as regards both the centres I represent, Stranorlar and Liffordtown, they are both railway centres, and the railway runs right into the district we seek to annex. So you have not only the shorter distance but the easier mode of travelling, and really on that point I don't think I ought to say any more. It is right to add also, in illustration of the question of distance, that Strabane Union is a much larger union, geographically, than Stranorlar. Strabane Union extends over twenty-three miles between its widest boundaries, while Stranorlar extends only over fifteen miles, and I think it will be proved before you that if the seven divisions I have mentioned were transferred to Stranorlar Union there would be absolutely no inconvenience caused to the poor, but any inconvenience caused to the poor by the present arrangement would be absolutely removed. The valuation of the Strabane Union in the County Donagall is £48,644, and of the Tyrone portion of the union is £70,355; total, £119,000; while the total valuation of Stranorlar Union is only £31,000. Is there no inconvenience or anomaly in that of which any administrator would take account. Here are two unions, one valued at £119,000 and the other at £31,000, and the result of their being constituted in this particular way is this—They have to keep up the same establishment, they have got a workhouse and infirmary, and all the usual medical appliances, and each of them has to have a staff paid out of the rates. Is it not absolutely preposterous—a general public inconvenience in the County Donagall and in the County Tyrone, no less, and also, as I shall show you when I come to deal with Liffordtown, an inconvenience in the County Londonderry—that there should be this vast difference in the valuation of these different unions, inconveniences resulting in a loss of money to the public, because, as I have said, the small union of Stranorlar with £31,000 valuation has to keep up an establishment, and staff, and workhouse, and infirmary, and all those medical appliances attached to the infirmary just the same as if it had a large population and a large valuation like the adjoining union. I say that the very difference between these figures—the population, of course, tells the same tale, and I scarcely need mention it will be given to you by the witnesses—but the difference in these figures themselves suggest a public inconvenience. It will be manifest from the evidence produced before you that if you keep these unions as they are, Stranorlar, with the small valuation of £31,000 and a corresponding small population, if you keep Strabane Union, with its overvaluing valuation and largely greater population, the result will be that you will be inflicting upon the smaller union and the poorer one a burthen in the shape of money, which might be saved if you put the request which the Guardians of Stranorlar ask, I think, all the people of the County Donagall ask you to do on this occasion. I can conceive no greater inconvenience than that of paying too much. You may talk of the difficulty of travelling, the question of distances, and the keeping of accounts, and so on, but in the word inconvenience, upon which Mr. Henry, by his cross-examination, seems to lay so much stress, there is involved all these other consequences, including excessive pecuniary burdens, which it would be absurd for the Local Government Board, I respectfully submit to you, to overlook. They may say that we have not got accommodation in Stranorlar Union for any paupers or infirm or sick poor who may come from these districts we propose to transfer. The very opposite is the fact. It will be proved to you that 250 inmates are kept weekly in the Strabane Workhouse, and fifty of those only belong to Strabane No. 2. The average cost of an inmate, I am informed, is 3s. 6d. per week, and 150 paupers on that figure comes to £22,500 in 12 months, representing a rate of about 4s. in the £ on the valuation of the union. Now, contrast that state of things with the state of things in Stranorlar. The average number of inmates in Stranorlar is sixty-four; they have accommodation, I understand, for 302; the buildings are absolutely going to waste in Stranorlar Workhouse, although there are portions of the County Donagall not belonging to that union, but, on the contrary, belonging to another union, which, in the main, belongs to another county; could anything be more absurd. If the fifty inmates from Strabane No. 2 were transferred to Stranorlar the total would be 114, which, at the average cost of 3s. 6d., amounts to £1,005 a year, and this sum on the unified valuation of No. 2 and Stranorlar would mean a rate of 3d. in the £, or 1d. in the £ which you save. Putting aside the fact that Stranorlar is the natural headquarters of Strabane No. 2, and that the distances are entirely on the side of Stranorlar, is it not absurd that you should have all this public money wasted on a workhouse capable of containing nearly 600 people, but with only sixty-five within its walls—an infirmary equally well-equipped and equally well-cared for—while there is outside the boundary of Stranorlar Union a comparatively wide district of the same county, which, because it belongs to another union, is far all intents and purposes belonging to another county, and it belongs to another county for the purposes of the Poor Law. All the figures tell the same tale; they all prove that you have a waste of public money caused chiefly by the fact that you have outside, and within three miles of the boundary of the union, a number of Donagall divisions which ought to be within it, but are not. I am told, as far as regards the infirmary, that there are only half a dozen patients in it, and that it can accommodate a great many more. Strabane may say we can provide for them in Strabane Workhouse. Here is a most important point bearing directly on the question of convenience and inconvenience. Inconvenience, I take it, means inconvenience to the poor as well as to the rich, inconvenience to the persons who have, unfortunately, to go into the workhouse and infirmary, as well as the officials of the county, and I am informed it will be told to you in evidence that in order to give sufficient accommodation, in order to prevent the existing inconvenience to the poor lodged in Strabane Workhouse, £1,500 will have to be spent, and, if I know the policy of the Local Government Board, they will be compelled to spend that money, because public attention may be directed to it, and once it is directed there is no escape from the liability. I am told that while there is ample accommodation in Stranorlar Workhouse, the sum of £1,500 will be necessary to put the workhouse of Strabane, with its fever hospital, into proper condition to receive all the patients who crowd into it, and that expense will be avoided, or, at all events, a considerable part, if you take away this district of Strabane No. 2 and put it where it naturally belongs. There are just one or two small points. I think it is an injustice and inconvenience in a real sense, although Mr. Henry does not seem to think much of it, that the rates in any part of Donagall should be collected at the expense of the ratepayers of Donagall and spent elsewhere. Why should Donagall pay collectors for the purpose of raising money for Tyrone purposes. Is there no inconvenience in that, or is there such a narrow interpretation to be given to the word "inconvenience," as Mr. Henry would suggest, that you are not to take into account financial loss. I say such a conclusion would be absurd. You must take all these things into account, and if you do, it seems to me that there is no alternative but, in the case of Stranorlar, at all events, to say that the district known as Strabane No. 2 has been entirely too long in the wrong portion of the union.

Aug. 15, 1905.

Aug. 18, 1906.

Mr. GEORGE McLAUGHLIN examined.

Mr. George McLaughlin.

2156. Mr. Clancy.—What position do you occupy in the Stranorlar District Council.

2157. Do you see that list of distances there (produced)?—Yes.

2170. Is it correct?—Well, I would not like to say it was correct; it was from information I got. I believe it is correct.

2171. CHAIRMAN.—Is it correct as far as you know?—I believe it is, from information I got.

2172. You prepared it yourself?—I did.

2173. You meant it to be correct?—Yes.

CHAIRMAN.—Then you might hand it in.

2174. Mr. Clancy.—You are aware, at all events, that portion of Strabane Union called Strabane No. 2 is only three miles from the boundary of the Stranorlar Union?—Yes.

2175. Do you know also whether the farthest portion of any of Strabane No. 2 is only thirteen miles from Stranorlar?—That is so.

2176. Have you got the valuation of Strabane No. 2?—£42,000.

2177. And the rest of the union, £70,185?—Yes.

2178. Then the valuation of Stranorlar?—£31,000.

2179. Are you aware how many inmates there are per week in the Strabane Workhouse?—250 is about the average.

2180. And how many of these belong to Strabane No. 2?—Fifty.

2181. Have you calculated the average cost?—Yes.

2182. Is this the aggregate, 3s. 6d. per week; 250 at that figure would be £5,307 5s. 10d. a year?—Yes.

2183. Or a rate of nearly 4d. in the £?—Yes.

2184. Now the average number of inmates in Stranorlar Workhouse, I believe, is only sixty-five?—Yes.

2185. And if you added the fifty inmates from Strabane No. 2 the total number would be 115?—Yes.

2186. Which, at an average cost of 3s. 6d. per week, amounts to £1,045 per year?—Yes.

2187. And this sum on the united valuations of Strabane No. 2 and your existing union would amount to a rate of 3d. in the £?—Yes.

2188. That would show a saving of 1d. in the £?—Yes.

2189. To the No. 2 Strabane division?—Yes, on the united valuation.

2190. You have also given me some figures on the question of out-door relief expenditure; it amounts to £1,768 a year at Strabane?—Yes.

2191. And that represents a rate of 2d. in the £?—Yes.

2192. The expenditure under this head in Stranorlar has never, I believe, exceeded £104 a year?—No.

2193. Then if you pursue the same process, as you did in the case of the in-door relief, and add Strabane No. 2 to Stranorlar, the total expenditure on out-door relief would be £332 a year, or a rate of 1d. in the £ on the united valuation, and that would be a saving to the ratepayers of Strabane No. 2 of 1d. in the £?—Yes.

2194. As regards the establishment charges in the Strabane Union these charges amount to £1,779 a year, representing a rate of 3d. in the £; in the Stranorlar Union the maximum of expenditure under this head is £220 a year; I believe the last audited half-year only showed £256 13s. 6d.?—Yes, but I am taking the maximum.

2195. And if Strabane No. 2 were transferred to Stranorlar the expenditure on the rates on both valuations would be 2d. in the £, or a saving of 1d. in the £ to the ratepayers of Strabane No. 2?—Yes.

2196. A total saving of 3d. in the £?—Yes.

2197. How many is the Stranorlar Workhouse capable of containing, exclusive of the fever hospital?—500; the fever hospital sixty-two.

2198. How many have you in it?—Sixty-five as an average.

2199. How many in the fever hospital?—One at present; I have known years without a fever case.

2200. Notwithstanding these figures, you have to keep up the usual staff?—Yes.

2201. The requirements of the law compel you to do it; if you had only half that number you would be obliged to do the same thing?—Yes.

2202. Do you know anything about the Strabane Hospital?—The infirmary portion is said to be completed. Dr. Johnston will give evidence.

2203. Do you know what would be necessary to put the fever hospital into proper condition in Strabane?—One of the Guardians told me yesterday that the estimate was £1,100, and the question was adjourned pending the decision of this Commission.

2204. In Stranorlar you must have ample room?—Yes.

2205. In the male side of the infirmary there is a vacant room capable of holding twenty beds?—Yes.

CHAIRMAN.—I think you may take it that there is plenty of room.

2206. Mr. Clancy.—What is the population of Stranorlar?—13,707.

2207. Of Strabane No. 2?—10,000.

2208. When you tell us what the rates are?—The standard rate in Stranorlar is 5d.

2209. Strabane No. 2?—11d. in county cess; standard rate in Stranorlar was 2s. 1½d., and in Strabane 2s. 4½d.

2210. This year in Stranorlar what is the rate?—On land, 3s. 6d., and on buildings 3s. 6d.

2211. And in Strabane No. 2 the rate is 4s. 3d. on land and 6s. 6d. on buildings?—Yes.

2212. Is there any complaint as to the management either in point of economy or efficiency in Stranorlar Union?—No, there is no complaint.

2213. The result must be if things are left as they are considerably increased expenditure in Strabane Union?—Yes.

2214. And a considerably increased rate on Strabane No. 2?—Yes.

2215. And your contention is that if Strabane No. 2 were transferred to the national union there would be a lessening of rates?—Yes; we would have sufficient accommodation for all.

2216. Mr. Henry.—In fact both people would save money?—Yes.

2217. In your interesting calculation have you taken into account that a gentleman called a clerk of the union might require an additional salary when the number of people were doubled?—He might.

2218. And the master of the workhouse might require an additional salary?—If the Guardians were generous enough.

2219. You would have a good case when sixty-five went up to 115? what would be the effect of the other debt of the union who was losing? I suppose he would be looking for compensation?—He would.

2220. And all that has to be paid for?—Yes.

2221. Did you work out the present average amount in Strabane?—No, 4s. 6d.

2222. What was yours?—No, 6d.

2223. There are sixty-three papers in Stranorlar; Donegal lies how many miles beyond Stranorlar?—Eighteen miles.

2224. Did it ever occur to you that a very good solution would be to put Stranorlar's sixty-five papers and six infirmary patients out of it altogether?—There are thirty-five infirmary cases, but six of these are really medical cases, the remaining twenty-eight could be treated in the infirmary wards, although they require medical supervision.

2225. That would run the general purposes up to eighty?—No; to sixty-five; that includes the lot.

2226. So that the infirmary is run and the workhouse run for the sake of sixty-five patients?—Yes.

2227. What is the total cost of the institution?—About £2,000 a year.

2228. CHAIRMAN.—What was the amount of your last rate for Poor Law purposes?—Something about 9d.

2229. Mr. Henry.—For union charges, on land—3s. 6d., and on other improvements 1s. 7½d.

CHAIRMAN.—That would include medical charges.

2230. Mr. Henry.—You cannot give me the cost of the workhouse as a separate item?—I could not.

2231. Can you give me the cost of the whole house?—CHAIRMAN.—The Commission are getting that in a return for all the unions.

2232. Mr. Henry.—I am going to make five unions for you, abolishing Stranorlar; are you in favour of the five unions theory?—Everyone is in favour of relaxing their own.

2233. Mr. Clancy said that all the townlands of the electoral divisions he proposes to take have Stranorlar as their headquarters, and not Strabane; you won't say that about Clonleigh, North and South, where the paper sees Strabane Workhouse as he is going in the train up to Stranorlar?—As to Clonleigh, South, our Guardians say that if the Guardians think there is any inconvenience to the poor to transfer them to Stranorlar they don't wish to press that point.

2234. Even your own Guardians are so convinced of the absurdity of taking Clonleigh, South, that they are shy of it.
 Mr. Clancy.—If Stranorlar gives up those two divisions Leitrimkenry will claim them.

2235. Mr. Henry.—Then, as far as your Guardians are concerned, they feel a little shy of Clonleigh?—The committee drew up the report, and if the Commission think there will be an inconvenience to the poor they would not press it.

2236. What about Clonleigh, North?—We say the distance from Stranorlar Workhouse to any of these divisions is not more than ten miles.

2237. How would a man come from Clonleigh, North, to Stranorlar?—By the ambulance.

2238. Supposing he did not want the ambulance?—I suppose he would go into Strabane.

2239. Do you want Foddyglass too?—No.

2240. Raphoe?—Yes.

2241. We are told that there is going to be a railway direct from Raphoe to Strabane; what communication is between Raphoe and Stranorlar?—There is no railway communication.

2242. Urry, West; that is nearer to Stranorlar than it is to Strabane?—Yes.

2243. The ordnance gentlemen were under a mistake about that too; in fact Stranorlar is the centre for this, not Strabane?—Yes.

Mr. WILLIAM GALLAGHER, J.P., examined.

Mr. William Gallagher.

2244. Mr. Clancy.—You are County Councillor for the district contained in Strabane No. 2?—Yes.

2245. Are you acquainted with the distances between Stranorlar and Strabane of these various places?—I do know the whole of them.

2246. Have you examined this list; these distances are correct?—They are.

2247. Portion of Strabane No. 2 comes as near as three miles to Stranorlar?—It does.

2248. And the furthest point is no more than thirteen miles?—No, from the top of West Urry.

2249. What is the nearest point to Strabane of Strabane No. 2?—Lifford would be the nearest point.

2250. How far is the nearest point?—Clonleigh, South, is the nearest; it would be a mile from Lifford to Strabane Workhouse.

2251. What is the furthest?—Cleghard would be thirteen miles, at least.

2252. In other words, to bring it to a head, would there be any inconvenience in point of distance, or would there be any other inconvenience, by adding Strabane No. 2 to the Stranorlar Union?—As far as taking all the parishes—taking them all round, even to Strabane—it would be something equal.

2253. There would be no inconvenience?—Not the slightest; it would be as far in the one instance as the other.

2254. And in a great many cases it would be a convenience?—It would; I never saw a pauper yet going by rail to a workhouse; the ambulance goes for him.

2255. In a great many parts of Strabane No. 2 did I understand you to say it would be the removing of an inconvenience to have it transferred to Stranorlar; would it be generally convenient to have Strabane No. 2 removed to Stranorlar?—It would. The people of Castleduff and that locality always went to Stranorlar for Protestant Bazaar. I am a ratepayer in both divisions. I pay in No. 2 on £117, and in No. 1 up to £40.

2256. You live in Castleduff?—I do; the people in Castleduff would go to Stranorlar quite as conveniently as to Strabane.

2257. Do you know anyone in Donagh who is opposing it?—I do; there are District Councillors.

2258. Why?—I suppose for political reasons.

2259. No pretence of inconvenience?—I don't know that there is much question of inconvenience.

2260. Mr. Henry.—In Castleduff who are the two representatives?—Mr. Wray and Mr. Taylor; that is the District Councillors.

2261. Have they both opposed this strongly?—As far as I know they are opposed to it.

2262. Although they are elected?—They are politically elected.

2263. They are elected anyway; the result would be, of course, among other results, that if this was carried out the Chairman of the District Council of Strabane No. 2 would cease to exist as a member of the County Council?—He may or he may not.

2264. If they had their way?—I would not state that.

2265. And the same would happen in Derry No. 2?—I cannot say anything about that.

2266. Are you serious in suggesting that the distance to Stranorlar from this place, as a whole, is practically equal to the distance from Strabane?—It is.

2267. Here is Stranorlar; if you lifted the whole of that division and moved it four miles, it would be just in the same position with regard to Stranorlar as it now is to Strabane; what is the furthest point from Strabane?—Belah.

2268. Is it a mountain district?—It is.

2269. Not very thickly populated?—A great many people.

2270. Is not the great bulk of the population along the Fynn and up there?—No; that is where the good land is.

2271. What is the population of Lifford?—That is a village; it may be 100.

2272. Do you propose to take Clonleigh, South?—I would not mind Clonleigh, South. It appears to be a good distance from Strabane; they have to take the paupers by road.

2273. What distance is it, for instance, to the far portion of Cleghard?—By road it would be thirteen or fourteen miles.

2274. And from Stranorlar to Lifford?—On a straight line it would be about an equal distance.

2275. Even paupers, as a rule, in this world have not wings?—No; they don't fly.

2276. What is the actual distance from Stranorlar to Lifford?—About thirteen miles.

Dr. BROWN.—I may say that we intend to visit all the infirmaries.

The Sitting was adjourned.

SIXTH PUBLIC SITTING—FRIDAY AUGUST 14th, 1903.

At the Courthouse, Londonderry.

Aug. 14, 1903.

Present:—Mr. NICES (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. COBY BIGGER.

Dr. JENKINSON examined.

Dr. Johnston.

2277. Mr. CLEGG.—You are the Medical Officer of the workhouse in Stranorlar?—Yes, sir, for the last twenty-two years.

2278. And, of course, you know all about the house, and especially the infirmary?—Yes.

2279. What is the accommodation in the infirmary?—We have forty-five beds in the infirmary fully equipped; the infirmary comprises most feverishly with any of the union infirmaries in the county; there are forty-five beds—all iron beds, with woven wire mattresses, hair mattresses, and feather pillows—we have that accommodation in the place, along with another ward not at present occupied in the male side of the infirmary capable of containing twelve additional beds; it is thoroughly well equipped.

2280. It is equipped in the best manner. I believe you have an ambulance attached to the hospital too?—Yes.

2281. What are the numbers attending the infirmary?—We at present have thirty-four, but I think you will hardly exactly judge so well from the numbers at present in it as from the report that we annually send forward to the Local Government Board.

CHAIRMAN.—We have it.

Mr. CLEGG.—I presume the Commissioners have got the returns.

2282. CHAIRMAN.—You had forty-one at the 1st January this year, which is a crowded time of the year?—But that only shows the number under treatment at that particular time. In these returns you will see the number of cases treated in the infirmary during the year.

2283. Dr. BIGGER.—425. Do you happen to know yourself from personal knowledge anything of the Stranorlar Infirmary?—The Guardians of the Stranorlar Union asked me to visit the Stranorlar Infirmary last Monday, and I went down and saw the Stranorlar Infirmary in company with Dr. Boyd.

2284. CHAIRMAN.—Of those numbers that you had in hospital how many acute cases had you. I see you had only eleven in the aged and infirm ward; how many of those forty-one cases on the 1st of January were acute cases and how many were what you might call chronic? Not more than six or eight acute cases, but then the remainder are cases we would send down to the infirm ward, but they would be constantly going backwards and forwards on account of their feebleness; they would be in the infirm ward one week and in the hospital the next.

Mr. Thomas Magee.

2290. Mr. CLEGG.—I believe you are Vice-Chairman of the Donegal County Council?—Yes.

2291. What part of the county do you represent?—Stranorlar district.

2292. Do you represent any part of what is known as Stranorlar No. 2?—No.

2293. Your division is on the borders of that?—No; there are two electoral divisions in Stranorlar Union in the Stranorlar County District.

2294. You know the district of Stranorlar No. 2 and the relation to the Stranorlar Union generally?—Yes.

2295. You heard the evidence given here yesterday as to Stranorlar?—I agree with that evidence; I was at the preparing of them.

2296. Did you hear the other evidence given here yesterday?—I did.

2285. Is that the meaning of the 425; are they re-transfers from the house?—It is the total number in the workhouse in general; then you see the number treated in the workhouse infirmary differs from the number admitted to the house, owing to the transfers.

2286. 115?—That is the total number treated, and that includes transfers.

2287. Dr. BIGGER.—During the year, only 115?—Yes.

2288. That includes those that have been sent to the infirm wards and then sent back again?—Yes.

2289. Mr. CLEGG.—You were telling us you were commissioned by your Board of Guardians to visit the Stranorlar Workhouse?—Yes; I went in company with Dr. Boyd, the Union Medical Officer of Stranorlar. In the Stranorlar Infirmary at present every bed is occupied—seventy cases—and Dr. Boyd tells me they cannot possibly admit a fresh case into the infirmary without sending down less acute cases into the body of the house.

2290. I believe they have a regular constitution to decide what cases they must send down?—There is a difficulty about it, of course; in the body of the house they have fifty-nine females and twenty-nine males, all classified as infirm.

2291. CHAIRMAN.—Ninety-three on the 1st of January?—Dr. Boyd tells me that of the eighty cases forty ought to be in the infirmary, if he had room for them, and that he cannot possibly carry on his infirmary at present without very considerable additions.

2292. Did you hear an estimate of the sum that would be required?—I heard it roughly estimated as considerably over £1,000.

2293. Do you happen to know that they postponed deciding whether they would expend this money until after the inquiry is over?—Yes.

2294. Mr. MURPHY.—A great many people seem to go to the Stranorlar Workhouse and very few to Stranorlar?—Of course they are sent from the union.

2295. Don't you think now, after all this is over, that people from Lifford will continue to go to Stranorlar?—Very likely.

2296. The county infirmary is three beddes, and Dr. Boyd is doctor to the county infirmary?—But he won't take the kind of cases that are admitted into the workhouse.

2297. What is your average for the infirmary in Stranorlar?—Thirty-five.

2298. It is really an infirmary with a workhouse attached?—Yes.

Mr. THOMAS MAGEE, J.P., examined.

2300. Do you agree with it generally?—I do.

2301. I believe it is a fact, is it not, that those of the clerical divisions belonging to Stranorlar No. 2 were actually attached to Stranorlar Union before the passing of the Local Government Act?—It was a bazaar for road purposes; they were West Urry, Cloughart, and Cullinstown; they were in the honour of Regbee; now they go to Stranorlar.

2302. Mr. MURPHY.—They have been changed since the Local Government Act?—They have.

2303. Of course you are not in favour of the abolition of the Stranorlar Union?—I am not.

2304. Are you in favour of four unions?—Yes.

2311. What about Letterkenny?—The County Council have not come to any decision on it.

2322. What do you think yourself about Letterkenny?—I am not capable of forming an opinion.

Mr. Clancy.—That is the case, Sir, as far as Stranorlar is concerned.

CHAIRMAN.—Now Letterkenny.

Mr. Clancy.—I have only a very few words to say with regard to Letterkenny, because, as I remarked about Stranorlar, a good deal of what I would have said has already been said by Mr. Drummond and Mr. Brady, and myself in the case of Stranorlar, for I think it is plain on the face of it that it is inconvenient to have portions of Donegal County attached to unions whose headquarters are in other counties; it is an inconvenience to have rates collected in one county which are handed over to the County Council of another county. It is, I repeat, against the policy and the spirit of the Act of Parliament to have those overlapping areas at all, and, of course, if there is any force in that remark as regards Stranorlar or as regards any part of Fintona, it applies with greater force, if you look at the map, to Letterkenny. Derry and Strabane seem to be with their tentacles trying to grab various portions of another county in which they are not naturally attached at all. As regards the actual inconveniences in regard to distance, I admit at once that there is no case to be made on behalf of Letterkenny, but as a matter of fact the distances are about the same, and it so happens that the main railway which serves to bring people to Derry, for instance, brings them also to Letterkenny, and in my opinion there is nothing to be said on that point at all, because it seems to be equally easy to bring the people of those portions which it is sought to add to the Letterkenny Union; it is just as easy to bring them to the one place as to the other, they are about equidistant, and there is a railway in each case; therefore I don't dwell on that. But I think what I ought to dwell upon, and what is absolutely plain to my mind, in face of the evidence at all events, is as regards Strabane; that there is a practical and actual inconvenience and injury to the poor, the infirm and the sick, of those districts in having them for workhouse or medical purposes treated in Strabane instead of in Letterkenny. You will find from the evidence of the doctor in Letterkenny that the state of things there, as regards the accommodation for paupers and the accommodation of patients, is about as good as, and I think it could hardly be better than, in Stranorlar, and you know already what is the case in that respect as regards Strabane. It seems to me a cruelty to continue to send in patients belonging to Donegal to an institution which is already overcrowded, and in point of fact it seems to be a danger to allow the Strabane Union Workhouse and infirmary to be any longer congested. Whatever may be said as regards the divisions in the Derry Union which we seek to annex, I submit that on the one point alone as regards the portions of Strabane we seek to annex to Letterkenny, it would be a regular cruelty to continue the present arrangement. We know that Strabane infirmary and workhouse are congested areas, a very large sum of money must be spent upon them, and under these circumstances I submit that if the further expenditure of money can in any extent be avoided by transferring a portion of Strabane Union to Letterkenny, as well as Stranorlar, is ought to be done in the interests of humanity and of economy. I think it is rather significant that the figures regarding outdoor relief especially are enormously greater in Strabane than they are in Letterkenny. I am told that there is £1,000 of a difference, and I cannot imagine to what that can be attributed except that instead of relieving people outside the workhouse, for whom they would if they could, but cannot find accommodation inside. That being so, certainly it seems to me an additional proof of the utter insufficiency of the Strabane Workhouse and hospital to perform the functions for which they are designed. As regards Derry, much the same observations apply, except that, that I am bound to admit the case as regards hospital and workhouse accommodation is not as serious in the case of Derry as it is in the case of Strabane; but still it is perfectly evident that there must be some inconvenience in keeping up the present arrangement, and that inconvenience must be entirely removed by transferring the Donegal portions to Letterkenny, and not only that, but that poor people from those districts—the poor and the sick—would be far better treated, because there would be far more accommodation, far more time to attend to them in the Letterkenny Union than there would be in the Derry Union. Now, in addition to that, I have to give you some figures—I dare say you have got them already.

The total valuation of the Letterkenny Union in 1901 was £22,468 8s, the area was 101,246 acres 1 rood 35 perches, and the population 13,092. The total area of the Londonderry Union in the County Donegal was 88,947 acres; that is more than half of the whole area of Letterkenny; the valuation was £34,515, and the population 8,633. It is quite evident that if there is to be amalgamation that would be a most proper addition to the Letterkenny portion for union purposes. And, of course, if there were to be an amalgamation of the Donegal Unions at all—it means to say if you don't add all Donegal, or the eastern half of Donegal to Londonderry—so Londonderry and Strabane Unions, the only alternative, if you have amalgamation at all in Donegal, is to take all Donegal and amalgamate it into some number of unions less in number than those that exist at present. It is impossible you could have as any rearrangement of unions in Donegal in any amalgamation scheme; it would be absolutely impossible for you to leave, I submit, any portion of the County Donegal in either Strabane or Londonderry, even if there were inconvenience, because, as I said before, the policy of the Act is evidently, and the practice of the Local Government Board is, to make these areas coterminous, to make each county contain all the unions, and all the electoral divisions, and all the other units of area and taxation. Now, as regards Strabane, the figures are—I am taking it in connection with Letterkenny—63,322 acres, 2 roods, 38 perches; valuation, £41,833 12s; the total area, valuation, and population of the electoral divisions I have here in a table, which I propose to hand in, and the comment I make upon them is this, that the contrast between the smaller unions and the bigger ones is so great there must be amalgamation, I fancy, with some other unions in Donegal. It is impossible to keep up these separate establishments at a cost to the ratepayers when the cost may be avoided. Again, I say if you adopt that policy there is no alternative. It must follow as a necessary consequence that you must concentrate the Donegal unions within the county of Donegal. Now, I am sorry to say that the clerk of the Letterkenny Union won't be here, or be able to be here, until four o'clock, inasmuch as he has a Guardians' meeting to-day. He will be here at four o'clock to verify these figures if you take them now.

CHAIRMAN.—Is he coming for no other purpose except to verify these figures?

Mr. Clancy.—I think so.

CHAIRMAN.—Then you may telegraph him he need not come, because we can verify the figures from our own returns.

Mr. Clancy.—The accommodation for paupers in the three workhouses is as follows: something about 700 in Londonderry.

Mr. Cooke.—740.

Mr. Clancy.—In Strabane—I think we gave the figures yesterday—350.

CHAIRMAN.—The total number in the workhouse at Strabane was 265 on the 1st of January.

Mr. Clancy.—In Letterkenny the accommodation is 668. The accommodation of the infirmaries is 140 in Londonderry; in Strabane we had the figures yesterday; in Letterkenny 222.

Mr. Cooke.—What was the number of paupers in Letterkenny?

CHAIRMAN.—Eighty-eight on the 1st of January.

Mr. Clancy.—The average number in the workhouse for the last three years was 85 '16, the number in the infirmary 3,688.

CHAIRMAN.—It is necessary to take the highest number, and we generally get the highest number in mid-winter, eighty-eight.

Mr. Clancy.—The number of paupers in the workhouse on the 1st of January, 1902, was fifty-six; in Londonderry 341; in Strabane it was 128. In the infirmary at Letterkenny forty-three; in Londonderry twenty-five. The average cost of an inmate in Letterkenny is 3s. 9d. a week, and in the infirmary 2s. 11d. The Letterkenny fever hospital can accommodate at present with beds twenty-two, and Derry can accommodate ninety.

CHAIRMAN.—That is the county fever hospital, not the union.

Mr. Clancy.—I am told the clerk is also prepared to state that each of the workhouses has an ambulance, and also that there are no inmates in Letterkenny Workhouse, while there are twenty-seven in Derry, and I believe only one attendant. Some objection may be made on the ground that there would be inconvenience to the sick poor from being removed from certain parts of this electoral division we seek to annex to Letterkenny Workhouse. I have already said that there is not much to be said on the question of distances; practically speaking, they are equi-distant, for although they might be further away in one case than the other, but, nevertheless, the same railway accommodates both places. If anybody would be inconvenienced it would inconvenience only about six persons in going to Letterkenny. I don't know whether or not there have been complaints; it is within the knowledge of the Local Government Board that their inspectors have made complaints as to the insufficiency of the Strabane Hospital. I don't know whether any similar complaints have been made in regard to the Derry Hospital, but probably we will hear whether there is or not when some witness regarding that institution comes before you. As regards Letterkenny, the doctor will tell you that there are no complaints, and indeed there cannot be any; the accommodation is more than ample both as regards the general workhouse and the infirmary. As regards Strabane, owing to their mismanagement, I understood they have got into debt quite recently—I believe last year to the extent of over £5,500. I should say that is an inconvenience to the people of Strabane Union. On the general point of justice, and also of convenience, it is manifest that what was urged by Mr. Hooley on behalf of Innishowen and by myself in the case of Stranorlar is true also in the case of Letterkenny, namely, that the rich portions of this union have been detached from the poorer portions to which they naturally belong, with the result of burdening the poorer portions in such case with an amount of rates which cannot but be regarded as a direct positive inconvenience, even in the legal sense, and ought to be removed, if it can possibly be done, by the alteration of boundaries.

Aug. 14, 1903.

DR. THOMAS PATTERSON PRESIDING.

Dr. Thomas Patterson.

2313. Mr. Clancy.—You are Medical Officer of the Letterkenny Workhouse?—Yes, sir.

2314. How long have you occupied that position?—Seventeen years.

2315. Will you tell us what the accommodation in Letterkenny is?—The accommodation in the hospital is for 120, and 432 for the body of the house; 555 in all.

2316. Is the hospital equipped in the best manner?—It is.

2317. Beds and bedding?—Yes; iron bedsteads, with wire bottoms, wire mattresses, and feather pillows. It is not all occupied; the central block, which is occupied, has accommodation for sixty-six.

2318. As regards the house generally, what is the accommodation there?—The accommodation is good; there is accommodation for 432.

2319. How many are usually in it?—I think about sixty, or thereabouts.

2320. Of course there is a full establishment in each case?—Yes.

2321. There are nurses?—Yes; two nurses—a day nurse and a night nurse.

2322. Have you an ambulance?—Yes; there is an ambulance for the workhouse and one for the fever hospital.

2323. Have you waterworks?—Yes.

2324. Have you gas?—Yes.

2325. Will it be necessary to make any expenditure upon the institution?—It will require very little expenditure; some of the walls in the unused wings would require considerable expenditure, but there is plenty of accommodation without interfering with them at all.

2326. I suppose what you mean is that inasmuch as they have not been used you will have to spend some money on them to fit them up?—Exactly; but I don't think they will be required.

2327. Did the Derry doctors visit the institution?—They did, but they did not express any opinion to me about it.

2328. Could you see it on their faces?—I won't say that; I leave it to themselves to say.

2329. I believe the Letterkenny Workhouse accommodated the whole of the militia on one occasion?—It did; for four consecutive years it was used as a military barracks; it accommodated 600 or 700 men early in the service.

2330. Do you know the Derry Workhouse?—I do.

2331. You have not inspected that institution?—I have not.

2332. Mr. Murphy.—And even the militia have left you. How many patients have you on an average in the infirmary?—The weekly average was 36·8 for the last three years.

2333. And that is included in the eighty-eight occupants of the house?—Yes.

2334. What distance are you from Stranorlar?—Eleven miles.

2335. And there is another workhouse there with sixty-five occupants. How many miles are you from Millford?—Nine.

2336. Where there is another workhouse. Of course Letterkenny is the natural centre for both these if there was any change being made?—I should say so.

2337. Are these three districts—Newtowncumshann, Castleford, and Killy—their natural place to go to in Letterkenny?—I don't know them.

2338. Are you aware that these three are the three proposed to be put in?—I don't know it at all.

Mr. Clancy.—I don't think I have any more to add in the case of Letterkenny except to mention the names of the divisions.

CHAIRMAN.—We have those.

Mr. Henry.—I appear on behalf of the Londonderry Guardians representing the existing union, and I wish just to state the grounds on which they say that no case has been made for disturbing the existing state of affairs. The case put forward by Mr. Drummond was based on the Local Government Act, and he read the first section of that Act, which provides that each county is to form an administrative unit. But you will find in the same Act express statutory recognition of the fact that the existing state of affairs where a union is contained in two counties is to continue unless the preservation thereof would cause substantial inconvenience. That provision is expressly inserted in sec. 68, and it says, "Boundaries of counties at large and unions, as existing at the date of the Order, shall be preserved except in any case where the preservation thereof would cause substantial inconvenience." The next subsection is "A union shall not, if it is conveniently possible to avoid it, be divided among more than two counties, and shall not, in any case, be divided among more than three." The next one also is important: "Where a union is divided between more than one county, the area of which divided part, so far as it is not contained in an urban sanitary district, shall be of a sufficient size and reasonable value to constitute a suitable rural district." And in clause 5—"That if the Local Government Board amalgamate two unions they may, after communication with the County Council and Rural District Councils, either amalgamate the rural districts in the same county which are comprised in the amalgamated unions or direct that those districts shall continue as separate rural districts." The case for the County Council, which was based on these grounds, has altogether fallen to the ground. The first was the case of the clerical staff. The case of the clerical staff, as the Secretary of the County Council admitted, is an element that does not enter into it at all, because, he says, he sees no reason for any reduction, even if the amalgamation was carried out. As to the question of convenience. You take the entire cost of the union, representing its costs in both counties, and divide it according to valuation, and the Rural District Councils check the figure, and both councils have adequate control. And the last point was that there was more expense in connection with the county surveyors, but the section I have read enabling the preservation of rural districts, even if amalgamation took place, would be applicable here, and the county surveyors who now straddle in Derry and Strabane would be inconvenienced by having to go to Innishowen and Letterkenny, and possibly Stranorlar, so that really the question comes back to the ground that the rich portion of the district should support the poor portion. What I submit to you that this is a sentimental claim; it is because portion of Donagall is attached to portion of Londonderry in one case and in the other to portion of Tyrone. Let us take the Londonderry Union that is composed at present of three unions—the rural portion of County Londonderry, the rural portion of County Donagall, and the county borough of Londonderry—which is, for the purpose of this, a separate county.

Aug. 14, 1903.

although forming one union with the three. Suppose for one moment that Londonderry instead of being, as it is, the capital of Londonderry, were a Dergal town, would anyone have the hardihood to come before this Commission, with Londonderry a Dergal town, and ask them to amalgamate with Inishowen and the town of Carradough, miles away, these divisions of Burt, Stranorlar, and Fahan, and the other divisions proposed to be thrown into Inishowen? The answer would be "It is an absurdity; here you have a workhouse in your own county adjacent to these divisions." For the purpose of Poor Law relief what difference does it make that by accident the City of Londonderry, which is geographically on the Dergal side of the Foyle, happens to be in the County Londonderry? I submit it makes none whatever, and you must deal with this for the purpose of Poor Law relief as if there were no distinctions in counties, and the real basis is what is most convenient for the public, the poor, the Guardians, and the entire district, having regard to its geographical position. The same argument applies even in a stronger degree in Stranorlar. These divisions referred to were made after the passing of the Poor Relief Act, and Mr. Healy has referred to the fact that they were probably made by gentlemen who knew nothing about the country. The way they came to be made was on a report of a Mr. Nicholls, which was laid before Parliament—a gentleman connected with the formation of the English unions, who came to this country in 1836 under directions from Lord John Russell. And at page 29 of his report he says: "In forming the country into unions it will, I think, be necessary to observe the civil rather than the ecclesiastical boundaries of parishes, but care will be taken in which it may be requisite to disregard all such boundaries, it being obviously more important that the district to be united should be compact, convenient, and accessible, and be naturally connected with its centre, than that the old and often inconvenient boundaries should be observed. This applies not only to parishes and county boundaries, but to parishes and other divisions. The principle which has governed the Commissioners in the formation of the English unions, whenever they have not been driven from it by local considerations, has been to fix upon some market town conveniently situated as a centre and attach to it the whole surrounding district, of which it may be considered as the capital—the point to which the general business of the district, both public and private, for the most part concentrates. The roads of the district always converge on the market town. To form such a district into a union under one common government, for general as well as Poor Law purposes, seems therefore an obvious course of proceeding." Those were the suggestions, as the result of experience in England, put forward by that gentleman, and they were adopted, and the result is that in fifty-nine unions in Ireland the boundaries of the counties don't correspond with the boundaries of the unions. Now what you are asked to do in the case of the city, which has grown and prospered in the midst of this district, whose population has almost doubled within living memory, you are asked to take and draw a line a few miles outside the boundary of that city and send back the tide which has been flowing to Londonderry for years and years away to Carradough, away to Inishowen, and to attach districts, which are absolutely drawn to Derry to a town of 500 or 700 inhabitants, with which they have no direct connection, and to take them away from a town where every farmer residing in the district, every labourer, and everyone connected with it, is in the habit of hiring, resort, possibly assist at their every week, and send them back to Carradough. A very strong case is necessary for such a proposition. The only ground put forward is, they have now union rating, they say; portion of their county is available for rating, and they want to take that in for the benefit of Carradough, not for the benefit of the paupers or ratepayers of the district proposed to be transferred, but for the benefit of the ratepayers of another district. In the case of Inishowen only five paupers, it is alleged, are in the Derry Workhouse from No. 2; therefore we ought to be annexed; but in the case of Stranorlar seventy-one are in the house from Stranorlar No. 2, and only sixty-five in Stranorlar, yet we are to be annexed too. Where we have no paupers we are to be annexed, and where we have more paupers the same principle is to apply of annexation. Now, with regard to the five paupers, it reminds me of the evidence given once before a House of Lords Committee where it was stated that the death-rate in Kilmashnam was only two per 1,000, so that everyone lived for 500 years, but when investigated it appeared that when a man got ill in Kilmashnam he went into Dublin and died there, and Dublin got the benefit of him for the purpose of statistics. That is what has happened here; the inhabitants of the country go into Derry for the purpose of work, and when a farmer or a labourer is about to go under he finds his way into Derry, and there are a greater number of Dergal-born people than there are of Derry-born people. There are in the workhouse of Derry an average of eight coming from No. 2 Derry district. There are something under twenty coming from the rural district on the Derry side, No. 1, and 75 per cent. of the total paupers in the Londonderry Union come from the city of Londonderry. And if this scheme got forward here is carried out the result will be that you will transfer these districts into Inishowen on the one hand and Lettickenry on the other, and the number of paupers in the city will remain constant. They will come in notwithstanding the order for amalgamation. There is no law of settlement in Ireland, and there is no power to make the Inishowen Union contribute in respect of any pauper, although it may be clearly proved he has come from this district, and therefore the city of Londonderry and the portion of the county that will remain in the union will continue to pay large sums of money annually for the support of paupers who come from another union, or just outside the liberties, and there will be no method of adjustment. That is a consideration that ought to weigh with you, because it is idle to say with a city of this size that there is not a steady flow of population from these districts into the city. You cannot go into the streets of an evening without seeing the enormous number of girls who work in the factories, the great majority coming from the County Dergal. And you are asked to draw a line two miles or so outside the city and say Derry has no connection with that; all this tide must go back again to Carradough. This railway idea, in my opinion, is an absurdity; the paupers will not be able to pay their fares; they will walk into the city and then go into the workhouse. The Guardians in the Fahan, Burt, and Burt districts will be practically disfranchised; they won't go to Carradough; it is out of their way; they have no business to bring them there. And, further, the road contractors—even at the present time we have it in evidence that Carradough, even with the existing union, is so inaccessible, and so much does it press on the road contractors and carters that they actually at present have a special day fixed for taking loads in Banama. What will that become when people have to go from Killybeg, Three Trees, Burt, &c., for Poor Law purposes—I submit it is perfectly clear the city of Londonderry is the natural place for this workhouse, and it is in the very centre of the district proposed to be annexed. I don't propose troubling you by making any statement as regards the distances, because it is only necessary to use one's eyes, and no amount of evidence can change the face of the ordnance map. (Map.) In the Inishowen district the amount paid last year for poor relief—outdoor relief—reached £294; with the relieving officer's salary and charges, nearly £1,000 a year. In Carradough itself seventy-eight people were getting outdoor relief, £399 17s. 10d. a year; Morville, sixty-one; twenty-four in Banama, and thirty-three in other portions of the union; and so much so was that the case that Mr. Delahy, who was examined here, on the 14th of May protested strongly against this, and said it was a public scandal. Now, let us take the other portion of the district proposed to be sent to Lettickenry—Newtownstangish, Castleforward, and Killybeg. It is suggested purely that those three are as near Lettickenry as they are to Londonderry, equally convenient. Let me go to the enemy's camp for a minute and see what sort of a claim they are putting forward. The views put forward are merely an attempt to grab these districts for the County Dergal and take them away from the City of Derry.

Mr. Healy.—My friend is speaking of the City of Londonderry; it is the union of Londonderry.

Mr. Healy.—It is part of the union. £29,000 of the valuation of the union I represent is made up of the City of Derry and only £40,000 of the County Derry. The intervention only shows the effect of the argument that is being used. We start with the theory that unions are to be amalgamated, and it is put forward here that there are only to be four in Dergal. What four? Lettickenry has within practically a radius of ten miles of it four to five unions—Stranorlar, Stra-

Aug. 14, 1905.

lena, Milford, Letterkenney, and, fourteen miles away, Donagel. Stranorlar is to capture a certain part of Strabane; Letterkenney is to get part of Strabane and part of Derry; and Bishnawen is to get the rest. But, these certain gentlemen engaged in predatory warfare, they have not quite made up their mind what is to become of the spot. You have four unions all in a row; it is suggested Milford should go. What is to become of Letterkenney and Stranorlar? If Letterkenney goes what are you to do with those three divisions that it is suggested should go to Letterkenney? Are you to go through the absurdity of taking them away from the City of Derry and sending them off to Stranorlar or Milford, across the Swilly. Then if you come again to the Strabane portion you have a large block which they propose to get into Letterkenney and another block which they propose to get into Stranorlar. But who is to tell us that when your report comes in that Letterkenney or Stranorlar will have then any existence on the face of the map as a union? So much was the gentleman examined here on behalf of the Stranorlar Guardians pressed by that that when I called his attention to the case of Clonlough, North and South, what was his answer. He was so pressed by the absurdity of the idea of bringing to Stranorlar paupers from Lifford, where they were looking at Strabane, that he said he did not possibly think they would insist on their claims to that. But you must take it all or none, because there must be enough left to constitute a rural district. You are asked to send a man by rail to Stranorlar; he is to come in across the Lifford Bridge to Strabane railway station and take a train up the Finn Valley to get to Stranorlar. What are the facts in Stranorlar there are sixty-five paupers, and there is accommodation between it and Letterkenney for over 1,000 people, and that accommodation has never been utilized in recent years, and never will, and you have in the two workhouses 140 people to take advantage of that accommodation. The reason is, as it appears in Londonderry, in a modified degree, the tendency is towards Strabane; it is the market town for the entire district; they find their way there, and the end of it is that the Strabane paupers in the urban district are greater in proportion than the paupers from this district. But even from that district there are seventy-two. In the case of Strabane Union there are seventy-two paupers from the Donagel side of Strabane No. 2, and 110 in receipt of outdoor relief. From the Tyrone portion there are 145 in the houses and 255 in receipt of outdoor relief. The valuations are £42,000 and £70,000, respectively. While from the Strabane urban district, with a valuation of £15,877, and a population of 1,500, there are sixty-two in the houses and sixty-four in receipt of outdoor relief. So that the argument I have already addressed to you with regard to Londonderry applies with greater force to Strabane, because there are no infirmaries there. Strabane is well served with roads and railways, and if there is any line in the railway argument I submit it is in absurdity bringing a district like St. Johnston into Letterkenney across the country, where there is no railway communication at all. Taking the whole proposition, the original laying out of these unions was done after careful consideration; they selected as centres the market towns of the district, and the mere accident that a county boundary has been overlooked is no reason why the general convenience of the district should be given the go-by to, merely to have the pleasure of having the whole of the County Donagel conform with the boundary of the union. And I submit no case has been made for disturbing the existing affairs. It was said the rich should pay for the poor, but when we come to Strabane Mr. Conry's case is that the rich of this district will pay 5d. in the £2 less than at present. What will happen? The doctor of the Strabane Workhouse will lose this district, the clerk will lose substantially, as will the other officers of the workhouse; they will have to be compensated. Thus in Stranorlar a claim will immediately be made for additional salary by the officers there for the extra work, and it will lead to increased rates without any corresponding benefit.

Mr. W. L. FRARY examined.

Mr. W. L. Frary.

2336. Mr. Frary.—Are you Clerk of the Londonderry Union?—I am.

2337. How many years have you been clerk?—Fifteen.

2338. And are you also clerk of the Rural District Councils No. 1 and No. 2?—I am.

2339. What is the valuation of the entire Londonderry Union at present?—£184,000.—County Derry portion, £52,540; County Donagel portion, £34,627; County Borough, £29,837.

2340. Have you a return of the number of inmates in your workhouse?—This is a return of the number of days, which represents inmates for the five years ending the 31st of March, 1899; there were 27,037 days for No. 2 district.

2341. That has to be divided by 365?—Yes; but that would represent about an average of five.

2342. That is saying in every day the whole year round?—Yes.

2343. Take the portion of the County Londonderry?—36,706 days; that would represent an average of about ten.

2344. What is the general average in the home?—About 250.

2345. Would the balance represent the city of Londonderry?—It would represent the county borough union paupers.

2346. Mr. Drummond.—What do you mean by union paupers?—People who come in for a day.

2347. Mr. Reels.—Give us the number of paupers for the county borough?—I have not got that.

2348. Surely you can give us the county borough number?—I cannot, sir.

2349. Mr. Frary.—What is the average rate in the Londonderry Union for five years?—In 1888 it was 5d.

2350. Give us the standard rate?—7d.

2351. Give us the other years?—In 1897 7d., in 1898 it was 6d., in 1895 it was 5d., and in 1894 it was 7d.

2352. Can you give the five years ending 1903?—I cannot, because it is the County Council strikes the rate.

2353. Mr. Reels.—Because they are against you, you are jerryandering the figures. It shows how this thing has been got up; it is a monstrous denunciation of duty on his part; he knows what is the object of this inquiry.

Witness.—I have it here. The average union rating as per demand notice in 1900 was 9d., in 1901 it was 8d., in 1902 it was 7½d., and in 1903 it was 7d.

2357. Mr. Frary.—It is more in our favour than the other, because the rates are higher. Do you know of your own knowledge, or have you any means of ascertaining where the particular inmates come from?—I have not at present. The master of the workhouse made up a census a few days ago as to the places where all the inmates were born, and I got the information from him this morning. Twenty-seven inmates were born in No. 2 district; three, with the exception of three or four, are aged and infirm, and nine are in the infirmary; this is their own statement.

2358. How many were born in the Londonderry county portion?—I have not that.

2359. CHAIRMAN.—The master took it for all?—He did.

2360. He has the figures if they are wanted?—He has; I took them from his list this morning.

2361. Mr. Frary.—What accommodation have you in your infirmary?—Dr. Brown will give that better than I can.

2362. Have you made large improvements recently in the workhouse?—We have.

2363. What have you spent within the last few years on the infirmary?—We got a loan of £3,200 from the Board of Works, and we spent about £300 or £400 beyond that.

2364. Use the entire of that been spent?—Yes.

2365. When did you get that £3,200?—In 1898 and 1899.

2366. Mr. Cook.—Can you tell me what is received from Londonderry No. 2 as its contribution to the union?—For the year ending September, 1903, £1,389 9s. 10d.

2367. Have you calculated what saving it would be to the remainder of the union if Londonderry No. 2 were cut off from it?—It would be a loss.

2368. What savings could be effected?—We would not have to pay certain doctor's salaries, certain accounts for medicine, a portion of the relieving officer's salary, and registration fees amounting to about £738.

CHAIRMAN.—These are not Poor Law expenses at all. We have no power in this Commission to deal in any way with medical charities expenditures.

2369. Mr. Cooke.—He is dividing them up to show the loss to Derry. Have you calculated what could be saved to Derry Union if No. 2 were taken away?—Yes; about £732.

2370. What then would be the loss to the remainder of the Derry Union if this was withdrawn?—From £800 to £1,000 annually.

2371. CHAIRMAN.—Now the poundage rate on the remaining portion of the union?—Yes; about 1½ in the £ on the new union, No. 1, and the county borough.

2372. CHAIRMAN.—Can you tell me what Londonderry No. 2 receives in the shape of the Agricultural Grant—that is on the standard rate—am I right in saying it is £305?—£305, at the rate of 7d. in the £.

2373. Was 7d. in the £ the standard rate on which that Agricultural Grant was calculated?—It was.

2374. Am I right in saying that Londonderry Union receives £1,300 as an unchangeable Agricultural Grant?—Yes; those are my figures.

2375. That was calculated on a poor rate of 1s. 4½d. on the valuation of £80,444?—Yes.

2376. Mr. Hovver.—What is the accommodation in the workhouse for inmates exclusive of the fever hospital?—726 in the house, and ninety in the fever hospital.

2377. Has the infirmary been extended lately?—It was extended within the last three or four years.

2378. So that roughly the accommodation in the workhouse is only taxed a little more than one-third of its capacity?—Yes.

2379. During the past few years have extensive improvements been made in the workhouse?—There was a new water supply from the Corporation, and the fever hospital was greatly improved, and the infirmary was enlarged.

2380. Was that done at a very considerable cost?—At the cost of the loan of £3,300—the infirmary portion—and the rest was paid out of the rates; some of it is to be paid in forty years, some in thirty, and some in twenty-five years.

2381. Is the loan borrowed from the Board of Works payable in instalments over a certain number of years?—It is.

2382. Were also other sums spent in improvements—bedsteads and so on?—£400 or 500; there was a drainage and new bedsteads; that money was taken out of the funds of the union.

2383. Mr. Leach.—How much is payable per annum to pay off these instalments for the loan?—£210.

2384. The loans extend over forty years?—One forty, another thirty, and another thirty-five.

2385. Will you tell me what is the average annual expenditure for keeping up the buildings—repairs?—I could not answer that offhand; I have not it before me.

2386. Mr. Drummond.—Mr. Cooke asked you how much poor rate did Derry No. 2 pay into the union and you said for 1900 it was £1,389?—Yes.

2387. What was the rate per £ in that year that you levied on the whole union; was it 8d.?—Yes.

2388. Now in the present year is not the rate 1s.?—It was 1s. last year; it is 1s. this year.

2389. What is it this year?—About 10d.

2390. Take the 1s. of last year—that was 50 per cent.—half over what it was in 1895, so that you would receive on that about £2,300?—But this statement of mine is actual expenditure.

2391. I am merely asking the amount paid in from the Donagel portion to the union?—I am not giving you that; I am giving the actual expenditure of the district.

2392. Did you not give me a rate of 8d. for 1895?—Very well.

2393. And on that rate £1,389 was paid in?—That is not quite the fact; I made up this return for the purpose of showing the actual expenditure; we might have a balance left.

2394. On a rate of 8d. what would be the amount received by the union from the Donagel portion?—I could not answer that now; I have given the expenditure.

2395. Did not Mr. Cooke ask you how much you received from the Derry No. 2?

Mr. Cooke.—I admit that.

2396. Mr. Drummond.—Take last year with 1s., or this year with a little under, and you see the gross amount paid would be about £2,000, and the average is five pence.

CHAIRMAN.—That includes dispensary expenditure.

2397. Mr. Drummond.—Out of the Donagel division there are five parishes in the workhouse. That went to pay dispensary expenses, of course; it went to pay everything; but considering that there are five parishes out of that district do you think that a fair thing to be paid by the County Donagel to go into the Londonderry Union?—Certainly, under the present law. If Donagel had no parishes at all they would still have to pay the proportion of the maintenance of the inmates of the houses on account of its being union rating.

2398. Last year, when it was 1s., what was the demand on Donagel?—I have not that before me.

2399. Did you not know you would be asked that?—I did not.

2400. Out of this £2,000, how much would be spent on dispensary conveniences for the Donagel portion; is there a dispensary in that district?—There are three.

2401. How much do you spend on those three?—The doctor's salaries, £270; rents, &c., £181; medicine, £108; there are 2059, and then there is vaccination, and, of course, there are the relieving officer's salary and registration fees, £847; I have taken the cost of the papers at £156.

2402. Of the papers; the five?—I was calculating fifteen; if it is taken only at five it will be more against you.

2403. Give me all the expenditure on the Donagel district?—£2847.

2404. Last year when you received over £2,000 you expended on all these things, £2850, and the balance represents five parishes. Do you think it is a right thing, or a fair thing, that in the poor county of Donagel about £200 should be paid into Derry for the support of five parishes?—You are not speaking about the establishment charges; that is a misleading question.

2405. I am speaking of what Donagel pays, and what Donagel gets?—But then there is the establishment.

2406. I know there is for the city of Derry and the County Derry, but Donagel sends in five parishes; in respect of these you get about £1,100; do you think that a fair or proper thing?—Yes; according to the law it is fair.

2407. Shylock's bond was fair because the law gave it to him?—I am giving my evidence.

2408. Don't you know that Donagel is a county where the Congested Districts Board and other public institutions are trying to bring in money as charity?—Yes.

2409. Do you think it is fair that the rich part should be cut off to pay money to you while public charity is required for the support of the remainder?—Ask that again.

2410. Would you think it a fair thing if a rich part of the city of Derry was cut off and thrown in with Donagel and Tyrone, and leave the poor parts of Derry to support all the parishes; would you consider that fair?—I would not.

Mr. Drummond.—But when we come to Donagel you think the same principle is fair, according to the law. I won't trouble you further.

2411. Mr. Brady.—Of course there is nothing, as I understand, in any way political in the opposition of the Derry Guardians or the Derry Union to this change?—I cannot answer that.

Mr. Hovver.—Or to the request for the change.

2412. Mr. Brady.—You don't suspect that there is anything?—Oh, no.

2413. Then we may take it that this opposition is entirely non-political?—I don't know.

2414. Do you suggest that there is any motive except benevolence or care for the paupers?—I suppose the Guardians want to look after their own interest and the interest of the ratepayers, and of the paupers too.

2415. I want you to clear away from my mind any prejudice if you can; will you tell me whether you think there is any political motive at the bottom of this opposition?—I cannot tell you.

2416. Do you suspect that there is any?—I cannot tell you.

2417. Will you put it for me in this way, that there is no motive whatever except the interests of the poor?—No, I will not; the Guardians are simply defending themselves.

Aug. 14, 1902.

Mr. W. L. Perry.

2418. Is not a question of defence; the Guardians of Derry need no defence?—They are on their defence.

2419. Not at all; oh, no, I assure you; brush that away from your mind. Do you suggest that there is any action on the part of the Guardians of Derry in objecting to this change except the interests of the poor?—I do not.

2420. Not do you believe there is?—I decline to answer that question.

2421. You know, Mr. Perry, you are embarrassing me very much.—I hope so, say way.

2422. You are not in the least embarrassed?—Not a bit.

2423. Do you consider that the existing system is the best possible system that could be devised?—Of what?

2424. Of what we are talking about—unions and Poor Law accommodation—do you think the existing system is the best possible that could be devised?—I would not give an opinion as to that at all; I dare say there is room for improvement.

2425. I am speaking of the arrangements of the Derry and Donagh Unions; do you think they are the best possible that could be devised?—I don't know anything about that; I did not consider the question.

2426. Your Guardians have instructed counsel to come here to oppose any change; I am therefore asking you as an experienced administrator, do you think the existing system the best possible that could be devised?—I don't think it could be very much improved.

2427. Not at all; not improved at all?—I don't think so.

2428. Then these gentlemen sitting on a Visiting Commission can make no change to the advantage of anybody?—As far as our union is concerned.

2429. Or as far as the County Donagh is concerned?—I won't go further than our district.

2430. I suppose you are aware that all the rest of Ireland has very generously made sacrifices in the interests of Donagh?—I don't know that.

2431. They have got huge sums of public money, which might have been distributed elsewhere, for their congested districts and railways?—Yes; there were some railways made.

2432. And out of the Church Fund, and otherwise; other portions of Ireland have given up huge sums to Donagh on account of its poverty?—I don't know that; I don't deny it.

2433. Do you suggest that there is not an annual grant out of the Church Fund, out of which Donagh, on account of its poverty, gets huge sums from the rest of Ireland?—I don't know anything about it.

2434. Well, at all events, if the richer portions of this Island contribute for the upkeep and development of Donagh, don't you think the richer portions of Donagh might fairly be asked to contribute to the poorer portions, eh?—Poorer portions.

2435. If the rest of Ireland, having regard to the misery and poverty of Donagh, contributes huge sums for its railways and congested districts, would it not be fair that the richer portions of Donagh itself should contribute?—It would.

2436. But would it not be repugnant to any idea of justice that the richer portions of Donagh should contribute, not to its poorer portions, but to the rich city of Derry and rich county of Derry?—I don't understand you.

2437. Is it my dishonesty, or your stupidity? Do you think it fair, when all the rest of Ireland is contributing to reduce the misery and improve the condition of the poorer districts of Donagh, that the richer portions of Donagh should contribute nothing, but should, on the contrary, contribute to help the rich county and city of Derry?—I say they should help their poorer neighbours.

2438. And at all events it is repugnant to your mind that this rich City of Derry with its manufactures should be getting a contribution from Donagh; is it repugnant to your mind?—No.

2439. Do you think it is repugnant to justice?—I don't think it is.

2440. You know of course that nearly the whole of Donagh is scheduled as a congested district?—I don't know that it is.

2441. Large portions of it—nearly the whole of Eniskillen—you know that?—No, I do not.

2442. Is not the whole of Eniskillen, except a small district, scheduled?—I cannot tell you.

2443. Is that your local knowledge?—I know nothing of that part of Donagh.

2444. Take it from me—a poor Derry man, a man from the South of Ireland—that nearly the whole of Eniskillen is scheduled as a congested district; will you take it from me?—Yes.

2445. And you will take it from me that it gets outside contributions, and has got outside contributions from the rest of Ireland to the extent of thousands of pounds?—

Mr. Henry.—Including Derry.

2446. Mr. Henry.—Would you think it fair that portion of its own resources should make some contributions?—Certainly not.

2447. Then I will pass from that painful subject. We have got from you that Donagh No. 2 contributes £2,000 a year to Derry?—It would not contribute that much in one year; £1,389; it would not run above £1,500 in any year.

2448. This is no question of speculation at all; this is a matter that you have down in your books in black and white, and can ascertain to a farthing; what is your total demand note on the area?—I could not tell you.

2449. Do you, an official of the union, come here to give evidence and you cannot answer a casual question?—If Mr. Ross goes to Mr. Adams he will get the demand note in one minute.

2450. You are the person put forward and reached for by your counsel as the person who could give the information. I am told that you have extracted from this portion of Donagh, within the last twelve months, £2,000; can you contradict that?—I cannot until I see the demand note.

2451. Did you not take the trouble in any way to inquire?—No; I did not think these questions would be asked.

2452. You thought we were fools?—We can easily get it.

2453. It is so easily got that you have not got it?—

Mr. Drummond.—There is no doubt of the figure at all.

2454. Mr. Henry.—You have told us that the master of the union went round diligently yesterday and made a census of the paupers of the union; will you tell me, as a union official, whether it is not the duty of somebody in the workhouse, whenever a pauper comes into the house, to take his place of nativity?—He did not go round yesterday; it was a week ago.

2455. That is a splendid answer. I ask you if the duty of some official in the union is to take the place of birth of every pauper?—It is not.

2456. Is there any form to be filled on the admission of a pauper showing where he was born?—Not that I am aware of, and I don't believe there is—where they come from, not where they were born.

2457. There is a form telling where they come from; and is that duly filled up?—It is, by the master.

2458. Did you take the trouble, when the master went through this laborious task to make a census of, say, 200 paupers—did you take the trouble of ascertaining by looking at the official books where they came from?—No.

2459. Do you think that would have been an interesting inquiry?—It might have been.

2460. But you did not think it would have been relevant. Do you think it would have helped you?—I don't know whether it would have helped me or not.

2461. But whether it would or not, you did not do it. You devised the splendid system of the census last week?—Oh, I did not.

2462. Who suggested it?—It was officially asked.

CHAIRMAN.—The Commissioners.

Mr. Harcourt.—That is for jerry-mandering purposes, too.

2463. Mr. Henry.—The answer is this: that there were twenty-seven born in No. 2. How many were born in the whole of Donagh?—I cannot tell you.

2464. These were born in these nine divisions, according to your own statement. You heard your counsel, Mr. Henry, suggest that a great many of these paupers who were in the union—he instanced the case of Kilmacnam—were there that strongly in your mind—where there were only two per thousand, and the reason is that they all go into the city to die; and commonly he suggested that the reason there are only five returnable from this particular division is that if their place of nativity was proved it would be found they nearly all came from Donegal. Was that the point of the story?—I heard him saying that there were a great many people living in Derry who came from Donegal. I don't think the majority of the paupers.

2494. That was the point. Then that story had no point. Have you anything to support the statement you instructed your counsel to make?—What statement was that?

2495. The suggestion founded on this little Kilmahon narrative: that a great many of the Derry paupers came from Donegal?—I did not instruct him on that. There are officials instructing him besides me.

2496. That is why he is so badly instructed—too many cooks. Now give me the facts of the nativity of the paupers, and where they came from?—These twenty-seven were born in that district.

2497. I want the rest of them. How many of the rest of the paupers in Derry Union came from Donegal?—I could not tell you. I see the name of one from Monville.

2498. My question is from the whole of the County Donegal?—I could not tell you; you might get it from the master's list. There would not be very many.

2499. Mr. Henry says that they are nearly all from Donegal. Is that point abandoned?

Mr. Henry.—It is not.

2500. Mr. Henry.—I want you to get for me at some stage of this inquiry the number of paupers in Derry Union whom you have registered in your books as having come from Donegal, and as having come from Inishowen. You can get that without any trouble?—I could not.

2501. Don't they all, on entering the house, have to say where they come from?—Yes.

2502. Will you find out for me how many come from Inishowen?—None at all stated that they came from Inishowen; it is outside the union.

2503. Then you have not got any; like the states in Norway. So much for the 2 per cent. from Kilmahon; that little story vanishes. We may take it, then, that Inishowen provides for its own poor?—You may.

2504. Now will you please give me how many of these paupers come from Derry city?—I suppose 75 or 80 per cent.

2505. And Derry city valuation I think you gave us as being £—£80,000.

2506. Derry city has a valuation that would support two workhouses itself, taking 240,000 as the average valuation in Ireland. Derry city has a valuation large enough to support two unions?—I don't know that it has.

2507. If the average valuation in Ireland for a workhouse is £40,000, Derry has valuation enough for two workhouses?—Not the same as the one we have.

2508. You also gave us the valuation of the county portion of Derry as £22,549, and the third time the valuation of Derry No. 2, which you have given. Did you give me the standard rate for the City of Derry, or is there such a thing?—I don't think so, for the county borough.

2509. Mr. Henry.—Don't do yourself such an injustice as not to know there must be a standard rate everywhere.

Mr. Henry.—Overy borough, poor rate 7d., standard rate and county rate, 1s. 6d.

Mr. Henry.—Would you think it would be a good solution of this difficulty, seeing that you have accommodation for 724, and your average is only 280, you could accommodate 500 more paupers?—We could.

2510. Would you think it a good solution of this difficulty to add any of these other unions outside Derry? Do you think you would receive the Guardians for these districts with a good will?—I never considered that.

2511. Do you think you would water your wine? There are four unions at least in Donegal that you could absorb that have an average of under 100 paupers. Do you think you would gladly see the Guardians from these districts coming in to Derry?—We would not have room for them.

2512. That would be your only objection?—That would be one of them.

2513. What would be the other?—They would hardly get in Derry and back the same day.

2514. That is the only objection you would have?—There might be a lot of other objections.

2485. Just think of them. There would be no political objection?—I know nothing about politics.

2486. Would there be any political objection?—I could not tell you.

2487. But you would entertain none yourself?—Not as an official.

2488. But as a man?—I have feelings, too, as a man.

2489. As a man you would have no objection to those outside Guardians coming into Derry?—Not the slightest.

2490. I am sure all the Guardians are like you. As my learned friend made so much of Derry city I want you to tell me how many Guardians you have for Derry?—Sixty or sixty-three.

2491. Out of those sixty Guardians, how many does Derry city elect?—There are five wards, and two for each ward—ten.

2492. Ten out of sixty; do you think that is fair, having regard to its valuations?—There are fifteen in the city, three for each ward—fifteen out of sixty-three.

2493. So that the place with the biggest valuation and the greatest number of paupers has less than one-fourth of the representation?—That is the way it was fixed by a higher authority than me.

2494. If you had the fixing of it would you like to have it changed?—No, we have quite plenty of Guardians; too many sometimes.

2495. Do you think Derry has plenty?—I do.

2496. My friend suggested that there would have to be compensation to the officials of the Derry Union if these divisions were taken away from them. Do you agree to that?—Certainly.

2497. And if your work was reduced your pay should be increased?—Oh, no, it does not follow.

2498. My friend suggested that if Derry No. 2 were taken away from the union that your salary should in some way be compensated for?—Because I would be losing; my situation would be abolished as clerk of the District Council.

2499. Take the union. Would you lose anything as clerk of the union?—I don't think it would reduce my salary; I have not very much as it is.

2500. What you would lose would be clerk of the District Council?—And the preparation of the Parliamentary voters' lists.

2501. I don't want to be intrusive, but would you give me your salary as clerk of the District Council No. 2?—£24 a year.

2502. And that you received since the passing of the Local Government Act as an addition to your salary?—You cannot exactly call it an addition to my salary, because I lost a great deal by the passing of the Act.

2503. Supposing you were continued in that office as clerk to that District Council in case it was annexed to Carradagh, you would have no grievance whatever?—I don't know how that would work out.

2504. Can you suggest any grievance you would have if your salary continued?—I can, surely; where would the District Council meet?

2505. Your grievance would be the additional train fare?—There would be the inconvenience of leaving the office and going away to Carradagh. I would lose in the preparation of the Parliamentary voters' lists.

2506. You know that that is done on a scale. Give me the proportion for votes and jurors from that district?—Voters 221, and jurors £17 7s.

2507. Both these sums come to you through the County Council of Donegal?—Yes.

2508. And it is as their official you receive these sums?—It is.

2509. That money would be still payable to you by the County Donegal?—I suppose it would.

2510. Mr. Henry.—Would you also lose the executive sanitary officership?—What I give includes that.

2511. Would you lose anything in connection with registration?—About 25 a year. And then, under the Labourers Acts I consider I would lose: there is a second scheme going on in the district. I was granted £50 some time ago.

Mr. Henry.—The County Donegal means to treat you very liberally.

2512. Mr. Henry.—You have been asked, with reference to the number of people coming from these electoral divisions, and you told us they were twenty-seven?—Who were actually born in the district.

2513. Is it the custom to ascertain, when a person comes in, where he was born?—It is not.

Aug. 14, 1905

Mr. W. L. Perry.

Aug. 14, 1903. 2514. Suppose I come from Donegal and reside a year or a year and a half in Derry city, and return myself as Derry city, am I registered as such?—Yes; and you may come from Donegal, or the County Donegal.

2515. It has been suggested the city of Derry is extremely rich. There are 240 paupers out of the city alone—four times as many as out of Stranaboe, and three times as many as out of Letterkenny. As regards No. 2 district itself, how many Rural Councils are there returned from No. 2?—Twenty-one.

2516. Did they pass a resolution on the subject of going to Loughswilly?—They did; they passed a resolution strongly objecting to it, according to the minutes.

MR. WILLIAM J. HANNA, J.P., CHAIRMAN.

Mr. William J. Hanna. 2517. Mr. Henry—Are you a Guardian of the Poor for Londonderry Union?—I am, for twenty-five years.

2518. Are you also a member of the Rural District Council No. 2?—I am a re-elected member for Londonderry No. 2 District Council.

2519. Are you also a member of the Donegal County Council?—I represent the county electoral division.

2520. Have you full opportunity of ascertaining the feeling of the people of this district?—I have.

2521. What is the feeling as to the proposed amendment?—They are intensely opposed to it.

2522. You personally are opposed to it?—I am.

2523. On what grounds?—I am opposed to it because it is clearly against the interests of the sick and infirm, and if unions have any meaning at all it means that they were for the relief of those that are sick and infirm, and therefore I think that distance is the very essence of the work convenience.

2524. It has been suggested here that there is no great improvement in going to Carradonagh from these particular districts, and to Letterkenny from these other districts; but is the entire tendency of the people from these districts towards Londonderry?—It is.

2525. Would it be an advantage to bring sick and infirm people to Carradonagh or Letterkenny as it is to Derry?—I think, when you go beyond a radius that can be reached by the ambulance that you are going beyond a distance that is at all convenient, and railways are of no use. Since I became a Guardian the whole population of the workhouse has changed. Twenty-five years ago, in Derry workhouse infirmaries there were about a dozen or fifteen; now, taking the winter with the summer, there is a daily average of about 100 in hospital, and a great many that are not in the infirmaries are old, weak, and infirm people. Now, a railway is no use for those who are sick; for if it is a contagious disease, or fever of any sort, they won't take them on the railway.

2526. Mr. Henry—There are only five there altogether—not a great many?—If it is a person that has not with an accident you have to send a stretcher and four bearers, and then it takes a competent.

Mr. Henry—£2,000 a year is a high price for a stretcher.

2527. Mr. Henry—Would the representatives of these various districts that are proposed to be taken to Loughswilly attend at Carradonagh?—They could not without losing the whole day; and when they come to attend their duties at the workhouse or the Rural Council they generally come in to attend the market—do their marketing first and their private affairs, and then attend to their public duties.

2528. What, in your opinion, would be the effect on the rates in No. 2 district?—It must necessarily increase the rates.

2529. In addition, have the taxpayers of this district an interest in the buildings of the Londonderry Union?—Certainly. The increase in the valuation in the last few years has been very rapid in Derry; but up to within a few years the valuation of Derry No. 2 was very nearly one-fifth of the valuation of the union.

2530. And if there was any adjustment made, even between the districts, do you think your taxpayers would receive the full benefit of it?—I don't think they will, if carried to Loughswilly.

2531. It would go to union charges?—Yes.

2532. As regards the divisions suggested for Letterkenny, is Londonderry much more convenient for them than Letterkenny?—Londonderry, from the centre of these three, would be about six miles.

2533. And from Letterkenny?—About thirteen, by the available roads.

2534. Is there any outdoor relief in this district?—There is some all over the district.

2535. Does it at all approach the amount of outdoor relief given in Carradonagh?—Not at all.

2536. Mr. Cooke—Do you know anything about the influx of people from No. 2 to Londonderry seeking employment?—I know that from the large number of short factories that have been established in Derry year after year that a great many of the short working class out from the country, and where there is a family—a lot of daughters—they get employment in the short factories; and a great number of families within my own jurisdiction came in to Derry.

Mr. Henry—I respectfully object; I pressed the duty of the union for the exact facts; personalities are no use.

Witness—These families remain as families until their children marry, then the old man and the old women drift into the workhouse.

2537. Mr. Cooke—Do the paupers first come into Londonderry?

Mr. Henry—I object; books are available, and we should leave the figures.

Mr. Henry—We will prove that there is no record kept of where the people were born.

Mr. Henry—There is a record of where they came from.

Mr. Henry—Yes, immediately before.

Witness—When there was divisional rating we always ascertained where they were born and how long they had remained in the district before relief; but since the passing of the Local Government Act there is no such rating.

2538. Mr. Cooke—I am asking you about migratory labour into the City of Derry?—That has been the tendency.

2539. And when the girls get employment in these factories their fathers and mothers come into the town after them.

Mr. Henry—Let us have the books.

Witness—As long as the girls are unmarried they generally support their fathers and mothers, but when they have families of their own the old people go to the workhouse very often.

2540. Mr. Drummond—Is there not a great amount of migratory labour towards Glasgow for the very same class of employment as they go to Derry for?—I don't know; I know within the last fortnight five or six persons that were discharged from the railway came right into Derry.

2541. Would you think it right that Donegal should send a contribution to Glasgow because a number of Donegal people go over to the factories there?—I don't know.

2542. You make a point about the distances the poor may have to be brought, especially for the infirm. How many miles does this Derry Union run back towards Dungiven?—Probably ten or fifteen miles to the extreme point.

2543. It is a good deal farther than Letterkenny is from Derry?—Oh, dear, no. If you take the western edge of Burt from that to Carradonagh is twenty-five miles.

2544. Does Derry not go back until it meets Maghera?—Oh, no.

Mr. Henry—It is thirteen miles to Park.

2545. Mr. Drummond—It goes away down into the heart of Derry. You have no objection in bringing a person a considerable distance through the County Derry; why do you raise an objection to their being brought to Donegal a corresponding distance?—I think one inconvenience is not rectified by making two inconveniences.

2546. Then it is no harm for them to be brought into Derry; but it would be a harm to bring them a corresponding distance in Donegal?—I don't know what deductions you draw.

2547. Are you aware that there is only one county infirmary for the whole County Donegal?—I suppose that is so.

2548. Is it not a very long distance from Buncrana, and Glenties, and Malin Head to Lifford?—It is a long distance from Dungiven to Magheraish.

2549. Has much trouble or inconvenience been caused because there is only one infirmary there, and that is not must be brought long distances?—Quite so; but I don't

Aug. 16, 1904.
Mr. William
J. Hanna.

see how that bears on the position of unions. I say all these union boundaries were made for convenience to workhouse.

2550. You have said this is objectionable because it would be injurious to the sick poor; what injury have you ever heard complained of, as a County Councillor, because the poor have to be brought to Lifford a long distance—Lifford is not far from here.

2551. Here you, as County Councillor, were complained because patients had to be brought a long distance to Lifford—No. Before they can come to the workhouse hospital or infirmary they must be destitute people. These people have no other means available except what is supplied from the workhouse; they have the ambulances van and the necessary attendants, and they are brought in a proper conveyance and from a handy distance. If you get large distances and avoid yourself of railways, that is not practicable.

2552. Is there an ambulance from Melin Head to Lifford—I am talking of the pauper hospitals.

2553. Did you hear that they have an ambulance at Carranagh, or two?—Yes; but I say that it is not as convenient to send an ambulance thirty miles as to send one seven.

2554. Then, although they have two ambulances your whole objection is based on the convenience of the pauper?—It is. There is nothing sacred in a county boundary; I can stand with one foot in the County Derry and the other in the County Donegal, within half a mile of my own house.

2555. Mr. Hanna—I think you are entirely opposed to outdoor relief?—No, sir.

2556. You are in favour of outdoor relief?—I wrote a resolution, and moved a resolution, that governs the outdoor relief in the Londonderry Workhouse—

2557. Govern is a very good word; restricts, I say?—I think outdoor relief, without it is governed, is a very bad thing.

2558. Can you tell me how many Guardians there are for Londonderry No. 2?—Just the number of Rural District Councillors, with the number co-opted in addition—twenty-one.

2559. Then out of sixty-three Guardians of the Derry Union, No. 2 returns one-third?—Through their dual function of being Rural District Councillors and Guardians.

2560. Could you give me the annual budget of Derry Union—what are your total rates?—Union rates. Well, I am speaking from memory. I know the requisition was £900 and something; it was probably £1,000—I am speaking from memory—I know that it was under-estimated. And the next was high; I think the highest was £1,700 in the requisition.

2561. Do you suggest that the Londonderry Union is run for £1,700 a year?—I am talking of No. 2.

2562. Could you give me the total budget for the entire union?—I cannot.

CHAIRMAN.—It was given in evidence by the clerk before you came, a couple of days ago. For 1902—In maintenance, £2,300; outdoor relief, £173; establishment charges, £2,044; taxable, £55; superintendence, £55; about £5,000 is the total.

2563. Mr. Hanna.—If the total budget for Derry Union be £5,000 you contribute about £2,000 from No. 2?—I think the average requisition for union purposes on the Donegal County Council is about £1,500 a year.

2564. The annual cost is £5,000, and you contribute at least one-third?—Between one-third and one-fourth.

2565. So that the City of Derry and the rural portion of Derry has a contribution of about one-third from Donegal. And we know that County Derry is well-to-do and prosperous, and we know that the City of Derry is well-to-do and prosperous. Do you think that the rural portion of Donegal should make any contribution to its poorer neighbours?—If you mean that the richer districts of the County Donegal should contribute to the ratepayers and to the people that live in other districts, I don't think so.

2566. Did it ever flash across your mind at all as to how much Donegal as a whole, the poorer portions of Donegal, have got from elsewhere. I think this will make the ratepayers elsewhere button up their pockets—£50,000 for railways under the Act of 1886; £150,000 for Glenties; a free grant, £80,000, for the Killybegs line; total, £680,000 for railways. You got £25,000 for the Gwibarra bridge, and £100,000 for pier; so Donegal has got from the Imperial taxpayer, including the rest of Ireland, about £800,000 within the last ten years. If the rest of the United Kingdom has given Donegal £800,000 within the last ten years, how much right comfortable Donegal give to uncomfortable

Donegal?—I don't think well arranged and well-administered taxes in one district should go to support and protect maladministration in another district. Besides, Londonderry No. 2 got none of the money you speak of. It was Inishowen, Stranorlar, and Letterkenny got it.

2567. Do you think that the blue-blooded gentry of Donegal, and the Demosthenes of Donegal, ought not to come to the assistance of the poor hapless Papasos and people of Donegal?—That is a euphemistic way of putting it.

2568. Do you think that the wealth and intelligence of Donegal, and the independence of Donegal, and the prosperity of Donegal, and the education of Donegal, ought not to come to the help of the neglected people of Donegal?—I don't think the industrious farmers of Londonderry No. 2 district should contribute, and be taken in to help the extravagant rates that are struck in Inishowen, because they are paying in outdoor relief 2 per cent. on their whole valuation, and one of their leading Guardians stated at their board that public-houses got a great part of it.

2569. Do you think they should come with their intelligence to their power and more ignorant neighbours, who have no sense except to strike extravagant rates?—I don't quite understand whether you mean the contribution should be to the ratepayers or to the paupers.

2570. This No. 2 district in Inishowen barony is, I understand, prosperous, educated, intelligent, and law-abiding, and if there are any other objects you wish I will confer it on them?—None or less.

2571. Do you think the people in this barony should come to the assistance of the ignorant, priest-ridden, uneducated, maladministered people of Inishowen?—I never took such graphic terms into consideration at all.

2572. I will give you a fresh start. Inishowen is a barony?—It is; but please keep down to my level.

2573. I am a very small man in every way, and you are in the witness box; you are a valiant man and I am yelped, and I am paid to cross-examine. You are there, and you have volunteered. This is a barony, sir; it consists of rich and poor people, does it not—of mountains and of plain, of ignorant and of instructed?—That is common to all people. And then there is good land and bad land everywhere.

2574. Do you think the people of one barony should come to the assistance of their poorer neighbours, or would you take a purely arbitrary division, which has neither geography nor finance, or anything else to support it, and lump all the rich people together?—All our baronies are artificial; county boundaries are just as artificial as union boundaries.

2575. You think so, especially in Donegal?—In any part.

2576. I thought there were places like the Brilly and the Eagle rivers, and the Atlantic Ocean also contribute its aid in giving a boundary. Your plan is this: take all the rich people and all the educated people and lump them together, and let them escape the rates for their poorer neighbours?—Not at all; this is a district that lies within the proper waters from a workhouse that they have contributed to raise, and these destitute people have a better right to get accommodation in the Derry Workhouse, because their ratepayers have paid for it.

2577. Why did the rest of Ireland contribute a million to the people of Donegal and you won't give a penny?—That is an abstract question.

2578. Were you ever in Carranagh in your life?—Yes.

2579. That was on Thursday last?—Yes; under the leadership of Mr. O'Doherty.

2580. You contribute £2,000 a year, or £1,600 from Derry No. 2. Do you think you get value for your money?—I think our ratepayers get value for their money.

2581. Therefore, you don't think the rates in any way could be reduced for them. What is the average cost of a pauper in the unions in Ireland?

CHAIRMAN.—Say nine shillings.

2582. Mr. Hanna.—Take the average cost of a pauper to be £33 a year, and you have only five, you being as rich—that is £115 a year?—I don't consider that that is the only contribution that Londonderry No. 2 should give towards the paupers that are relieved in the Derry workhouse.

2583. If the clerk of the union says that your average contribution from No. 2 is five pence, that would mean that you should pay £115 a year?—He is responsible for that statement and for that fact; but I think it is only part of the fact: I think it is right enough as far as it goes.

Aug 14, 1906.

Mr. Wm. J.
Henson.

2584. I am leading you into a trap, I may tell you?—I suppose you are.

2585. There is a pitfall in front of you now—I am in a tangle when you speak to me.

2586. There is medical assistance all round. Start with the assumption that Derry No. 2 only contributes five paupers to the Derry Union—I don't concede that.

2587. Don't concede it, but assume it—You may renounce in the matter, but I won't follow you.

2588. I am a paid renouncer. If £115 would support the paupers of Derry No. 2 for twelve months, do you think you ought to pay more?—I don't agree with that calculation at all.

2589. I suppose you know what such a thing as arguing from a hypothesis is?—I am not going into the question of equation with you.

2590. If all your paupers could be maintained for £115, would you be willing to pay more?—Yes; but that is not the fact.

2591. If it were the fact would you be willing to pay more?—I don't understand you.

2592. If you had a herd of cows and you could feed them for £115, would you be willing to pay any more?—I don't understand the object of that.

2593. You are the only man in court who does not understand me. If you had five paupers that you could maintain for £115, would you be willing to pay any more?—I am afraid both you and I are in the minority.

Mr. Healy.—Then the Deanehouse of Donegal may go down!

2594. Mr. O'Keefe.—I believe you are the chief opponent of this proposed scheme?—I represent in the Donegal County Council this electoral county division.

2595. You are the leader of the opposition in the Donegal County Council to this scheme?—Naturally; because the people I represent are opposed to it.

2596. Your opposition, I take it from what you have said already, is entirely in the interests of the sick, the poor, and the infirm?—Yes; I believe that if these union boundaries are altered it will be greatly against the interests of the sick poor, mopey-poor, and general convenience, also Guardians could not attend these distant workhouses.

2597. Your opposition is entirely on the ground of benevolence?—On the ground of increasing the inconvenience instead of abating it.

2598. That is benevolence to the poor: no other ground?—There is my answer.

2599. Have you any other ground of opposition?—I believe it would increase the taxation of Londonderry No. 2.

2600. Any other ground?—If you suggest it I will answer you.

2601. I want you to say whether you have any other ground of opposition?—I really cannot tell you.

2602. Have you not come here to give evidence in opposition?—I have given all the evidence I can; I may have some other objections which I cannot just recall at the moment.

2603. So far as you can recall at this moment you have no reasons except those of benevolence and probable increase of taxation?—No.

2604. Do you know a place called Ballymillan?—I know it is somewhere out in the County Derry. I never was there.

2605. Do you recollect any incident connected with the relief of the poor in Ballymillan in 1900, in what you yourself were concerned?

Mr. Henry.—Is it in No. 2 at all?

2606. Mr. O'Keefe.—Is it not in the Derry Union?—It is; it is in Derry No. 1.

2607. Do you recollect, in 1900, your proposing a resolution against outdoor relief being given in Christmas week to two women who were eighteen miles away from the workhouse?—I think I did oppose. They were neither sick nor infirm.

2608. Mr. Henry.—You were asked with reference to this portion of Londonderry—Park—in three any workhouse nearer?—No.

2609. So, although it is an inconvenience you have to put up with it. Is that quite different in this case, when you are dealing with No. 2?—Derry Workhouse is nearer.

2610. You have been put hypothetical cases about £115. If you are put into Carnadough Union will the rates be higher in this district than they are at present?—Certainly.

2611. Therefore, with your five paupers, instead of paying a certain sum you are to be transferred to Inishowen, and pay still more for the same paupers?

Mr. Healy.—So he ought.

2612. Mr. Henry.—Do you, as between paying more in Carnadough as compared with Derry, prefer the greater convenience of Derry and the less money?—Certainly.

2613. You also rely on the fact that the representatives could not attend the meetings?—They could not; they are virtually disfranchised.

2614. Mr. O'Keefe.—You heard Mr. Healy talk of the thousands of pounds poured into Derry. Was not one farthing given to No. 2?—Certainly not.

2615. Was it poured into Inishowen, Milford, Gweedagh, and all these impoverished districts?—Yes.

2616. So far as Derry No. 2 is concerned, it might have been part and parcel of the County Derry for all it got out of it?—Yes.

Dr. Sproule.

Dr. SPROULE examined.

2617. Mr. Henry.—Are you the Dispensary Doctor of Kilderry District?—I am.

2618. And do you reside in Calmeau, inside the Liberties?—Yes.

2619. How many years have you been dispensary doctor?—Ninety.

2620. Taking your own district, Kilderry, how is it situated with regard to Derry and Carnadough?—Much more convenient to Derry.

2621. What is the nearest part of your district to Derry?—About three miles.

2622. And what distance would the same portion be from Carnadough?—Over twenty.

2623. In your district is there any possible way that could be made of the roadway to get to Carnadough?—I don't think it is practical in the case of sickness.

2624. And is there a direct road through your district into Londonderry?—There is.

2625. Do you remember, some time ago, having a case of typhus fever outside your district towards Movilla?—I do; in the Movilla district.

2626. How many cases were there?—Four cases went to hospital.

2627. And how many days did it take removing them to Carnadough?—I am informed—

Mr. Healy.—I object; the doctor was produced yesterday; this is not in his district.

2628. Mr. Henry.—You heard the clerk give evidence yesterday that it took from three to four days, and you agree with that?—I do.

2629. In your own medical experience as a doctor, assuming that your district was transferred, would you direct the removal of cases to Carnadough that you at present send to Derry?—I would not.

2630. Would you prefer to take the risk of losing them in their own houses?—Unless it was an infectious disease; and in such infectious diseases they would come into Derry, stay with their friends for a few days, and enter the Derry infirmary.

2631. Do you know them to do that?—I do.

Mr. Healy.—That belongs to the curate.

2632. Mr. Henry.—Then Donegal people are actually using that curate infirmary?—Yes.

2633. Sooner than go to Lifford, would the effect of including that in Carnadough be to deprive the inhabitants of that district of the benefit of the workhouse infirmary?—It would deprive them of the best of almost any infirmary.

2634. Mr. Barker.—And part of the reason of that is that immediately north of Kilderry there is a range of mountains?—Yes; the direct road goes down to the river.

2635. Does that itself rise up a range of mountains?—Very large mountains.

2636. This low-lying district sloping down to the river is separated from Inishowen Union by a physical boundary of mountains?—Yes.

2637. Mr. Drummond.—Is there a good public road to Carnadough?—The road is fairly good, but it is a tremendous length.

2638. Mr. Barker.—From Kilderry to Carnadough is there a long road?—It is twenty miles; it is the only road.

2639. Mr. Lord.—What, in your opinion, would be the effect of sending people with acute diseases a distance of that sort?—It would be injurious to them.

2640. Would it increase the risk to their lives?—Enormously.

2541. In the case of accidents, would it be impossible to send them that distance?—I could not advise them to go.

2542. Would you prefer retaining the people in their own houses?—I would much prefer retaining them at home than sending them a long journey.

2543. Mr. Heneg—Have you your books here?—I have not.

2544. But you have a good memory?—Fairly.

2545. Within the last twelve months how many persons afflicted with acute disease did you send into Derry workhouse?—I could not tell. Aug. 14, 1862.

2546. How many stretchers did you requisition within the last twelve months?—None. Dr. Spradell.

2547. How many of those terrible accidents had you out there within the last twelve months that you had to send into the Derry workhouse?—I don't think we had any.

2548. For the last twelve months, if these unhappy people had been joined on to Carrinduff they would not have known the difference?—I don't think they would.

Dr. DAVID HAMILTON examined.

2549. Mr. Heneg—Are you the Dispensary Doctor of Burt?—Yes.

2550. And have you been there for fifteen years?—Yes.

2551. What is the distance from the centre of your district to Carrinduff?—I believe it is about twenty-one miles.

2552. And to Londonderry what distance is it?—Eight.

2553. Did you hear the evidence of Dr. Spradell as to sending cases to Carrinduff as compared with Derry?—Yes.

2554. Do you agree with that evidence?—I do.

2555. Mr. Heneg—The same, doctor, as in the last case; how many people had you afflicted with leprosy in the last twelve months that you had to send in to the Derry workhouse?—I sent one patient on Wednesday last.

2556. I suppose you knew the Inquiry was coming on?—I did not.

2557. What was his name?—It was a girl.

2558. What was her name?—Mary Brown.

2559. What was the matter with poor Mary?—It was my first visit. I am not certain; I believe it was Bright's disease of the kidneys; but unless there was an examination made I could not say whether that is positive or not.

2560. That is not an infectious disease?—No.

2561. Not a disease requiring a stretcher?—Well, a car was sent for.

2562. Would it not be as easy to send a car for Mary from Carrinduff?—Of her own free will she consented to go to Derry, although their own residence is only six miles out of Letterkenny.

2563. It would have been handier for her to go to Letterkenny?—No; she consented to go to Derry. Dr. David Hamilton.

2564. The attractions of the city?—I don't know.

2565. Before Mary's case, who, I hope, will recover completely—before her case how many did you send in?—I don't really know.

2566. How long are you there?—Fifteen years.

2567. In the fifteen years how many did you send?—I know of several people that are in at present.

2568. There is no use trying to get away from the guns, I will come back. In the fifteen years how many did you send in?—I remember one at least.

2569. Mr. Heneg—What district did this girl live in?—In Burt.

2570. She was six miles from Letterkenny?—No; her own home was six miles from Letterkenny; she was a hired girl.

2571. Where did she fall ill?—Carrinduff, Burt.

2572. How many miles?—I should say it is about five.

2573. Mr. Heneg—And she would have to be carried over to Carrinduff nearly twenty miles?—It would be more.

2574. Do you know of people from your district at present in the workhouse infirmary?—I do.

2575. Do they go in themselves frequently without your sending them?—They do.

Mr. Heneg—The demand note for Derry No. 2 in 1861 was £1,159 15s. 1d.; in 1862 it was £1,070 7s. 6d.; in 1863, £1,710 11s. 10d.; and for the existing financial year, £1,420 11s.

Mr. Heneg—Perhaps you would give us the papers now.

Mr. THOMAS GREENWELL examined.

2576. Mr. Heneg—Do you reside in Inch?—Yes.

2577. And are you a large ratepayer there?—Fairly large.

2578. Do you know the feeling of the residents of that district on this question?—I do.

2579. What is their view?—They don't wish to be annexed to the Carrinduff Union.

2580. Is that the universal opinion?—Yes.

2581. Do you object to that on the ground of inconvenience and distance?—Yes.

2582. Have you any traffic towards Carrinduff at all?—None whatever.

2583. Or do the people in your district ever go towards it?—Some of them may go down to a fair.

2584. In your district the number who obtain relief, I believe, is very small?—Very small.

2585. Are you in the habit of subscribing amongst yourselves to relieve them?—We are.

2586. And is that the explanation of so few going to the workhouse?—We subscribe, and they don't go to the workhouse; we don't want them to go.

2587. If you are attached to Carrinduff, and your rates are raised, do you anticipate that would continue?—I am afraid there would be a great many complaints; I don't think they would subscribe.

2588. Mr. Greenwell—Are you not aware that the District Councillor for Inch is in favour of that?—I am; and I think he is the only one in favour of it.

2589. Was he elected by the ratepayers?—I can answer that question, if you wish.

2590. Was he elected by the ratepayers?—I don't think he was; he was elected by a certain man giving orders for him to be elected.

2591. Who took the orders?—The labourers took the orders. He is not representing the ratepayers at all.

2592. Mr. Heneg—The labourers don't count?—They have a vote. Mr. Thomas Greenwell.

2593. They ought to be abolished?—No.

2594. Mr. Greenwell—About how many ratepayers do you represent in Inch?—I am voicing the opinion of the principal ratepayers.

2595. Twenty?—More than twenty.

2596. Thirty?—I could not tell you.

Mr. Greenwell—But the man who was elected by the people of the district comes in here in favour of this and you come in to oppose it.

2597. Mr. Heneg—Were you a candidate against him?—I was.

2598. And he beat you?—He did, when he got his orders from the priest. And I was selected by the people at a public meeting presided over by his reverence; my name was spoken of and approved of.

2599. There is nothing to excite yourself about here, even when there is a priest in it?—I am here to give evidence voicing the opinion of the principal ratepayers of Inch.

2600. Craig was elected by the priest?—I say the priest gave his orders to the labourers or, rather, his hearse, to vote for Craig or to vote for the Nationalist, and I have that from Craig's father.

2601. And you were opposed to him?—My name was brought forward before a public meeting, and I was elected as one of the candidates.

2602. And you were beat?—Certainly; when the people would not be allowed to vote as they wished.

2603. They had vote by ballot?—They had.

2604. How did the clerical intimidation get into the booth?—Well, Craig's father himself told me at the election, when I offered him a seat here "Are you going to give me a seat, and I voted against you?"

Aug. 14, 1903. said he. "I am," said I, "I don't care who you voted for." He said, "You know I would not have voted against you only for what passed on Saturday."

Mr. Thomas Crowell. 2705. He would not have voted for his own son?—He would not; he got his orders.

2706. He got his orders to vote for his own son, and, bager, he did; but only for the priest he would not?—He would not.

2707. A father would not vote for his own son, in Donegal, only for the priest?—He told me so himself.

2708. And you believed him?—I did believe him.

2709. Did you ever read "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp"?—I don't recollect.

2710. You live on the island of Inch?—I do.

2711. Surrounded by the melancholy ocean?—Surrounded by water.

2712. Don't you think it is very unfair that you, who have not a pauper on the island, should pay for the people on the mainland?—We have none at present.

Mr. JOSEPH McARTHUR, J.P., examined.

Mr. Joseph McArthur. 2717. Mr. Henry.—Are you Chairman of the Rural District No. 2?—Yes.

2718. You are also a County Councillor for Donegal?—Yes.

2719. And member of the Asylum Board?—Yes.

2720. Do you live at Burt?—Yes.

2721. What is the feeling of the people in your district?—They are all against a change of boundaries.

2722. Would it be possible for Guardians from that district to attend at Carnadoagh?—No.

2723. You would have no representation?—I am sure we would not. Burt and Inch are the furthest off.

2724. Mr. Drummond.—What do you mean by saying they would have no representation?—I am confident the Guardians and District Councillors would not go down there; I know I would not, myself.

2725. And don't you think it very unfair that you have to pay for the people on the mainland?—I don't think we have to pay for the people on the mainland.

2726. When you have not any paupers, don't you think it very unfair that you should have to pay for the people on the mainland?—I think it would be very unfair to annex us to Carnadoagh Union, when it is admitted by people from the Carnadoagh Union that people there are receiving outdoor relief when they should not get it.

2727. Don't you think it very unfair that you, a prosperous, law-abiding Presbyterian farmer in the island of Inch, should have to pay for people in the slums of Derry?—Do you think we would fare any better if attached to Carnadoagh?

2728. Mr. Henry.—Is Mr. Craig the only inhabitant of No. 2 that appeared here in support of this?—He is; his brother-in-law, Mr. Green, a District Councillor, did not appear, and I understand he is opposed to it.

2729. You could go, if you liked?—We could not get people to go.

Mr. Henry.—There was a resolution passed at No. 2 against this; Mr. Craig moved an amendment; he got a seconder, Mr. Quigley, and on a division the original motion was carried by 10 to 2. That was a resolution against this.

2730. Mr. Henry.—The man up in Meff supported it?—Yes.

2731. I think you are a member of the Asylum Board in Letterkenny?—Yes.

2732. How is it you can trust yourself with all these Papists up there?—I am not afraid of the Papists; I have every confidence in the gentlemen I meet; but after all, we must take the distance and the roads.

Dr. SMILEY examined.

Dr. Smiley. 2733. Mr. Henry.—Are you a medical officer practicing in Derry?—I am.

2734. Did you examine the hospital attached to Carnadoagh?—I did.

2735. As the Commissioners are going to see it I will ask you a question: Is the accommodation for the sick poor provided in Derry Infirmary very much superior to that provided in Carnadoagh?—I think so.

2736. Is there an operating theatre and modern appliances provided in Derry?—Yes.

2737. Did you also visit Letterkenny?—I did.

2738. Does the same remark apply to Letterkenny as contrasted with Derry?—It applies more strongly.

2739. Mr. Henry.—Letterkenny is as good as Derry?—It is the worst of the three.

Mr. Henry.—So we are second, even in your affection.

Dr. JOSEPH THOMPSON examined.

Dr. Joseph Thompson. 2740. Mr. Henry.—Did you visit three hospitals with Dr. Smiley?—Yes.

2741. Do you agree with his evidence as to the relative superiority of the three?—I do.

Dr. W. HANNAH examined.

Dr. W. Hannah. 2742. Mr. Henry.—You are the Dispensary Doctor of the Killes district?—Yes.

2743. How far is the nearest part of Killes from Derry?—Four statute miles.

2744. How far would that be from Letterkenny?—One part of my district would be 16½ miles from Letterkenny and the other about eighteen.

2745. And you would be further away again from Carnadoagh?—Oh, yes.

(Examination of witness now here adjourned.)

Mr. JOHN GREGG, J.P., examined.

Mr. John Gregg. 2746. Mr. Henry.—Are you Chairman of No. 1 Rural District?—Yes.

2747. Do you live at Culmore?—Yes; about five miles from Derry.

2748. What objection has Derry No. 1 to this proposed scheme?—The objections we have to the scheme are stated exactly in the resolution that was produced by Mr. Ross.

2749. We will hand in a print of it. That is a resolution of 1st February, 1902?—That was passed unanimously, with eighteen present.

2750. How long have you been residing in this district?—About thirty years.

2751. Do you know what is the tendency of the inhabitants of Meff and Culmore?—Meff is in No. 2 district; I live on the borders of Meff. The tendency for two miles from the city boundary, going outwards, is to migrate into the city. The population of Meff and Culmore has gone down 20 per cent, and I venture to say 75 per cent. have gone into Derry.

So long as No. 2 remains, we have no objection to pay our share, because we always consider our prosperity is largely bound up with the city, and we consider the prosperity of No. 1 and No. 2 is largely responsible for, and is brought about by, Derry going ahead both in prosperity and otherwise, and our people have been continuously drifting in, and, in fact, make a large proportion of the Derry population, and we are associated with them both socially and in business, and every way. We object to No. 2 going, because it will decrease the valuation; if No. 8 were taken away to-morrow I am satisfied there would not be a pauper less, and we would have to support the whole number with a less valuation. An ex-Guardian for Kilderry told me yesterday that he thought the people of Kilderry would rather go to America than Carrisnagh.

2764. Mr. Healy.—You are not in No. 2, and not a bit of you, geographically, is to be annexed? No. 1 is not to be annexed.

2765. You want, in No. 1, to get the contribution from No. 21—No; but we think that No. 2 should share with No. 1, and help to support the poorer portion of the city.

2762. In other words, you don't want to part with that £1,500 a year that No. 2 contributes to you?—Exactly.

2761. Mr. O'Connell.—It is a very unusual thing that it should go to Letterkenny?—Very unusual.

2763. But not at all unusual that it should go to the relief of a district in the County Derry?—No. 2 belongs to us in every way.

Mr. Cooke.—There were two witnesses I proposed to examine—Sir Henry Miller and Sir William McLaren. A note of their evidence was sent in to you; it largely contains statistics. I propose to hand in the resolution to oppose the scheme. (Resolution handed in.)

Aug. 14, 1903

Mr. John
Gress.

Dr. Rankin further examined.

2763. Mr. Leach.—I was asking you about your district and the distances. I may pass on now. In the event of your being obliged to remove any patients who were suffering from acute disease or accidents, would it be practicable to send to such a distance from your district as, say, the Letterkenny Workhouse?—In my opinion it would not.

2764. Is it immensely more convenient to send them to Derry?—Very much; the greater portion of my district borders on Derry.

2765. You have also Newtown Cunningham and Castleward as well as Killea; is that applicable to all the districts?—All but Newtown Cunningham, which is nearer to Letterkenny than Derry.

2766. That is the only part of your whole district?—Yes; it would be a little nearer Letterkenny.

2767. With the exception of that it is all very much nearer and more convenient to Derry?—Yes.

2768. Part of your district is within three or four miles of Derry?—The border is not more than four statute miles.

2769. Would they get better accommodation in Derry or in Letterkenny?—I don't know about Letterkenny, but the accommodation is good in Derry.

2770. I believe they have got everything necessary?—They have modernised the infirmary.

2771. Is it not practically up to date?—It is.

2772. Mr. Drummond.—What is the nearest part of your district to Letterkenny?—I should think about nine miles.

2773. How far would that particular point be from Derry?—It would be about twelve.

2774. And you think the patient should be sent from there out of his own county into Derry?—That is the only one spot.

2775. How many patients have you sent into the Derry Infirmary?—It would average about six in twelve months.

2776. What were they suffering from as a general thing?—There were some accidents, pneumonia, and some cases of fever.

2777. Was there an ambulance sent for them?—There always is.

2778. Is there an ambulance in Letterkenny?—I cannot tell you.

2779. Would it be an inconvenience to send them eighteen miles to Letterkenny?—I should also tell you that there are not so many paupers in the electoral division of Newtown Cunningham as in the other divisions.

2780. Mr. Leach.—Are there other patients who go without being sent by you?—I am only talking of persons going for hospital treatment.

2781. Mr. Clancy.—Do you know how many paupers there were from your division during the last twelve months?—I do not. I am only speaking from the medical point of view; there were only six patients requiring hospital treatment, but there would be very many more if you could do away with the stigma that seems to attach to them on going into the workhouse hospital.

2782. Do you say it would not be practicable to send them to Letterkenny?—I do not; but I say they could be treated very well in Derry.

2783. Don't you know that there is an ambulance in Letterkenny?—Yes.

2784. And that there is a good hospital there?—I don't know anything about the accommodation at all.

2785. Mr. Leach.—How long will it take to send four persons from your district to Letterkenny for an ambulance and get it back?—It is eighteen miles.

2776. CHAIRMAN.—You can telegraph?—Yes.

2777. Dr. BOSSER.—You mentioned that you have patients who require infirmary treatment but they object to go to the workhouse hospital?—If that stigma were removed there would be far more patients for hospital treatment—I mean the destitute poor people not actual paupers, but people in receipt of medical relief, as all labourers in my district are.

2778. If the workhouse infirmary were separated from the workhouse you think it would increase the usefulness?—Undoubtedly.

2779. CHAIRMAN.—Do they ever go to Lifford?—I have sent some; but the same applies to my cases, as Dr. Hamilton said, that many of them migrate to Derry and stay there for a few days for the purpose of acquiring a residence and then go into the Derry Infirmary.

2780. I did not know that people, for the purpose of obtaining hospital treatment, go into Derry?—Indeed they do; they go into Derry and remain with friends for two or three nights and then get lines from some person and they go into the county infirmary.

2781. Dr. BOSSER.—And then they give their address as Derry?—Yes. I know many of them and they won't go into Lifford on account of the distance.

2782. Mr. Leach.—Many of those come from Donegal?—Yes; many from my own immediate district.

2783. Mr. Drummond.—How far are you from Lifford?—Thirteen or fourteen miles; the average of my district would not be more than six, or six and a half, miles from Derry.

2784. Dr. BOSSER.—If there was some arrangement by which they could go direct into the county infirmary would be an advantage?—Very great; many patients of mine, who require hospital treatment, have to remain at home.

Mr. Henry.—Perhaps I might put in the list of distances (prolonged).

CHAIRMAN.—Of course; we will check all these distances.

Mr. Cooke.—My friends think it would be a convenient time that I said anything I have to say. I appear for the Derry Corporation who have passed resolutions opposing the suggested amalgamation of Londonderry No. 2 with Innisowen by the large majorities of thirty-one to four, and thirty-two to three on two occasions, on the 11th of February, 1902, and on a subsequent date. My clients of course desire to associate themselves with everything that falls from Mr. Healy and Mr. Clancy on the general subject of reviving the system of union boundaries throughout Ireland so as to reduce the rates. They recognise, of course, that the system which now has been in force for sixty years had been devised to meet the wants of a population of somewhere about eight millions, which my friends are fond of reciting, though sometimes forgetting that two and a half millions of that population were able-bodied paupers, who had to depend on the workhouse for their support. No doubt everything that would tend to cheapen that system and reduce the rates, while at the same time giving effective accommodation to the poor, is most desirable. But you have been detained for the last two days inquiring into a wholly collateral matter, not that the ratepayers in general should be able to support their poor in a cheaper, more economical, and more efficient fashion, but whether the burthen of supporting the poor in this particular district should be shifted from one set of shoulders to another.

Dr. Rankin.

Aug. 14, 1906.

It is not suggested in any way that the process of shifting Londonderry No. 2 to Inishowen would champion the methods by which they could be supported. It could not be suggested that they would be more efficiently relieved in the Carrindagh Workhouse than they are at present in Derry Workhouse with all the medical appliances in their immediate vicinity and the extra accommodation that that workhouse can afford. What the City of Derry says is that if you were the original Poor Law Commission or were dividing the districts again irrespective of the mere boundaries of counties; if you were selecting an area you would select it to precisely the same way as it now stands. We say that we gain a great advantage from the present system; that if District No. 2 were withdrawn from us it would practically increase our rates by approximately £1,000 a year, throwing the burthen on the City and Londonderry No. 1 of £1d. in the £. The Corporation naturally, and the dwellers in No. 1 naturally resent any alteration that would increase their rates to such an amount as that. No further reason need be cited though Mr. Healy tried to drag out of witnesses that a person in the North of Ireland should have a collateral reason in his head along with not wishing to have his rates increased by 1d. in the £. Surely it is sufficient to say that the proposition would increase our rates without groping for any other reasons which, as far as I can learn, have no existence in fact. It would appear at first sight that District No. 2, has a good deal of reason to complain paying so large a contribution to the city rates, if, in fact, their respective paupers, or the origin of their respective paupers, could be taken as a criterion of the relief afforded. What we say is that Derry is naturally the centre of this basin shut off from Inishowen by a chain of hills which extends one-third of the distance down and reaches across from Three Trees to Fahan, the upper portion of this district being unobstructed. If you are to take as your guide the instructions apparently quoted with approval by Mr. Healy that the main guide in selecting an area was to be the market town to which the people resorted why Derry would be the natural centre. It cannot be suggested for a moment that the market town of all this area is not the City of Londonderry. But we say further that all that portion—as was depicted by Mr. Gregg—with all that population, to a large extent, goes to seek employment in the City of Derry; that they are drifting in continually, and that the prosperity of the city and of this neighbourhood is unspeakably bound up. It is a matter of common knowledge that Londonderry has large manufactures; and that consists mostly in the making of shirtings; that it gives vast employment to the female portion of the community; that these girls that get that employment to a very large extent come from Donegal; that when they get that employment their parents follow them into the city in order to derive support; and in process of time, when these girls either marry or cease to be the support of their parents, the natural thing is that those parents drift into the Londonderry Workhouse. If that was not the case District No. 2 ought to be in a state of the greatest possible resentment that it should contribute an undue proportion of its rates to support the poor of Derry. But they know perfectly well that the poor of Derry are their own poor; they know perfectly well, as Dr. Rankin says, that the people whom what is called a location by a few months residence and call themselves Derry people, although their origin was in these outlying districts surrounding Londonderry. But we find from Mr. Hanna, and from the unscientific elected representatives, that they are satisfied with this arrangement, that they think it is an equitable arrangement, and when we examine into the true bar's it is that their poor seek employment and get relief when they are unable to get employment in the City of Londonderry. You must take the natural boundaries if you are to do justice in forming a union. If you withdraw Londonderry No. 2 to Carrindagh you would simply leave the workhouse of Londonderry in the main supporting the poor of that district. By withdrawing Londonderry No. 2 in part to Inishowen, and in part to Letterkenny, you will not get rid of the fact that these people come into Londonderry, and as they are poor are there relieved. That is the main contention of the City of Londonderry, that no alteration of these boundaries can alter that fact. In all this matter there does not seem to be much consideration shown to what would be for the benefit of the poor either by the County Council or by their witnesses. Can it be contended for one moment that a city like Londonderry with as a firmity supported out of the county with all the most modern surgical appliances, with a modern staff, and with a fever hospital, which the Corporation of Londonderry have put there at their own expense, are the poor of this district—which geographically lies in the City of Londonderry, which is not one-half as far from the City of Londonderry as then Carrindagh, the distance making it almost prohibitive for people to be taken to Carrindagh in the ambulance—are they to be denied the advantages, and the right they have of resorting to the City of Londonderry and the excellent medical aid they can get there. Now Mr. Henry has opened so largely the case for the city in conjunction with his own case, and said it so much more effectively than I could do that I don't intend to detain you at any length. One aspect affecting Londonderry No. 2 does not appear to have been mentioned; if you took those six elected districts and transferred them to Inishowen, what would you have? Because they happen to have been more industrious than their neighbours, to have had few poor and subsisted for their own poor to keep them out of the workhouse, what crime is it to be industrious and to have few poor that they should be awarded with excessive taxation by being thrown into Inishowen because they successfully kept down poverty.

Mr. Hanna.—I thought my friend was appealing for the Corporation.

Mr. Cooke.—I am, but Mr. Henry dwelt so much on my case that I may say a few words on this matter. It is not only that that occurred to me to be unfair, but it is an additional fact that if you had this carried out you would have Inishowen receiving an Agricultural Grant of somewhere about £2,500 in perpetuity in relief of the poor, and you would have the District No. 2 receiving only its proportion of the grant of £800, that would go to these electoral divisions, and if you take the difference of these grants is added to the two districts, which would be within the same union, you will find it work out to this: that instead of the people in No. 2, who have no poor paying a smaller rate than the people of Inishowen, you will find Inishowen rates always 6d. less than in these districts, because their grant in aid worked out on this valuation would amount to that. I think that it is a most preposterous thing, to have two districts in the same union, one having no poor, the other giving out-door relief apparently to come, and yet the district that you throw in along with them will be obliged in perpetuity, or rather Inishowen will always be perpetually, be paying 6d. less than the people in the district of Londonderry No. 2. I would think that that would be an anomaly you would be very sore to get in force by accepting such a scheme as this, and I think there is a good deal to be said also for the fact that it would be a practical disfranchisement of District No. 2. A man may go and attend a Board of Guardians when he can conveniently go to the law where it is held, and do his business at the same time, but to expect these handworking people to march off to Carrindagh, an hour and a half by railway, where they have nothing to do, is to disfranchise that prosperous community that has always been famous in looking after themselves. Mr. Healy has spoken of the money poured into Donegal; this money has never reached the industrious classes in this district here; the relief has always been given to the poorer congested, but as for Burt, and Birdstown, and Fahan, and Killa, it has never received a fraction of this money that has come from Imperial sources to aid Donegal. It only asks to be let alone; Londonderry asks the same. We have accommodations in our workhouse for 740 people; one-third of it is occupied. We are perfectly prepared to receive patients, to give them the highest possible medical assistance, and we have the highest possible appliances in aid of the poor. Londonderry City simply says "It is our good fortune or bad fortune to be the real capital of these districts; they concentrate here, and, as far as we are concerned, let them all come and we will provide a workhouse for them, and let the rates be so distributed." That and nothing in the resolution passed by the Corporation is the reason for their appearance here, and we respectfully submit that the particular district, which is contemporaneous with the Lower Liberties and Upper Liberties of Londonderry, should remain a part of the union system of Londonderry.

Mr. Hanna.—I wish to make a few remarks for No. 1 District supplementary of the remarks made by

Mr. Henry who appears for the union at large. My learned friend, Mr. Drummond, at the opening of the investigation complained of this anomaly of two sections of Donegal being carved out for the purposes of two unions. Mr. Henry has dealt so clearly with that that it is scarcely necessary to refer to it further than that Mr. Nickolls in his report in 1833 before these unions were carved out in the different districts in Ireland—

Mr. Cleave.—May I interrupt my learned friend. I expected from what Mr. Henry said that the evidence would be concluded before any further speeches were made; there is one district not dealt with yet—Strabane.

Mr. Henry.—I am the only person concerned about Strabane, and I am only going to examine the witnesses.

Mr. Horner.—I appear for No. 1 Rural District Council.

Mr. Cleave.—I would ask counsel to postpone his speech until the witnesses for Strabane are examined.

Aug. 14, 1903.

Mr. T. W. D. HUMPHREYS, J.P., examined.

2284. Mr. Henry.—Do you reside at Donaghmore House?—Yes.

2285. Is that on the border of the Strabane and Stranorlar Unions?—It is the last townland on the railway.

2286. And how long have you been a member of the Board of Guardians?—Fifty-five years.

2287. Are you intimately acquainted with all this district on both sides?—I know the district.

2288. What distance is your place from Stranorlar?—My place is seven miles.

2289. And how far from Strabane?—Six.

2290. Taking the district as a whole, would it be more convenient to Stranorlar or Strabane?—Strabane.

2291. Is Strabane the market town of the district?—It is.

2292. Have you three stations on the Donagall line, inside the district, leading into Strabane?—Yes, coming in Castlefinn.

2293. With the present workhouse and infirmary in Strabane, which is the more convenient place to have the workhouse for this district?—Strabane by a great deal.

2294. If the change was made and Stranorlar substituted do you think the paupers of this district would go to Stranorlar?—Some of them might, but the majority would go to Strabane still.

2295. And would the number of paupers in Strabane Workhouse be practically very much the same?—Very much the same.

2296. Did your Guardians and both the Rural District Councils pass resolutions against this proposal?—They did; both No. 1 and No. 2.

2297. What is the feeling in the district itself?—The great majority of the ratepayers are entirely against any change.

2298. Was there any complaint on the subject of convenience for the purposes of Poor Law relief of the Strabane Workhouse?—Never that I heard.

2299. What, in your opinion, would be the effect on the rating of the district if the proposed change was carried out?—My opinion is that the rates would be raised; but it is only my personal opinion.

2300. Mr. Cleave.—I think you stated that your own place was six miles from Strabane and seven from Stranorlar; do you know that part of this district is only three miles from Stranorlar?—The upper part of it is—the outside boundary.

2301. Do you think that it would be also more convenient for those people who live within three miles of Stranorlar to go to Strabane than to go to Stranorlar?—Yes, and I will tell you the reason; they all market there.

2302. Do the paupers market?—No; I don't know about the paupers.

2303. We are talking of the paupers that don't go marketing; we are talking of the convenience of the paupers, and I ask you is it more convenient for the paupers who happen to be living within three or four miles of Stranorlar, is it more convenient for them to go to Strabane than to go to Stranorlar?—You are talking of the extreme boundary and I am talking of the centre.

2304. You were talking of the district that raised you and I was not?—Oh, no.

2305. Are you acquainted with the workhouse accommodation in Strabane?—Yes.

2306. Do you think that that is as good as it is at Stranorlar?—Not at present.

2307. When will it be as good?—There is a scheme before the Board of Guardians at Strabane to spend £1,200 to make the accommodation complete as far as we can at present.

2308. Do you know that there will be no expenditure necessary at Stranorlar?—I know nothing of the sort.

We shall have to spend money whether this scheme is carried out or not.

2309. Who will have to spend it?—The Strabane Guardians.

2310. You don't deny that the accommodation in Stranorlar is infinitely superior to that at Strabane?—I don't know that it is superior; I don't know the house itself.

2311. Were you ever in Stranorlar?—Very often.

2312. Did it ever occur to you to go to the workhouse to see it?—I never visited the house.

2313. Did you say that the general feeling in Castlefinn is against this change?—Certainly, of the ratepayers, and the largest proprietor in Castlefinn town is against it—Mr. Stewart.

2314. Is it not very curious after all that the representatives of the district on the County Council in the other way?—Not the slightest; different people have different opinions, but the person who has the greatest interest in the town of Castlefinn is against it.

2315. Do you think that a person who does not represent the ratepayers of the district is a better authority than the man who does?—I think the man who pays the rates is the man who has the strongest opinion on the subject.

2316. Mr. Drummond.—How much, in round figures, does Strabane No. 2 pay—take it in gross—to the Strabane Union?—I really cannot tell you.

2317. Do they pay £2,000?—I suppose so; about that.

2318. Did you hear it stated here, and I will take your own counsel to be correct, that the number of Donegal paupers in Strabane Union was seventy-two?—The clerk of the union will give you the exact amount.

Mr. Henry.—Yes, seventy-two.

2319. Mr. Drummond.—Of course you know the Strabane Union goes back a long way into the County Tyrone?—It does.

2320. And of course you know that you—the Donegal men—are subscribing to the support of the dispensaries and other things all over that large union?—Yes.

2321. How many dispensaries have you in Strabane No. 2?—There is a dispensary in Castlefinn and another in Hagboe; there are two.

2322. I think that is the same number as in Deery No. 2, and the expenditure was put down there, in round figures, as about £750.

Mr. Henry.—There is £120 on outdoor relief; the figures cut the other way in this case.

2323. Mr. Drummond.—Don't you think you are paying a very high figure for the support of these seventy-two paupers, deducting the dispensary cost from your £2,000?—I don't think so.

2324. Are you aware that you are paying more than double the average amount?—No, I am not.

2325. You have not gone into these figures?—No.

Mr. Cleave.—Here is the demand note for last year—

£4,111.

Mr. Henry.—There is something to come off that.

Mr. Cleave.—Here is the demand note, 26th January, 1903—£4,111.

Mr. Henry.—There is a reason for that; will you read the other two years before.

CHAIRMAN.—There was an insufficient estimate the year before.

Mr. Henry.—The rates are 16d., 16½d., and 14d.

2326. Mr. Drummond.—Do you think it is fair or just that ratepayers in Donegal—a large tract of Donegal—should be subscribing towards the expenses of dispensaries through the County Tyrone, some of them over perhaps twenty miles; do you think that is just or fair sending money out of your own county into the rich County Tyrone?—I think if you take into consideration the sick and the poor, and their convenience, it is quite right.

Aug. 14, 1905.

Mr. T. W. P.
Bamphreys.

2822. To send Donagall money, although you have portion of this district within three miles of Stranorlar, and portion a very short distance from Letterkenney, and an ambulance to take people there; don't you know that in keeping up one of these vast establishments the whole establishment must be kept up, no matter what number is in it?—Yes; you have mentioned two outside townlands, and said nothing about Fethall, St. Johnston, and Glenlough.

2823. Do you think it fair that Stranorlar, with the great expense of that establishment, should be left practically vacant, with its vast number of rooms lying idle and unoccupied, while you are sending the paupers into the County Tyrone; do you consider that fair?—I do; if Stranorlar is in that situation it ought to be dissolved and put into the neighbouring unions.

2824. You think it should be left there or abandoned altogether?—I don't know.

2825. And in your own country the workhouse in Stranorlar should be shut up and abandoned in order that you may send the County Donagall poor into Tyrone?—I did not say that; but I took your statement that Stranorlar was derelict.

2826. Do you think it right to send Donagall money into Tyrone, or fair?—We paid for the building of the house, and I think we ought to enjoy it.

2827. What house?—The poorhouse in Stranorlar.

2828. Have not the Donagall people paid for the house in Stranorlar?—I don't say they have.

Captain BROOK, D.L., examined.

Capt. Stoney.

2829. Mr. Henry.—Do you reside near Raphoe?—Yes.

2830. Are you a member of the County Council?—Yes.

2831. Are you also familiar with the working of the union?—Yes; I have been twenty-five years a member.

2832. Is almost the entire of this district within a radius of eight miles from Stranorlar?—Yes, except three small corners that jut beyond it.

2833. What portion of the union is included within eight miles radius from Stranorlar?—Only one-third.

2834. If the portion proposed to be transferred to Stranorlar were transferred, what would be the distance the poor would have to travel on an average?—The nearest point from Stranorlar Workhouse to the union of Stranorlar is three miles; that is only one point. The furthest point of the area, North Glenlough, is thirteen miles. The average distance that the poor would have to travel to Stranorlar Workhouse would be eight miles.

2835. What is the average distance they have to travel at present to Stranorlar?—Four miles.

2836. What is the opinion of the ratepayers on the subject of amalgamation?—I think it would be an injury to the ratepayers.

2837. What valuation does each Guardian represent at present?—Each elected Guardian in the Stranorlar Union at present represents a valuation of £2,100.

2838. What does each Guardian of the Stranorlar Union represent?—£1,400.

2839. And in Letterkenney Union?—£1,100.

2840. And if you were amalgamated either with Letterkenney or Stranorlar £1,400 or £1,100 would have the same voting power as you have?—The result would be that eleven Guardians of Letterkenney, representing only £12,000, could out-vote ten Guardians from Stranorlar, representing £13,000.

2841. Have you compared the taxation per head in Letterkenney and Stranorlar with the taxation in Stranorlar No. 2?—The result of the vote I mentioned would be that the Guardians of Stranorlar by taxing themselves at the rate of 2½d. per head of the population could tax Stranorlar at the rate of 4d. per head, the valuation of the two areas are so different.

2842. What is the feeling of the people of your district on this subject?—Entirely against amalgamation.

2843. Even in Raphoe, which is comparatively near?—Quite as much there as anywhere else.

2844. In your opinion, taking this district, which adjoins Stranorlar, would it be absurd to bring them to Stranorlar?—It would be very hard on them.

2845. Would some of the paupers find their way into Stranorlar?—I think most of them.

2846. As regards the attendance of Guardians, would it, in your opinion, be as good at Stranorlar or Letterkenney as at Stranorlar?—I don't think there would be much attendance at all. Most of the Guardians have business to do in Stranorlar, and they told me they would resign rather than go there, especially in winter time.

2847. Mr. Drummond.—I think you told me that the most distant part of Stranorlar from Stranorlar was thirteen miles?—Yes.

2848. What is the mileage of the most distant part of it from Stranorlar?—About eight and a half or nine miles at the outside.

2849. The part that runs within three miles of Stranorlar, how far is it from Stranorlar?—About eight and a half miles.

2850. Then the difference is between eight and a half or nine miles and thirteen; what is the distance of Raphoe from Stranorlar?—Six miles or six and a half.

2851. As the present time there is no railway from Raphoe to Stranorlar; what is the distance of Raphoe from Stranorlar?—Nine miles, I think.

2852. I am told it is only six?—I should say it is between eight and a half and nine miles, statute.

2853. Raphoe is one of the most important places in the Stranorlar Union; do you think the difference between six and a half and eight and a half is of much importance?—For the poor it might.

2854. How many persons would it affect?—I think the difference on the average of four miles for the poor to travel is a very serious consideration.

2855. How many poor go from Raphoe?—From the district seventy-two go for the year, we know.

2856. Mr. Clancy.—It is a great hardship to put a district which is only three miles from Stranorlar into the Stranorlar Union?—I don't say that.

2857. Is it a great hardship to put those who are twelve miles away?—It is.

2858. Do you happen to know whether or not, as a fact, that the extreme point in County Tyrone from Stranorlar is twenty-five miles?—I don't know; it may be.

2859. Supposing it was, would not that be a hardship?—It would.

2860. Mr. Henry.—This district in Tyrone is a mountain district?—Yes, very sparsely populated.

2861. And the only option is either going to Stranorlar or crossing over the mountain to Magherafelt, which, I suppose, you never mind. . . . Supposing your Rural District Council were abolished, would the same figures you have given us apply to the taxation for roads?—Yes; the same voting power.

Mr. J. D. SHANLEY examined.

Mr. J. D.
Shanley.

2862. Mr. Henry.—Are you Clerk of the Stranorlar Union and also of the District Councils 1 and 2?—Yes.

2863. Was this portion coloured pink originally portion of the Stranorlar Union?—Yes.

2864. That contained 81,287 acres, valuation £62,836, and 20,271 of a population. When Gortin was dissolved you got this (shows on map)?—Yes.

2865. With 55,565 acres and a valuation of only £7,631, and a population of 5,123. Is that principally mountain?—Yes.

2866. In the pink portion of the Stranorlar Union are there 53,103 acres, with a valuation of £42,760, and a population of 10,463?—Yes.

2867. Making altogether a valuation of £113,499 and 20,659 of a population?—Yes.

2868. Over and above that, is the urban district of Stranorlar included in that with a valuation of £13,227 and a population of 5,001?—Yes.

2869. How many persons are in receipt of outdoor relief; how many persons are inmates of the workhouse from this district taken from Gortin?—Twelve.

2870. And how many in the infirmary from Gortin?—One.

2871. And how many in receipt of outdoor relief from that district?—Thirteen.

2872. Take the original portion of Tyrone; how many are in the house end of that district?—145 at the last of August.

2870. How many of these were in the infirmary?—Twenty; fifteen, and five in the fever hospital.

2880. And how many were in receipt of out-door relief?—215.

2881. Now come to the portion in dispute, Strabane No. 2; how many were in receipt of in-door relief?—Seventy-two.

2882. Out-door?—119.

2883. And how many in the infirmary?—Fifty-nine.

2884. How many people were in the workhouse from the town of Strabane?—Sixty-two.

2885. And how many in receipt of out-door relief?—Sixty-four.

2886. Now I want to bring you to the rating; what were the average rates for the last five years in Strabane Union on lands and other hereditaments?—£ 0/6 and 11/34d.

2887. Now reference has been made to your demand note for the present year at the figure of £4,003!—That is right.

2888. What is your rate for the present year on land?—5 2/3d.

2889. What is the other rate?—14 4/6d.

2890. That is quite an exceptional rating!—Very exceptional.

2891. Was that caused by the fact that you were under-estimated?—Yes.

2892. And two years before, namely 1901 and 1902, were your rates 15s. and 1 6/4d respectively?—They were.

2893. Have you your demand notes for the last five years including the present, been £3,604 for 1900, £3,558 for 1901, £1,528 for 1902, £1,755 for 1903, and the exceptional figure for the reasons you have given in the present year of £4,111?—Yes.

2894. So that your average would be something about—£2,500 a year.

2895. Do you also, as was told us by Mr. Perry, discharge duties in connection with the registration of voters and the duties of executive sanitary officer and clerk of this District Council?—Yes.

2896. Have you the average rate for the last five years in Letterkenney and Stranorlar. Is it Letterkenney?—6/6d. on land and 12 8/10d. on other hereditaments, and in Stranorlar?—7/3d. on land and 12 5/6d. on other hereditaments?—Yes.

2897. Have you taken out the number of paupers—first, for Strabane No. 1 Rural?—One pauper represents a valuation of £210 on Strabane No. 1; in Strabane Urban one pauper represents £110, and in Strabane No. 2, one pauper represents £224 valuation.

2898. So that if this was carried the extra cost of the paupers in the Strabane Urban District would be all thrown on the rural district?—The Tyrone people would have to pay for Strabane.

2899. Does Strabane No. 2 use Strabane as its market town and centre?—Yes.

2900. Mr. Draxwood.—Is Raphoe a market town?—Yes.

2901. Is not that in the district?—It is.

2902. Is Stranorlar a market town?—I believe it is.

2903. Is not that close to the district?—Three miles from the boundary.

2904. What are you proposing to expend this sum of money upon that you have agreed to borrow from the Board of Works on the Strabane Union, £1,200?—It is to improve the infirmary that that money will be borrowed.

2905. Is it to be spent entirely on the infirmary?—Yes.

2906. Is there any of it to increase the space in the workhouse?—It is to improve the infirmary and get more accommodation for the infirmary only; we have more than enough space for the paupers; the accommodation is 235.

2907. You have not accommodation enough for the infirmary?—We have any amount for the ordinary paupers, not for the infirmary.

2908. If Strabane No. 2 was taken off your union you would have more than enough accommodation?—It would relieve us to that extent.

2909. Mr. Clancy.—You say that this is an extraordinary estimate?—Yes.

2910. When was it an ordinary one?—Two years ago.

2911. That was about a year after the agitation for this scheme commenced?—It has nothing to do with it.

2912. These things never have any connection with each other at all?—Never.

2913. And you are prepared to say that?—I am prepared to swear it. When I found, in March, 1903, that our estimate was wrong I brought the matter before the Board and got a supplementary estimate passed; that was sent to each of the County Councils; Donegal would have taken it up, their books were not ready for rating; Tyrone could not, and the result was that the Local Government Board would not allow one part of the union to be assessed more than another and it had to be held over.

2914. Was not that your own mismanagement; does that represent the total of your demand on Strabane No. 2?—That represents the total of our demand for the Donegal part.

2915. What about the demands of the District Council?—I thought you were talking of the Guardians.

2916. What is the demand in respect of the District Council charges?—£484.

2917. What did you become in credit to the bank?—We have a debit of £1,400 or £1,500.

2918. Are you over in credit?—We will when this rate is collected.

2919. If you get that extraordinary demand every year?—We won't want it again.

2920. What was the vote upon the question of this scheme the first time it was brought up at the Strabane Board of Guardians?—It has been running on for two or three years.

2921. Do you recollect that the opposition was carried only by a majority of one?—That is very possible, but there has been a big change in the Board since.

2922. Mr. Henry.—Were all these put out?—They were.

2923. And other men put in who were opposed to it?—They were.

Mr. WILLIAM STEWART examined.

2924. Mr. Henry.—You prepared this map and coloured it?—Yes.

2925. Is it correct?—Yes.

2926. Have you shown on it an eight miles radius from Strabane?—I have.

2927. Have you also shown an eight miles radius from Stranorlar?—I have.

2928. And from Letterkenney?—And from Letterkenney as eight miles radius.

2929. Mr. Draxwood.—Were you speaking of the workhouse or of the town when you said Stranorlar?—The workhouse.

Mr. W. J. WHEAT, S.P., examined.

2930. Mr. Henry.—Are you the Chairman of No. 2 District?—Yes.

2931. We have had Mr. Gallagher introduced as representing Castlefinn; as a matter of fact was Mr. Gallagher elected by two divisions outside Castlefinn?—Yes.

2932. So that he is partly pickled; what is the feeling in Strabane No. 2?—It is against amalgamation; and in regard to the Finn Division, which I represent, it is very strong against amalgamation.

2933. And is that much nearer Stranorlar than the other divisions?—Yes; it is the nearest.

2934. Would it be productive of great inconvenience to the poor and the representatives of the people if the centre was changed to Stranorlar?—My division runs from three miles from Stranorlar to three miles from Strabane.

2935. But taking all the divisions as a whole?—It would be a very great inconvenience.

2936. Mr. Draxwood.—You say the majority of the people are against this?—In my district.

2937. You represent the town of Castlefinn; if the inhabitants of Castlefinn were polled how many of a majority would be with you?—My idea would be against amalgamation.

2938. By what majority?—I am not going to say.

2939. I will ask you one question in confidence; don't you believe, in your heart of hearts, that that majority would be drawn by a religious line?—No, sir.

Dep. 14, 1903.

Mr. J. D. Starkie.

Mr. Wm. Stewart.

Mr. W. J. Wheat.

Aug. 14, 1903

Mr. W. J.
Wray.

2940. How many of the Roman Catholic population would be against this scheme?—I won't say that.

2941. Would there be one in ninety-nine of the whole of Strabane No. 2; if you went from house to house and asked the opinion, would there be one Roman Catholic out of each 100 who would not be in favour of it?—I think not.

2942. Is it not altogether a religious and political question?—No.

2943. How is it you have the people in favour of it and the others against it?—I believe I represent both sides of the question.

2944. If you take the Unionist and Nationalist inhabitants, would you say there would not be one in 100 of the Nationalists in favour of it?—I would not say.

2945. Mr. Clancy.—Do you know Mr. Cunningham?—Yes.

2946. Is he opposed to this scheme or in favour of it?—I believe he is opposed to it.

2947. Is he the Poor Law Guardian of the district?—No, sir, of Clough.

2948. Is that far away?—It is the next division to Castlefinn.

2949. Is he against the scheme or in favour of it?—He can say for himself.

2950. I want your opinion?—I believe he is in the amalgamation.

2951. And he is a worse authority on the feelings of the people than you are?—I don't say that, but I know their feelings as well as any man in the district.

2952. You represent both parties?—Yes, I do.

2953. I thought there were no parties?—I have no party.

2954. Is everybody against this scheme; is it not your opinion that there is no one at all in favour of the scheme in your district?—I said the large majority of the ratepayers were against it.

2955. Do you know William Gallagher?—I do.

2956. He is a large farmer?—He is; but I think I represent the feelings of Castlefinn better than Mr. Gallagher, because they refused to put him in as District Councillor and put me in in his place.

2957. Does not Mr. Gallagher, the County Councillor, represent the whole district?—And part of Stranorlar too.

2958. And you are a better authority than he is?—As soon.

2959. Mr. Henry.—He has two stools to sit on and you have only one?—Yes.

Mr. James
Stewart.

2960. Mr. Henry.—Are you a member of the Strabane Urban Council?—I am.

2961. Was a resolution passed on this subject by that Council?—There was.

2962. Was it against amalgamation?—Yes.

2963. Was it carried unanimously?—Unanimously.

2964. Mr. Drummond.—Was it put and carried regularly?—It was, but Mr. Gallagher's objection to the matter was this—It was a committee meeting at which the whole Council was present and the chairman brought up the questions from the Local Government Board and we made certain replies to them.

Mr. James STEWART examined.

2965. Was it not objected that it was not on the agenda?—No; it was not on the agenda, these papers only came from the Local Government Board and there was not time to call a special meeting; the chairman himself introduced the subject and certain replies were made by the whole Council.

2966. Why did the chairman refuse to recognise this as regular?—Because he is a brother of Mr. William Gallagher.

2967. Mr. Henry.—Was it brought forward by the chairman himself?—It was brought forward by the chairman himself.

Mr. Henry.—That is the Strabane case.

Dr. D. J.
Brown.

2968. Mr. Leach.—You are the Medical Doctor of the Londonderry Union?—I am.

2969. How long have you been so?—Twenty-seven years.

2970. Were you present here when the clerk gave his evidence?—I was.

2971. And you heard what he said about the accommodation?—Yes.

2972. That is correct?—Yes.

2973. Within the last ten years or so have there been considerable improvements made in the union?—Yes; very great improvements.

Mr. Drummond.—There is no doubt about that at all, you may state that fact and I will admit it.

2974. Mr. Leach.—Have you got now complete sanitary arrangements?—Yes.

2975. You have a fever hospital?—Yes.

2976. And you have a separate nursing staff in connection with this?—The nurses are transferred from one hospital to another.

Dr. D. J. BROWN examined.

2977. How many nurses are there?—Four qualified nurses—two probationers and another nurse that has been three for some years and is not trained at present.

2978. Is there a children's ward?—Yes.

2979. And as there a lock hospital?—There is.

2980. Are there separate wards for consumptive patients?—They are just being erected at present.

2981. And, I suppose, with all the latest improvements?—It is merely for isolating those cases.

2982. I believe that the workhouse is connected by telephone with the city?—It is; and the fever hospital is connected with it, too.

2983. Have you for the infirmary and the fever hospital, too, a complete sanitary system?—Yes.

2984. And there are ample arrangements?—There are.

2985. Have you bath accommodation?—Yes.

2986. Hot and cold water?—Yes.

2987. And is it a completely up-to-date system?—It is only lately put in.

Captain BROWN, R.L., further examined.

-Capt. Brown.

2988. Mr. Henry.—What would be the effect, in your opinion, of the proposed amalgamation on the rates in Strabane No. 2?—If Strabane were incorporated with Letterkenny and Stranorlar the result would be that the rates in Strabane would be increased, and the rates in Stranorlar and Letterkenny decreased.

Mr. Henry.—We have had a dash of politics and a dash of religion, but I represent a part of the country where, so far as attendance to the destitute poor is concerned, we have regard to neither politics nor religion. I have been listening to hear what was the principle upon which my friends with this Commission to proceed when they asked them to make this subdivision either in the Londonderry or Strabane Unions. Of course, with regard to the Strabane Union I have nothing to say. But the principle on which the original Poor Law Commissioners acted was the principle laid down by Mr. Nicholls: "In forming the country into unions it will, I think, be necessary to cherish the civil rather than the ecclesiastical boundaries of parishes; but cases will arise in which it may be requisite to disregard all such boundaries, it being obviously more important that the district to be united should be compact, convenient, and accessible, and be naturally connected with its centre, than that the old and often inconvenient boundaries should be observed. This applies not less to territorial and civil boundaries than to parishes and other divisions. The principle which has governed the Commissioners in the formation of the English unions, whenever they have not been driven from it by local considerations, has been to fix upon some market town conveniently situated as a centre, and attach to it the whole surrounding district, of which it may be considered as the capital:

Aug. 14, 1903.

the mart in which the general business of the district, both public and private, for the most part concentrates. The roads of the district always converge on the market town, the communications with it are constant, the people settle within the range of its influence and constitute almost a distinct community. To form such a district into a union under one common government for general as well as Poor Law purposes, seems, therefore, an obvious course of proceeding." In the second report he made I may quote an observation that applied to the then Commissioners, and also with respect to the present Commission. "The Commissioners are based on every principle of public duty"—it is in consequence of the speech of Mr. Healy that the Commissioners were English and Welsh that I read this—"to form the unions in the best manner. Their credit as public officials and individuals would alike be compromised by any violation in this respect. It is also impossible for men to be called upon to act under paper impulses or to be more actively freed, from the nature of their duties, from local or personal bias." That applies to-day as fully as it did in 1830. These principles are convenient all through of the parties interested—the destitute poor and those interested in the destitute poor. The question was not the equal distribution of rates, but the public convenience of all parties concerned. That has been recognised in the Local Government Act of 1903, sec. 60, sub-sec. 3. (Bonds sub-ventures.) The principle there, or the test to be applied always was the convenience of the parties. Now, so far as this investigation is concerned, it is the first time I have ever heard that physical boundaries are to be set to the terms "destitute" and "poor people." Why a person living in Donegal must go for relief twenty-five miles to Carrindagh, when the same person, by going across the River Foyle, can receive relief for the destitution he or she may be suffering from is, to my mind, a curious thing, indeed. The principle I submit is the principle of convenience, and, looking at this map, it is perfectly obvious that if you take Londonderry as a centre you circumscribe an area that is influenced in every way by Londonderry. There is not a measure of corn sold from No. 1 or No. 2 districts that is not sold in Londonderry market—not a stone of potatoes; and when the Land Commissioners are fixing fair rents on these holdings one of the very elements taken into consideration is what is known as proximity value, a special value laid upon farms owing to their proximity to a market town like Londonderry. I take my learned friends on their own grounds; it is admitted by all the witnesses that the eight Donegal unions should be cut down to four. The County Council have not taken the trouble to inform you which of these unions they wish to do away with. Mr. Drummond suggested that they should keep Donegal, Stranorlar, Millfield, and Inishowen. Which of these unions are going to have a share of the nine electoral divisions of No. 2? Every argument, as far as I can see, that has been used with respect to District No. 2 in favour of separating it and aggregating it could, with equal force, be applied to my District Council No. 1, if I were indeed to use the same arguments to slice off No. 1 from Londonderry and attach it to Larnaby Union. Every argument that my friend used on behalf of District No. 2 could with equal force be applied to District No. 1, if it were sought to apportion it to the Larnaby Union. The only argument my friend used with regard to the question of convenience was that the bulk of the Donegal County Council were more difficult to keep.

Mr. Drummond.—I make you a present of that.

Mr. Horner.—Therefore, it is simply and solely a question of sentiment. And with regard to the destitution of poor people a question of sentiment is actually set of it; it is entirely a question of the convenience of the poor and of the convenience of the Guardians in coming to attend their meetings. These are the two chief elements of convenience to be considered in this matter.

Mr. Leach.—I am sorry I have to trouble you with a few remarks. You have already had such a number of observations addressed to you, and it is really difficult to produce any further argument that has not already been addressed to you. However, I represent the crowded ground that everybody wants to have, and of all the persons interested in this inquiry it is the poorest I represent.

Mr. Drummond.—Did not Mr. Henry represent them, too?

Mr. Leach.—He represents the whole union; I represent the district alone. I think we should be allowed to have a voice in our own destiny, and should be allowed to say where we should ultimately find rest for the soles of our feet. We say that we should be where we are; that we are satisfied with what we are paying, and that it will cause great injustice if we are to be removed. I have listened, as you have carefully listened, to the evidence given in support of the proposed change. The case of making a case for a change lies upon my learned friends; and what is the ground they put forward for a change? I confess I have listened with some amusement to the different grounds put forward. They have first put up one ground, and then abandoned it. My learned friend has even now made as a present of the first ground he put forward, and, we must assume, his chief ground when he put it forward first, for the proposition he is here to advance.

Mr. Drummond.—It was a mere detail.

Mr. Leach.—Let me refer to one or two of them, and see whether there is any substance in them, and whether any Commission could be asked to act on such grounds, to change the present state of affairs, and that against the wish of the persons chiefly concerned. The first ground put forward was that it confused the book-keeper of the County Council; that is a very solid ground for making such a change as this and sweeping away a whole district from the Londonderry Union. Then Mr. Drummond also, in his opening speech, said that railway trains had altered the whole position—in other words that when this union was formed, and there were no railways, this union was in its proper position—but now because railways have been made you are asked to remove this portion from the Londonderry Union. I need not labour the effect of the railways, you know yourself what it is, you have heard the evidence given, and the railways have no bearing whatever on the question; it is absolutely impracticable to send these people by rail, and it has no bearing whatever. Then he said it would cause a reduction of one-third of the clerical staff; that has gone. When the clerk of the County Council was produced, and asked about this, he said he did not believe it would cause any reduction at all. That ground also is out of the case. These are the solid grounds which were put before you at the opening of this inquiry, on which you were asked to make this change against our wishes. Then Mr. Drummond said the convenience of the people; that was the first thing. "I don't know exactly who he meant by 'the people'; if he says the paupers, then I am prepared to agree with him, and if he means the people in this district, I say yes. But what has been the evidence? With one exception—and that a man who practically pays no rates—they are all who wish to remain as they are. Mr. Doherty was put up as their first witness to bolster up their case; he said the principal issue is 'it is our county, the others are side issues.' The only substance he saw, and was able to advance was that, because it was in the County Donegal—and that was to be the substantial ground, that sentimental ground upon which you were to make such a sweeping change. "All these things," he said, "about rates are only side issues." That is rather amusing when we come to hear what Mr. Healy put forward. When he came to state the ground upon which it was to be done, he said you will decide this case solely upon questions of local considerations. Where are we; what is the ground on which they wish this change to be made? Does it not come to this, that they have no solid ground on which to ask you to make this sweeping change? They were eating about for one reason or another, and as the case went on they had to shunder them and try to fish up some other ground. Mr. Drummond says it is an unimpeachable division that has been made of the unions; and Mr. Healy in opening said, would any man dream of a boundary such as the present. I venture to say that Mr. Healy, in his wildest nightmares, would never have dreamt of a boundary such as he wants you to manufacture now. They say gentleness came over from England or Scotland to carry out this matter—gentlemen who could have had no interest in it. I ask you is it not common sense on their side; could anything be more reasonable; the unions are formed by taking a large town and the district which lies immediately around it—the district which is fed by the town and in its turn feeds the town. Could anything be more reasonable? And again, when you come up here they take Inishowen and Carrindagh; could anything be more reasonable. What they did was, and I submit it was the only proper and reasonable thing to do, they took the town as the centre and the district which formed round the town, and yet we are asked would anyone in his sense dream of such unions being formed as were formed then. They were formed by hard-headed men of conscience, who formed them with a view to the practical use and benefit of the people and the paupers, and there is nothing that has happened since will change that. The whole physical construction of the county lends itself to the same thing; you have a chain of mountains cutting this off; if you look at the ordnance map and the roads across that will have to be traversed going to Carradonagh you will find the heights given, and you will find one road going from thirteen feet to 500 feet; the country is naturally cut off in that way, and not only the question of distance but the natural configuration of the country has lent itself to this most reasonable and proper construction of the union which was made before the unions were being originally formed. Apart from that you have the fact that Derry, which is the centre of this whole district, has provision for the whole district, and a great deal more. What they want now is, notwithstanding the fact that large sums have been recently spent in improving it, what they want you to do is to retain the number of 280 for a union that will hold 700; to reduce it to a still greater extent, and turn the paupers from these divisions into other unions, which, if they are to be made suitable, would cause a fresh expenditure, and these districts, which would then be brought into these two, would have to contribute again to the amount which would be necessary in these unions, whereas they have already contributed to all the building improvements and modern sanitary arrangements which have been made for the Derry Union. That is not justice, and I submit, would not be fair to No. 2 Council. You heard the amount that has to be paid annually for the repayment of these loans is £210. It is proposed to remove this district and throw the repayment of the whole of that on Derry alone. The question of the difficulty of sending paupers is a very serious one; you have heard the distances given, and the distances in every case to these two unions are greater than those to Derry, the natural centre. Suppose that one pauper is sent from each of these detached divisions to Derry, the amount which those paupers would have to travel would be eighty-five miles between them. Suppose these nine paupers are sent to Carradonagh—one from the centre of each division—the distance they would have to travel between them will be 210½ miles. Suppose they are sent from the centre of each to Letterkenney you will find the distance they will have to travel will be 182 miles. Besides that they have the difficulty of going over this range of mountains in order that they may get to Carradonagh. I ask what corresponding advantage is there to counteract these great disadvantages which must necessarily result on the unnatural breaking up of unions and farming, instead of natural unions, wholly unnatural ones. Then there is the great difficulty of the Guardians themselves going to attend meetings from here over to Carradonagh. If you look at the railway, they have to go to Carradonagh to hold their meetings and back again away from the city of their business, from their market town, from the place where they constantly are without any inconvenience; they will have to go to a place which is totally foreign to them, and as one of the gentlemen here, Mr. Hanna, told you, though he has attained a substantial age and lived in this territory so long, he never was in Carradonagh in his life until Thursday last. That shows that the district is cut off and that it is a place they are not accustomed to go to. Derry is their centre, and the place to which they all congregate, and they are to be asked to leave that and go away. One of their own witnesses admitted that if this change was made the Guardians would not attend regularly at Carradonagh or Letterkenney; of course they would not, and the result would be that these districts would be practically disfranchised, because the representatives who should go to represent them at such remote distances would be unable to do it, and they would be left unprotected. Suppose paupers are to go to these places how are they to be sent; if a pauper had money to pay a couple of shillings to go round to Carradonagh he is not a pauper at all in sense of a person who should be put into a workhouse. Who is to supply the train fare? Does it not come to this; if the train fare were to be paid it would add greatly to the expense of the Poor Law system; but does it not come to this in essence that the pauper who will be really materially benefited by the change will go to Derry still; the result will be that paupers from this district will go to the workhouses which cannot levy a single penny of rates upon the district they come from, and there will not be a single representative in the Derry Union of the district from which these paupers come. That is contrary to the whole intention of the Poor Law; the idea is that the place which supplies the pauper should supply a contribution for the expense of the pauper and should supply representatives to look after the interests of the district and of the paupers who come from that district. The result would practically be no rates to support these paupers and no representation for the place they come from. I submit that being so, which is what for here is altogether without reason, and the boundaries of the union should be left as they are. Let me take Killybegs, the centre of which is nine and a half miles from Letterkenney, it is twenty-nine miles from Letterkenney, and it is twenty-five miles from Carradonagh; is that within reason; is it sensible, and yet we are asked would any sensible man think of making the present convenient arrangement. Take Burt, the centre is eight miles from Derry, twenty-three from Carradonagh, sixteen and a half from Letterkenney. Take Killybegs, it is six from Letterkenney, thirty-one and a half from Carradonagh, and fourteen from Letterkenney. Take Birlinane, nine from Letterkenney, twenty-two from Carradonagh, twenty-two from Letterkenney. Take Inch, twelve from Letterkenney, twenty-four from Letterkenney, and twenty-one from Carradonagh. And yet you are asked to transfer these to these remote workhouses. Sec. 63, sub-sec. 2, gives power to make the alteration; but what is the first and most important restriction; it is "the boundaries of counties at large and unions as existing at the date of the Order shall be preserved except in any case where the preservation thereof would cause substantial inconvenience." Will it cause substantial inconvenience to leave this district where it is? And unless it is proved to you that it would, you are, by the Act of Parliament, bound to leave it where it is. I say that the whole question of inconvenience would arise by removing it and transferring it to the other workhouses. I have only just to refer you to the warrant under which the present Inquiry is held "To inquire whether any Poor Law unions could be dissolved with advantage to the ratepayers and without hardship to the sick and destitute poor." Our case is that it would cause very great hardship to the sick and destitute poor to do what you are asked to do; that that warrant coincides with the Act of Parliament under which the power is given, that under the circumstances no case has been made for the alteration asked for, but all the evidence tends to show that this district should be left as it is, part of the Letterkenney Union.

Aug. 16, 1893.

Mr. Drummond.—I am sorry for the arrangement that has necessitated my sitting so late, and I would not press you of all work it is not for the fact that this is the first public sitting of this very important Commission, and principles must be laid down and set upon, which to the end may, and probably will, have very far-reaching consequences. Because I am satisfied that the question this Commission has to deal with is so important and so complicated and so it needs of reform that it will not merely rest with the Local Government Board Orders, but I am perfectly satisfied that in the end it will result in legislation.

CHAIRMAN.—That is the object of the Commission.

Mr. Drummond.—The question is of such vast importance, dealing with the life of the poor all over Ireland, that it will necessarily lead to legislation. There is one thing I take the liberty of impressing on you, and that is, that if the Poor Law unions, no matter what alterations may be made with regard to dispensaries, infirmaries, or workhouses themselves, if they are to be properly controlled so that the people of each county will know how their rates are being dealt with and the persons responsible for these rates will have a proper mode of dealing with them and seeing how they are applied. The whole aim of this Commission should be to make the county the unit, self-governed, self-controlled, and responsible to the people through their elected county councillors. As long as you leave large tracts of any county over- I am not dealing with Donegal or Derry alone, it applies to all Ireland—you put away portion of the rates into another county to be applied as they think right by another body, you deprive the County Council of control over the proper administration of those rates; in other words you deprive the ratepayers, and you leave an irregularity inconsistent with the spirit of the Local Government Act. The County Council was to be the little Parliament of each county, and to make it effective, to make it operative, to make it, above all, economic, I think it is absolutely necessary for you to stop at making the county the unit, because where you have a large sum of money like this holed away, as in Strabane, to the County Tyrone, they apply it to their dispensaries, and here and there they may have a necessity for doing something that is purely local, and they may make the people of the County Donegal responsible for that. Whereas if the County Donegal Council had the administration of the whole of that rate they would not allow that to be done. You may be forming the greatest injustice upon a particular county by levying their money to be administered away and spent in another county, they are to pay, to have no real control, only answer a demand note and send a vast sum of money out of this county. I think that is the vital thing in this case that you should look at, making the county the unit. That the workhouses of Donegal should be reduced goes without saying; it is a cruel thing to have eight workhouses, many of them half idle, indicated on this poor county. What is to be said for this cutting up of Donegal. It was done in 1838; nearly seventy years ago this arrangement was made. Look what has happened! Since—the county cut up, divided into four Parliamentary divisions, divisions for county councillors and for district divisions, the old unions practically swept away, hamlets divisions swept away, all changed, and you are asked to leave these old overlapping and irregular areas which may have been right enough then—you are asked to leave this anomalous state of things, and have the County Donegal parcelled up between Tyrone and Derry. The thing does not admit of argument. I regret that so far as I was concerned I went into petty particulars and details. I don't think that minutes of the evidence given before us was of the slightest value. It is not a question of details; it is a matter of keeping books or of abolishing them, and a few miles here or there—all these things, when one takes a broad view of the case, vanish. It is a question of the administration by the ratepayers of the rates of a whole county, and I think, taking the principle laid down in the Equalization of Rates Bill in Parliament as the modern principle, there was far more violent opposition in the rich parts of London to contribute to the poorer parts than there is here in Derry and Tyrone, but Parliament laid down the principle which I ask you to bear in mind. Legislation is declared by law to be a county; the county is to strike the rate and administer the rate, and rich and poor alike are to be rated for the support of the poor. And why should it not be; is it not an extraordinary thing; look at what you have here, not rarely in the vicinity of Derry but take Strabane, there is a vast tract running from Strabane with its vacant workhouse down to Strabane, thirteen miles, and back to Raphoe, sending its rates into the most richer County Tyrone and leaving the poverty and misery behind. Take two divisions; in Strabane there is one electoral division, Cloughard, with a population of 2,304 and a valuation only of £2,547. Go to Castellan in Strabane, population, 1,378, valuation, £3,486, and contrast the wealth of one at the door of the other. The right principle to adopt is let the County Council of Donegal strike a rate and let that rate fall upon the rich and poor. You have the wealth of Donegal concentrated in Strabane No. 2 and Derry No. 8; that is the rich land of the County Donegal. These are the lands that were handed over to the planters—they have come down from generation to generation. It is not a fair thing to say that all the others are thriftless. This land—the rich land of the county—was given to a class and possessed by a class. I wish to be understood as not saying a disrespectful word of any gentleman in the case; one of the most prominent gentlemen appearing as happens to be an old personal friend of mine where I am intimately acquainted with for many a day and year, who took a very active part in the liberal politics of Donegal in years gone by; but I am looking at things as they stand, and it is not correct for my friend to say the people of this district are all opposed to it. The County Council is elected by the people; a justice of the peace, Mr. Gallagher, a man rated at £180 a year, he comes forward; who elected him—the majority of the people. It is a matter of prejudice. I respect these men's prejudices, they have a right to their prejudices—religious or political—it is not in any unpleasant manner I speak of them, some of them are old friends of mine. It is not the people of Strabane who are opposing this; a rich minority are opposing this who have strong views and strong prejudices; but the vast majority who elected Mr. William Gallagher are unanimous in favour of it; the rich minority are against it. But you are above one and the other; you are here to look at great questions, and on the opening of this Commission, that will lead to vast consequences, I say take the principle of making the county, self-governed, a unit. It is an outrage on decency and common charity, and on every principle that one respects, to find a county like Donegal, where you have on the western seaboard a vast number of poor people going to Scotland to earn the rest to keep the roof over them, and to find on the other side of the county the occupants of lands that were given to favoured people who say "We don't want to have anything to do with you; we prefer to be in either Tyrone or Derry." That thing should not be permitted. And I will tell you the consequences—being a Donegal man myself, I know the county and every term of its people, and no one has more respect for their strong and honourable views—I will tell you what will happen. Assuming for a moment that you will come to such a conclusion that will lead to these two divisions being in Donegal, these gentlemen, unwilling at this moment will, to-morrow or next day, be forced to come into closer contact and kindly intercourse with their neighbours; they will be humbled by it and lose these prejudices and be made better men; they will come to find that in the poor creatures at Carrinagh or Strabane or anywhere else they will meet kindly and sympathetic neighbors to whom, when they have more associated with them, they will cease to have the aversion, or dislike, or mistrust they entertain at the present moment. I believe you will be doing a moral good by saying that it is time the miserable prejudices that are disgracing this country so long and humiliating the country should cease. In Strabane they are losing money; by having this district thrown in with Strabane they will save money, it will cost them less, but perhaps the election will be somewhat different, and that is what is at the root of the whole thing—the voting power—that is what is distrusted. When all is over and said and done they will not regret if you make them Ouel. The valuation of Strabane Union is £112,000; you have heard already, and know that about £40,000 on an average is the rating of the Irish unions; take away £32,000 from Strabane and you are leaving £78,000 for Strabane.

Aug. 24, 1908.

Mr. Meehan.—Belfast has a valuation of over a million.

Mr. Drummond.—They say there are seventy-two Donegal occupants; if you take them away they will have a very small number. When you come down to Derry, you have Derry County and City, £158,000; suppose you take the Donegal divisions from them, you have nearly four times the amount of an average union. There is not a large number of inmates in the Derry Union, but you will have a rating at the back of it to support it of £158,000, and although they have that vast rating power, beyond the average proportion of the rating of Irish unions throughout the country, they say that Donegal, the rich district representing £34,000, should be added in whole only sending in five paupers. It is said of the 220 paupers that they must be nearly all Donegal people, because these workers in the shirt factories come in from Donegal and are the materials from which the paupers come. If you look at the number of paupers in Derry Union it is extremely small, something over a couple of hundred; the number of these factory girls is to be counted literally by the thousand, and if you consider the number of paupers and take away the factory girls there will not be even an average number of paupers for the ordinary inhabitants of Derry. But although these poor Donegal girls are to be counted by the thousand, working in these factories, the numbers of paupers is only a couple of hundred altogether, and you have a large city over and above them supplying that and half the County Derry, so such an exaggeration never was committed. There is no man in my occupying your time any further; you are asked now at the beginning of this Commission to leave Donegal split up. I ask you to make it one solid unit, and by doing that you will help the county in this way. We are all agreed that these should be at the very most four unions; suppose you leave these two vastly wealthy divisions as they are, then you would have to begin to set out the areas for these other four unions, and you would be met at every point by the poverty and the misery and the disadvantages they are under. Whereas if you throw this in the people will have a better valuation to work on, the thing will be much more easily managed—they will not have to rest the thing on the poor people, but will equalise it all over. The county must be re-adjusted altogether to have four unions, and would it not be an extraordinary result for you to divide all the poor parts of Donegal into four unions for their own support and strike out the two rich portions and turn one into the rich County of Tyrone and the other into the rich City of Derry, who have too much, for neither of them is very generous, especially Derry? This thing about distances, I would not waste your time speaking of; there are ambulances in all directions. The Strabane Union goes twenty-five miles into Tyrone, and there is no complaint about distances there. The Derry Union goes twelve miles into the County Derry, and there is no question about distances; but when you come to Donegal, "Don't do this or that because the five papers that come out of this district will be inconvenienced." Considering there are ambulances provided these arguments are waste of time. It is not a question of a few miles one way or another. Of course the conveyance of these people is to be thought of, but it is just as convenient now with roads and railway trains to go to one place as to another; but these are not the grounds. It is perfectly plain, upon which this opposition was made, because it is only right, you would not have truthful evidence, you would not understand this case if I did not ask the question—a question I would rather avoid asking—but you have two classes of people. In this district you have a rich minority who oppose it, but go among the Nationalists—the Roman Catholics—who are in touch with the country, they are all in favour of it. A strong prejudice leads the minority to prefer to go with their neighbours on the other side, and, as I said, on the other side, it is far for you not to recognise these prejudices, but to take the county symmetrical. It won't be symmetrical, economic, or in accordance with the Act of Parliament or the example set by the Equalisation of the Rates Act in London, once you have a County Council, once you have a penny a unit, whether a city like Derry, or Belfast, or London, once you have the unit, unless that unit has the control of its taxation, and if you have not the control there must be waste and injustice. You cannot have control unless the rates are expended in such a way that the County Council will have it under their eyes and know what is being done. Knowing the gentlemen who have come in to oppose this, and respecting them as I do, I think they will not regret it, and when the little, petty, old-fashioned prejudices are broken through they will shake hands with their neighbours and perhaps be glad of it.

Aug. 14, 1901.

The Sitting terminated.

SEVENTH PUBLIC SITTING—MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 21st, 1903. Sept. 21, 1903.

At the Board-room, Magherafelt Workhouse.

Present:—Mr. MICKS, (Chairman), Mr. MURTAGHAN, and Dr. COY BINGER.

CHAIRMAN.—I have just been asking Mr. Hastings, the Clerk, whether he wishes to give any evidence; we will be getting statistical information from him later on. He does not intend to offer any general evidence himself, but some of the Councilors here will.

Mr. JAMES E. O'NEILL examined.

2899. CHAIRMAN.—You are aware, Mr. O'Neill, of the terms of reference to this Commission?—Yes, I have a copy of them. I understood we were just here to answer any questions.

2900. Yes. I was just going to ask you whether you would wish me to proceed by questions, or is there any preliminary statement you wish to make. We will deal with each of these heads as they appear on the terms of reference. Having regard to the circumstances of this union, do you think it would be wise to dissolve it and incorporate portions of it with other neighbouring unions?—That is a matter that has been frequently before the Board of Guardians here and discussed at considerable length, and the result of that discussion was that the Guardians were strongly opposed to the amalgamation of the Magherafelt Union with any other union, or to the introduction of a portion of any other union in the county into it. We think that, considering the size of it, that it would be very undesirable to add to it; the area is a very wide one, and the valuation being almost one-third of the entire county, we think that in case it is decided to dissolve any of the other unions—

2901. Such as Limeravady?—Such as Limeravady; that it would not be fair to have any portion of Limeravady taken on to us, or our large area extended in any way, for the strong reason that even if Limeravady Union was divided between Coleraine and Londonderry No. 1, neither of them would have a much larger area or valuation than we have.

2902. Your position in the Union here is very unusual, so far as the latter part of your view, that is not wishing to get further territory to increase your valuation; your Council, as a body, are against that?—Yes; we feel that if there was any increase in the area of any union it would mean a corresponding increase in officials that would not compensate us in any way for the extra valuation.

2903. About how far is the most distant part of your union on the Limeravady side from the workhouse?—Our union here is very compact, and in fact it does not come close to Limeravady at all.

2904. It touches the boundaries, of course?—It does. Carnmoney lies alongside Glenshane, that is in Limeravady, and Owenagh.

2905. How far is Carnmoney from here?

Mr. W. Hastings.—It would be at least six Irish miles.

Witness.—Don't you mean how far it is from the town of Magherafelt?

Dr. A. Bigney.—The farthest point towards Limeravady?

2906. CHAIRMAN.—Yes, the farthest populous part?—There are two divisions here that in case the Commissioners would think it desirable to increase the boundary of our union that it is very likely would be considered—one of them is Glenshane, and the other Owenagh. From here to the boundary line in Glenshane would be eleven or twelve English miles.

2907. To the extreme bounds of your own union?—To the extreme bounds of our own union, from this point of view. (Applause on the map.)

2908. Where are these two divisions, Glenshane and Owenagh?—They are in the Limeravady Union.

2909. Are they thickly populated or mountainous?

Mr. Conway.—For the district of the country they belong to they are populous.

Witness.—It might be suggested that The Grove, another division, which is part of the Coleraine Union, ought to be merged into Magherafelt.

Mr. Hastings.—At one time it belonged to Magherafelt.

Witness.—With regard to that, the distance from Magherafelt to The Grove would be sixteen miles, that is estimating eight English miles from Magherafelt to Swatragh, and it is six English miles from Magherafelt to Swatragh, and two English miles from Swatragh to The Grove.

2910. CHAIRMAN.—I understand your general principle guiding you in this matter is that you would not like the boundaries of the union to be extended much, if at all, beyond a ten-mile radius?—We would not like it extended at all; but in case the Commissioners in their judgment thought it ought to be extended, we are simply pointing these places out to give you some idea as to how the matter should be dealt with, in case there should be any portion of other unions added on to us that the divisions which lie nearest to us ought to be taken in, and which could be most easily got at, and I would say, in case the Commissioners were of the same opinion, that Owenagh and Glenshane ought to be the two, but we would prefer not having them at all.

2911. For what reason do you think you ought not to have them?—Because we consider the union large enough, and we have our fair one-third of the entire county. There are large unions in Londonderry at present; supposing you dissolved the Magherafelt Union, it means there will only be three. We say that if there is only to be three unions we should be one of the three who have one-third, or almost one-third, of the entire county.

2912. Dr. Bigney.—Supposing there was another union dissolved, not Magherafelt?—It would be out of the question altogether.

2913. CHAIRMAN.—There are two considerations generally against adding—in the first place, that it would be inconvenient for the removal of the stock; do you think it would be very inconvenient to have the stock removed from Owenagh and Glenshane, if they are added to Magherafelt? Are the roads good, or fairly good?—The roads are fairly good. The only difficulty in reaching Glenshane or Owenagh is that we go there there they have to cross a long hill of about two miles, and it is a very bleak road. There is no doubt in the winter season it would be very undesirable to remove a stock person from either of these places.

2914. Even in a covered ambulance?—We have such an article here, but Mr. Agnew does not seem to think much of it.

Mr. Conway.—I suppose if we economise on the amalgamation we could afford to have it.

Witness.—The doctor is quite familiar with both these districts—his practice before he came here was about there—in fact, he has been over the whole district, and I think there is no person in the county could speak with more authority on the question than the medical officer.

2915. I am very glad we have him here. Was The Grove taken out of your union and put into Coleraine?

Mr. Hastings.—Not in my time, but I think there was portion of this union put into Coleraine.

Mr. James E. O'Neill.

Sept. 21, 1905.
Mr. James E.
O'Neill.

3006. What is the market town for these two divisions?

Mr. Convery.—Dungiven and Maghers are the two market towns. They sell their flax and pork in Maghers and Magherafelt; they come here with the flax generally. Derry city is a long way off, and an uphill road.

Mr. Hegarty.—They take some flax to Limerick, but latterly they come here.

Mr. Convery.—It is much easier to come here than to go to Derry city.

3007. Now, Mr. O'Neill?—Query No. 2 I think we have come to—"In the event of any union being dissolved?" I don't know whether, seeing that our union is going to be dissolved, the opinion of the Magherafelt Board would have any weight, but if it has any weight, we are of opinion that the workhouse should be used for the accommodation of epileptics and other demented persons, and, to simplify matters, we adopted the views expressed by Colonel Clark at a meeting of the County Council, which expresses our wishes:—

"The Chairman said that there were many present that day who, not being members of the Lunatic Asylum Committee, were not conversant with this subject. It would perhaps be desirable for him to mention that as yet the only county that had taken advantage of Section 75 of the Local Government Act, which enabled County Councils to take over workhouses or other suitable buildings for auxiliary asylums, was the County of Cork. By the indemnity clause and perseverance of the Bishop of Ross the old industrial schools at Youghal had been converted into an auxiliary asylum. The Chairman then read the following letter from Bishop Kelly:—

"Bishop's House, Skibbereen,
4th March, 1902.

Dear Lord Montagu.—Before undertaking the necessary works at the Youghal Auxiliary Asylum, the Cork Asylum Committee formally asked and obtained the Lord Lieutenant's sanction to the proposal of placing the institution under the superintendence of a good business layman, of having an external medical officer who would pay a daily visit, and of conducting the place generally in a plain comfortable style, fully providing for the physical wants of the inmates, but discharging altogether the expensive equipment required for the care of acute lunatics and the care of dangerous lunatics. To give His Excellency an idea of our intended style of treatment, we proposed to expend on the inmates 5s. 6d. per week per head, of which 2s. would come from local taxation account, and 3s. 6d. from the rates, against 2s. 6d. per head per week expended in the district asylums, of which 5s. would come from the local taxation account and 5s. 6d. from the rates. His Excellency formally sanctioned our proposed plan of conducting the institution, and we then proceeded with the works, which are in an advanced stage. As to the structural requirements, the matter is not quite so definite. The Youghal building would accommodate only 200; we proposed to enlarge it so as to accommodate 450. On the new building and remodeling of the old we proposed to spend £18,000. The Inspector of Lunacy proposed amendments in the plans, so that the cost would be £26,000. We fought the matter out—that was the first fight—and finally had our original plans approved of. The contract was taken substantially under £18,000. I do not remember the exact figures; I think £14,000 odd. Having fought out the structural question, we took out the treatment question, with the result already stated. If we were starting again we would not spend £14,000 on building. But you see we were on a tour of discovery—we were groping our way—and got committed to a building scheme before we thoroughly understood our position. Carl wants a second auxiliary asylum, and as soon as Youghal is completed I intend to propose the taking up of a workhouse for the number the actual buildings accommodate, and to spend in fitting it out only a many hundreds as Youghal is costing thousands. From the former discussion the Government cannot offer the slightest objection to that course. No doubt the inspectors will not be pleased, but their displeasure must remain an idle emotion. I entirely concur in your Lordship's view in regard to making 4s. per week from the local taxation account for these cases. If the claim is allowed the fund must run short. To allow the claim is, in my opinion, a financial fraud. The 4s. is granted by law for acute and dangerous cases; it is granted for harmless cases. But the lunatic who is granted a harmless lunatic may at any moment become dangerous, and therefore the 4s. is paid. According to that argument 4s. a head should be paid on all of us, for unhappily, none of us has a guarantee against mental failure. Our proposed method of conducting the auxiliary asylum removes the greatest difficulty in the taking up of a workhouse, for the medical officer and the officers of the union can now be stationed in the auxiliary asylum and at increased salaries. Of course some of the union officials would be useless, and persons specially suited to the work should be introduced. But, however, the proposed method amounts to any many difficulties. I hope your association will be able to shine on the movement."

3008. Yes, I saw that?—We adopt the views as expressed in that, but at a meeting held here previously we came to an agreement which was almost identical on that question. Colonel Clarke has gone fully into the thing, and given quotations from the letter of the Bishop of Ross, and other quotations, which would strengthen our view in the matter.

3009. That would be an auxiliary lunatic asylum for the Derry lunatics only?—Yes, on certain conditions, which are there set forth.

3010. I mean it would be an auxiliary for the Derry County Asylum?—It would.

3011. Would you not be rather awkwardly situated here as regards means of communication between it and Derry to be an auxiliary to the parent lunatic asylum of Derry; lunatics would have to be brought round by Coleraine, there is no direct communication between you and Londonderry?—Oh, yes, all our lunatics have to go to Londonderry.

3012. It is rather a difficult place to get to from here?—I am a member of the Asylum Board in Derry, and I can leave Maghers for the Asylum Board meetings at a quarter to 9 and be in Derry at a quarter to 11.

Mr. Convery.—Limerick is nearer to us again. It would leave us in Limerick in half an hour.

3013. It was mentioned at the inquiry in Derry that they had no reason to be surprised at numbers from here not turning up at Derry owing to the difficulty of communication between the two places?—It was not due to that; it was entirely due to the fact that I had overlooked the date, and I thought there was no use going up without sending in notice of my evidence. I was under the impression the inquiry began a week later than it did, and as far as that is concerned, that was the reason of my absence. On the question as between Coleraine and Londonderry, I have often stated at the County Council meetings that as far as Mr. Convery, Mr. Kernan, and other members of the County Council from the South Derry Division were concerned, it was immaterial to us—we were out for the day in any case—whether we went to Coleraine or Londonderry—it means the loss of a whole day—and supposing we would have to leave by an earlier train for Derry, it would mean we would get through the business quicker; it was no great loss by keeping down about sometimes.

3014. As regards the removal of patients, it would mean extra cost sending them on a two hours' journey by rail here; if they were sending the surplus lunatics it would mean considerable expense?—It would.

Mr. Convery.—And larger on the road.

3015. Then if they were sent to Limerick?—Yes; and besides it would not be quite so central as Limerick.

3016. If the union were broken up, what do you think would be necessary here in the way of provision for hospital accommodation for the sick?—I don't see how we could do without an infirmary here at all; at present a very large number of the inmates are in the infirmary. In considering that aspect of the question, in the infirmary we had sixty-five on the date of this return, 23rd of July, and in the house we had seventy-six, or, roughly speaking, we have almost half the inmates in the infirmary, and from that point of view it would be a very awkward position to be placed in to have no infirmary.

3017. You think it would be absolutely necessary to keep on some hospital here for the treatment of the sick of the union?—I think it would be absolutely necessary, because considering the remote position in which we are placed, I don't see how we could get on without a workhouse infirmary and hospital. The last pital here is utilised for nearly all cases, seeing that the county infirmary is in the City of Derry, and considering that we have here what is considered the best medical aid that is procurable in the county, they flock to our infirmary and hospital from various parts of the county, when perhaps they might go somewhere else. I am a member of the Infirmary Board, and I have offered the suggestion that they ought to go to the county infirmary. "Oh, no, we would much prefer going to Magherafelt," Dr. Hegerthy is there. I have been often answered in that way.

3028. That is as regards the sick; now, as regards the aged and infirm, would there be any difficulty in sending these to another workhouse? I don't suppose there would be any great difficulty, but then you remove them entirely outside the range of coming in contact with any friends in the locality. We have twenty-one male and female infirm, and some of the Guardians here think—I think the majority of them—that it would be a great hardship on these poor old people, a great many of whom had respectable lives and are in the workhouse through no fault of their own, that they should be entirely removed and isolated from all communication with their friends, and very often those old people when they are taken out to be buried by their friends in the local cemetery.

3029. These cases would not be suitable cases for any system of boarding out or out-door relief?—Well, in my opinion, no.

3030. You think it would tend to extravagance?—Apart altogether from the extravagance, I think that we could scarcely, at any reasonable rate of expense, provide for their comforts in a manner equal to what is provided for them here—they are kept clean, they get a suitable class of food, they are under the supervision of nurses who take an interest in them and who look after all their wants.

3031. I am speaking of the aged and infirm, not of the sick; have they nurses too?—Yes, there is a person in charge—the matron—she is in reality a nurse, but supposing now you transfer those people to houses in the locality and board them out, what class of houses would they be transferred to; the better class people or the ordinary class people would not have them at all. You must then transfer them to the smaller class of houses, or perhaps to labourers' cottages, and in what conditions would they be placed. We are aware that the accommodation in labourers' cottages is very limited, in fact, hardly sufficient for their own families, and to put these poor old people in the unhealthy atmosphere that they would unquestionably be in in any of these houses, would not tend to improve their health.

3032. From what class do the aged and infirm inmates come that are in the workhouse; do they come from the labouring or the farming classes?—They are not altogether from any one source, but I think a fairly large proportion are of the labouring classes.

Mr. Hastings.—I would think so.

3033. Farming, labouring, and also, of course, there are some house workers?—There are also some poor people who occupied small holdings, and perhaps got into difficulties and were obliged to sell out, and when their money was done came in here.

3034. They would not be much removed in position from the people who might be willing to take them in?—I think they would be a little removed, but not very much, but at the same time, we all know that a stranger taking in old useless people, who are simply taking them in for the purpose of getting so much per week for the keep of them, would not take the same interest in them as give them the same attention and care as they would if they were his own friends, or as they would receive in an institution which is looked after in the manner that a workhouse is.

3035. You would rather have them in the workhouse?—As their own interest, unless you wanted to put them in such an atmosphere as would kill them right off, and get rid of the expenditure; if you had that object in view you could attain that quite readily.

3036. A doctor recently said that the duration of life of infirm persons in a workhouse is very much shorter than that of infirm people outside the workhouse—I don't know what county he resides in.

3037. The evidence was given in Dublin—by Dr. Macleod, of Coonshill, I think!—All I know, as far as Magherafelt is concerned, that we have old inmates who are over ninety years of age, and who, I believe, have been in the workhouse for twenty-five or thirty years, and if the surroundings had been very unhealthy and the care bestowed on them very bad—if their food had been so bad as sometimes we are led to understand—they must have had remarkably healthy constitutions.

Dr. Hegerthy.—There are several over ninety.

Witness.—And Mr. Agnew tells us our institution is not the model place it ought to be, so what would it be if, in accordance with Mr. Agnew's ideas, it would be so attractive we would have these driving in their carriages here, like our friend in Denagh.

3038. Dr. Broome.—Could you give any idea of the number of returns of that class that are permanently here—the ones that are not sick, but aged and infirm?—I think the doctor will be able to answer that question, but I can give you a return showing exactly how many were in the workhouse on the 22nd July last. (Produced).

3039. Of the seventy-six in the house, how many have been in the house for a number of years—how many are coming and going?—The master would be the best to give that information.

3040. Perhaps you could tell how much it costs per inmate, taking all the costs of the workhouse?

Mr. Hastings.—The average cost is 3s. 3d.

Dr. Broome.—That is only for provisions; I want all the officials included.

Chairman.—Establishment charges, and everything.

Dr. Broome.—The total cost of the workhouse divided by the number of inmates?

Mr. Hastings.—I will make that out.

Witness.—I have a return here that Mr. Hastings made out.—Return of the number of inmates for the last five years, and the cost of maintaining same.

3041. Chairman.—I don't think that would take in as much as Dr. Bigger wants?—As far as the system of classification is concerned, we think that there could be a better system of classification in the workhouse without incurring much extra expense. It has been suggested that these should be divided under five headings—the first is lunatics and imbeciles—but if you decide on sending all to Lunawady, that would get rid of them. Then the children over three or over two; the children at present are kept separate. Then able-bodied paupers—the feeling seems to be that all able-bodied paupers—we have very few of them here—should be made to do whatever work they can, or some form of employment provided for them, so that they would be able to be self-supporting. The aged and infirm, the Guardians here seem to be of opinion that the aged and infirm who are in the workhouse through no fault of their own, but through force of circumstance over which they had no control, should be kept separate and treated separately from the ordinary rank of the workhouse class, such as tramps and new-comers.

3042. Would you say that most of the aged and infirm are of that class, that is of respectable people who come in through poverty; would you exclude from that list of institution people or deserving poor, would you exclude people who come in owing to drunkenness?—Yes, I think the Board would be inclined to do that.

3043. Would you consider want of thrift as a reason for excluding?—Well, people who are known as of the corner-boy class.

3044. You would not have many in Magherafelt of that class?—Not very many. I suppose 25 per cent. of the aged and infirm in the Magherafelt Workhouse would come under that head.

Mr. Hastings.—Who came through destitution, or no fault of their own?

Witness.—Oh, no, I would say 75 per cent. of them would be that.

3045. Would you say there would be 25 per cent. of the aged and infirm of the corner-boy and new-comer class?

Dr. Hegerthy.—Not at all.

3046. Do you think you would generally know the antecedents of the people who come in here well enough to know what it was drove them into the workhouse?

Dr. Hegerthy.—Generally; but sometimes they have spent a good deal of their time abroad—in Scotland, or England, or America.

3047. The questions you put to people seeking admission now are so vague you get no knowledge of their previous history, or to test their statements to see whether they are true or not, you accept them?

Mr. Hastings.—Quite so.

3048. Do you think there is much accurate knowledge of the causes that have brought them into this workhouse?

Dr. Hegerthy.—In nineteen cases out of twenty some-one, either of the Councilors or the officers, would know them.

Witness.—Had I known that question was likely to arise, we could easily have got the information. Unfortunately, the master is away on holidays now, but if you wish a summary of that we could supply it.

Sept. 21, 1900

Mr. James R. O'Neill.

Sept. 27, 1922.

Mr. James R.
O'Neil.

3039. No, I don't think so; it is a general question. Now this sick, and the tramps, all these classes exist at present: what variation in classification would you suggest?—We think that by adopting the General Act of England, we would to a large extent meet that. We have a power here who has got rules—

Mr. Hastings.—It was a letter we had seen from the Inspector-General to the Royal Irish Constabulary to look after the tramps. He had an extract of that printed, and I think he occasionally reads that for their information, and, as a rule, gives them a very long lecture, with the result that there are not nearly so many coming here now as used to come.

Witness.—The general opinion is that if the English Act was applied to Ireland it would, to a large extent, meet the difficulty, for it would bring them in contact with the Constabulary. I don't know whether you read the report of the General Council of the County Council of Ireland with regard to this matter.

3040. I have—I was one of the committee who drafted that report, and entirely concur in the resolutions arrived at, and also in the subsequent resolution of the General Council, which asks every Board of Guardians to give expression to their views on the report.

3041. Has that been printed in pamphlet form, the proceedings of the Council?—No, they have not yet.

3042. But they will be?—They will be.

3043. Would your mind letting me have a copy of them?—Certainly.

3044. What variation in classification would you make beyond having extra privilege for the poor and infirm who come in through no fault of their own?—I think if it was left optional to the Guardians to give them some little extras.

3045. Privileges to the deserving aged poor?—Yes, and some little extras; give them, say, first-class diet, supposing there were two or three classes of dietary.

3046. It has also been suggested they should have rather more liberty about going in and out of the workhouse for recreation purposes?—It might require some person to go with them.

3047. If they deserve treatment worthy people?

Mr. Hastings.—The condition they returned in would not be deserving poor.

Witness.—If we could deal with them in the way handiwork are treated in certain asylums. I was once attending an entertainment of the asylum there. I went over to him and said: "What are you doing here?" "Oh," said he, "I am in charge of these chaps; we took them out to see the regatta." So if we could fall in with an inmate that could be trusted to that extent to take charge of the rest, I would certainly say they should get out; but to incur the expense of an attendant, we would not like that.

3048. What Mr. Hastings says would be a very good test of their character?—Yes; when they came back you could see whether they were deserving poor or not. The odd times they get out now it would be hardly fair to judge them by.

3049. With regard to the boarding-out of children: have you any boarded out in this union?

Mr. Hastings.—None.

3050. Did you never try?—We were thinking of trying it, but the Local Government Board disposed of that by making it a necessary part of the arrangements that we should send an attendant with them to the schools, and we came to the conclusion that the children, in a great many cases, might be just as well here. There is no doubt about it that if they got into respectable homes and were looked after in the same manner as the people's own children would be looked after, it may be all right; but we are told that in some instances where they are boarded out they don't receive that attention, and care, and supervision that they ought to receive, and as a result the children that are brought up in a workhouse are just as good members of society as perhaps the so-called boarded-out. There are exceptions to every case, but generally speaking.

3051. I think you may take it that in a very large number of unions there has been a very careful inspection. In Cork and Limerick, where the system was first started, and they have hundreds boarded out, and in the Dublin unions, the reports of the Guardians themselves, the Visiting Committee, Inspectors of the Local Government Board, and of the Inspectors recently appointed, are very satisfactory; some few cases are found in which an unfortunate choice has been made of the foster parent, but in the general run of cases the natural kindness of the human heart is sufficient to induce people to take these children?—There is certainly a great deal more to be said for boarding-out children than old persons—people would be very human not to take an interest in children; but it is natural not to take much interest in old people.

3052. I suppose you have no statistics about the children who have gone through the workhouse—their after life?—I have not, except from what we see of them.

Mr. Hastings.—The schoolmaster might be able to give you information on that point.

3053. Do they come back again?—I don't think they do, as a rule.

3054. How are they absorbed into society, as a rule?—As farm servants and house-servants. I knew we had a girl in our place that was taken from here, and she was one of the best girls we ever had.

3055. What happened her when she left you?—She is still a servant, and a well-conducted servant, too.

Mr. Hastings.—I think the schoolmaster occasionally has communications from some of the boys who were in school and are now in Africa.

3056. Would it be any harm if you tried a couple of cases of boarding-out?—I don't believe the Guardians would have the least objection.

Mr. Convery.—Not if there was a suitable home.

3057. That is necessary; you could not do it unless you found suitable people. I think a trial of the system in a few cases would be interesting?

Mr. Convery.—But the minds of the Guardians, from their knowledge of the district, was that there would be a great drawback to it, the difficulty of getting suitable homes.

Witness.—There is no reason two or three of them should not be tried, seeing, from what the Chairman has stated here, that the thing has turned out satisfactorily in other districts where it has been tried, there is no reason we should not try it.

3058. Is there anything else under No. 3 query?—Well, chargeability is most a matter in the hands of the Commissioners.

3059. Have you many people in this union who are outsiders and who are charged to the union; for instance, would people from Coleraine come here?—I could not answer that.

3060. You have not felt that as a pressing injustice that you are supporting the people of other districts?—It rarely arises.

Mr. Convery.—It occurs here occasionally.

3061. The Guardians under those circumstances as 3061. The Guardians under those circumstances as rather apt to say that part of the rule at all events ought to be over a larger area, and the union ought not to bear the cost of people outside the union altogether, and it would be better to have some portion of the cost of maintenance spread over the whole county? That would apply more to places like Coleraine and Londonderry; we have a more rural portion here, and it would not affect us.

3062. Someone said just now that people who had been working in England and Scotland came back here?

Mr. Hastings.—Occasionally, but not very many.

Witness.—That is only people who originally belonged to the locality. We had the case of a man sent back from Scotland, and he had been thirty years in Scotland, so we thought it was rather hard that after spending the best part of his life in Scotland, when he became useless for all purposes, he should be sent back and charged on the district in which he was born; he never acquired a settlement.

Mr. MURPHY.—Five years' residence in Scotland would be sufficient.

Mr. Hastings.—But after inquiry we found he had not been one year in any particular locality; he was going about labouring.

Mr. MURPHY.—Five years' residence in Scotland entitles him to relief or one year's residence in a particular union.

Mr. Convery.—Is there an amendment of the law, because as far as our knowledge went they would never then have no matter how long they had been in Scotland.

Witness.—Has that change taken place as regards lunatics?

3063. CHAIRMAN.—I think it is only as far as paupers are concerned; there is a special law about lunatics?—A grievance that we often met in Derry is people who land in the port of Derry from various other centres going on the spree and constantly becoming insane, and they are put into the Derry Asylum and kept there for perhaps an indefinite period. Of course it does not touch this inquiry; is there any amendment of the law as to that?

3064. We have no power to go into that!—Then, surely, the chargeability of relief, the Guardians are unanimously of opinion that it should be made an electoral division charge, and placed on the division in which the person relieved resides.

3065. You would rather outdoor relief was made an electoral division charge?—Yes, and charged on the electoral division in which the person relieved resides.

3066. Do you think there is sufficient provision in this union for the hospital treatment of the sick; do you think any other additional hospital is necessary in your union?—We do not.

3067. Now, does any change occur to you as being desirable, either in administration or finance?—We have no answer to make to that at all; we made no suggestion.

3068. As regards No. 7, how far payments could be got in aid of the expenditure upon the sick and insane in hospitals and infirmaries?—Our answer to 7 is that we consider it would be very desirable to have a few wards made available for those persons destitute who are desirous of contributing towards their support.

3069. You would have pay wards?—Yes; people who are not absolutely destitute and who could afford to pay something, from 2s. to 5s. Under existing circumstances there occasionally come in people who are willing to pay, and who actually do pay, and we think these people should be in a ward by themselves; there is plenty of room for them, anyhow.

3070. How would you fix the amount of the charge: would you leave that to the Guardians, acting under the advice of the medical officer?—I think so, because the circumstances of the family may be different, and while some might be able to pay 2s. a week, others might be willing to pay 10s.

3071. I suppose you would take really anything you could get; if they could pay 1s. a week even, it would be better than getting nothing?—In the Derry Infirmary the way they work it is this, they fix the lowest amount at 5s. a week.

3072. Of course, that would be absurdly high?—Yes, I know; and then anything that the governor who recommends the patient suggests over and above that in consultation with the patient, the patient is asked to ask: "Do you wish to pay anything?" And supposing a person says he does not want to go in as a pauper, they will not refuse anything, but 5s. a week is the lowest I have heard suggested by any of the patients.

3073. Take a labouring man whose child becomes ill; he may be able to pay 1s. a week?—Yes, but the point is, would he be willing.

3074. Would you think it wise that Guardians should have power to recover?—I would say, with an ordinary labouring man, it would be hardly fair.

3075. I mean giving you the discretion, it would not oblige you to recover, do you think the Guardians should have power to fix the scale of contribution?—It would be all right to have the discretion.

3076. If you came to a case where a labouring man was making from 12s. to 15s. a week and one child got ill—if the child were at home, I suppose it would cost 1s. a week to keep it—it would not be too much to ask him to pay what he would save by the child being away?—I don't know what occurs in other districts, but here the wages are so small it would not be fair.

3077. No matter how small, the child would cost something—I understand the point, however, if it were made discretionary.

3078. Every little thing of that sort will reduce the amount going on the rates?—I think that is stopping at straws and jumping over—

3079. If you leave it in the discretion of local people you would not have hardship indicated, you would give them a chance of recovering, which they have not now got?—If you give them discretionary power; but I should not like it to go out that a labourer should be called upon to pay for the treatment of his child or any member of his family, because my experience of labouring men is that they find it very hard to exist under the circumstances.

3080. Dr. EGERTON.—Circumstances alter so much; a labouring man might have two or three of his children working, and in that case you would insist on his paying, and in the other case you would let him off?—When it is left discretionary, of course.

3081. CHAIRMAN.—As regards tramps, what would you do?—We have already dealt with that—the English Casual Relief Act.

3082. You would not go beyond that; you would not put them absolutely in the hands of the police, and let them go to the look-up if they wanted any refreshment or entertainment?—No; I think with regard to tramps, considering the very small sum it costs annually, that after all, making provision for tramps is not an un-mixed evil. What we find here is that in localities such as Naghera, where there is no union, when a tramp comes there and he finds he has not the means of getting a lodging for the night, there is danger of his going behind some man's haggard, and perhaps smoking, and setting it on fire, or going to the cottages of farmers and stealing fowl. The cost of maintaining these people in the workhouse is so small it is in the interests of the people to keep them there; they are safer there, but I would certainly agree to have the Casual Act extended to Ireland.

3083. You think that would meet the difficulty?—I think it would; tramps may be a very undesirable class, but they are human beings, and it would be too hard that they should not have a place to cover them, considering it only costs 11d. here to provide a tramp with his supper, breakfast, and bed.

3084. What is your total for the year for tramps?—Mr. HASTINGS.—24.

Witness.—Then there is a corresponding benefit to the people, who have to run no risk from these fellows prowling about at night; it is well-spent money. I don't say that is the view of all the members of the Council, but it is my personal view, that we are really doing the people a favour in the end by the few shillings we spend on tramps.

3085. Is there anything else you would like to add?—I want to go as near as possible to what was decided upon at our meeting. I don't think there is any other point that I was instructed to give evidence upon that has not been touched. Mr. Smyth, the Chairman of the Board of Guardians, was appointed with me to give evidence, but he is not yet in attendance. Perhaps Mr. Convery, the Chairman of the Rural District Council, would like to supplement what I have said.

MR. CHARLES CONVERY EXAMINED.

It is more by accident than anything else that I am here. I know the views of the Board very well with regard to all these matters, and Mr. O'Neill, I think, has fairly stated them.

3086. CHAIRMAN.—Is there any point on which you differ?—The differences are so trifling it would be scarcely worth while. A great many Guardians, with regard to tramps, agree with Mr. O'Neill, that it is a side way of dealing with tramps, that the law should be made more stringent to deal with them; for instance, absolute men travelling through the country call at houses, and if they find there is no person in the house but a woman—

3087. They are a bit sturdy?—Yes, I think the law should be remedied in that respect.

3088. That would be by means of police supervision?—Yes, the police have pretty far times just at present, and if there was a law passed dealing with tramps, a good deal could be done to do away with the tramp relieve altogether. You will find in some places two or three generations of tramps travelling all together—father, son, and grandson. If that could be dealt with it would be a great relief to the country.

3089. I suppose you have got to know a good many of these people by sight?—Yes.

3090. Have they any contrivance or real way of making a livelihood?—Their principle is: the father perhaps, or mother, come in advance and collect charity along the way; the father will have some kind of musical instrument, or sing a song, and have another collection; the little ones will come later on, and when they get into town, will enjoy whatever they have collected by the road, and, as a rule, they manage to get to the barracks.

3091. Are they chippy musicians?—I don't say they are musicians at all; they are usually all musicians.

3092. And tinkers?—They are partly tramp, too; they do a little work.

Appl. 21 1902.
Mr. James E.
O'Neill

Mr. Charles
Convery.

Sept. 21, 1905.

Mr. Charles
Convery.

Mr. O'Neill.—We had an entertainment here on one occasion, and the fact that we had so many musicians in the house added very much to the entertainment.

Witness.—In case anything would be added to the Magheradelt Union, it is in the midst of the Guardians generally that owing to the large size of the union for administrative purposes, we would be perfectly satisfied with the union as it is, but looking at the map, Ovenshagh and Glenshane would be much more suitable for adding; it would be easier for the people to come here than to go to Derry city.

3093. Or Coleraine?—They are off the Coleraine direction altogether. I would say that these lie principally between Magheradelt and Derry. The Grove already belongs to Coleraine; the people there are connected with Coleraine by business, and every other way, and the facilities for travel are very much in favour of Coleraine.

Mr. Agnew.—The Grove belonged to Ballymoney until lately.

Witness.—With regard to the system of rating, there is some difference of opinion; a great number of gentlemen think that by reverting back to the old order, it will confer immense good on the ratepayers. I have some experience of the old system and of the new, and I don't know that the change would tend to much more economy or saving of rates, because there were three classes of rating under the old system; all these things have now been put together, and, in my opinion, it would not be worth changing and keeping different accounts.

Dr Andrew Hegarty.

Dr. ANDREW HEGARTY examined.

3096. CHAIRMAN.—There are some matters on which you can give us information: where do the majority of the sick come from: are they spread pretty well all over the union?—They are; they are spread over the whole union.

3099. There is no part of the union that is really too remote for the people to come in?—No, there are some parts twenty miles; it is twenty miles from this to Six Towns.

3100. Do they come in from there?—There are a few laborers up there; they are nearly all mountain farmers.

3101. Have you many cases that district coming in, or do you think the distance is rather prohibitive for hospital treatment: do you get any cases of fever or accident?—There is no case of fever from that district since I came here, or any accident either; there was a case of hernia up there not long ago.

3102. Is this the nearest workhouse to that district?—It is.

3103. What would be the next nearest?—Omagh.

3104. It was close to the old Gortin Union?—Yes; it is twenty miles to Omagh from Six Towns.

Mr. Hastings.—I don't think it is twenty miles from this; 15½ at the very outside according to the scale.

Dr. Breen.—It measures about twelve according to the map.

Witness.—The last visiting ticket I had took me within half a mile of the police barracks.

Mr. O'Neill.—Would you ask the doctor did he ever know, when he was doctor in Draperstown, any case of hardship occurring by reason of the distance of the locality from Magheradelt?

3105. CHAIRMAN.—Were there any cases which you thought ought to have been sent into hospital, but were not?—I daresay there were, but I tried to deal with them myself.

3106. Mr. O'Neill.—No case of particular hardship has arisen during that time?—I have had hernia cases at night, and things of that sort, that I would have sent in if there had been a nearer place.

3107. CHAIRMAN.—If it had been within two or three miles?—Yes.

Mr. Convery.—Having regard to the class of roads from that to Omagh, would you ask the doctor would it be any more inconvenient to that district to go to Omagh than to come here; the facilities of travelling here are much superior?

Witness.—Oh, yes.

3108. CHAIRMAN.—If you had a hospital in Draperstown, would you have been able to send those cases of hernia to it?—Yes, but they can be dealt with at home.

3109. Dr. Breen.—Would Coolstown not be nearer to Six Towns?—It would, but then there is the mountain between.

3094. Has outdoor relief increased much since the change of rating?

Mr. Hastings.—A little, but substantially it is going back again.

Witness.—A Guardian looks at the list and don't see anybody from his district perhaps, but it may be that there are people from another district that under the old system he would have to pay for. There are districts where the poor can be lodged with farmers; there are other districts where the larger farmers don't care to give shelter to the poor. The poor go to those districts although they belong to other districts, and I don't think it would be a recompense for the change.

3095. Do you think the Guardians are more ready to vote outdoor relief when it is a union charge than they would be under the old state of things?—They are not just so particular, but I can speak for this Board here. When we find there is any extravagance, we take pains to check it. In my experience it does not amount to anything material.

3096. About how much is the outdoor relief at present?

Mr. Hastings.—£15 or £16 per week.

Witness.—It is about the average that it was five years ago.

3097. Was there anything more you wish to add?—Well, no; Mr. O'Neill's evidence has covered everything and represented the view of the Council. Anything I have to say would be merely a corroboration of what he put before you. I was listening carefully to his answers.

Witness.—Magheradelt is very central for this district; it is only four miles from the Lough, and after all it is very central for the road.

3110. CHAIRMAN.—And you have a good ambulance for bringing the sick in?—After this Commission I expect we will get a four-wheeler.

3111. You would like a four-wheeler?—I would.

Mr. O'Neill.—Supposing you had a four-wheeled vehicle and had to go up some of these lanes in Glenarvan, how would you manage?

CHAIRMAN.—I can tell you how it would be done, by taking it up as near as possible to the place, or by going into a field and turning it.

Witness.—As a matter of fact, there are hundreds of horses in the district to which you could not take the two-wheeled machine.

3112. You would have to carry them; there would be a heavy chair inside the ambulance, and the patient could be brought down by two people and put into the ambulance?—In some of the houses in the Draperstown district you could not get unless you had a horse.

3113. How many sick have you in the infirmary at present?—Sixty-five or sixty-seven.

3114. Are many of these chronic cases: are they incurable cases?—There are not many curable cases at present; there is a fractured arm that will get better, there are several epileptic cases, and there are fits; they are running about together.

3115. Are they in the sixty-five?—I would expect so.

3116. How many would you have exclusive of that?

—Eighteen of that.

3117. Then between forty-five and sixty would be your real sick?—There are then a lot of old people, and some days some of them are sick and some days they are not; some days they are not able to be up and some days they are.

3118. You keep them on the sick list?—Yes; and there are others that are altogether bedridden.

3119. Have you many of the same class of people in the infirmary ward?—In the body of the house there are; they are relatively better in the way of strength.

3120. Are there any bedridden people in the aged and infirm wards?—Oh, no, everyone is able to get up, and as soon as they cease to be able to get up, we take them into the infirmary.

3121. What is the number of beds in the infirmary proper?—I don't remember now.

3122. You have never been pinched for space?—No, but a few more would have occupied all the beds in the spring of the year.

3123. Are you in favour of sending the insane cases to an asylum?—I don't think there is any necessity, except a noisy one, that comes in and disturbs the rest.

3124. What way are they cared for here?—It could not be better; there is a wardmaid, besides the nurse.

Sept. 21, 1900

Dr. Andrew Higney.

3125. The nurse of the infirmary has died charge over them?—No, the workman has died charge.

3126. Then she is supervised by the nurse?—That is on the female side, and there is a workman for the male side, both paid.

3127. What class of people were they originally, the workman and workwoman?—Respectable people.

3128. I mean they were not inmates here?—No, not that I am aware of.

3129. Have you many consumptive cases?—There is just one at present on the female side; she came from Belfast.

3130. Have you many of these cases coming in?—Only an odd one, and I don't encourage them to come.

3131. Dr. BROWN.—Bringing them into a ward where there are nine or ten other people is not desirable?—No.

3132. CHAIRMAN.—Could you not get a separate ward?—There is not an available ward here at the present time.

3133. Do you think it would be a great advantage if there was a country or other institution, say for a group of counties, or for a single county, for receiving consumptive patients?—I do believe that would be an advantage.

3134. Yes, as medical officer, would be very glad if you had power to send a consumptive case to a large extern hospital?—I would, certainly.

3135. You then would encourage consumptive people to come into your infirmary, so that they could be sent there?—I would.

3136. Do you think that would be a more suitable use to make of a workhouse than as an auxiliary asylum?—I would say so.

3137. Owing to the large amount of consumption there is in the country?—It is terrible, and in this union is spreading rapidly.

3138. Is it thoroughly well known by the people that it is an infectious and hereditary disease?—You cannot get these people to be careful about their spit.

3139. Do you think it would be desirable to have these people in a special hospital?—I do, if it was in a suitable place.

3140. You discourage them coming in owing to having no separate accommodation for them?—I don't encourage them, but if there was a place purposely for them I would.

3141. Do you think it is realized generally in the county or district the great importance of dealing promptly with consumption; do you think it is realized what a danger it is?—People have a very lively feeling of the danger of it to themselves, but you can hardly get them alive to the urgent necessity of watching the expectation or disinfecting it. You will get intelligent people sometimes, when there is a large number in the house besides the sick one; they begin to dread its attacking the others.

3142. Dr. BROWN.—Have you seen any cases in which they are isolated, that is prevented from sleeping with the other members of the family?—The houses in the country at the present time are not large enough for that. I don't allow anyone to sleep in the same bed with the consumptive.

3143. Not here, but in the country I am speaking of?—I am speaking of the country, but you could hardly provide a separate room for each; it would be out of the question in nine cases out of ten.

3144. They often suffer from consumption for a long time before they come under your notice?—Yes.

3145. Therefore they have been sleeping with others and spreading the disease?—Oh, that is so. It is wonderful the ravages it is making in the Draperstown district.

3146. CHAIRMAN.—Is that among factory people or the ordinary agriculturalists?—There is no factory there, but the infection has got into the district some way or other, and it is spreading. I remember registering twenty-one deaths in the quarter; there were seven of those consumptives, and six people over sixty years.

3147. Dr. BROWN.—Then practically it caused the larger part of the death-rate?—Practically; it is not uncommon for a husband to take it, and in a year or two the wife will follow. I heard of a woman's death the other day, and her husband died two years before.

3148. CHAIRMAN.—Fever never made such ravages?—Not at all.

3149. I mean in the old times?—We have not much knowledge of that.

3150. Could you not by any management set aside, or recommend the Guardians to set aside, or find out some way of setting aside a ward on each side of the infirmary?—You would have to build.

3151. Could you not make any provision without building?—You can see for yourself if you take a run through the house.

3152. If you take away the inmates you would have two wards then: could you not put such pressure on the asylum authorities as would induce them to take away the inmates?—It would hardly correspond with my views to send those people to the asylum; they have enough in the asylum without them.

3153. They are building a large addition at Grantha?—These people are able to run about.

3154. But meanwhile you have no ward for treating the greatest scourge of the country?—That is a fact.

3155. These inmates may be running about here, but they are not running about with any advantage.

3156. I don't know whether the committee had before them at that time the idea of trying to get the inmates drafted away?

3157. When will the new buildings at Grantha be ready?

Mr. O'Neill.—It will be a considerable time, but even when they are ready I question very much whether they will be enough.

3158. You have only fifteen or twenty inmates here; if you could get these people away it would not create a crisis in Derry. It may give you the means of saving many a useful life.

Mr. Hastings.—There are many wards in connection with the body of the house that might be utilized for the benefit of the inmates, if that is permissible.

3159. It is permissible. Did the Guardians go into the question of relative cost of maintaining inmates here and in the asylum?—How?

3160. Did you ever consider the relative financial cost of maintaining an inmate here and in the asylum?—There was some talk about that.

3161. What conclusion did you come to on that?—We did not come to any conclusion on that.

Mr. Hastings.—If you removed these inmates to the body of the house you have plenty of space there—if that is permissible at all—and then they would have to have someone with them.

3162. We will take a look over the house, although it is not one of our functions. But it would be, as the doctor's evidence so clearly and forcibly shows, of the greatest advantage to consumptive people that you should set apart two wards?—Yes, and induce people to come in.

3163. Of course, but it would relieve a great many families. You could take whatever cases you thought most urgent or desirable in your medical opinion. It is a question that must be settled on bigger lines?—Yes, but I would rather two or three counties would combine and form a sanatorium for their special use.

3164. Yes, but merely for the emergency, without incurring any great expense?—Yes, as a temporary expedient.

3165. Dr. BROWN.—Did the Guardians post up the large posters with reference to consumption which they received from the Local Government Board?—Yes, all over the union, and sent them to managers of schools and clergymen throughout the union.

3166. CHAIRMAN.—Members of families get careless as to the risk?—Yes, and then other members of the family think it is not consumption at all.

3167. Dr. BROWN.—Do you think the usefulness of the infirmary would be increased if it was separated from the workhouse?—I don't think it would be increased.

3168. People would come into it more readily if it was not a workhouse infirmary?—Even under the Guardians I think the usefulness of it could be enlarged in this way: if there were two wards provided for private patients, for any doctor in the union to send patients in and come and look after them.

3169. You would not suggest that it should be open for other doctors to come in?—I would indeed; I would make it more or less a local hospital.

3170. CHAIRMAN.—You would make the dispensary doctor honorary outside medical officers of the workhouse?—For their own patients.

Sept. 22, 1902.

Mr. T. F. Henry.

Mr. T. F. Henry examined.

3171. CHAIRMAN.—What exactly is the evidence you wish to give?—I was a member of the District Council some time ago, and I was one of the committees appointed to meet with the Coleraine and Limavady Guardians on the question of amalgamation.

3172. During what years were you a Guardian here?—When the Local Government Act came into force; for two years, until I resigned.

3173. What happened at that committee?—The thing dropped through; the Guardians seem to all the unsons to be against it; everyone was afraid of his own union rising.

3174. What was your own private opinion?—My own private opinion is that there should be only one workhouse for the whole county.

3175. Where would you put it?—At Coleraine.

3176. Would you break up Magherafelt, Limavady, and Derry?—I would.

3177. What provision would you make for the sick of these three unions?—I would have a cottage hospital, or hospitals, on the same system.

3178. You would have a cottage hospital in Magherafelt and Limavady, and what would you do as regards Derry city?—I have not considered Derry city much. I would expect there is a cottage hospital there likely at present.

3179. It would hardly be a cottage one for Derry city?—I would expect it would be a hospital where paying patients could pay.

3180. You would not propose to send any of the sick to Coleraine from these three unions?—Not except chronic cases. I would consider these should be a carriage set apart on the railways.

3181. I don't know whether the doctors would approve of that mode of treatment?—I was sick myself in another country, and it seemed to work well enough.

3182. Where was that?—In Australia.

3183. You were moved when sick on the railway?—Getting better, convalescent; bad cases, of course, would be attended here.

3184. What advantages do you think would accrue from your scheme?—I think it has come to this in Ireland, that there is no call for so many workhouses, owing to the few patients. When I walk through this workhouse, and other workhouses, I find there is a large amount of empty space.

3185. You heard the doctor's evidence about the difficulty of providing two extra wards for consumptives?—I would not agree with him in that; when I walked through it a few years ago there were plenty of wards with no person in.

3186. In the main building?—In the main building.

3187. Then it would be chiefly on the ground of economy you would suggest these changes?—And the people have a prejudice against going into workhouses and workhouse hospitals.

3188. Then you would give them a cottage hospital?—Yes, or district hospital.

3189. Unconnected with the workhouse management, of course?—Yes.

3190. Who would you make the doctor of that institution?—I would say honorary doctors after the present ones would die.

3191. The present workhouse doctors would remain, and then after that?—Honorary doctors.

3192. Do you think there would be much competition for the post?—Every place I have been I have always found that the honorary doctors attended the patients well.

3193. I don't know how many doctors there are here?—Dr. Hegarty.—There are five in Magherafelt at present.

3194. You would make them honorary doctors of the hospital?—Yes.

3195. Derry?—There is a cottage hospital at Coleraine.

CHAIRMAN.—It is not on the rates.

3196. CHAIRMAN.—You mean a district hospital?—Certainly.

3197. Sufficient accommodation for the sick of the district?—Yes, it would be.

3198. Kept up partly by the rates and partly by paying subscription, and then the ordinary patients coming in, you would let them go to Coleraine?—Certainly.

3199. The great argument against that is that the present staff would have to be kept up or pensioned off, and that there would be no economy: you think that would be getting less year after year?—I do, and if it was tried I see no reason why there should not be a grant to the rates.

3200. From what source?—From the Government. I believe it would be a saving in the end.

3201. Of course you know there are large Government grants at present?—But I mean a lot of the staff would have to be pensioned off.

3202. You think the Government ought to pay the pensions?—Yes. They created a Poor Law system that is not required in Ireland, and I would be of opinion they should pay something towards doing away with it.

3203. The sick you would keep in the local hospital. The able-bodied would go to Coleraine without any difficulty, you think the chronic sick could also go there?—Yes.

3204. Now as regards the maternity, women going to be confined, would those go to the local hospital?—Certainly, to a ward.

3205. Under the supervision of whom would outdoor relief be given?—Of the doctor.

3206. Of course, the Coleraine Union would cease to be the Coleraine Union; it would become the County Derry Union, so to speak?—Yes.

3207. And every district would return representatives, according to your idea?—I would still say there should be a District Council for the roads.

3208. We have nothing to do with that?—The different districts should be represented at the Guardians, or the same Guardians appointed a committee to look after the patients in Coleraine; go a certain number of times.

3209. Mr. MURPHY.—Do you think that the workhouse in the County Derry would be sufficient?—I do.

3210. Do you not think that it would put the people to great inconvenience going to Coleraine from other districts?—No, I do not.

3211. Then your suggestion is that the present workhouses should be utilized as district hospitals?—Some of them may be too large for that, but perhaps the buildings could be utilized for something else.

3212. You think the only objection is that the local people don't wish to give up the institutions because they are a means of profit to the neighbourhood?—I don't think we wish to give them up; they would be afraid of a different system; they all like to hold their own. What is the reason for that I cannot tell.

Mr. Lewis Barrett examined.

Mr. Lewis Barrett.

3213. CHAIRMAN.—Now, Mr. Smyth, we will hear your views. The first query we issued was "Whether, having regard to the extent, population, necessities of the sick and destitute poor, facilities of locomotion, economic condition, and proper administration of the Poor Law in the County of Londonderry, it would be expedient to dissolve any of the unions, wholly or partly contained in the said county, and, if so, what arrangements, whether by amalgamation or otherwise, should be substituted therefor?"—As far as I am concerned I am strongly opposed to any of them being dissolved, because I cannot see that it will save the rate anything, and that is why people are calling for a change. I think we are quite as economical on the home side as we have been any time before, but when we have to keep up dispensaries, and a medical staff, and nurses, I hold we would be saving nothing, but causing a great inconvenience, and my opinion is that the Poor Law system should be altogether for the benefit of the poorer classes, and what would inconvenience them least. That is the main object, and if you have to remove them to great distances, that is a very great inconvenience.

3213. You think the existing arrangements in your union are sufficient and satisfactory, and you would have them done?—I do, we are situated in the centre of the union, and anybody can come in here without any great inconvenience. Some people have to come from sixteen miles from the mountain district, but if they had to go in addition the thirteen miles to Coleraine, Lomavady is the only one I could see possibly that could be dissolved, but there would be a great inconvenience in that, so, for people from the outlying districts to go to Coleraine, I have every road in the County Derry as well as I know the streets of Maghlinah.

3214. The second query is only contingent on your thinking that a union might be dissolved. Then the third question is a very wide one: "Whether, with or without a dissolution of any union, it would be possible—(a) by an arrangement for the maintenance of any class or classes of paupers in the workhouse of another union; or (b) by combining a number of unions for the purpose of Poor Law relief; or (c) by boarding out workhouse inmates, to make better provision for the classification and treatment of the inmates chargeable to the said unions?"—It is a big question; it has cropped up here previously, individually, but perhaps it might not work well. I would be in favour of boarding out, but the question arises, what class of people would you give them to. However, I think there are reforms to be made in the relations between the Local Government Board and the local boards, so that there may be less friction and less red-tapeism, but, on the whole, we work pretty well, I must say.

3215. You think the Guardians are too much restricted by red tape in their proceedings?—Yes.

3216. In Scotland they sometimes board out inmates of the harmless kind—something like the inmates that Mr. O'Neill had the pleasure of seeing at the Derry workhouse—those would appear to be the people that might be boarded out?

Mr. O'Neill.—In my opinion, those are the people that should not be there at all.

Witness.—I think if any class requires to be within doors it is the insane or semi-insane.

3217. People who are never dangerous in their actions?—There is nothing here to hurt the feelings of old people who were well brought up. It is a certain degradation to be a pauper; those have not the same feeling, and I would have them inside.

3218. You would not board out inmates?—No, I think not.

3219. Do you think any change is necessary to be made in the chargeability of relief: do you approve of union rating?—Divisional rating; our Board have a strong feeling on divisional rating for outsiders. I think indoor should be a union charge.

3220. There seems to be a general opinion among the witnesses examined up to the present that the hospital accommodation in the union is quite sufficient: do you agree with that?—I think so.

3221. The only district about which there seemed to be any doubt was Six Towns?—It is remote, but we have no complaints. I think if there was any greater distance there would be.

3222. Do you think if people who had been accustomed to go shorter distances were obliged to go very much longer, would there then be complaints?—I think there would.

3223. Does anything occur to you at all—any means by which you could secure a more economical system for the carrying out of the Poor Laws in this country, for the maintenance of the sick, the insane, and other classes in the workhouse?—The general feeling here is that we might have, as we had in the past, when I came here as a Guardian first, four nurses; that is the only thing we could see where economy came in. I don't say that we could dispense with any of these; to have a Poor Law system at all, I don't see how it could be carried out more economically.

Dr. Hogarty.—I think the expenditure on the nurses at present is less than it was ten years ago.

Chairman.—That would rather surprise me.

Dr. Hogarty.—Between parties occasionally employed, Mr. Hastings—I think the expenditure now would be greater than it was ten years ago.

Mr. O'Neill.—I would agree with the doctor if he said four or five years ago.

Chairman.—That was the transition period.

Witness.—That is why I would not go in for any great change.

3224. Chairman.—You really think the present system, on the whole, is an economical system, and that it is administered economically here, and that the sick poor of the union are sufficiently well cared for?—I think so; at the present time everything appears to be going well. I was a Guardian during the "sickness" and I came back to the new Board, and I must say things have been improving; everything appears to be going well, and there is less discontent than there had been in the past.

3225. Is there much discontent about the rates outside. I don't mean casual grumbling; is there any real discontent, or do the people think that considering what has been done the rates are not high?—If there had been separate rating there would be no complaints about the rates being high. The expenditure on the Poor Law side of the house is not great at all, but the county work expenses have increased. In the Poor Law there is no increase.

3226. It is as it was except for the nurses?—Yes, and that is comparatively small.

3227. I expect there is a little increase on the nurses?—Oh, yes.

3228. Dr. Broome.—You don't object to that; you don't think it is excessive?—I think it is almost insupportable; everything has been going so well that no one will find fault. The people are quite satisfied when they find everything is going well in the boardroom, and they think the poor people are attended to.

3229. And the hospital has a good name in the country, and they don't object to come into it?—Only that it is a union hospital.

3230. Would you rather have it a district hospital?—There might be some paying patients, only they don't like the idea of coming to the union hospital, but otherwise I know the country appears to be well satisfied with the way everything was carried out.

3231. Chairman.—You would approve of paying wards in the district hospital under the Guardians' management?—I would.

3232. You think it would be possible to make a material deduction in the rates by means of getting payments or contributions?—It may not be very much, but I think some parties would avail themselves of it.

3233. It may more than counterbalance the increase in the nursing expenses?—I think it would.

3234. Would it not give the hospital a better name if the people had to pay a little for coming in?—It would, and there are parties who would come in that would not come in under present circumstances.

3235. And there are a great many here who could pay a little, or for whom something could be paid?—I don't think there are many at the present time.

3236. I have found in a great many workhouses people in the workhouse who could pay a little; it may not be half the actual cost of the food maintenance, but still every little helps their independence, and means a reduction in the rates?—I don't think those who come here could, as a rule, afford to pay.

3237. Take a payment of 1s. a week; that would not appear to be much, but yet it would amount to a great deal of money?—Would you not require to have a statute?

3238. You would, but we are here to collect information on which a statute could be founded. What I asked Mr. O'Neill was, whether he would approve of discretion being given to the Board of Guardians or District Council, whichever was managing the hospital; discretion to charge such sums as they might think proper—not obliged to charge it, but if they thought a payment could be made they might fix the amount?—My opinion is that it should be left to their discretion.

3239. But you would not see any objection to their being given a discretionary power to charge?—I think they should be given a discretionary power; it would give the Guardians a sort of standing; if they had more power they would look closer into it; it would give them a greater sense of their own responsibility.

3240. And it would give them a power of reducing the rates. As regards tramps, would you let the existing state of things go on?—You would nearly have to change human nature before you could stop that.

3241. And you would give them the accommodation they have been getting?—I cannot see anything to improve on it, except the authorities get some measure outside; it is not a very big cost, and my experience of tramps being out is that they commit far more depredations than would counterbalance the cost. I have known first in hay stacks, and the like, and thieving; but I would like to keep them separated from the others, and not in touch with them. There are even different tramps, they are not all alike.

Sept 21, 1908.

Mr. Luke
Hwyth.

Sept. 31, 1903.
 Mr. Louis
 Bayly.

3242. Some, I suppose, are men really looking for work?—Yes, a great number are professional vagrants; there are others differently circumstanced. I see them from time to time.

3243. Is there anything else you think of yourself that you would like to add to what I have asked you?—I don't think there is any more.

3244. Mr. HUNTERMAN.—You said you were opposed to amalgamation, and the reason principally was that you saw no economy in such a course: if it could be shown to you that there would be economy in amalgamation, would it change your view of the matter?—If there could be economy to any considerable extent, that would counterbalance the inconvenience to the patients.

3245. Are you aware that the large cost of the Poor Law service is due to the establishment charges, and if those establishment charges could be reduced, considerable economy could be effected in that way?—Except you cut down the official staff, and it appears you cannot easily do that.

3246. The present professional staff would have to be provided for, but the future takes care of itself: do you not think that if, instead of having so many institutions under the present costly system, we had one or two large institutions in a particular county, and had in addition more district hospitals, that would provide for the needs of the sick, and if this could be done on a cheaper scale, would it change your view of amalgamation in any way?—If I saw the reality of that, that it did cut down the expenses without inconvenience; but certainly as this is for the benefit of the poor.—

3247. If you could be shown that better provision could be made at a less cost—because that is the object of our being here to-day—if that could be shown to you by a change of the system and amalgamation?—I have seen nothing yet to convince me of that.

3248. It is simply because you don't see that there would be any economy in amalgamation you take the strong ground of not wanting any change?—Yes.

3249. About the boarding-out of children: you don't seem here to have adopted that system?—We have not adopted that.

3250. If it could be shown to you by neighbouring institutions that the boarding-out works exceedingly well, would it strengthen you in the view as to boarding-out children?—Yes, I would be in favour of boarding-out.

3251. Omagh is not very distant, and in the Omagh Union they have adopted that system for a number of years. The little children are sent out to the houses of farmers, and we have applicants for every child, in fact competition for children in respectable houses; and those children are visited not only by the relieving officers regularly and at stated times, but by a committee of ladies, who go and look after them, and see how they are taken care of—look to their hair to see they are kept clean and well looked after. The larger children that remain in the institution are sent to the National school?—I am strongly in favour of their being sent out to school.

3252. Would it not be a good thing for you to make some inquiries on that subject?—I am more in favour of boarding-out than I am for amalgamation.

Mr. O'NEILL.—If the evidence has closed, I should like to draw attention to the reply of the Chief Secretary with reference to the medical officers, in which he stated:—"I note the medical officers of Ireland have a great deal to do, and their salaries are not high, but for all that I think their claims would be most deserving of recognition if they abandoned those positions and awaited the result of the Commission which is now sitting." So far I have not noticed that you have taken any evidence with reference to that.

CHAIRMAN.—Have you seen the further answer of Mr. Wyndham?

Mr. O'NEILL.—I have not seen it. Some people, and I share the opinion with them, are of opinion that if it is part of the functions of this Commission to report on this question.—

CHAIRMAN.—It is not.

Mr. O'NEILL.—We should at least have an opportunity of giving evidence.

CHAIRMAN.—No, it is not.

Mr. O'NEILL.—That settles the matter.

CHAIRMAN.—Mr. Wyndham explained subsequently that it was not part of our function.

The sitting terminated.

Sept. 25, 1903.

EIGHTH PUBLIC SITTING—TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 29TH, 1903.

At the Workhouse, Letterkenny.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURTAGHAN, and Dr. CONY BIGGER.

CHAIRMAN.—Do you represent the County Council?

Mr. Edward McFadden, M.P.—No, I do not.

CHAIRMAN.—Are they represented professionally?

Mr. McFadden.—I don't believe they are.

Mr. John Mackey, Solicitor.—Not so far. Mr. William Wilson is the solicitor for the County Council. I don't believe they are represented.

CHAIRMAN.—I suppose the secretary will come here?

Mr. McFadden.—Not for the inquiry, I think; he is here at the Revision Sessions.

CHAIRMAN.—The first witness I should have called, if he had been here, would have been the secretary of the County Council. I suppose you are all familiar, gentlemen, with the objects of this inquiry. It is unnecessary for me to make any statement on the subject; you will understand the nature of it. Is the chairman of the County Council present?

Mr. McFadden.—No, he won't be here. The vice-chairman will be here, Mr. Magee. Have you got the resolutions of the County Council?

CHAIRMAN.—I have.

Mr. McFadden.—The secretary could only tell you that they were passed.

CHAIRMAN.—They are rather bald. I want somebody that will give us a little in detail what the Council thought.

Mr. McFadden.—That was not raised in my time.

CHAIRMAN.—You appear now for Letterkenny?

Mr. McFadden.—And for Milford along with Mr. Mackey.

Mr. Mackey.—I appear for the Milford Board of Guardians.

CHAIRMAN.—Are there any other unions represented here?

Mr. McFadden.—Glenties is represented by Mr. McNelis.

CHAIRMAN.—You propose first to offer some evidence on behalf of Letterkenny and Milford?

Mr. McFadden.—Yes, but our witnesses are not here at present.

Mr. Mackey.—My Milford witnesses are not here yet.

Mr. McFadden.—The Letterkenny Urban Council is represented by the Town Clerk and two witnesses.

Mr. JOHN G. LARREN, Clerk of the Urban District Council, examined

3253. CHAIRMAN.—The Urban District is altogether within the Union of Letterkenny?—It is, sir.

3254. And has the Urban District Council passed any resolution on the question of reform of the Poor Law or the proposed amalgamation of unions?—Beyond, sir, giving replies to the queries sent out to them.

3255. You have got the queries before you?—I have.

3256. What is their answer to the first query?—That it would not be expedient to dissolve any of the unions wholly or partly contained in the County Donegal.

3257. They think everything ought to remain as it is?—So far as the County Donegal is concerned; that was by a majority of the Council.

3258. What was the voting?—There is two.

3259. A majority of one. Are either of the gentlemen who voted in the minority present?—Yes.

3260. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—What is the number of the whole body?—Nine constitutes the entire number.

3261. CHAIRMAN.—Are you aware of the names or signatures used during the discussion. What were the reasons put forward in favour of and against amalgamation?—Some thought that as far as taxation was concerned—

3262. Those who were in favour of amalgamating some of the unions, what did they think?—They thought it would reduce taxation.

3263. Did they go into any figures or calculations?—No.

3264. Those who were against breaking up any of the unions, what was their view?—They believed that the taxation would be reduced, and that there was not the same call for the number of workhouses now as at the time they were originally founded.

3265. And they thought a smaller number of workhouses would meet the requirements?—Yes, but those that were against amalgamation considered that it would be a hardship on the poor; travelling, and covering them so far.

3266. Did they answer the second query, which was that they would propose should be done in the event of amalgamation?—They did. In the event of any union or unions being dissolved, and the workhouse or workhouses being no longer required for Poor Law purposes, such workhouse or workhouses could be utilized for the purpose of technical instruction; a better purpose they thought they could not be put to.

3267. Then they are apprehensive that some workhouses might be broken up?—Quite so. In the event of any being broken up they thought that a better provision also should be made for the classification of inmates.

3268. Did they sketch at all or outline what they meant by a better classification?—They thought the inmates could be divided into classes. The deserving poor should have separate accommodation from the tramp or disreputable class, and married couples should not be separated on coming into the workhouse, as at present.

3269. The classification they wanted to make was one between deserving and undeserving poor?—Exactly.

3270. Did they look into the question at all of hospital accommodation?—Yes, they considered that.

3271. What were their views on that?—They considered that, seeing the situation of the Denagall County Infirmary, it is not adapted at all for the county; it is on the verge of the County Donegal at Lifford. They think the county infirmary should be in a more central position.

3272. Did they at all consider where that would be?—Naturally, they considered near Letterkenny.

3273. Dr. BIGGER.—They did not consider the railways into Strabane were any great advantage to the county infirmary?—They considered the county infirmary of Denagall is on the verge of Donegal, and you have to travel the whole county to get to it; it is not central.

3274. For driving?—Moreover, they had it in their minds that some years ago it was contemplated to have that infirmary transferred to Letterkenny.

Mr. John G. Larkin

Sept. 25, 1882.
Mr. John G.
Larkin.

3275. Don't the railways run into Strabane?—They do, but not all; from Farnah side you would have to go round by Derry.

3276. The larger proportion of the railways?—Yes.

3277. CHAIRMAN.—As regards Query No. 4, which is: "Whether, in the event of an amalgamation or combination of unions being carried out, or any other arrangements being made for the relief of the destitute poor, any changes in the laws and procedure as to administration, and in the chargeability of relief, would be desirable?"—No; they think there should be no change in regard to chargeability of relief. They are in favor of union rating for all Poor Law purposes.

3278. Mr. MURPHY.—Sanitary also?—All Poor Law purposes, I said.

3279. CHAIRMAN.—Did they say what other area of chargeability they would consider except the union. What did they compare with the union; was it the old divisional?—Yes.

3280. And no other. They did not consider the question of county chargeability?—No.

3281. Or even they did not consider the question of what you might call the country rate—that is, the rate all over Ireland for certain purposes?—No; they compared it with the old electoral divisional.

3282. I don't mean for bearing all expenses, but some sort of division, which would ease the taxation on those most highly taxed, and come to a sort of rate-in-revival?—No, they did not consider that.

3283. They merely were considering whether union or divisional rating was better?—Whether union or reverting back to the old divisional rating, and they were in favor of union rating.

3284. This query was also meant to touch wider questions. The Council did not view it in that light. The fifth query was:—"Whether, having regard to the number, capacity, and situation of the workhouse hospitals, county infirmaries, county fever hospitals, and other hospitals existing in the county, additional accommodation is required for the proper treatment of the sick poor in any union, district, or locality in the county, and if other accommodation seems desirable, how it may be best provided without entailing undue hardship upon the destitute or on the sick poor of the union?"—Their answer to that was that as the county infirmary was not in a suitable situation, they think there should be one provided at Letterkenny which would be central.

3285. One could hardly expect the Urban Council of Letterkenny to consider the hospital accommodation in very remote parts of the county, such as Gweedore, and the Glenties, and Glenties?—No; they did not consider that question.

3286. Query 6:—"Whether any administrative and financial changes are desirable in order to secure a more economical system for the relief of the poor, including the sick, the insane, and other classes of the destitute?"—To that query they gave no reply.

3287. Query 7:—"How far, in the case of persons who are not destitute, it would be desirable to introduce a system of payments or contributions in aid of the cost of treatment of the sick and insane in hospitals or other such institutions?"—The Council considered that a system of payment should be introduced in infirmaries, as far as possible, the amount of such payments to be a matter of arrangement between the persons receiving the relief and the governors of the institution.

3288. When they talk of governors they include Guardians?—Certainly.

3289. The amount of payment is to be a matter of arrangement?—Yes.

3290. That could hardly be done if a man comes in with a broken leg. You could not keep him outside the gate until he arranges how much he will pay?—Oh, no; they meant when requiring into the circumstances of each case—a sliding scale.

3291. That it should be discretionary on the part of the governors or committee to charge what they considered would be desirable?—Yes, after inquiring.

3292. Into the earnings and condition of the people?—Yes.

3293. "8.—What change, if any, seems to be possible and desirable as regards the treatment of the vagrant poor generally known as tramps or casuals?" What is their view on that?—The Council considered that the law as regards vagrants should be more rigidly enforced on the admission of tramps into the workhouse—the rules regarding tramps should be strictly enforced—and, further, that the tramps should not be entitled to discharge until after the expiration of such a period as may be decided upon, the present limit of three hours being too short; and they should be made to do a certain amount of work.

3294. That would mean a very large expenditure, of course, in enforcing the work?—Yes, but there would be some work against that.

3295. There was nothing else except these answers?—That is all.

3296. Is there anything else that comes to yourself?—No, I don't desire to add anything.

3297. Mr. MURPHY.—In the event of this workhouse being dissolved, did the Council consider how it should be divided except for technical purposes?—No; but the Council did not contemplate that Letterkenny should be dissolved.

3298. They never considered it should be converted into an auxiliary asylum, or a separate asylum?—They did not.

3299. What would your own views be?—I don't think it would be suitable; it would necessitate an additional staff, and would be adding to the taxation.

3300. But one staff would be able to manage the whole?—I don't consider it could.

3301. It is quite near the asylum?—It is. An additional staff would be required; you would always have to have a doctor on the premises.

3302. Did you consider the 76th section of the Local Government Act as to alternate lunatics not requiring any special medical attendance. Could it not be converted into an auxiliary asylum for the treatment of those cases?—It could, but you would have to have an additional staff.

3303. Attendants, but not doctors?—I don't know whether it would be necessary to have a doctor resident or not.

3304. CHAIRMAN.—Are there two doctors at present?—Mr. MURPHY.—Yes.

CHAIRMAN.—I suppose you could put up one of them here?

Mr. MURPHY.—Yes.

Dr. BACON.—Don't the grounds adjoin?

Mr. MURPHY.—There is about 250 yards between.

3305. Dr. BACON.—Has the asylum ground on both sides of the road?—Yes.

3306. And the inmates work on both sides?—Yes.

3307. And are the grounds on the workhouse side very near the workhouse?—It is just a few minutes' walk.

3308. Mr. MURPHY.—Of course, every person knows the asylum is overcrowded?—It is.

3309. And they are building an additional wing at present?—They are.

3310. Mr. MURPHY.—I believe you have lived in Letterkenny all your life?—All my life.

3311. And you have seen a large number of inmates of the present asylum occurring in the streets of Letterkenny?—I have.

3312. Don't you think those are perfectly harmless lunatics?—Yes.

3313. As much as fifty or sixty?—Yes.

3314. And 200 sometimes?—Yes.

3315. Dr. BACON.—With one attendant?—There may be more than one attendant.

3316. Mr. MURPHY.—Those men are all capable of doing work?—They work on the farm.

3317. Supposing those men were transferred to the present workhouse, would that relieve the congestion of the asylum?—Very much.

3318. Would you not think that desirable, having regard to the taxation?—But then what are you going to do with the inmates you have in this infirmary—going to cost additional hardship on them, removing them elsewhere.

3319. Assuming for a moment that this workhouse was done away with and turned into an auxiliary asylum, would you not think that Letterkenny would be more suited than any other place?—It would, except that, be more suited than any other union in the county.

3320. That would be for the reception of lunatic inmates and idiots?—There would have to be several structural alterations that would be very costly.

3321. That would be a matter of more detail afterwards. Supposing that was done, where would you suggest, as you have a very good local knowledge, where would you suggest that the infirm inmates of the and some more unions should be treated, allowing all the accommodation here entirely for the idiots and lunatics of the whole county?—I suppose Milford would be one and Stranorlar would be another.

3322. You think these two would meet the requirements of the County Donegal generally?—These two workhouses.

CHAIRMAN.—Breaking up all the other unions except Milford?

Mr. Mosley.—Not necessarily; but break up Letterkenny Union as a union, treating it as an auxiliary asylum for the whole county, and then have two unions hospitals for the County Donegal, one at Milford, and the other any other place you like.

CHAIRMAN.—But Milford, certainly?

3323. Mr. Mosley.—Or take Donaghmaddy, or any place at all—we will have something to say to Milford presently—but Letterkenny would be more suitable as an auxiliary asylum than any other place.—Now, I am afraid if you make Letterkenny an auxiliary lunatic asylum, you won't get the same capitulation grant for the lunatics relieved.

3324. ASSESSING the harmless lunatics were transferred here, could they not be kept in this place at a much cheaper rate to the county than up above?—I am afraid not, if you only get half the capitulation grant.

3325. Do you know the average cost of an inmate in this particular work?—No. I know it used to be, in years gone past, over £24.

CHAIRMAN.—That is for food only; you would have to add all other establishment charges.

3326. Mr. Mosley.—What would it come to when you added all others?

CHAIRMAN.—You never made it out?—No, I did not.

Mr. FRANCIS WARD EXAMINED.

3327. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Urban Council?—I am.

3328. And a member of the Board of Guardians, too?—Yes.

3329. The Urban Council considered this question of the amalgamation of unions, and there was a voting of three to two. Were you among the three or the two?—I was in the majority.

3330. What was the view of the majority?—The view of the majority was, as the Town Clerk, Mr. Larkin, has very succinctly stated, and I could not do more than just repeat what he has said. About Query 4, I have seen reason to change my mind since.

3331. "Whether, in the event of an amalgamation or combination of unions being carried out, or any other arrangements being made for the relief of the destitute poor, any changes in the law and procedure as to administration, and in the chargeability of relief, would be desirable?"—I have been since studying the matter over, and I think that a change in the procedure of the law and in the chargeability would be necessary, in fact essential, and that for the purpose of introducing technical instruction, which would become a source of regeneration, able-bodied and intelligent men would be able to earn a living themselves, would be more than self-supporting. I have seen sixty years ago in the Blind Asylum at Glasgow, where blind people were doing handwork that was in a great measure self-supporting; such as basket-making. One of the reasons is a feeling of touch. These things could be taught in Donegal as well. I even introduced here the basketmaking which would generate the growing of ories, and would be an industry that is not known here hardly at all. The swamps that are now unproductive could be made very productive by the growing of osiers, by giving technical instruction in the arts, and several other purposes—could be made self-supporting in this institution—and therefore I say that there should be a change as regards Query 4, a change that would not only benefit the community generally by giving technical instruction, but the children at home in their places could also be employed at this business.

3332. That is not technical instruction, though; that is factory work you are talking of?—I think it comes under the head of technical instruction. I may be mistaken, but I am still of the opinion, and will hold that opinion until I see reason to give it up for a better. The reason I changed my opinion from agreeing with the original answer to Query 4 is that I saw reasons alone in the writings of others to change my opinion, and whenever I found a better reason than I thought I had myself, I thought it would not be right to be wedded to my own, but to give in to those who know more; therefore I do not hold with the Council in Query 4. These observations, coupled with what the Clerk has stated, is all that I could say. I agree with him.

3327. I don't think it was ever done. They like saying our average cost is £24. 9d. as compared with £25 a year in the asylum, and that looks a very big thing; but then the asylum takes in everything—cost of buildings, and everything—and when you tot up all the expenses of the union on the same lines as the Letterkenny Asylum, they are very different figures, and then the capitulation grant reduces the cost of asylum inmates. I suppose one of your grounds for stating that this would be more convenient would be in the event of any one of these insane or idiotic developing serious symptoms, that he could be more easily removed to the ordinary asylum?—Yes, it is so near hand.

3328. Have not the asylum authorities acquired a very large farm?—They have.

3329. On which, of course, the people confined here could do manual labour?—Yes.

3330. CHAIRMAN.—How many people have you here that could handle a spade?—As a rule they are not able-bodied.

CHAIRMAN.—Are the County Council procuring any evidence to-day?

Mr. McFadden.—I don't think so. They named Mr. Donaghy, the Chairman of the Council, and Mr. William Doherty, the Chairman of the Finance Committee, and I communicated with both, and I had a conversation with Mr. Donaghy, and he told me he did not intend to offer any evidence. Mr. Wm. Doherty wrote he was not sure whether he could come or not.

Sept. 25, 1902.

Mr. John G. Larkin.

Mr. Francis Ward.

3327. You thought that no workhouse should be broken up at all?—In the county, except this is an exception to that. Query 4 would be an exception to that, and it modifies my opinion.

3328. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—In regard to Letterkenny?—Yes.

3329. Dr. BRIDGES.—Then you are of opinion that it would be good to dissolve some unions?—I don't go beyond the county; I do think it would.

3330. CHAIRMAN.—What unions would you break up?—As regards the breaking up of some unions, and the leaving of others, I think as a central place it would be well to leave Letterkenny and Donegal Unions, which would be a central portion of the North-west of Donegal, more so than Milford. Milford and Letterkenny are rather near each other. I am only making suggestions. I think that that would serve, or if Donegal would not be chosen, say Inishowen. It is partly strangely circumstanced to Donegal; it is in the centre of a large tract of the county.

3331. Is there anything else you would like to say?—No, there is not, except an extension of technical instruction which would become self-supporting, in order to any institution in which it would be followed up. We are greatly at a loss for technical instruction. We have poured in on us the products of other countries from the Continent that our children could be employed at here; we are trying them and paying dearly for them, whereas it would give an immense amount of employment if adopted here, but we cannot do that without technical instruction. We have not sufficient funds to apply for that purpose; we are helping them accumulate, but when they are accumulated, it is expected we will be able to bring in technical instruction on a large scale.

3332. Mr. Mosley.—You have lived in Letterkenny for a long time?—Over fifty years.

3333. You know the Letterkenny Asylum, I suppose, from it was built?—I do.

3334. Of course it has been tremendously enlarged?—It has.

3335. At present I think, I am right in saying that there are a large number of harmless lunatics confined there?—I believe so.

3336. Have you not from time to time seen them going up the streets of Letterkenny when they were making a new burial ground?—I have.

3337. Large numbers of them in charge of a few men?—Yes.

3338. Those you would consider harmless lunatics?—I would, indeed.

3339. Assuming this Commission would think that some of the unions should be dissolved and a workhouse made an auxiliary asylum, would you not think that Letterkenny would be more adapted for that than any other union?—I do.

60s. 10s. 10s. 1s.
Mr. Francis
Ward.

3380. You know the accommodation you have in this workhouse?—Yes.

3381. For how many, please?

Mr. S. B. Walters.—680.

Mr. Mackey.—And the hospital, I suppose, would accommodate fifty or sixty more?

Mr. S. B. Walters.—That includes all.

3382. Mr. Mackey.—Assuming there were 150 or 200 taken out of the present Letterkenney Asylum, would it that relieve the tremendous congestion we hear about at every meeting of the Board?—It would.

3383. And would save for some years any further expenditure on the institution?—I would modify my answer in this way, that if they are taken out of the asylum and brought into the workhouse, that it should be with a view that it would lessen taxation generally.

3384. Irrespective of whether you think it would have an effect on their minds, do you not think that associating persons of the worst class or harmless class of lunatics with people who are really lunatics, does them harm?—No; I would be for a separation, as far as possible.

3385. Is not that impossible with the present building, having regard to the congestion?—I think not; in all these arrangements the view would be to lessen taxation generally.

3386. I quite agree with you if such a thing can be done, but you think that if any such union was tried up as an auxiliary asylum, Letterkenney would be more suitable for it?—I do think that.

3387. Mr. McPadden.—At present the Lifford Infirmary is very difficult to get at from Derry and Milford?—It is.

3388. Letterkenney would be the most central as case of any change of hospital accommodation?—Yes.

3389. I see the Guardians recommend this workhouse should be converted into a shirt factory. You are not in favour of that?—No; but the trend of public matters is such that there must be change, having regard to the great taxation. £4 is given to officials for taking care of the destitute poor, while only £1 is expended on the destitute poor. I think it would be well that the wise legislators of our country, and the administrators of the law of our land, should see to the lessening of this taxation, and at the same time have a view to the accommodation, and comfort, and requisites of the poor and needy, but it is an awful thing to say that £4 is expended on officials. And in saying this I make no reflection upon officials, but it surely could be done with less.

3390. Chairman.—Is that as regards this workhouse?—No, generally of workhouses.

3391. Out of £5 raised on Letterkenney Union, you spend £4 on officials and £1 on the poor. Is that true as regards this workhouse?—I believe it is. No; I will modify my saying. It is true, but in a general way, taking all the workhouses as a standard.

3392. Did you take that as a general statement from anybody else, or have you gone into the calculation yourself?—No; I have seen it written, and very reasonably, and in fact it was so over.

3393. You adopted it as your own opinion?—I did.

3394. Now can you tell us the heads and groundwork of that statement?—The groundwork is in the public press, the very regurgitations of the country.

3395. Have you made a calculation on that general statement, to see whether it would be true as regards the Letterkenney Union with which you are well acquainted as a Guardian. Have you tried with the clerk of the union or any person to ascertain how much of the amount that is raised for Poor Law purposes is spent on officials, and how much is spent on inmates?—I have not, sir; but this appears in the public press.

3396. You don't adopt everything you see in the public press?—Not everything; if it is contradicted in the public press and western given.

3397. You have the means of testing at least?—No, I have not.

3398. You have the accounts of the Letterkenney Union at your disposal, and can see whether the four-to-one proportion is true here; you can satisfy yourself very easily of that?—I have that at my disposal, but I have not the time at my disposal.

3399. Did you ever ask Mr. Walters, the clerk of the union, to make that calculation for you?—I did not, for I did not see Mr. Walters in that line since I saw that information.

3400. I would recommend you, before you give such evidence again, to check it with Mr. Walters?—Mr. Walters is only one individual.

3401. But he is the individual who keeps the accounts of the union?—It does not follow it is necessary for him to do that, because I give that as a standard of all the unions of Ireland.

3402. You don't know what sum was taken as poor rate all over Ireland?—I don't know now. I could know it from statistics I have in my keeping, but I don't have the time to look into them; but, in fact, to doubt that statement I might as well doubt some of the statements of Ministers of State that I hear, and there is no proof required of them.

3403. What would you take if you were testing that four-to-one ratio. What sum would you take as the total amount raised to be divided between the four-to-one?—I would take that.

3404. What sum would you take for the Letterkenney Union?—I cannot say now.

3405. Surely you can tell me how much a year is spent in the Letterkenney Union, of which £4 goes to officials and £1 to the inmates. What sum would you take as the sum to be divided?—If I admit the premises, you would have me in a cul-de-sac.

3406. I think I would have you there in any case before long, because I am sure the statement is grossly absurd?—I must wriggle as best I can to get out of it.

3407. You have adopted a general statement without testing it as regards your own union?—I don't admit I have adopted it. I say I have seen it, and it has changed my mind from what it was before.

3408. Now these wild statements that £4 are spent on officials for every £1 spent on the poor are very wild but very attractive to some minds. It would be better to test them by figures, than to be vapouring about them?—I put them forward for what they are worth, and they are not contradicted at present.

3409. You come before a Commission appointed to inquire into these things, and give that as a fact as portion of your evidence?—Will you allow me to withdraw giving it as a fact?

3410. Then I am to take it you saw that in the papers?—You say I took that as a fact. I don't think I said that. I said I saw it in the papers.

(Shorthand writer reads Questions 3360 to 3368).

Mr. PHILIP QUINN examined.

Mr. Philip
Carroll

3381. CHAIRMAN.—Are you a member of the Urban Council?—Yes.

3382. Were you of the majority or minority?—The minority.

3383. Will you tell us what considerations influenced you in voting for the closing up of the workhouse?—I considered this house a resort for tramps. Week after week there is a long list read out, in the summer time particularly. During the militia training, in one week I believe I am correct in saying there were eighty-six tramps. We applied to the War Department to be received, and they refused, for the reason that these men were not in the pay of the service. And another reason is the inconvenience of the county infirmary. This workhouse could be converted into an infirmary.

3384. The tramps largely influenced your mind?—They did.

3385. Would you be in favour of breaking up the Letterkenney Union?—As a workhouse, I would.

3386. How would you deal with the sick and infirm that are now in this building?—They could be transferred to some other union.

3387. Where would you transfer the Letterkenney sick and infirm to?—I think Milford would be a very central place.

3388. Would you add the whole of the Letterkenney Union to Milford, or would you break it up between Strabane and Stranorlar?—I would not go to Strabane at all, but Stranorlar or Milford; either of the two, or any place convenient that would not entail a hardship on them.

3389. In what proportions would you divide the union?—I have not considered that.

3390. How much would you need to see and how much to another place?—That would be a matter of the accommodation they would have in the different houses.

3390. But you would break it up most probably between Stranclar and Milford?—I would be in favour of that, and converting that into a fever hospital.

3392. Not the whole building; you have a fever hospital next door?—That is very small.

3393. A county infirmary you would say, rather?—I would suggest also that in the event of not breaking it up, to make it a kind of home, and classify the people. Some people come here that are very well able to work, and I should detain them. Those are tradesmen come here—painters, carpenters, and shoemakers. I should detain them for a certain time, and make them make shoes and mend clothes, and so on.

3394. Have you looked into the figures of the numbers in the house?—I am not a Guardian now.

3395. Do you really think you would find many persons amongst those admitted here fit to exercise any trade?—I believe there are people in the house at the present time very well able to work; as able as people outside.

3396. I have been through the house this morning, and I must say they are a very debilitated set of old people?—You are an official.

3397. You think they go to bed when they see me?—I say that people nowadays are very cunning. Of course, that is a matter for medical opinion, not mine.

3398. A practical man's opinion is very good?—I may consider them able to work perhaps, and the medical man would not.

3399. Have you any people in your mind who are at present in the workhouse and able to work?—I have, but I would not like to mention names.

3400. I don't ask you to mention names, but you have people in your mind?—I have. When I was a Guardian, I believe there were a good many well able to work, men and women; some, of course, are not.

3401. The majority are not?—Oh, no.

3402. Now is there anything else that you would like to mention?—Provided this workhouse was kept as it is, the tramp question is cropping up in every corner, this bridewell below is now diseased, and I would send the tramps to the bridewell for a few nights.

3403. If Letterkenny Workhouse were closed up as a workhouse?—But even as it is.

3404. You would make the tramps go to the bridewell?—Or leave a discretionary power with the relieving officer.

3405. It would keep up the bridewell. Would you put that in the hands of the police or the Poor Law Guardians?—There is a man there at present paid for looking after it.

3406. He is under the Prisoners Board?—Mr. McFadden.—The County Council.

Witness.—Could it not be converted for that purpose; it is now disused.

3407. That is a suggestion that has been made to us already in different places. What do you think would be the effect of that?—To stop a good many tramps from coming in.

3408. Would they stay out or cease being tramps?—I expect they would cease to be tramps.

3409. Don't you think it is possible they might go into the farmers' out-houses or sleep in the hayricks?—I don't think it.

3410. A great many Guardians have given evidence, and said they very much prefer having things as they are?—There are houses burned in towns, and there are no tramps in them.

3411. You would like to try the experiment of putting the tramps under rigorous treatment?—Those who are going from town to town and making it a profession.

3412. You could not very well draw the line and say there are some tramps we will receive and some we will not; that will altogether come under the direction of the relieving officer or master?—That is what I have stated. The relieving officer has a very good idea who they would be.

3413. He would send the deserving poor here?—Yes, and those not deserving he would send to the bridewell.

3414. The question of payment by the sick. Would you be in favour of that as a practical man. At present a large amount of money is spent on relieving the sick?—If able, they might pay a small amount.

3415. Some are able to pay it a week, and others from perhaps 2s. to 10s.?—Well, a sliding scale; I would be in favour of that.

3416. Would you be in favour of authorising a Board of Guardians or governors to charge any from 1s. a week to 10s.?—I don't quite understand what you mean. Of course, if they are able to stop out, they won't require to come in.

3417. I was talking about the sick. Supposing a person wants to come in for treatment in the sick wards; if it is a member of a man's family who is in receipt of 2s. a week?—Very few will come in that can stop out.

3418. Even the sick to be treated?—They don't like to come to the workhouse.

3419. Mr. Mealey.—Free?—In any case they don't like the workhouse.

3420. CHAIRMAN.—You have an idea of turning this place into an infirmary?—I have.

3421. Did you consider the question of a district hospital at all?—No.

3422. Do you think union rating is right?—I do.

3423. You would rather have that than electoral division rating?—Personally, as regards Letterkenny.

3424. Would you like to get still further relief by getting portion of the expenditure on the county, or some other larger area?—There is no doubt about that. I think every person will admit it.

3425. Or it might be increased by having a larger area?—We don't want any increase.

3426. You would rather have the rates more uniform. You would not like the rate uniform unless it was in your favour?—Well, I would not, speaking honestly.

3427. You know that some of the very poor unions have exceedingly high rates?—I know in my time they had. The division I represented—Sewer?—It was 2s. 6d. at one time, and there was no pauper in it.

3428. In Anaghy it was 2s. in the 2s. in the old times?—But there was no pauper in the Sewer Division. Some other divisions in my time were 3d. or 10d. Letterkenny was 1s. 2d.

3429. Would you look with favour on a proposal that the county should try to give some relief to the very poor districts, such as Sewer, or even three times as bad as Sewer?—Of course, I would be in favour of any district getting relief.

3430. Out of the rates—a rate-in-aid?—The other portions would not like to do that; no, I would not.

3431. Mr. MINICOMENT.—You would not wish to extend the chargeability beyond the union?—No.

3432. You knew what that is?—I do; the other would be problematical.

3433. CHAIRMAN.—What is your union rating at present?—1s. 2d.; the standard rate is 10s. 6d.

3434. When you come and find people very much poorer paying twice and three times, and perhaps four times, as large parishes, don't you think it is fair for them to ask for some assistance?—For us to become charitable?

3435. I don't say charity at all, but some arrangement that will cause the rates to fall less severely on them?—If I was living in the poor districts, I would, but as I am, I would rather stop as I am.

3436. Mr. McFadden.—You are in favour of sending the pauper of Letterkenny to Milford and Stranclar?—Yes.

3437. You don't know anything about Milford Workhouse?—I never was in it.

3438. Were you ever in Stranclar?—No.

3439. You don't know the number of paupers in each at present?—No.

3440. You don't know that they are less than at Letterkenny?—I was one of the parties appointed at an inquiry in Donaghadee—I think the Chairman was there—and they were to do away with the Donaghadee Workhouse, and send paupers here to Letterkenny and portion to Milford, but the Milford Guardians were very kind; they were sending all the poor portions to Letterkenny.

3441. You would not take it then?—No.

3442. Would you not think it would be as convenient for the Milford paupers to come to Letterkenny as for the Letterkenny paupers to go to Milford?—I have given the reasons to the Chairman why I would consider this place as the proper place for a county infirmary.

3443. Have you considered the question of an auxiliary asylum?—I have, more or less.

3444. Would you be in favour of that?—No.

3445. Why?—Because I think it would increase the taxation.

3446. Would you be in favour of all the harmless idiots in the county being taken here?—No.

3447. Mr. Mealey.—Don't you find that insanity is very much on the increase in the County Donegal?—Unfortunately, it is.

3448. And sooner or later a very large addition must be made to the present asylum?—They are putting an addition to it at the present time.

Sept. 25, 1893.
Mr Philip
Carroll.

3440. I mean a further addition?—That is only antelpectation.

3450. But it is certainly congested at present?—It is stated so.

Mr Hugh McGiverty.

3452. Mr. McFadden.—You are Chairman of the Board of Guardians and also a member of the County Council?—Yes.

3453. CHAIRMAN.—You are against breaking up the Letterkenny Union?—No, sir. I did not consider what unions in the county should be broken up. I have not thought of that aspect of the question, but I am in favour of amalgamation.

3454. In favour of amalgamation generally?—Yes.

3455. You are a Guardian of Letterkenny Union?—

Yes, sir.

3456. Are you in favour of breaking up the Letterkenny Union?—I have not thought of that. I have not considered the geography of the county sufficiently to say which union should be broken up in order to consider the accommodation of the sick poor hereafter transferred from one union to another.

3457. But as regards your own union here, what would your view be. Would you like to see it broken up and divided, say, between Millford and Strabane, as Mr. Carroll suggested?—No, beyond this, that if you consider the question of an auxiliary asylum or county infirmary, I would say there is no other workhouse in the county more suitable or central than Letterkenny would be for either purpose; but as regards any other aspect of the question, I think, unless it was going to be converted into an auxiliary asylum or county infirmary, there is no other union workhouse in the county that gives better accommodation to the sick poor; and they are better treated than in any other workhouse, because I see the cost of maintaining a pauper in the workhouse at the present time is more than in any other workhouse, consequently I come to the conclusion that they are better treated. It is 5s. 6d. in the body of the house, and 3s. 6d. in the infirmary. I believe it is 3s. 7d. on the average, and I believe that is higher than in any other workhouse in the county.

3458. So far as food goes?—I have asked for that, and I got no answer as to whether it was for the best of food or not. The dietary scale has been largely improved.

Mr. S. R. Watkiss.—Food and clothing.

3459. Mr. McFadden.—That accounts for the increase in rates from the standard year?—Yes; it is much higher than when I first became a Guardian. I remember when the cost of maintenance was only 8s. 4d.
in the body of the house, and 2s. 6d. in the infirmary.

3460. CHAIRMAN.—You would not be in favour of breaking up the Letterkenny Union unless you were first satisfied that the premises could be used either as a county infirmary or an auxiliary lunatic asylum?—
Individually, I have not considered the matter, but on a general principle, I believe it is one of the most central unions in the county, and unless it was going to be converted into either of those, it would be a mistake to break up Letterkenny Union.

3461. But if it were used for either of those purposes it would first have to be broken up?—Yes; I should say it should be broken up.

3462. If you could use it for either of those purposes?—I would.

3463. Supposing it was broken up and converted into an auxiliary asylum or county infirmary, how would you divide Letterkenny Union among the surrounding unions?—I have not thought of that aspect.

3464. But this addition, I suppose, will remedy that congestion?—It is to be hoped there will be no more additions required.

CHAIRMAN.—Have you any witnesses for the union?
Mr. McFadden.—The Chairman is here.

Mr. HUGH McCHARTER examined.

3465. You know, of course, the geography of the union?—I know some divisions would be very convenient to Millford, Ballymacool, Castleway—

3466. Letterkenny itself?

Mr. Mackay.—And Gortaveen?—Certainly; the other portions certainly would be more convenient to Stranoclar.

3467. CHAIRMAN.—Anything on the far side of the hill, say south of Letterkenny, Glenties?—Yes, portions such as Sencor and Kinsraig.

3468. Mr. McFadden.—What would you do with your own division?—Dunfarnaghy would be the most convenient for Garra, Churchill, and Templegladagh.

3469. CHAIRMAN.—But if Dunfarnaghy were to be closed, where would you send them?—I think there is very little likelihood of both Letterkenny and Dunfarnaghy being both closed.

3470. Mr. McFadden.—I suppose you would bring them to Letterkenny?—I could not say where they would be brought until we hear which are going to be disclosed. I think Letterkenny Workhouse would be most convenient for the paupers of Dunfarnaghy.

3471. You would send Tory Island to Sligo?—I don't think Tory Island sends many paupers to any workhouse.

3472. CHAIRMAN.—Is there anything more you would like to say?—With regard to tramps, I consider they are a great burden on the various unions, but on Letterkenny in particular, because I believe it is a very central place here, and more tramps come along to this union perhaps than to any other union in the county; and at the time of the training of the Militia, there is a special reason why so many of them come here.
These men are not in the receipt of any pay when they come here; eventually they are, and I think it is a great hardship on the ratepayers of this union that they have to support militia tramps for two or three nights.

3473. I suppose the town would rather have them and give them the two or three night's accommodation than lose them altogether?—Portion of the townpeople, but not all.

3474. Mr. McFadden.—The Guardians made a recommendation that the Government should pay for the maintenance of all paupers over sixty?—Yes.

3475. An old-age pension?—Yes.

3476. The present infirmary at Millford is rather inconvenient for patients from Millford, Letterkenny, and Dunfarnaghy?—Any institution at one side of the county must necessarily be inconvenient.

3477. With the new railway service it is very convenient for patients from Dunfarnaghy and Millford to come here?—Yes.

CHAIRMAN.—I see they send patients from Dunfarnaghy by train through Letterkenny.

Mr. McFadden.—Yes, fever patients.

CHAIRMAN.—It is not a usual thing to send the sick by train?

Mr. McFadden.—No. These are the only Letterkenny witnesses present.

Mr. JOHN MALLIN.—Would you mind taking my evidence about the hospital in Ramoth?

Mr. JOHN MALLIN examined.

3478. CHAIRMAN.—Are you acting professionally?—
No, I am one of the governors. I sent you in a statement.

3479. Will you kindly give the statement in evidence?—With regard to the foundation of the hospital—scene, of course, of this evidence, sir, is by repute.

3480. This is what you believe to be the case?—Yes, and what I ascertained by inquiry. It was erected by the Grand Jury out of the county cess, and it has been erected somewhere about 1830. A house was granted of the site of it by Sir James Stewart, provided it was used as a hospital. And somewhere about 1830 a wing was added on account of an epidemic of cholera that broke out at the time. It was out of the county cess it was erected. The Grand Jury paid in their cess a proportion according as the amount was at times—they paid a proportionate part—for every 20 collected they paid 2s, but if there was no collection at that time, we got no grant at all from the Grand

Mr. John
Mallin.

Sept. 26, 1871.

Mr. John Mallins.

Jury. Now under the Local Government Act all that the County Council is responsible for is all that was granted in the standard year.

3490. Dr. BROWN.—How much is that?—At this present moment—I asked that—the Secretary of the County Council may be able to tell me.

3491. CHAIRMAN.—Can you tell me whether the amount you receive from the county and from subscriptions, whether that fairly meets your expenditure?—Oh, it does.

3492. You are not struggling on in debt?—No.

3493. It meets your expenditure one year with another?—It is not in debt, and in my recollection it has not been in debt. I will give you the expense of the maintenance.

3494. First you might tell us what class of patients are treated there?—They are of a class that you would not call them absolutely destitute. Some of them are destitute. They are poor; some of them are able to pay.

3495. Suffering from what kind of ailments?—Generally, Dr. Paterson informs me, they consist of fever, pneumonia, inflammation of the lungs, and bronchitis. There are a great many operations performed. Of surgical operations, in 1861-62 there were nine operations and two fever cases.

3496. Is there an operating room there?—Not exactly made for the purpose. There are no instruments supplied to the hospital. He has to use his own.

3497. Has the doctor classified the operations for you?—No. In 1862-63 there were 11; in 1863-64 there were 1; in 1864-65 there were 6; in 1865-66 there were 4; in 1866-67 there were 6; in 1867-68 there were 2; in 1868-69 there were 3; in 1869-70 there were 5; in 1870-71 there were 3; in 1871-72 there were 2, and in 1872-73 there were 3. There have been fever cases; typhoid, measles, and scarlatina have been there in 1869, and in 1870, and in 1871.

3498. Dr. BROWN.—Are the other cases removed when you have scarlatina?—There are different wings; I am quite sure they are separated.

3499. Separate nursing?—The doctor gets £25, and the nurse something between £15 and £20.

3500. CHAIRMAN.—How many nurses?—One at present, but she has been trained under Dr. Paterson.

3501. Can you tell me how many patients there are at the present moment?—The number of patients in 1872-73 is three.

3502. What are they suffering from?—Scarlatina one was; I don't know what the other two are suffering from.

3503. Can you tell me from your personal experience about how many people are in that hospital as a general rule?—The average during the year would come to about six in all these years I have mentioned.

3504. Dr. BROWN.—The average number in the hospital of all kinds?—I think about that. There were seven one year. These operations would be a short time in.

3505. CHAIRMAN.—You take the names of patients, and you take your average of the number of names?—Yes.

3506. You don't take into question the duration of their stay in any of your statistics?—No. I will give you the expense of the patients in 1869.

3507. Each patient costs about?—£9 7s. 4d.; that is the average cost.

3508. But you don't say how long is the average duration of their stay?—No. In 1869, it was 29 10s. 10d.; in 1870, 65 7s.; in 1871, £12 10s., and in 1872, 28 11s. 3d.

CHAIRMAN.—I think we will ask the doctor, or whoever acts as registrar, to give us further particulars.

3509. Mr. HAYES.—Would you ask do any of these people pay in that hospital?—I don't think they do, as a rule; some of them may. I know one man who came in. He was an engineer on board a vessel that arrived there, and the owners of the vessel gave a subscription of five guineas to the hospital.

3510. CHAIRMAN.—The feeling of Ranelagh is strongly in favour of the maintenance of the hospital?—Yes, and the people of the district won't come to the workhouse; they prefer going to the hospital.

3511. What surprises me is that it is so little taken advantage of?—That speaks well for the health of the district. We have supplied new beds to the place ourselves by subscription, and got new mattresses and a new style of bed. Its position is very good, for there are no private dwelling-houses near it. Mr. Mackay is a good distance from it. There is only one house near it. It is in a very good position.

Mr. Mackay.—I don't object to it in the least; it is a very excellent institution.

Witness.—Ranelagh is a very large district. There were 3,625 in the last Census for the dispensary district.

3512. CHAIRMAN.—Do the people from the Millford Union use it?—They do. We have had Her Majesty's ships coming in there and sending men up.

3513. Is it no question of a union hospital at all; it is a county hospital?—Yes; it is not supported in any way by the parishes.

3514. Mr. Mackay.—If it be discontinued, I would suggest the propriety of having a better class of nurses, namely, trained nurses; not a girl that had to be educated. We had one before—a most excellent nurse—that saved my life in typhoid fever. I mean a trained nurse; not educated by the local district?—The expenses are very small of the staff—only £600 a year altogether, the nurses and doctor's fees. It is not equal to about the salary of the nurse in the Millford Workhouse. It includes medical attendance and medical comforts supplied, as well as good nursing. In 1868, it was £121 16s.; in 1869, £124 12s. 6d.; in 1870, £118 10s. 4d.; in 1871, £122 10s. 3d.; and in 1872, £128 2s. 9d.

3515. Mr. MURPHY.—There is a county contribution of £2 for every £1 collected?—It comes technically out of the county-at-large rate, and it can be divided now, as decided by the Chief Baron. I wish to impress on you that we have trained a number of nurses in that hospital.

3516. CHAIRMAN.—That I am sorry to hear?—I don't know what your reason is.

3517. You could not efficiently train nurses with an average attendance of from three to six people?—They go on.

Mr. Mackay.—When they go away from there and have gone to larger hospitals, they become great successes.

3518. Dr. BROWN.—You mean to say you give them a taste for it there?—Yes; we prefer doing that to taking in a paid one.

Mr. Mackay.—I am against the idea of operating upon an untrained fever patient.

CHAIRMAN.—Having unskilled nurses?

Mr. Mackay.—Yes.

CHAIRMAN.—I think you will find little difference of opinion on that.

Witness.—Where the means of the hospital cannot afford it. Under Dr. Paterson they turn out exceedingly well.

Mr. Mackay.—Yes, I agree, it is a great success.

Witness.—All the governors of the hospital are in favour of the being kept as a hospital, on account of its position and the objection of the poor people going to the infirmary.

Dr. CURRI examined.

3519. Dr. BROWN.—You are the Medical Officer of the fever hospital here?—Yes, sir.

3520. Mr. Mallins gave us some idea about this other hospital when it was erected. Do you know when it was erected?—It was before 1837.

3521. Was it before 1830?—It was originally a dispensary.

CHAIRMAN.—You may take it as the same time as Ranelagh.

3522. Dr. BROWN.—It was started out of the county one?—Yes.

3523. Or partly started?—Partly started; they gave twice as much as we collected.

3524. Then it was exactly on the same system as the Ranelagh hospital?—Yes.

3525. How is it supported at present?—We collect the subscriptions as before, but I believe the County Council give a fixed sum, calculated from the first year of the Local Government Act.

3526. Could you tell what the amount is?

Mr. R. S. WATERS.—£114 14s. 6d. per annum.

3527. You don't know how much they collect?

Mr. Waters.—Somewhere about an average of £49 a year. Last year it was £36 18s. 2d., and received

Dr. CURRI

SECT. 25, 1833.
Dr. Carr.

215 12s. 6d. from paying patients, and 25 contribution from the Royal Irish Constabulary sports, and 24 for interest—about 2175 altogether.

3518. You take nothing in but fever?—(Hfims).—Nothing but infectious cases, but occasionally a case has been admitted—an observation case. If there is nobody there we have had a few cases of the Constabulary that come in, on the clear understanding that they would turn out if any infectious case came in. They were just a few cases, very few indeed.

3519. How much do you charge the Constabulary?—13s. a day.

3520. CHAIRMAN.—Is it to people here?—Yes.

3521. Does that pay for them?—No, it does not. We have occasionally had cases from the Militia staff—infectious cases—and they paid more.

3522. Dr. BROWN.—Was 215 that you received last year covers all that?—No; that would be from the union here.

Mr. Walters.—215 covers everything received from paying patients, paupers, and others.

3523. Dr. BROWN.—How many patients had you last year?—In 1833 we had seventeen cases.

3524. Where were they from?—Principally from all over the union.

3525. Do you get any fewer cases from beyond the union?—No, they don't admit them.

3526. Although it is a county charge?—I should not say we don't admit them, but I don't think they have ever applied to be admitted. No case has ever been refused, but I don't think we have ever had a case outside the union.

3527. Do you think it should be a county charge when there is no benefit received by the county?—I think every case would be admitted. I am quite sure it would. I have no orders on the subject at all.

3528. Mr. Mackay.—It is looked upon by the county people as the union hospital?—No, I don't think it is looked at as connected with the workhouse.

3529. Dr. BROWN.—How do you get your cases brought in?—There is the ambulance.

3530. Who works the ambulance?—The Guardians hire it and pay for it; it is their ambulance.

3531. That does not come out of your funds?—No.

3532. CHAIRMAN.—They pay it a day for the patients and bring them in to the addition?—Yes.

3533. Dr. BROWN.—About your staff—you have a nurse and attendants?—Yes.

3534. And if you have many cases, you get another nurse?—Yes.

3535. A trained nurse?—Yes; always trained nurses.

3536. People have no objection to go into the fever hospital?—No, I think not, particularly under the present name; she is very popular with the people.

3537. Do the people of the district go into it freely, when suffering from infectious disease?—Yes, as freely as they will leave their own houses, and they are never willing to do that; but it is much better of late years. They are going in more freely than they used to do.

3538. If your ambulance were good, could you bring your cases from beyond the union?—Certainly, the ambulance is at present very good.

3539. CHAIRMAN.—Four-wheeled?—No, two-wheeled; but there is a very good new stretcher alongside the bed, which is a great improvement. The ambulance itself is not very satisfactory.

3540. Dr. BROWN.—You never get cases from Danefaghly Union?—We had a soldier from Danefaghly, but I don't ever recollect getting cases from Danefaghly.

3541. That was in 1837 or 1838, when the troops were stationed there?—Yes.

3542. Mr. MURKIN.—Any patient in the institution now?—No patients.

3543. What is the average attendance for the year?—Seventeen last year. The average for the last five years was about eleven cases.

3544. Did they all come from the Union of Letterkenny?—I think so; in fact I am pretty sure they did all come.

3545. Dr. BROWN.—You have been a long time practicing in this district?—Yes, thirty years nearly.

3546. Have you found much objection among the patients to going into the workhouse hospital?—Yes, a good deal; there is a difficulty in getting them to go.

3547. They go much more freely to the fever hospital?—I think they do.

3548. What is the reason of that?—I suppose it is the name of going into a workhouse—pauperism.

3549. You think that if there was a hospital separate from the workhouse, they would go in much more freely?—I am quite sure they would.

3550. Therefore the usefulness would be a good deal extended?—Yes.

3551. CHAIRMAN.—In your practice, no doubt, you have met a great many cases of phthisis?—Yes.

3552. There is no provision at all for the treatment of such cases in any part of the county?—Except in the county infirmary.

3553. That is at Lifford?—Yes.

3554. Then, of course, they are rather close to the other patients?—Yes, I think there is no isolation.

3555. Is there much consumption on this side of Danefaghly?—No; there is not in my district, certainly.

3556. In the records of deaths that you keep, are the number of deaths from consumption considerable?—No, I don't think they are. I have very few cases myself, perhaps one or two a year.

3557. You don't meet with many cases in your ordinary practice?—I do not. There are a great many cases which I don't think are at all. Any wasting disease they put down at once a consumption among themselves. I have very few cases that I could certify.

3558. And that were certified by medical men as consumption?—Yes; there were a good many in the asylum, but it has diminished recently.

3559. Where would these people come from?—From the county-at-large.

3560. Do you know any other district outside the union?—Yes; I practised at Rossmore.

3561. Of recent years can you tell us anything about the extent to which consumption prevails?—I am afraid I could not.

3562. We have received very startling evidence in a great many parts of the country, such as Millfield?—I did practice in that district and Bellaghy, but I don't remember a great many cases.

3563. Well, it is really startling the enormous number of cases dealt with, and the great number of deaths registered, certified by medical men.

Mr. Mackay.—I think, if I might mention, you will find it in the other side of the county—Killybegs, Ardara, and Glenties.

3564. Here you have not got much consumption?—No.

3565. And, as far as you are aware, there is not much of it in Millfield or Danefaghly?—No; my registry reports would be rather complicated by the asylum, but since we got the new heating apparatus in the asylum, there has been a marked diminution.

3566. Are they isolated there, the consumptive patients?—As far as possible they are.

3567. Dr. BROWN.—Could you let us know whether the asylum is much overcrowded or not?—It is; I could not give you the figures.

3568. CHAIRMAN.—Is it having regard to the extra space attached according to the regulation for each individual. That is the test, of course, of overcrowding?—Yes.

3569. Are the beds very close together?—Yes, and beds where they should not be at all—in the corridor.

3570. Dr. BROWN.—Are they building, or going to build?—They are building at present in their own grounds, I think, for 200 more patients.

3571. Will that relieve the overcrowding?—It will.

3572. Will it leave any space for future requirements?—Not very much, I am afraid, but just meet the present emergency.

3573. What is your idea of converting the workhouse into an auxiliary asylum?

CHAIRMAN.—Perhaps you would rather not say?—Well, I would not.

3574. You are in the position of being the visiting doctor?—Yes, and I have not considered it sufficient to give an opinion.

3575. Your committee has not expressed an opinion on the matter?—They have not. I don't think it has been a success where it has been tried.

CHAIRMAN.—It has only been tried in one place, and it has only been just started.

3576. Mr. MURKIN.—As a medical man, do you think the county suffers owing to the county infirmary being situated at the extreme end of the county?—I think it does.

3577. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think it would be better if it was in the centre?—I do; it is a very long way for people to go, and there is no way of providing them with means of travelling; there is no money allowed for it, and no ambulance.

3575 They have to come themselves?—Yes, and pay their own expenses.

3576 Dr. BIGGER.—Notwithstanding its inconvenience, is it not well availed of?—I think so, and it is a very nice order.

3577 Most it is not doing a considerable amount of good?—It is; there is no doubt about it. A few months ago Dr. Boyd could not take in some cases I wanted to send.

3578 Instead of removing the county infirmary you want another infirmary?—Yes.

CHAIRMAN.—We saw it yesterday, and were very much pleased with it. There were a great many patients in it.

3579 Dr. BIGGER.—If you had a small infirmary here, would it meet the wants of the district?—It would be a great help, certainly.

Mr. MACKAY.—It is like the county workhouse—it is one-sided—at the other side of the county.

CHAIRMAN.—I was going to say that when there are no cases in the hospital, the nurses is available for private or district nursing; helps with cases in the locality.

Mr. SAMUEL WATERS examined.

3580 Mr. MACKAY.—You are the Clerk of the Milford Union?—Yes.

3581 And you are also, of course, Clerk of the District Council?—Yes.

3582 I believe, on receipt of this letter of the 17th of July, 1903, containing the queries, it was placed before the District Council at their meeting in July?—Yes; at the quarterly meeting in July.

3583 Was that a largely attended meeting?—Yes, it was pretty large.

3584 At what stage of the meeting was this letter and the queries submitted?—The business was partly finished at the time, at least the quarterly business.

3585 Certain replies were given to these queries?—Yes.

3586 Those replies, generally speaking, were in favour of closing Milford?—Yes.

3587 I see they answered these queries not only as far as their own workhouse was concerned, but they generally answered for the whole County Down?—That was.

3588 Queries 1 and 2 seem to be answered together, and the answer was this:—"That Drommaghy, Stranabally, and Milford Workhouses should be closed as such, and the paupers transferred to Letterkenny, and that either of the closed workhouses should be made an auxiliary asylum for the treatment and care of idiots and harmless lunatics. That Ballyshannon and Glenfinn be closed, and paupers transferred to Donagh. That Inishowen be left open, and the paupers of Derry No. 2 be transferred there. Generally, that the paupers of Stranabally No. 2 and Stranabally might be disposed of between Letterkenny and Donagh." They answered all the queries in regard to the County Down, and have taken away your prerogative.

CHAIRMAN.—They committed suicide, I see; it is unusual.

Mr. MACKAY.—Perhaps it was to save themselves from slaughter. Then you have No. 3; they answered that—"That while this Council strongly advise and recommend the amalgamation of workhouses, and are altogether opposed to the amalgamation of unions, and they are of opinion that the controlled workhouses should be managed by a committee constituted in proportion to the cost of paupers incurred from each union. That the Boards of Guardians, as at present constituted, should administer in each rural district the Poor Relief Acts so far as medical charities and outdoor relief are concerned. That any portion of a union forming a rural district, but attached to another county as part of a Poor Law Union, should be constituted a separate Poor Law Union for above purposes, or attached to one in the county. That all aid be thrown on the rates for relief, who generally form the tramp, and casual class, should, if possible, be maintained out of workhouses, and educated and taught trades, which would enable them to be self-supporting in after life?"—Yes.

3589 "4.—That this Council unanimously resolved that in view of the abuses which have crept into the granting of outdoor relief since the passing of the Local Government Act, when this relief became a small-charge change, that the chargeability of outdoor relief should revert to an electoral-division change?"—Yes.

3590 CHAIRMAN.—She never stays out at night?—She does, sometimes.

3591 Dr. BIGGER.—But she would come in immediately if she knew of a case coming in?—Oh, of course. It is altogether under my directions.

3592 CHAIRMAN.—Are her earnings put to the credit of the hospital?—Her earnings go to the hospital, but they are very small. A good many people cannot pay anything.

3593 Dr. BIGGER.—But you believe in the nurses being occupied?—Yes.

Mr. MACKAY.—The same applies to Ramelton, for the nurse there attended upon me.

Witness.—We always get a second nurse from Omagh, or somewhere. We had a case this year.

3597 Mr. MURPHY.—Do you find they send you good nurses from Omagh?—Yes, very superior.

3598 Dr. Thompson is skilled in his education?—His training of nurses is first rate. I think Miss Hayes is above the average in that work.

CHAIRMAN.—Now, Mr. Mackay, is there any witness you would like?

3599 CHAIRMAN.—Can you tell us what the total expenditure on outdoor relief was in 1897?—I know hardly it has increased very considerably.

3600 How much is it at present?—There are about sixty at present on outdoor relief, and there were only six or seven on an average. It is ten times, and over that.

3601 And to what do you attribute that increase?—It just appears to be the same class of people, and I cannot tell you; owing to its being a union change the Guardians don't take the same interest in it.

3602 Mr. MURPHY.—Has the increase in outdoor relief lessened the number of inmates in the union?—Not in the least; it is just the same. The parties getting outdoor relief would not come into the workhouse.

3603 Do you think people get it that are not entitled?—No, they are all pretty deserving people; old people, as a rule, over sixty-five.

3604 CHAIRMAN.—Cases of poverty more than destitution?—Yes.

3605 Mr. MURPHY.—Then the new bodies give more care to the destitute poor outside than the old?—They do, sir.

3606 Mr. MACKAY.—And that is regardless of religious denominations altogether?—Oh, yes, they never take that into consideration.

CHAIRMAN.—I should not have dreamt of thinking of such a thing. New No. 3.

3607 Mr. MACKAY.—They answered that—"This Council is of opinion that the workhouses, infirmaries, and fever hospitals should be maintained, and that the general hospital accommodation at such workhouse should be enlarged and improved, and put upon such a footing that they would be recognised as district hospitals suitable for the reception and treatment of any case of accident or common temporary ailments, as well as infectious diseases."

3608 CHAIRMAN.—That would mean a considerable expenditure?—Of course it would.

3609 And the proposal really comes to this, that the workhouse as such should be abolished?

Mr. MACKAY.—This is the District Council's answer.

CHAIRMAN.—It is the Guardians, of course?

Mr. MACKAY.—In a moment you will see how the Guardians answered.

3610 CHAIRMAN.—Oh, they differ?—Yes, they differ.

CHAIRMAN.—They are the same body?

Mr. MACKAY.—They are the same body, but they seem to differ. One meeting was held in the boardroom and the other in the Town Hall of Milford, and it makes all the difference in the world where they meet. They answered No. 6:—"That the establishing of one or two of the closed workhouses as asylums for the reception of idiots and harmless lunatics already maintained in the workhouse, would not only ensure economy in administration, but would relieve to a great extent the congestion in the county asylums by the transferral from those of such cases, and as prevent the necessity for the enlargements of that institution, so often called for in recent years, entailing heavy expenditure and increased rates." No. 7:—"That the Council is of opinion that the Guar-

No. 4. 28. 1903.

Dr. Carr.

Mr. Samuel Waters.

Sept. 21, 1900
Mr. Samuel
Watkins

dians should have power to fix a scale of payments for the treatment of sick and insane in hospitals, according to the means of the person or relatives of the person so treated." No. 8:—"That the amalgamation of workhouses will tend greatly to settle the tramp or casual question, upon the supposition that no part of the closed workhouses shall be used for any purpose except as hospitals, or any other useful or public purpose, as may be settled by the Commissioners. That the managing body of the centralized workhouse, or their executive officer, should have power to commit to jail any person refusing to carry out any task allotted to him or her in consideration of the temporary relief afforded to them." Then it was resolved, on the motion of Mr. A. Gallagher, seconded by Mr. McDermott, that Mr. O'Donnell and Mr. Hayes be appointed to give evidence on behalf of the District Council at the forthcoming Poor Law Inquiry. The Guardians have made a different case, and appointed three of their body to appear.

CHAIRMAN.—Are you appearing for both?
Mr. Mosley.—No. Mr. McFadden is solicitor for the District Council and also for the Guardians, and I am also for the Guardians.

CHAIRMAN.—There be exercised a wise discretion in running away before trying to reconcile the answers.

3611. Mr. Mosley.—I think he would have led upon a line by which we could see daylight, but he had to go to the Revision Sessions. I have got a map prepared. (Proceeds.) There are thirteen electoral divisions, and this gives you the number of miles from the different places. (To Witness).—You have been Clerk of this union for how long?—Seventeen or eighteen years.

3612. CHAIRMAN.—These are from central points in the electoral divisions?—I took the extreme end, I think.

3613. Mr. Mosley.—Before you were clerk of the union, I think you were assistant to the late clerk, Mr. William Reid?—Yes.

3614. Had you not had some years ago a rather large outbreak of fever in the Farned district?—Yes, a few years ago, at Ballymahoney.

3615. And I believe you had considerable difficulty in coping with it?—Yes.

3616. And I believe a number of patients died before they were brought to the hospital?—Several died.

3617. And a number who were brought to the hospital died?—Yes.

3618. CHAIRMAN.—Were nurses sent to their homes?—No.

3619. Dr. Rogers.—Did any die in the ambulance?—No; they did not remove them unless the doctor certified they were able to be removed.

3620. CHAIRMAN.—If you don't think it would cause any inconvenience, I would like to ask Mr. Watkins the point of difference of opinion between the Rural District Council and the Guardians in answering these queries?—The members who answered both are here, and I think I could hardly tell you.

Mr. THOMAS HAYES, J.P., continued.

Mr. Thomas
Hayes

3622. Mr. Mosley.—You are Chairman of the Milford District Council?—Yes.

3623. And also a member of the County Council?—Yes.

3624. CHAIRMAN.—And, of course, of the Board of Guardians?—Yes.

3625. Mr. Mosley.—You know the Union of Milford very well indeed?—I do. I drafted the answer to the queries for the District Council, and I may say it is a matter of very great surprise to me now that there have been different answers given by the Guardians.

3626. You were not present when they were given?—No; and there was a distinct understanding when those answers were drawn that the union answers should be the same.

3627. That is by those who were present?—Yes.

3628. How many members are there on the District Council?—Fifty-one.

3629. I think I am right in saying they are the same men who form the Board of Guardians?—Yes.

3630. CHAIRMAN.—There is no urban district in the union?—No.

3631. Mr. Mosley.—How many were present when you gave the answers to the queries?—About fourteen. There was, of course, a summons issued for the day.

3632. Mr. MURKIN.—What is about the average weekly attendance of the Council?—I would say about fifteen on a day that there is a meeting summoned.

3633. There is a distinct difference?—Yes, quite a difference altogether.

Mr. Mosley.—One section wants the workhouse maintained as it is while in favour of amalgamation. They admit amalgamation should take place in other districts, but they say, having regard to the location of Milford, it ought to remain as it is if not enlarged.

CHAIRMAN.—And the District Council would by break it up and deal with it as may be found best.

3634. Mr. Mosley.—Exactly, subject to the evidence that is brought before you. There are no tram facilities—I think I am right in saying, with the exception of Tarnam—for the purpose of bringing patients to Letterkenny?—The nearest tram station is Tarnam, the upper end of our union.

Mr. Mosley.—And having regard to the way Donegal has been opened up with railways by the State, I don't think there is much chance of any other railway.

CHAIRMAN.—You have some motor service?

Mr. Mosley.—They are off to-morrow, at a dead loss to the guardians who started them.

CHAIRMAN (to Witness).—The Commission will sit you later on to give them some statistics.

Mr. Mosley.—I got him to make out the general expenditure for some years.

3635. Mr. MURKIN.—What is the number in the institution at the present time?—Seventy-four.

3636. Of the seventy-four, how many in the infirmary?—The average is twenty to twenty-five; sometimes something less.

3637. Many are bodied in the hospital?—No, they are practically none, unless those who are doing a bit of work in the way of attending the sick; they are kept very busy.

3638. CHAIRMAN.—You have a very good fever hospital?—Yes; accommodation for sixty in it.

3639. Mr. MURKIN.—Any in it at present?—I think there is one case at present.

3640. What would be the average annually?—The average is pretty small. Sometimes there would be six or seven, and there might be a month, or two or three months, with none at all.

3641. CHAIRMAN.—In the Farned outbreak you had a large number, and then for months there would be none?—Yes.

3642. Mr. MURKIN.—What staff have you?—A trained nurse and wardmaid. The trained nurse acts as night nurse in the infirmary when there are no patients. When patients come in we send for a trained nurse from Dublin or Belfast. We have a trained nurse at present doing night duty in the infirmary, and another nurse as well.

3643. Dr. BIGGER.—You cannot get a trained nurse nearer than Belfast?—No, we had to wire to Dublin and Belfast. We had a great deal of trouble getting the present nurse. We have tried O'neill and Derry, and could not get them.

3644. Mr. Mosley.—It has been mentioned to me that this was brought up at the end of your quarterly meeting at the District Council, which was held in the Town Hall, Milford?—Yes.

3645. CHAIRMAN.—Some of those who had been present, I believe, had gone home?—Oh, certainly.

3646. There were fourteen present at the time?—Twelve or fourteen.

3647. Mr. Mosley.—Then it was agreed by those who were present that the answers which the Board, as a Board of Guardians would give, should be the same?—Yes; the Chairman of the Board of Guardians was present at the time, and agreed that the answers given by the Guardians should be the same.

3648. Of course, if in the meantime they heard any thing, there was no agreement that they should not change their minds?—I think it is really a matter that won't bear discussion; it is better to pass over it.

3649. You have heard these answers read out. They represent your own opinion and of those who met there?—Certainly.

3650. CHAIRMAN.—And you are still of that opinion?—I am; I go further. My own personal opinion is even more in advance of the answers to the queries as to the amalgamation of the workhouses.

3651. Mr. MURKIN.—Was the Council even that this question would be considered at the meeting?—Certainly, on special notice.

3651. CHAIRMAN.—How far does your opinion go?—That there should be one workhouse for the county. There are eight workhouses, and I would clear out the body of the house in seven of those eight, and fix one of the workhouses of the county as a central institution for the reception of such able-bodied males and females.

3652. What workhouse would you select as the central workhouse?—Stranorlar is the most central in the county.

3653. And you would send to that the healthy and infirm?—None of them.

3654. I am not talking of the sick, but the healthy aged and infirm. Would you send all of them from the other workhouses to Stranorlar?—That would be a question as to their fitness for removal; if fitted to be removed, yes.

3655. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Your idea of a central workhouse is more for able-bodied people?—Able-bodied people and children.

3656. Not for people over sixty-five years of age, infirm?—Most of those are on the books of the present infirmaries.

3657. CHAIRMAN.—You would find a very large proportion that are not. Now, for instance, in Ballyshannon there are 67 aged and infirm; in Donegal, 19; Dromahaire, 21; in Inishowen, 31; in Letterkenny, 40; Milford, 21; and Stranorlar, 11, who are not in the infirmary, and who are classed as aged and infirm in the body of the house; that would make up a big institution. You would send that class, as well as the able-bodied, say women with children. You would send all those to the central workhouse?—I would.

3658. Do you see any objection to doing so?—Only that the numbers would overcrowd it.

3659. Assuming the numbers would not, as I do not suppose they would, assuming that the numbers would not overcrowd Stranorlar Workhouse, you would be in favour of sending them there?—I would; I don't see any objection.

3660. Do you think many of these people would be visited by their relatives and friends?—No.

3661. People who are aged and infirm, and very old, you don't think it would be cutting them off?—Once they go to the workhouse they are left alone; there are very few visits paid to them.

3662. And, therefore, there would be no very great hardship in sending them off?—No.

3663. Are many of them buried as workhouse inmates, or are they in the end taken out?—My recollection is that they are almost all buried in the workhouse premises.

3664. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—If this idea of yours was carried out, that is to take into the central institution people that are not actually infirm and sick, do you not think that in the course of a very short time those aged people would become infirm and ill and have to be shifted about. There would be a good deal of expense in the changing?—Yes, there is something in that.

3665. You did not take that into consideration?—No; but if my idea was carried out, and the body of the house cleared out, then I say there is plenty of room to treat these old healthy people as occasion would arise.

3666. CHAIRMAN.—Mr. Marnaghan's point, of course, is very serious. Assuming you send 500 people to Stranorlar, and some of them get ill, where are you going to treat them?—My idea was to keep the infirm in the workhouse infirmary.

3667. Then you would have very few to go to the central workhouse?—I make out from the statistics I got, through the kindness and courtesy of the clerk at Milford, that there would be twenty able-bodied males.

3668. Did you include the aged and infirm in that?—Mr. S. Watters.—Yes.

Witness.—In Ballyshannon there is one, in Donegal three, of Class 1.

Mr. S. Watters.—I took them from the classification in the admission and discharge book.

3669. CHAIRMAN.—Have you the answers from Letterkenny?—I have. On Saturday, August 1st, in classification 1, two.

3670. And those are tramps only—able-bodied tramps—practically not inmates at all. What were the headings you sent out asking for those returns? (Witness produces document).

Mr. S. Watters.—I adopted the admission and discharge book classification for the purpose of giving the clerk of the union as little trouble as possible.

3671. CHAIRMAN.—I am afraid that return does not give anything we could build on. The sick are very large, and the aged and infirm, and you have very few of any other class?—I have 479 aged and infirm and adults of either sex above fifteen years of age not working in the eight workhouses in the county.

3672. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Do you not think it would be an unsuitable arrangement to have the children in such close proximity to the able-bodied persons?—I do. I think the children, once they are taken into a central institution, ought to be left there, and the workhouse converted into an industrial school, where they would be taught trades, and any other occupations suited for them in after life.

3673. I understood your idea was to have one workhouse in the county, and have it utilised for able-bodied persons and children. Do you think it would be a proper thing to put children in such close proximity to these able-bodied persons?—I think, if discipline was maintained in the house, there should be no contact with them at all. I don't see why there should not be as perfect separation as there is between males and females.

3674. Do you not approve of the system of boarding out children?—I do not.

3675. Have you ever tried it?—We have one case in Milford. It is only the very poorest of the poor who would take children, and I don't see, in my experience of life, that they are fit people to bring them up or educate them.

3676. Are you aware it has been tried in neighbouring institutions similar to your own, and it has been found very successful, and there is no difficulty whatever in getting suitable foster parents. We have tried it in Omagh, and all the children that the law will permit us to board out are boarded out. We find it not only economical but very beneficial as regards the children?

Mr. B. S. Watters.—And it has worked very well in Letterkenny.

3677. CHAIRMAN.—Your idea was to have another closed workhouse as an industrial school?—Yes.

Mr. Marnaghan.—It so happens that labour is difficult to get, and small farmers will be glad to get a grown-up boy or girl on reasonable terms.

Witness.—That can only be applied to a limited class of children—orphans.

CHAIRMAN.—It comes to a large number when you set them up all over the country, orphan and deserted. I think, Mr. Hayes, when you go back, after hearing what Mr. Murnaghan and Mr. Watters have said, you will look into it.

3678. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—How many children have you in your house?

CHAIRMAN.—The total in the workhouse on the day we took it, in midsummer, was seventy-five altogether. There were six children over two years of age.

3679. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Have you a schoolmaster?—We have.

3680. If these children were boarded out you could get rid of that official?—Yes.

3681. CHAIRMAN.—You don't pay her much!—According to the cards that I sent out, the workhouse accommodation of the county is 4,450, exclusive of the fever hospital, and on that particular day there were only 665 persons in the workhouses. I think that makes a very good case for dissolution.

3682. It does, but that old standard of accommodation—I don't know how it was made up, but it is not according to present notions at all—allowing proper space for beds, or floor space as distinguished from cubic space, we could not get anything like that number of people into the workhouse, and then it is subdivided for classification. In some classes you will have it pretty full; for infirm and sick there is not enough room. In other classes there is room after room vacant and empty. You would find it hard to transfer the infirm and sick to the garrets and other portions of the house?—I think something should be done towards improving the hospital accommodation.

3683. Have the Guardians taken any steps in that direction themselves?—They have improved the infirmary sheds, which used to be disgraceful, and they are made fairly comfortable now.

3684. You mean the back wings that stretch out from the kitchen?—Yes; and they are awaiting the result of the Commission to make further improvements.

3685. If they survive?—Yes; but they think some economy should be made in order to enable them to do so without increasing the expenses to the ratepayers.

3686. Have you any idea on that subject?—The idea is to close the body of the house and get rid of the salary of the officials. Of course, I don't come here

Sept. 20, 1903.
Mr. Thomas
Hayes.

with the view that one of the witnesses had this morning, that the officials receive £4 to £5, because in Milford it is quite the other way. The persons cost £374, as against £421 for the officials yearly.

3687. Mr. MURPHY.—Is the expenditure on your union only £3,000?—That is all on salaries, rations, food, and clothing.

3688. CHAIRMAN.—I don't know whether you have gone into that very strictly or not?—That is exclusively for the house.

3689. You took in the clerk of the union?—I did, but not the relieving officer.

3690. Did you put down the whole of the clerk's salary, although he has other duties to discharge?—I did.

3691. You might even diminish it lower?—I might. 3692. Well, according to your idea, you would save a great deal in salaries if you could close the body of the house and dispense with certain officers?—Yes, and I think we would get more efficiency as well.

3693. It would be all one class in the institution, and supervised by nurses and a matron?—A nurse matron. I read Dr. Warrack's evidence at Derry on the fever-nursing question, and, as representing the Milford Council, I wish to endorse in the strongest manner the suggestions he made.

3694. What did you take his suggestions to be?—That the fever nurses of the county should be put under the management of the county infirmary, or a central committee, in order to avoid the expense of bringing down assistant nurses from Dublin when they were required, and at the same time replace six out of eight head nurses in the county having nothing to do. I think it was a very valuable suggestion. I think it is quite safe to say these nurses have nothing to do nine months of the year.

3695. In your hospital you have got them helping in the infirmary?—Yes, for extra pay—£22 a year extra. Unfortunately, when the fever nurse was appointed, there was no attempt to get an agreement with her that she should do night work, or do work in the infirmary.

3696. Did you try out your power with her. You seem to have given in rather early?—Once she was appointed, we thought we could not do so.

3697. Dr. BARNES.—What was her salary?—£23 on the day of her appointment.

3698. That is supposed to include rations?—£26 and 420 for rations.

3699. What does she get now?

Mr. S. WATERS.—She was appointed at £20, and £15 for rations. They give her 10s. a week while she is doing night nursing.

Witness.—It was a question whether we could compel her or not. There is one other point that I wish to draw the attention of the Commission to, although I don't know that it is within the province or scope of the Inquiry—I think it is a very great anomaly—and that is the salaries that are paid medical officers in congested districts.

3700. CHAIRMAN.—Do you mean in workhouses?—No.

CHAIRMAN.—Well, we don't deal with dispensaries.

3701. Mr. MURPHY.—You have no trouble with your medical officers in this county?—None whatever.

Mr. Hugh
O'Donnell.

Mr. Hugh O'Donnell resumed.

3702. Mr. Mackay.—You are Chairman of the Milford Board of Guardians?—I am.

3703. Were you present at the meeting of the District Council at which these queries were answered?—I was.

3704. Mr. Hayes has stated that there was an agreement with those present that the same answers were to be given?

CHAIRMAN.—He said he thought it better not to go into that.

3705. Mr. Mackay.—Afterwards did you preside at a meeting of the Board of Guardians?—No, sir; not at the meeting at which these replies were adopted.

3706. Were you present at a meeting of the Guardians at which answers were given to the queries?—No.

3707. Do you know what answers were given by the Guardians?—I assume they were much the same as the ones given by the District Council.

CHAIRMAN.—Perhaps Mr. O'Donnell is not the witness you want on this point.

3708. Mr. Mackay.—"Resolved that we appoint Mr. Mackay and Mr. McFadden to attend the sitting of the Reform Commission."—Hugh O'Donnell, Chairman." And there is a postscript: "The Guardians are strongly in favour of this workhouse being retained."—Oh, I beg your pardon; I was at that meeting.

3709. Am I right in saying that at that meeting the members present were in favour of Milford being retained?—Yes, sir.

3710. And you were chairman of that meeting?—Yes.

3711. That may not have been your own individual opinion?—They seem to be unanimous.

3712. Did you, as a matter of fact, agree with those present or with Mr. Hayes?—I agree with the Guardians for this reason; of course, I agreed with Mr. Hayes in the first instance, but when I considered the matter further I should prefer to have the Milford Workhouse retained.

3713. The Commission would like to hear your reasons.—Of course it is far removed from any railway communication, and the distances to the further points of the union are very far; I would say eighteen miles, so that if the workhouse was closed it would be very difficult to bring patients to central workhouses or hospitals as the case may be, and besides, the population of the union is something about 20,000, I should say. Now, of that population very nearly half are occupiers under £4 valuation, 7,814, between £4 and £10 valuation the population is 5,879, so that nearly 14,000 of the 20,000, or about 70 per cent., are under £10 valuation. The valuation shows the unprofitable state of the land, because the valuation is £30,398; then the area is 111,354 acres, so that great parts of the union are completely unproductive, and if a bad year came, and crops failed entirely, all these small land-holders possibly might become paupers, and it would be well to have the workhouse converted instead of having to go away somewhere else. Besides, Milford is fairly central, considering the surrounding unions, and I think it should be retained for these reasons at least. I would agree with some of the previous speakers as to having central hospitals; say, if Letterkenny was converted into a hospital that the idiots and epileptics and harmless lunatics were taken from the different workhouses of the county, and even taken from the asylum as well, and put into an institution by themselves.

3714. Mr. Mackay.—You mean Letterkenny should be used as an auxiliary asylum, or feeling that, it should be used as a hospital?—I considered Letterkenny was the most central place, and, besides, being so close to the asylum, you could make it an auxiliary asylum.

3715. Do you think Milford, as a union, is capable, in the event of that taking place, of having a slice of Letterkenny added to it, and also a slice of Duffagh if they should be done away with?—Yes; the workhouse is capable of accommodating twice the number we have.

3716. CHAIRMAN.—You know the union very well, of course?—Yes; I do.

3717. You thought a great many of those people with very small valuations might become subjects for relief in bad years?—Yes.

3718. Now, workhouses are these centres of population of these very small holdings?—Paradise, the extreme north of the union; Ballywhoriskey, and Rosgill.

3719. Do you happen to know how much the people earned in Rosgill and Ballywhoriskey last year?—No, sir.

3720. Would you be surprised to know it was less than thousands—four or five times the rental. Nearly every family in Rosgill has a man at the fishing, and, similarly, Ballywhoriskey?—Well, I would not know from Mulroy to Tarnah.

3721. What is the population of Tarnant?—1,324; that is a large area. From that then to Malroy is congested; then Glencella and Kasekalla.

3722. It is all very thickly populated?—The bulk of the population will be in Fasad and Rosgull and Glen; all these agricultural districts are poor of course, and, besides, they have not the facilities that you mention of fishing.

3723. Mr. Mackay.—They are less than £1 per man valuation?—Yes.

Nov 29 1903

No 1646
O'Donnell

Mr. JAMES A. DRUMMOND, J.P., examined.

Mr James A.
Drummond.

I am the oldest Guardian of the Milford Board of Guardians. I have been twenty-nine years there in my capacity as Guardian. I want to explain this supposed friction.

3724. CHAIRMAN.—I think we might shade over that after what Mr. Hayes has said; we will take it for granted that there has been a difference of opinion?—No, there was no difference at all; it was not on the agenda paper at all. No man living has a grudge against Mr. Hayes' accuracy than I have, but the notice did not appear on the agenda paper at all, and it was sprung at the tail end of that meeting. I was at the greater part of that meeting, and had gone; there was a funeral in the locality and the majority of the Guardians had to leave. That accounts for it.

3725. The subsequent opinion we may take?—The subsequent opinion was when they were properly represented and had time to consider it.

3726. Your opinion then is in favour of what was stated by the Guardians as distinguished from the District Council?—Most decidedly; I would consider it a great misfortune to disturb—3727. You would like the existing state of things continued?—Certainly.

3728. Mr. Mackay.—Or enlarged?—Or enlarged.

3729. CHAIRMAN.—How would you enlarge?—Take part of Dunfinaghy, Cresslogh, and Arla.

3730. Mr. MURKHAM.—And part of Letterkenney?—And part of Letterkenney; but I would think it a most imprudent thing to disturb or interfere with Milford.

3731. CHAIRMAN.—You don't think it would do to bring people from Rosgull or Fasad here?—I would think it a very inhuman thing ever to bring them here or to Stranorlar or Dunfinaghy—it is a distance of eighteen miles. You should know the locality; and during my twenty-nine years as a Guardian of the Milford Union we have had several epidemics of fever in Fasad, and I have been in close touch with the doctor, and he accounts for the prevalence of fever by the refuse of fish, and the throwing of the refuse into the middens, which are in close proximity to the houses; that was his idea. We have had three very severe epidemics there; the last, in fact, lasted for months, and gave the authorities all they could do, and took them all their time, and the greatest energy was used in coping with it.

3732. If there was a cottage hospital, or district hospital, or some building sufficient for the requirements of the union, Dr. Rigger is anxious to know whether you would still have the same feeling about the able-bodied or infirm and aged?—I would still have the same feeling about the people you call able-bodied.

3733. I don't call them able-bodied, meaning that they are able-bodied, but they are classed as such?—I would still have the same feeling. There is one thing I would set myself totally against; it is out-door relief. Now with the new Board, which Mr. MURKHAM says speaks well for, they have encouraged that sort of thing and I disapprove of it. The cause of their encouraging it is because it is union raising; these people have their own pet favourites, and they recommended them to get out-door relief, and you are perhaps scratched by the party applying for out-door relief, or his relatives in the district; you button-hole me, and I button-hole the next man.

3734. A friendly feeling all round?—A friendly feeling all round, the thing has become a downright fraud.

3735. Mr. MURKHAM.—Do you think people are getting out-door relief who are not destitute?—I don't think it, but I am sure of it, and it is growing, and will grow, as long as union raising is in existence.

3736. Mr. Mackay.—Don't you admit that under the old regime there were some people who would not go into the workhouse, and who were deserving, get nothing, and now those people are training add?—How did these people subsist under the old system of doing things? I think the old bodies were as fit to care them as these new lights 3737. There is no doubt there are some people who are receiving out-door relief now who would have died had it not been for the kindness of their neighbours—I don't know how they pulled through in the old times.

3738. I know. I paid one old woman 2s. a week, and I believe she is receiving 1s. 6d. now or 2s. 1—There is another thing. With regard to the fever hospital, Ramelton, I was surprised to find two respectable professional men like Mr. Mallins and Mr. Mackay coming here to vindicate the character and uprightness of this institution. I know it for the last forty years, and you made a great mistake in intimating that you would drop in to see it. If you looked into it suddenly you would see it in its real state.

3739. CHAIRMAN.—You think there will be a good deal of polishing going on?—Yes; and these operations you heard of were principally tooth extractions.

3740. Mr. Mackay.—Were you ever in the hospital?—I never was, thank God, and I hope I never will; but I would think it a great waste of public money when there is a splendid hospital, with a trained nurse, within three miles of it at Milford.

3741. It is a proper workhouse?—A proper workhouse! What is Ramelton? All the patients I know to come into it were some waifs or strays that there was nobody to look after.

3742. You cannot say that; we had obsequies in it—I would be delicate in interfering with Dr. Patterson.

3743. We had national school teachers in it?—I would not like to interfere with Dr. Patterson's little emoluments; these Ramelton people are very clannish—one supports another in what will bring ruin to their mill. I would chuck out Ramelton Hospital, and I would do away, comparatively speaking, with out-door relief, unless in some deserving cases. And the tramp nuisance—they are going about making the workhouse hotels—I would have an inquiry about everyone.

3744. What would you do with them?—I would give them imprisonment—everyone,—a fortnight or a month, and let that get publicity, and at the end of three months they would make themselves scarce in that locality, and pass over.

3745. They might give you a look in in passing?—No, they would not come to the locality at all.

3746. You would not be afraid of their being a little troublesome?—No; they would not come through the country at all only for the accommodation.

3747. Mr. Mackay.—You read in the papers about a man refused admission in Stranorlar who proceeded to come to Conroy and went into Mr. Wier's fax mill and burned it down?—That was only a speculation; if he had not been in some workhouse he might before he would not be in the locality at all. One union should write to the other, and have means of communication, and give a description of these people, because they don't use their own names; they give fictitious names. We started giving them employment in Milford, and got hammers to break stones, and the first thing they broke was the shafts of the hammers; then we got iron handles and they did nothing at all; they were as long as one stone as you would be going from here to Milford and back again. I would think it a terrible undertaking to interfere or disturb the Milford Union as it exists at present.

3748. CHAIRMAN.—And you would like to go back to divisional rating?—Certainly. Milford is a coarse barren district; you are mistaken in supposing that the people in Rosgull are living in a second Klondike; there are 100 Scotch boats there and every one named with Scotchmen.

3749. Do you know how many boats there are there from the parish of Carrigrohilly and Ballybucklisky?—I have an idea of what the local people can do there.

Sep. 25, 1862.
Mr. James A.
Diamond.

3750. Mr. Mosley.—They have six boats altogether; boats that cost £120?—The curries are all Scotchmen.

3751. CHAIRMAN.—Any people in the locality can get as much work as they can do?—They are not skilled workmen.

3752. I beg your pardon, they are; it is because they cannot get them from the locality they import them?—

The only way they benefit the people of the locality is supplying them with food—butter, eggs, and bread.

3753. It is an enormous benefit?—I know it is; but it does not benefit the whole community.

3754. Mr. Mosley.—Along the shore it is a benefit, and also inland?—I would think it is a very inhuman thing to ask that a patient should be dragged away from the bottom of Rosgull or any other portion round there to bring them beyond Millford; it is eighteen miles to Millford, and I think that is surely enough.

3755. CHAIRMAN.—There are only about ten people in the extreme end and about thirteen miles?—I find a lot of these men, that are agitating for breaking up unions, when it comes to the point they are all for preserving their own, and operating on other unions. I cannot see where it would be a saving to the rate, the hospitals should be maintained; and what would you do about the chaplains; they would derive nothing if the union was dissolved.

CHAIRMAN.—And you would be in favour of giving them something?

Mr. Matthew
Corey.

Mr. MATTHEW COREY examined.

3756. Mr. Mosley.—You are a member of the Millford Board of Guardians?—I am.

3757. And have been for a number of years past?—Twelve or fourteen years.

3758. You were present at the Board meeting at which these queries were answered?—I was present until about 8 o'clock in the evening, and I left then.

3759. That is the District Council you refer to?—Yes.

3760. But were you present at the meeting of the Board of Guardians at which the queries were submitted and answered?—I was.

3761. Do you approve of the queries as answered by the District Council, or as answered by the Board of Guardians?—I approve of the queries as answered by the Board of Guardians.

3762. Have you anything to add in addition to the queries?—On the hearing out of pauper children. I think it would be a great gain to board out pauper children; they become far better members of society afterwards; they are fit for hiring out when boarded out in respectable farmers' houses, and even in the small farmers' houses they get better training than in the workhouses; they will sooner get service out of a farmer's house than they would get out of a workhouse.

3763. CHAIRMAN.—Most likely kept on by the same man?—Yes, or even hired out by others, if the small farmers are not able to keep them, but they are very quickly picked up from a house in that way. We have often very great difficulty in getting a boy hired from the workhouse in Millford.

3764. Sometimes boys?—Yes; and people turn them back and say "We don't want them" when they know they are pauper boys.

3765. Mr. Mosley.—In addition to that point, is there anything else?—Well, I am in favour of amalgamation, but I am also in favour of keeping on the Board of Guardians in the district. I don't see how they could be represented. Supposing three or four unions were dissolved, and Stranorlar were kept on as a centre, I don't see how people from Farned could go there to represent the district, or even if Letterkenny was kept on they would not come to represent the people at Letterkenny; the whole system of representation would be better than having it from a centre.

3766. Do you mean to rule to the case of the election of a doctor?—I don't know how it could be managed otherwise.

3767. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think they would not go to the election?—On many occasions they would hardly go, from here—from the bottom of Farned—it is twenty-eight miles.

3768. I expect they would go further for an election, than for ordinary business?—They would not go at all.

Mr. Mosley.—If a man gets out of the way of going, even to his public worship, he thinks the distance a great deal longer than it is.

Mr. Diamond.—If the doctor was a member of the family they might go.

3769. Mr. Mosley.—Is there anything else?—The tramp nuisance is another thing I would like to refer to but I don't know how to get rid of them. In Millford there were 132 during the twelve months; they sometimes call there to pass on to a fair next day, or steal something next day. Half of the tramps going about are regular thieves, and they are a very bad class of people; it is a pity the rates should be burdened with them at all; if there could be any means of dealing with them, when they appear in the street could not the police take notice of them.

3770. CHAIRMAN.—In the old times they used to be branded with a red-hot iron; that would be too severe?—Nothing could be too severe for a tramp. If they find a farm-house is deserted by the male, they make an assault on the females and demand drink or try to steal; they are the worst class of people I know.

3771. Mr. MURKIN.—Have you any idea of the cost of these tramps to that particular union in the year?—I cannot say.

3772. I suppose they would only stop a night?—Sometimes two nights.

3773. That would represent six months of an inmate; 150 or so?—About that.

3774. That would amount to £5 in the year?—It would be under that.

Mr. Diamond.—Some have nine in family.

3775. Mr. MURKIN.—It is not so much a question of money?—No; the bad example and the chance of doing harm in the country; they can start on a tramp from here to Cork, and they know they can be entertained at Omagh and Enniskillen, and so on.

3776. Unless you can extinguish them altogether don't you think it would be better to put them up for a night in the workhouse than to leave them in the locality at large?—If they are to be in existence at all I don't see any other way than of keeping them in the workhouse.

3777. CHAIRMAN.—The bidwell was suggested by one?—If they could be kept there I think they would be under stricter supervision.

3778. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you not think that if the Guardians had the power to keep them for a couple of days and work them pretty hard?—They have tried it at Millford and they would not work.

3779. Do you think there would be accommodation enough at Millford for some more inmates than there are at present?—There is a considerable accommodation at Millford; it would accommodate 500, and stay in the hospital; and there is only, at the present time, about an average of seventy-four in the workhouse—I think yesterday in the body of the house only sixty-two.

3780. Mr. Mosley.—It would accommodate 420?—It would.

3781. And, of course, then the inmates could be cheaper being a larger number?—Supposing Dunfaghy and Letterkenny were dissolved or used for any other purpose, Millford would be the best centre in my opinion. Letterkenny might be used for an auxiliary asylum or any other institution, whereas if Millford were shut up it would be a waste and work, used for nothing.

3782. CHAIRMAN.—Even if Millford were closed would something in the way of hospital accommodation be necessary at Millford?—I believe it would; from the outbreaks of fever we have sometimes in the northwest of the union I think it would be unwise to shut up the hospital.

3783. Mr. Mosley.—Either that, or enlarge Roseliff?—Yes; it is useful as far as it goes, but it does not go far. The chaplain's salary is a very heavy item in our union; there is £125 paid for seventy patients.

3784. Mr. DIAMOND.—Do you think they are drawing money under false pretences?—No; but it is one of the heavy items in our union; it amounts to about £1 13s. a head on the inmates in the union.

Mr. MURKIN.—If you had the place enlarged, and neighbouring divisions taken in, it would be a great saving that way.

3785. CHAIRMAN.—The chaplains would ask for an increase in their salary?—I don't think they would; they are fairly well paid; they are not unreasonable; they will take what they get; you cannot offer them much less than they have; they have to attend for a single inmate and at the same time they could do the same service for 500.

3786. Mr. MACKAY.—And we know it is as easy preaching and praying to a large audience as to a small one?—It is. There are a great many small holdings in the union under £4 valuation, and there is a big chance of a big number of the poor classes being brought to hospital for fever. It always breaks out among the poor class, and to take them to the hospital at a distance would be very inconvenient. I think myself Medical hospital would be necessary in any case.

Mr. THOMAS HAYES, J.P., further examined.

One of the points I wish to speak on was about outdoor relief. The District Council recommended we should go back to the electoral division rating, but I would say it ought to become a national one; and I also wish to impress upon the Commission the desirability of keeping the present Poor Law Administration areas intact, because I don't see how, if, say, Letterkenney, Dunsaghy, and Milford are amalgamated, I don't see which would be the closed workhouse of the three. I fail to see what sort of a Board of Guardians would assemble in any place for the election of a doctor; there would be about ninety members, and I am afraid the Medical Charities Act would not be properly administered under these circumstances. And there is another point with regard to the excessive rate upon poor electoral divisions which you touched on yourself, and, I think, a case of that kind is a proper case where the Government ought to come to the aid of the county and subsidise the rates in a poor electoral division.

3790. CHAIRMAN.—Don't you think it is a case where a lavishly rated division should come to the aid of its neighbours?—I don't know that it is the duty so much of these divisions as of the Government; these divisions are not so much responsible for the congestion in the poorer districts, but I am afraid the Government is.

3791. A good deal might be said from a great many points of view on that question?—It may be a burning question.

3792. At all events you think there would be no harm in getting some money from the Government, if you could, under that head?—To aid a poor electoral division, or a poor part of the county.

3793. And your grounds for doing so would be that the Government was responsible for the poverty?—No; for the congestion.

3794. For the excessive population?—For the excessive population.

3795. How do you make that out?—That is just where it comes to be partly a political question or a question of Government in the past; you might have to go a long way back to get at the root of it.

3796. To the Plantation of Ulster?—Yes; I think that is the cause of the congestion; and I would say the Government ought to come to the relief of the poor districts.

3797. Mr. MURKIN.—Is there any part of the country that is over-populated at all? I thought the whole cry was that the population was too small everywhere?—I don't know what would be the criterion of over-population; I would say that a country was over-populated where it had a population with a valuation of, say, 10s. per head, as against a country with a valuation of £5 per head.

3798. Then you go on the question of valuation, not of humanity?—On the fitness of the land to support the population.

3799. Mr. MURKIN.—Any means of over-population?—None but an ambulance.

3800. Mr. MACKAY.—You would almost agree with me that your sanitary officers don't carry out the Act in the way it ought to be carried out.

CHAIRMAN.—We have nothing to do with sanitary matters.

Witness.—Another thing I would be in favour of is divisional rating, in this way, that if anything turned up in any district or yours you would be more apt to attend to it and see that there was no waste of money, but if it was on the whole union you would say it is coming off broad shoulders and you don't care to interfere; you let it pass.

3801. Mr. MURKIN.—Well, saying is a very great virtue, but is there not something better than saying; might not that not detrimentally to the destitute poor, men in outside divisions might not wish to give the help to the divisions that they are not in, and a poor person might be denied the necessary assistance?—That is the drawback, I admit; but I am talking of the saving of the rates.

Mr. MACKAY.—That is all, sir, for Milford.

Sept. 28, 1903

Mr. Matthew Curry.

Mr. Thomas Hayes

3802. CHAIRMAN.—That is taking the land as the sole source of support?—Yes.

3803. Which is not the fact; it is only a supposition which may be convenient for arguments?—As a matter of fact the land is not the sole source of support in Meerragh.

3804. Therefore it is no use to take the valuation of land as a test of sufficiency of population?—Without outside aid, it must be.

3805. If people make a lot of money from labour elsewhere and from fishing and other matters?—That was not done without aid from Government and from the Congested Districts Board.

3806. You won't find any district where the valuation is very low per head where there are not very large means much in excess of the value of the land for the support of the population. Take the Rosser, Gweedagh, Cloughanagh, and you will find they have means of support other than the land?—I don't know what they are about Falcarragh.

3807. Of course you know they go away to earn money elsewhere and their children are hired out?—I know that, but then I think this country ought to be self-supporting.

3808. Mr. MACKAY.—They could not exist there unless they did earn elsewhere?—Yes.

3809. CHAIRMAN.—At any rate that is your view; that the Government ought to give assistance, and the Congested Districts Board?—There is the payment of the rates and the maintenance of the poor.

3810. Can you suggest how they could do it?—By increasing the Agricultural Grant.

3811. Or re-appropriating the Agricultural Grant. I don't say the Agricultural Grant but rather re-appropriating the Parliamentary Grants?—I would say it would be fairer to increase the Agricultural Grant.

3812. That is a fixed sum for a definite purpose?—Quite so; and Mr. Balfour decided that fixed sum upon a basis of expenditure that was in existence at the time the grant was given; that expenditure has increased since through no fault of the people.

3813. It has increased all over, but not relatively or particularly in the congested districts?—If it is admitted it has increased since then I would say it would be fair that the grant should be increased, and to go to the poorer parts of the country.

3814. Supposing that could not be done, and there are other grounds in proportion; suppose a union in Meath that strikes a rate of 4d. in the £ for Poor Law purposes, when compared with an area in West Donegal that strikes 4s. in the £, and suppose that union in Meath gets an enormous proportion of the Government grant, those that are very rich get most and those that are very poor get least, would you say that it would be only a fair thing to re-appportion that grant so that the man in Meath should get less and the man in the West of Ireland with small means

Sept. 20, 1903.
Mr. Thomas Hayes.

should get more than his present share; in fact that the present arrangement should not be the basis for apportionment, but necessity—I certainly think it would be fair; that is if the proportion of county expenditure was less in Meath than it is in Donegal.

3012. The amount spent on the workhouse would practically be the same in each place. There is not any very alarming divergence in the cost of workhouse inmates in one part of Ireland from that in another, but the men in Meath gets many times the amount of the Parliamentary grant that the men in West Donegal gets; that is that the rich men gets many times the amount the poor men gets. Do you think that fair?—I am afraid I would not think it fair. If he has a high valuation, and the workhouse cost is practically the same, he pays in proportion to it.

3013. Who pays in proportion?—The Meath man.

3014. You think it right that the Meath man should get many times as much as the Donegal man?—I think it only fair.

3015. Although his rates are only 6d. in the £1. Still he has got a valuation that will bring it up far beyond the West Donegal man's rate, in proportion.

3016. Oh, his rates will be over so much lower. So away from the holding for a moment. The amount paid to the highly valued unions in Meath will be many times as large as the amount paid to Dursanagh or Glenties?—That is in consequence of its circumstances.

3017. The result of the present system is that the rich unions get the most and the poor unions get the least. Do you think that fair?—On the face of it, I would not think it fair.

3018. As you suggested Government assistance, I wanted to point out to you that there is another aspect of that question—the re-apportionment of existing grants?—It would be all right for the poor county, but I am afraid the rich one would growl.

Fr. William Delahy.

MR. WILLIAM DORRITY, J.P., CHAIRMAN.

3019. CHAIRMAN.—You are here for the County Council. We have had the benefit of hearing a good deal of your views in Derry. Since then, have you or the County Council come to any opinion what unions should be best broken up?—In Derry it was generally on the boundaries question. The opinion of the County Council was that they would break up four.

3020. Which were the four?—In our opinion we should retain Stranorlar, Donegal, Milford, Inishowen. They are those that are nearest to the fair division of the county, and in the centre of the county.

3021. You would keep up Inishowen?—Yes; but it is not because I live in Inishowen. Inishowen would include Derry No. 2; next would be Stranorlar, which would include Strabane No. 2, and would also take the greater part of Glenties. Milford would take the whole of Letterkenny and Derrybeg Union.

3022. Mr. MURPHY.—Would not that be a large stretch?—It would, but very little over a fourth of the county.

3023. CHAIRMAN.—Kilmacrennan would be the most central point, of course?—Yes, but Milford, the lowest being there already.

3024. How far is it from Kilmacrennan to Milford?—Five miles. Donegal would take Ballyshannon and Killybegs, Dungloe going to Stranorlar, and Glenties going to Donegal. I would not cut out many of the present boundaries of the union.

3025. What would you do with Ballyshannon?—It would go to Donegal, the portion of the County Donegal. I would say that the other counties should not allow any of their county to be in another county.

3026. Mr. MURPHY.—You adopt the principle that the county should be the unit?—Yes; and if we, as County Councils, are Councils of the county, we should be Councils of the whole, not part. We find it very odd to say we are losing a fourth of the county to Derry and Tyrone.

3027. CHAIRMAN.—You would put in part of the Glenties Union west of Killybegs into Donegal, and you would put into Stranorlar the Rosses, and Dungloe, and Annagh. Have you considered that there are two very large centres of population, Glenties and Killybegs, on the one point, and the Rosses on the other. Would you oblige these people to travel the great distances from their present habitations to Donegal, on the one hand, and to Stranorlar, on the other, for hospital and other relief?—Yes, I would.

3028. You would not propose to ease the situation by having cottage hospitals in these places?—Certainly, I would go in for that in all cases. I would have this workhouse for the old and infirm alone.

3029. Dr. BROOKER.—What would you do with all the sick?—I would then have cottage hospitals in every parish.

3030. Even where there is a workhouse?—Even where there is a workhouse.

3031. What would you do with the present workhouse infirmaries?—Turn them to something else.

3032. CHAIRMAN.—Take your own union, Ballyshannon, and tell me what hospital accommodation you would recommend for it, supposing it remains as a separate union?—I would have a small cottage hospital in every parish—Merrill, Malin, Clooney, Colah, and Bunnewa.

3033. Dr. BROOKER.—And Carrindagh?—And Carrindagh.

3034. CHAIRMAN.—Did you look into the cost of that?—I would not have at a costly hospital, but a place where a district nurse would live, with about two rooms additional.

3035. How many beds would you want for males and females?—I did not go into the number of beds.

3036. I am afraid you must go into the number of beds to make a calculation?—I would say two rooms, and three or four beds.

3037. I am afraid that would go nowhere. Say for the sick of Bunnewa?—I would allow that these district nurses who had charge of these hospitals, should for the most part attend to the wants of the sick at their own dwelling-houses.

3038. She never could leave her hospital?—When there would be no person in it.

3039. You never would have that state of things?—If there were more attendants required, I would then call upon the nurse who had not so much to do in other parts of the union.

3040. You know the population and the number of families. Then all the doctors, and people who are used to having anything to do with hospitals, will tell you that one bed is necessary for so many people of the ordinary population—that is the average in towns and country districts, and so on. They will tell you what proportion the hospital accommodation ought to have to the population, having regard to the healthiness of the district. You would want more beds in a Lanesboro factory district than in a West Donegal village, but they can give you a fair idea of the average number of beds required. You have provided for a doctor?—We have already the dispensary doctor.

3041. You would have to provide a salary for him?—He would be doing the same business as he is doing now.

3042. You would be covering it at one centre instead of sending him out for patients?—There are not many hospital beds in the workhouse infirmaries at all, and if they were scattered over six other places—

3043. Then you might certainly rely on having more people for treatment. People will come to a dispensary hospital who would not go into the workhouse hospital?—Most people would prefer being attended in their own homes by a district nurse.

3044. And if the homes were suitable, it would be very good?—If these homes were not suitable, make them suitable under the Sanitary Acts. Certainly, there is a great want of proper homes for the people.

3045. One has to consider that, and the question of taking care of the sick in their own homes?—Well, have a parish cottage hospital for such persons; but the majority of people would prefer being attended by a good nurse in their own homes.

3046. I am sure a great deal could be done in that way?—And that nurse would be required at any time. There is no district but requires a nurse at the present day. I think there should be one everywhere.

3047. That is a very big scheme. If you put in every union a cottage hospital for each portion of it, it may be a great benefit to the sick people, but I am afraid it won't work out on the lines of economy?—I don't think there would be much business for them more than there is at present. Very few people go to the hospital at the union workhouse.

3048. I have the exact figures here. There is a substantial number of them, and one might reasonably suppose the total number for the county would be larger if you provide a cottage hospital for each parish?—The cost is as large I think as it would be under the new scheme. These would not be very large buildings, but with comfortable rooms.

3840. A building you would put up for £5000—Far less than that. However, we need not talk much about money. Labourers' cottages are built at £300 now that an ordinary man would like to build for £100.

3850. Then you think you could put up the building for £300?—Yes; I think there would be no call for a cottage hospital costing more than £300. I don't mean to say it would be half the time in use, and if there was a rash came on, apply to another parish for an additional nurse.

3851. I differ from you as to the amount of its usefulness. I think people would avoid the one in their own parish?—Most of them would prefer being attended in their own homes if they were satisfied. As to the fever hospitals, I should say there should be four in the County Donegal—one in each of the districts who are speaking of here—and attached to the workhouse, but in some central place.

3852. You would not oblige a fever patient to be taken from Glenties to the one at Donegal?—There is no mean, I think, that forty miles from out to out in any part, and if you put the hospital in the middle, the most extreme travel would be twenty miles.

3853. You would make new hospitals?—Certainly. I would not have it in any case connected with the workhouse, and the nurses of these hospitals should be a county charge, and go where wanted, and perhaps two of these hospitals might be vacant or have no call for them for half a year.

3854. They would go to headquarters and be sent somewhere else?—Be called to wherever they were most required.

3855. Go where the occasion required. You would like to take the county as a unit?—In the matter of fever hospitals, but in the case of the ordinary sick, I would have the cottage hospitals supported by the district—by the union—but the fever hospital should be a county charge, and the nurses servants of the County Council, and paid by the County Council.

3856. Why would you make the difference between fever and non-infectious diseases?—They would have to go from districts to districts.

3857. The same thing is true of non-infectious diseases?—From parish to parish of their own unions.

3858. Supposing you have a training infirmary at Letterkenney or Lifford, then you would have the whole county served by the staff of nurses trained there?—I would say even the nurses of the district should be trained at the county institution.

3859. Would it not also be for the interests of economy that they should be transferable everywhere in the county where their services are required?—If they were in each parish. There are seven or eight parishes in every rural district now. I think that would be a large enough area for chargeability.

3860. I was not thinking so much of chargeability as economy of administration. If you had a staff of nurses that could be sent by the central authority to any place in the county, you would require fewer nurses than under the scheme you sketch out?—Then it would be a county-at-large charge; otherwise there would be great confusion.

3861. Would you object to the county-at-large charge?—I don't see that it would make much difference. I always go for the principle that the richer portions are to go for the relief of the poorer portions of the county.

3862. You made that point very strongly in Derry?—I think that was the initial foundation of the Poor Law Act, if it has any meaning at all.

3863. Taking up what I said just now to Mr. Hayes about the way the Parliamentary grants are distributed, would you think it right to re-apportion the grants and prevent the rich unions in the eastern parts of Ireland, where the rich grazing lands are, and where the rates are very low, would you think it right to re-apportion these grants so that the poorer people should get relief?—Do you mean the Agricultural Grant?

3864. Parliamentary grants, not the Agricultural grant?—I don't see why a Parliamentary grant for the relief of the poor should go to such a place as Meath.

3865. On account of their richness you would say?—You can support your own people very well, and the whole of the grant should go to the poor people?—They get grants on those large farms that they should not.

3866. It is because they are paid according to the present basis? I don't think it should go there at all.

3867. The Secretary of the County Council could show you how much a union like Dromahaire, for instance, would get as compared with a union like Glenties. There are a great number of Parliamentary grants in aid of local taxation—I think there should be more of them going to the place that requires them the most. I should say there should be no children allowed in the workhouse—they should be all boarded out—and as for tramps, I think they should go wherever they deserve to go, according to their deserts. If they deserved the jail, they should go to jail; if they are fit subjects for the workhouse, they should go there.

3868. Who is to decide?—I think it should be left to the master of the workhouse. There are some tramps, I think, that should be admitted into the workhouse, but a great many should not.

3869. It is putting a heavy responsibility on the master?—I would let the tramps go like other lodgers, and get their lodgings wherever they went; and if they don't get good lodgings, they are not likely to come back.

3870. We had a little discussion on the subject this morning. There were a great many representations that seemed to be reasonable, that tramps, if treated in that rigorous way, would be apt to retaliate on society, and make themselves disagreeable to landlords and house-keepers?—If they get such treatment by the public they are not likely to come back; when they are too well treated they come back again.

3871. Mr. McFadden?—We have had inquiries in other places in regard to this tramp question, and up to the present we have not found it looked up very large. In the question of expense we find it hardly comes in at all?—It is not the question of expense I look upon in the case of tramps, but it is the encouragement given to refuse to assist the country, and remain in it, that should not be given.

3872. Are you not aware that in every civilised land some little shelter has to be provided for the outcast and homeless?—That is why I say there should be power given to the master of the workhouse to take in tramps, where they would be proper cases for a workhouse.

3873. Do you not think that if the Guardians had the power now of keeping in the workhouse for a couple of days these tramps, and making them work during those two days, don't you think that would be deterrent?—It would certainly serve the purpose very much if you could possibly keep them at work.

3874. Even the effect of the confinement?—I would not think it something?—Certainly; if they have to come, I should certainly say they ought to be confined at the will of the master.

3875. You would approve of something of the kind?—I would not cast them off completely; there should be a certain latitude given to the master of the workhouse.

3876. We were told here to-day that some tramp had applied for admission to a workhouse in this county, and he was refused entrance, and that same night he lay in a shed and set fire to the place?—Something like that might happen. If he went out and hanged himself, that would be worse.

3877. CHAIRMAN.—In Kesh, I remember, a man went to sleep on the edge of a brook and fell into it?—Yes; we must look to the tramps' safety just as if they were good people.

3878. You approve of boarding out children?—Yes; they do not make good members of society when reared in the workhouse.

3879. And when you recommended the doing away with four workhouses, do you speak the voice of the County Council of Donegal?—Yes, I speak the voice of the County Council in that; at least that was the result of the meeting we had. I will not bind the County Council to everything I say.

3880. The Council were a bit shy about indicating the unions to be broken up?—Yes; and I have given my own opinion as to the particular unions. I was asked that in Derry, and I could not answer it; I had not studied the matter; but since I have gone to cut up the county in four portions, and I have given Inishowen the least. The total valuation of the county is £200,000, and much of these would be about £70,000, and with Derry No. 2 our valuation is about £74,000.

3881. Mr. McFadden.—If you don't get Derry No. 2?—I would retire from office.

3882. Supposing Derry and Strabane are kept as they are, how would your divisions work out then?—We would give Inishowen to you at Letterkenney, if

Sept. 26, 1903.

Mr. William Doberty.

Sept. 29, 1892.
Mr. William
Doherty.

you like; but I would say if we kept Inishoven even, we could take a slice off Letterkenny and a slice off Millford.

3833. What part of Letterkenny?—Macrossanagh, I suppose.

3834. That would be only one electoral division?—That would do us; we are not greedy in Inishoven.

3835. Greedy about pieces?—Those who are greedy about pieces are the Stranorlar people, and they would get a lot of pieces by this arrangement.

3836. You are giving a sop to the vice-chairman, who lives in Stranorlar?—In answer to that, I say I never spoke to him on it. If there is a better division to be made—but the County Council says there are to be only four workhouses, and if anyone can make a better division, let them do it.

3837. You would kick up Cain and Abel about Ballyshannon and Donagall. You say the valuations are equal?—The valuations are about equal.

3838. You should have Stranorlar made a cathedral town?—We are not on ecclesiastical matters now. I would give very much for having the parishes chargeable, instead of the electoral divisions or rural districts.

3839. Chairman.—It is a bill that does not exist at present. It never was as a civil division?—I think it is the best division for chargeability that has been made yet, and all demarcations are very nearly on the same boundaries—have the same limits for parishes.

3840. Mr. McFadden.—Is it not a pretty long journey from Dungloe to Stranorlar?—There is a railway there that we use for everything.

3841. Chairman.—You could not take the risk?—If a friend of mine had to go to the infirmary, I would as soon put him on a train as put him on a car. I think the train should be used in all cases except for contagious diseases.

3842. I don't think you would get the medical men to agree to send some sick people, such as cases of pneumonia, or a broken leg; what use is the train for that?—I think it would be as easy as a car.

3843. No; put them in a four-wheeled ambulance?—At any rate, they have, according to my arrangement, not to come there at all, but to go to their parish hospital.

3844. I think that is good. The only thing is I am sorry you have not worked out the expenses?—It would take a good deal of work, but I am not afraid of expenses. I think it would be even cheaper than at present.

3845. Mr. McFadden.—How much would you pay these nurses a year?—Not more than they are paid in the present infirmaries of the workhouses.

3846. How much would that work out in the pound in Inishoven?—I think it would be cheaper than what we are doing. There are two nurses in the workhouse at present, and nothing for them to do scarcely.

3847. Chairman.—Oh, that is not so?—Sometimes.

3848. They are very hard worked?—I know the nurse of the fever hospital below is only an odd time engaged.

3849. We are talking about infirmary nurses. They are very hard worked, and find it difficult to match time for necessary services?—I am sure; it is periodically, but not constantly.

3850. They have constant sick there, and the smaller the number of nurses the greater the labour, because they have no relief?—I think they would be better treated in their parish hospital.

3851. I quite agree with you, but I am afraid of the expense on such a large scale as you suggest. My question was only about two or three districts—Gweedore, Voe Rouse, or Glenties—where they are very remote from any hospital, and you went further and said you approved of a hospital in every parish?—Yes; but it would not be a great hospital that would cost £200 or £300, but an ordinary dwelling-house that a nurse could live in, and have a couple of spare rooms with two or three beds—a clean, healthy place; not an alms-house hospital.

Chairman.—I would recommend you to confer with a couple of doctors as to how that would work out.

3852. Mr. Diamond.—How many parishes in your district?—Six.

3853. How many nurses would that entail?—Six nurses. At the present time there is almost a nurse in every parish. There is one of the Jubilee nurses in Buncrana, and we would secure do without a doctor there without her; she is good to the poor.

Mr. McFadden.—And she costs nothing.

3854. Dr. Brown.—How much does she cost?—It is by local subscriptions. I think it is £20 a year.

3855. The committee paying the rent of the house?—Yes; but if the house I speak of were built, we would have no rent to pay; it would be her residence.

3856. Chairman.—She could not act as district nurse and also as hospital nurse?—I think she could.

3857. Dr. Brown.—Would you be in favour of having the district a little larger and having two nurses?—I am only suggesting improvements; have one hospital in every two parishes, but take them away from the workhouse.

3858. Chairman.—For the four workhouses you suggest you would keep in them only the nurses and aged?—Yes.

3859. They should be treated with kindness and consideration. You would class them as deserving poor?—Certainly.

3860. Old married couples, you would not separate them?—No.

3861. And ultimately you would hope that even these workhouses would disappear, and parish houses take their place?—Yes; but that won't be likely in any of our times.

3862. You think the representation, you say, is equitable?—Yes, I think the representation is not equitable; that is to say, two Guardians from each electoral division in the union. There is no equality in it, for some of these electoral divisions are sparsely of population and sparse of valuation. I have an instance here: there is a valuation of £200 represented by two members, and in the same rural district there is a valuation of £5,000 that has but two members, so that the £200 has the same representation as the £5,000, and a population correspondingly large. I think this is most inequitable.

3863. How do you propose to even it up. Do you think the present Boards of Guardians are too large?—The forty-four Guardians that we have in Inishoven is quite too large for one room.

3864. They have 100 or ninety-eight in Tralee. Do you think that is too large?—Certainly; I think the place would be better represented by twelve or fourteen. I would allow one member for each electoral division, but there would be any place misrepresented, and if the divisions grew up to £2,000, I would put on a second member; if it was £5,000 valuation, these members, and £4,000 should be the maximum, four. So if an electoral division had £10,000 I would only have four representatives, and if only £25, I would have one representative. But although I make valuation the basis, I would have population the controlling power. Where the additional Guardian is to be for £1,000 valuation, it would be only provided he represented 400 people, not less.

3865. There would have to be certain conditions of population as well as valuation?—Yes; I would have valuation and population going hand-in-hand with representation.

3866. Do you think there would be really any objection to that among the Guardians, as far as you know them?—I think not.

3867. A large number would have to go out of office at the next election?—After some time it will be very difficult to get District Councillors to come into office.

3868. The thing has not occurred yet; the supply has been equal to the demand up to this?—I have heard plenty of District Councillors say it is their last year, and County Councillors say the same. There are abuses in everything, and in the representation, and in many other places, the road contractors have risen as well as the representatives. I was working out that scheme in Inishoven, and we have, I think, forty-four members. They would be reduced to thirty-three by the scheme that I have proposed—one for each electoral division.

3869. That does not go down as far as you thought desirable?—I think thirty-three would be as many as any of the unions would think desirable.

3870. You would prefer a smaller number?—Yes, we would select.

3871. Mr. MURPHY.—While your proposal might work all right in your union, it might have a different effect in Sligo?—I am acquainted with Derry No. 3, and went into it on the same scale. I find there are only eighteen members at present for the nine electoral divisions. The valuation is £25,000, and in Inishoven we have forty-four members for £40,000.

3872. If your scheme was put into effect, and your boundaries are given to you over the Derry men?—Then I would increase the representation of Derry No. 3 from eighteen to twenty-two members by the scale. The valuation would increase it to twenty-four.

but that must be controlled by the population; the population is not so large. To check it by population each member must represent not less than 400 people.

3925. CHAIRMAN.—What is your view as regards electoral divisional rating as against union rating. You say you would be in favour of reversion to the electoral division?—Yes, I would much rather have it.

3926. You say: "Assess in outdoor relief would be very much modified by reversion to electoral divisional rating." . . . I would prefer rural district rating for all purposes. And then you refer to a question with which we have nothing to do, that is sanitary expenses?—When I say rating for all purposes, if it were rural district rating for everything, from county roads to supporting the poor, I would go in for it, for it is more broad-minded than the other. That was, I think, the Local Government Act, but it has been destroyed since.

3925. There are special ratings for this, for instance, Runcorne and Mordale?—You will have one place pay for all its own, and pay its proportion for everyone else.

3926. I don't think it is paying its proportion for everyone else. It is lot of some things?—What I would go in for is parish rating, and that would be much the same as dispensary ratings, because the dispensaries are nearly coterminous with the parishes.

3927. But both parishes and dispensaries are generally determined by natural boundaries—moorlands, and such like?—I would go in for parish rating in preference to either electoral division or district rating.

3928. You would go in for parished rating and parochial hospitals. There are a number of other things you mention here that don't come under our inquiry—labourers' cottages, revision, demand notices, and Presentment Sessions?—I find a great grievance about Presentment Sessions. There is no healthy competition with road contractors. They are trying to keep them from sweeping the whole county, but it is very difficult to do it.

Mr. MICHAEL McNEIL examined.

Mr. Michael McNeil.

3929. CHAIRMAN.—Are the Glenties Board of Guardians in favour of the amalgamation of unions?—Yes.

3930. What unions do they suggest should be broken up?—They are indifferent as to what unions should be broken up, so long as it would be advantageous to the ratepayers of their own locality, and carried out without inflicting undue hardship and inconvenience to the sick poor in need of relief.

3931. What do they think about the Glenties Union?—They are under the impression, from the geographical situation of Glenties, and the way it is indented by the sea, and the distance from the various points to the railway stations, it seems almost impossible to amalgamate Glenties with other unions, but it would be possible to amalgamate other unions with Glenties. The greater part of Donegal Union, the dispensary district of Murchistera, the most remote part of it, is only eleven miles from Glenties, and Dunkineely is only about nine miles from Glenties, and the sick poor of that locality would not suffer in any way by amalgamation.

3932. They have now to go a slightly shorter distance and a better road?—It is about the same distance by road from the most remote part of Dunkineely Dispensary District to Glenties as it is to Donegal.

3933. How would the Dunkineely people go to Glenties?—They come across at Orough school-house to Roger Maguire's at the top of the hill, and then you cross by Binkane school-house.

3934. Do they take the road by Brackliff?—No, that would be very much longer; they would have to pass through Ardara going that way.

3935. What other parts would you take in—Finter?—Yes; portion of it is at present in Glenties Union.

3936. Breelan Bridge?—Yes; the people of that locality would not suffer by being annexed to Glenties, as there is railway communication through the most populous parts of that district.

3937. You don't want any of Donaghry, I suppose?—Except the distance; if the distance would not be considered too far they would not object to relieving them.

3938. Is not Annagry considered a long way from Glenties?—It is considered very far.

3939. Would you go beyond that?—I don't think so.

3940. You have sent in a statement here of your own; is this your own view or is it the view of the Glenties?—My own view.

3941. You have thought it out very carefully, certainly; a small cottage hospital you suggest on Annamore Island?—Yes.

3942. The population there is pretty large?—A little over 1,600.

3943. You don't approve of keeping up the fever hospital at Ramelton?—That was merely a suggestion that the county funds allocated to the fever hospital might go to Annamore, inasmuch as it does not seem to be required.

Mr. Mackay.—If you take the stones of the Ramelton Hospital away I will give you £200.

3944. CHAIRMAN.—A certain part of the workhouse hospital ought to be reserved for those who are able to contribute; have you many of those people in the Glenties Union?—No; very few.

3945. Is your hospital sufficiently empty to say that you could spare separate rooms?—No.

3946. So it would really mean building?—It would, to provide the accommodation.

3947. Mr. MICHAEL.—How many are there in the hospital at present?—About forty-three; that is about the average.

3948. How many in the other portions of the houses?—Usually about sixty; 130 is the total. On the 1st of August there were 132 relieved indoor, and 208 relieved out of door, making a total of 340.

3949. CHAIRMAN.—In Glenties the people are so very poor that you don't approve for the Glenties Union of out-door relief?—No; it has a bad effect.

3950. As a matter of fact you give very little out-door relief there at present?—If we began and did not put on some restrictions on it you could not stop it at all; it is a sort of poison on these people to remain in houses unfit for human habitation.

3951. What do you think about the tramps?—I suggest that a fixed scale of dietary should be prescribed for able-bodied tramps, male and female, and they should be detained in the casual wards for at least one week, and that it be compulsory upon them to perform a prescribed amount of manual labour in accordance with their class. Children dependent upon the vagrant poor or tramp class should be retained by the Guardians of the union which they enter and committed by them to some central institution as a country-of-large charge where they should be reared and maintained. The great nuisance is the brooding up of tramps. This might be made applicable to those who were in the habit of going about as tramps from one workhouse to another, and that it could be proven to the satisfaction of Justices at Petty Sessions that such was correct.

3952. It is a bit dangerous, is it not, taking their children from them; it may encourage some people to go on tramp?—It might have that effect, but still it would be no harm to adopt it as a trial.

3953. You think the Casual Poor Act, England, should be adopted to give the Guardians power to retain these people legally?—Yes.

3954. You don't approve of cottage hospitals?—The experience in Glenties is that they have not been availed of.

3955. Do you refer to Innishree Hospital?—Yes; the nurse has been discharged; there was £20 a year given by the Guardians, and £60 by private subscriptions, to retain her services, and she remained for one year in the Dungloe dispensary district, and during that period she attended only one case.

3956. CHAIRMAN.—The selection of a site for this hospital was on an island in the sea; it was uninhabited or inhabited only by coastguards. You say it occurs to you that the richer parts of the county would be justly entitled to contribute to the maintenance of the poorer parts?—Yes; we don't get a fair proportion of the Parliamentary Grant, and in addition we think it just and reasonable that the richer parts of a county should contribute towards the wants of the poorer parts.

Sept. 29, 1905.
—
Mr. Michael
McHale.

3555. As long as you get some help you don't care whether it comes from the rich part or elsewhere?—We don't get our fair proportion of Parliamentary grants under the existing procedure. It occurs to me that the Agricultural Grant is apportioned in all of the entire levy of the County Donegal as a county-at-large charge in the first instance.

3557. You won't be able to touch the Agricultural Grant?—The Parliamentary Grant, I should say. On account of the low valuation of the Glenties Union we get a small proportion of the Parliamentary Grant. This, we consider, unfair as we have a larger population than others, and the majority of them are extremely poor.

Mr. C. Boyle.

Mr. C. Boyle examined.

3558. CHAIRMAN.—What part of the union do you represent?—The Dungloe Division of Glenties.

3559. What is your view on the amalgamation question?—The Glenties Board is in favour of amalgamation.

3560. But against the breaking up of their own union?—Yes; we are in favour of having two workhouses in the whole county.

3561. Where would you put them?—At Glenties and Letterkenny.

3562. How would you divide the other unions?—I would put Ballyshannon into Donegal, and Stranorlar into Glenties and the remainder into Letterkenny.

3563. How does that work out as regards valuation?—I would have it a county charge.

3564. And two Boards of Guardians meeting at Glenties and Letterkenny; then you would have no workhouse in Stranorlar, Donegal, or Ballyshannon?—None.

3565. What hospital accommodation would you have in the new Glenties Union?—I would retain the present hospital, or substitute others for them.

3566. You would abolish the Boards of Guardians but retain the hospitals?—Yes.

3567. What class would you admit at the hospital at Ballyshannon; only the sick?—Yes.

3568. What about the very old and infirm who are on their feet?—Send them by railway from these other places to Glenties.

3569. How would you send them to Glenties?—There is a line in course of construction between Ballyshannon and Donegal; all the unions in the county are connected by rail with both these centres except Milford. These lines are being built by the aid of the Government and I think they should give free passage.

3570. Is there anything else?—I am in favour of a county charge.

3571. That would be very simple; you would have two Boards of Guardians and leave the hospital accommodation as it is; that, of course, would reduce the rates?—I think it would.

3572. There would be a good deal of saving in the establishment charges?—We are 2s. in the £ higher than the other districts in the county, on an average.

3573. Mr. MURPHY.—What is the rating in Glenties?—The average has been 7s. 5d. for the last five years on house property, and 4s. 7d. on land.

3574. CHAIRMAN.—What was it in the standard year?—Even higher; and the average rate for the last five years on the rest of the county has been 2s. 11d. on land, and 4s. 6d. on houses.

3575. Is there anything more you would like to mention?—As regards hospital accommodation; I would be in favour of a hospital at Arranmore.

3576. You would not give an extra hospital to the Rosse or Glencolumbkille?—I would not; the number of cases admitted to hospitals in the past three years is only thirty-three—that is fewer hospitals. I am speaking of the ordinary sick; I would not increase it.

3577. They have far to go?—Yes; but the number of cases is not great.

Mr. Charles
Kennedy

Mr. CHARLES KENNEDY examined.

3578. CHAIRMAN.—What division do you represent?—Arranmore.

3579. What is your view about amalgamation?—Our Board think there should be amalgamation, but they think there should be five unions in the county.

3580. What five do you think ought to be in existence?—I would say Glenties, Milford, Donegal, Stranorlar, and Inishowen.

3581. Then you break up Donaghadee and Letterkenny?—Yes, and Ballyshannon.

3582. On what principle did you make this division?—The convenience of the sick poor. I think we could not very well ask the people of remote parts of our union to be taken to any other to start with, and I think, in Inishowen, it would be very inconvenient to take them into any other; it is the outside part of the county, and I think one would be necessary at Milford; at that end of it you take in Donaghadee and part of Letterkenny.

3583. How far would people from north of Greendale, say Bloody Foreland, have to go for hospital accommodation; they would have to go either to Milford or Glenties?—Yes.

3584. Would that be an unreasonable distance, do you think?—I am not sure of the distance from there to Milford.

3585. There is not much difference in the two, but it is a tremendous distance?—There would be very little difference between going to Glenties and going to Milford.

3586. Do you think forty miles a reasonable distance to ask people to go?—I would be in favour of having cottage hospitals in some of these places.

3587. Where would you put them?—One in Arranmore, one in Glencolumbkille, and if there was part of Donaghadee added to Glenties there should be one at Croilly Bridge to serve that end of the Rosse.

3588. Is there any other suggestion?—No. With regard to the children; we board them out, and I think it is the proper thing to do.

3589. There is rather a difference of opinion I think in Glenties on the subject?—There is not; we are perfectly unanimous on it.

3590. Mr. Mackay.—And is it satisfactory?—It is, and it is both cheaper and better for the children.

3591. CHAIRMAN.—Would you be in favour of having the classification extended so that you could send out of the workhouse more children than you are able to send under the existing law?—We could send out any amount of children.

3592. You can only send out orphans and deserted as present; you cannot send out illegitimate children whose mothers are in the workhouse?—We would not send them out in any case, because if we sent them out the mothers would go out and come in with more.

3593. It operates badly on the poor children?—It does, but there is scarcely any help for it that I can see.

3594. You would not be in favour of any scheme by which a woman, after her first lapse, would go, not to the workhouse, but to some religious penitentiary conducted either by some religious organisation or whatever religious body the woman belonged to?—I would certainly be in favour of that as against the workhouse.

3595. That the rates should pay for that woman some moderate cost; what it would cost in the workhouse, we will say?—Yes; if it did not cost more.

3596. Towards the maintenance of this woman; and this religious organisation might give her a fresh start, and then you would agree to board out the child?—I would, certainly.

3597. That was the evidence given by witnesses in other parts of the country and it rather seemed to have a certain amount of practical good in it?—Yes; if the mother could be disposed of.

3598. And put in the way of making a fresh start on good lines?—Yes; I would be in favour of taking charge of the child and sending it out.

3599. About the tramps, what do you think?—I think it is very hard to deal with them; I think for all they cost, anything done by the Guardians to try and get any work out of them for their maintenance would be dearly bought.

4000. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Might it not have the effect of lessening their number; of doing away with the class altogether?—I don't think so.

4001. An occupation that is not attractive does not find many followers, and if the law could be changed and a little positive treatment given to those people it might have the effect of doing away with them little by little until they become extinct altogether?—It would be a long time to look forward to; my own experience is that the tramp nuisance is getting worse from year to year. Sept. 22, 1902.

Mr. Charles Kennedy.

4002. CHAIRMAN.—Then it would be better to make things a little more unpleasant for them?—Yes; if it could be done.

4003. You don't see yourself how it could be done?—No, I do not.

Mr. HUGH O'DONNELL examined.

Mr. Hugh O'Donnell.

4004. CHAIRMAN.—What division do you represent?—Glencolumbkille.

4005. Do you reside there?—I reside in the division of Glencolumbkille, near Carrick, in Meath.

4006. What is your view on this question?—I am in favour of amalgamation.

4007. What would you do with Glenties?—I would retain it in the interests of the sick poor.

4008. Owing to the long distances they would have to go?—Exactly.

4009. Would you add anything to it?—I would add part of Donegal to it, Mounicheries, and Dunkineely.

4010. That is what Mr. McNelis mentioned; would you take part of any other union?—I would take part of Sligo in case it was dissolved.

4011. But you are not very pressing for it?—No.

4012. Where does the boundary come?—The bridge near the late Mr. May's house; this side of it.

4013. How far would you go from the house of Mr. May?—Really I don't know the place very well.

4014. Would you go on to Brockagh?—Yes; it is not far from May's to Brockagh.

4015. Is there anything you would like to say as regards the re-apportionment of areas?—I don't think so.

4016. What other point would you like to touch on; you have heard the evidence that has been given by your fellow Guardians; is there anything you would wish to express dissent from?—There is nothing, unless I would prefer a county charge to a district charge; I think it is right that the richer part should bear their share with the poorer.

Mr. C. BOYLE further examined.

Mr. C. Boyle.

There is one point as regards outdoor relief; I would not be in favour altogether of abolishing it in the Glenties Union; it is very small, and great care is required.

4022. CHAIRMAN.—I am aware that there is very little given in Glenties; they always felt the difficulty?—I know the great assistance it is to some poor struggling people.

4023. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—It keeps them from actual starvation?—Yes; they prefer living at home sooner than face the workhouse.

CHAIRMAN.—I am aware there is very little given in Glenties; they could not give it with their rates.

Mr. BERNARD M'FARLAND examined.

Mr. Bernard M'Farland.

Mr. Mallin asked me to give you the amount contributed to the Hamilton Fever Hospital. The amount contributed to the Letterkenney Fever Hospital is £114 14s. 6d.; it practically never varies. One of two amounts may be contributed; the amount contributed in the standard year by the grand jury was double the amount of the private subscriptions.

4034. CHAIRMAN.—They may pay on two scales, but they generally pay on the higher?—They pay always on the higher. In March, 1903, the amount contributed that year for Hamilton was £85 12s. 6d., whereas last March it was only £69 9s.; but we paid on the high scale.

4035. Dr. BROOKS.—Did you pay on whichever was higher?—Yes; if twice the amount of the private subscriptions is the higher we pay on it, and if the standard year is the higher we pay on it.

4036. And if they were to make alterations and get in subscriptions you would pay on that?—We would; but I have practically no connection with the unions beyond collecting the rates.

The SAVING terminated.

Oct. 1, 1903.

NINTH PUBLIC SITTING.—THURSDAY, OCTOBER 1st, 1903

At the Workhouse, Dunfarnaghy.

Present:—Mr. MICKS, (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. COREY BIDDER.

Mr. MICHAEL COLGAN, Chairman, Dunfarnaghy Union, examined.

Mr. Michael Colgan.

4037. CHAIRMAN.—Had you the question under consideration here as to whether it would be wise to amalgamate this or any of the unions in the County Downall?—Yes.

4038. What was the view of the Board of Guardians here?—In favour of amalgamation.

4039. What exactly did they think would be the best way of carrying out that opinion?—By getting amalgamated with Letterkenny.

4040. That is that the whole of this union should go to Letterkenny?—Yes.

4041. You did not consider the question of any of it going to Glenties—the Gweedore part?—No; we would not be in favour of that.

4042. Or any to Millford?—No.

4043. The whole of the union, you think, should go to Letterkenny?—Yes.

4044. Is that owing to the railway communication?—Yes; the railway line runs right through the centre of the union.

4045. Was that the main reason which decided your thinking it ought to go to Letterkenny?—Yes.

4046. Was there any other reason as regards the cost of maintenance; any question of the amount of the rates?—We considered that by getting amalgamated with Letterkenny it would lessen the rates considerably.

4047. Did you think you would have less rates to pay if you were joined to Letterkenny than to Millford or Glenties?—We considered Letterkenny would be the best.

4048. Did you think that if the workhouse were closed up it would be necessary to keep any hospital for ordinary medical cases or fever?—We were in favour of retaining our fever hospital.

4049. What classes of cases would you treat in that?—Infectious cases only.

4050. Would you propose that all the sick and aged and infirm should go from here to Letterkenny?—Yes.

4051. Was there any difference of opinion about that at all at the Board of Guardians?—None.

4052. Dr. BIDDER.—How far would it be from the remotest part of your union to Letterkenny?

CHAIRMAN.—Take the Bloody Foreland?—About forty miles. From Cully, which is the extreme western end of this union, to Letterkenny, is about thirty-nine miles.

4053. To Gortshork?—Cashelmore would be the station for Gortshork.

4054. I see it is nine Irish miles from Bloody Foreland to Cashelmore?—The railway runs from Cully Bridge, which is the most distant.

4055. There are some sick that cannot be removed by railway?—That is very true.

4056. How would you propose they should deal with bed accidents or cases of pneumonia?—As far as I am concerned my idea is there should be a central hospital in some central part of the county, where all non-infectious cases should be treated.

4057. Dr. BIDDER.—Would Letterkenny serve the purpose?—Yes.

4058. CHAIRMAN.—What we are thinking of here is not a central hospital, but for people who cannot be removed forty miles or anything like that?—If they could not be removed the only way would be to treat them at their own homes.

4059. By a district nurse, do you mean?—Yes, if necessary, under the supervision of the medical officer of the district.

4060. That would be practically taking away from these people hospital accommodation?—Of course; I understand there is some suggestion about cottage hospitals, but I would not be in favour of cottage hospitals.

4061. Dr. BIDDER.—Why?—Because certain people would just make a nuisance of them.

4062. CHAIRMAN.—They would be discharged as soon as they were no longer subjects?—That is true.

4063. Do you think they would cost too much?—I believe they would.

4064. How far is Cully Bridge from here?—It is about sixteen Irish miles.

Mr. Kelly, Solicitor.—It is nineteen miles.

4065. CHAIRMAN.—Do many people come here to be treated from that district?—Gweedore and Maghera-alough?—There have been a couple of people treated in the infirmary here for the last couple of years.

4066. I suppose even that distance makes people rather slow to come?—Yes, it does.

4067. What would you propose to do with all these buildings here if the workhouse was broken up?—It has been suggested it should be turned into a technical school.

4068. And supported by the Agricultural Department?—Yes.

4069. And County Council schemes?—Yes.

4070. There is no other purpose that you think of?—Well, sir, it could be let for factory purposes.

4071. The amount of labour here is very small?—Very small.

4072. They would not be likely to support a factory here; they would not have hands for it?—There are plenty of hands; the young people of the county have to go to other districts to seek employment.

4073. I mean from a distance of three miles round you would not have hands?—You would not.

4074. So that it would not be a possible site for a factory?—It would not be very good.

4075. As regards the children; you have not many in this workhouse?—Only one; it is boarded out; there are two or three in the workhouse at present, but they are under age—infants.

4076. Supposing this union to be amalgamated with Letterkenny; what is the average rate, do you say, for the last few years for Poor Law purposes?—The average rate in this union is about 2s. 7d.

4077. That includes a great many other things?—It includes everything.

4078. That includes roads?—No; it is only poor relief.

4079. Does it cover dispensaries?—I believe it does.

4080. And public health?—Well, really, sir, I am not very satisfied.

4081. CHAIRMAN.—Did you make out, Mr. Boyle, what the rate per £ would be for Poor Law purposes only—maintenance of the poor alone?

Mr. Boyle.—No, sir, I did not; I think it would be 1s. 9d.

4082. I will send you a schedule to give you some statistics about that which is the only part of the rate that we have any power to deal with; we don't touch dispensaries or public health administration. (To Witness).—If the unions were amalgamated do you think the rate ought to be on the whole new Letterkenny Union?—Yes, except for out-door relief purposes.

4083. You would not like to share the Letterkenny responsibility?—No; I would go in for electoral division rating for that purpose.

Oct. 1, 1903.

Mr. Michael Colgan.

4084. Practically you have no out-door relief in Dundahilly?—We have, and it has increased for the last five years.

Mr. Boyle.—It is 8d. in the £, or £200 a year.

CHAIRMAN.—Does 1d. in the £ only produce £50? Mr. Boyle.—That is all; the valuation is £22,000.

4085. CHAIRMAN.—So if you increase a doctor's salary £50, it means 1d. in the £. You think there is at present enough of hospital accommodation, and really there would be no necessity for cottage hospitals if the amalgamation took place?—That is my opinion.

Mr. Kelly.—The Clerk says 1s. 8d. is the poor rate.

4086. CHAIRMAN.—How much of your own salary did you get in?

Mr. Boyle.—£30 as clerk of the union, that is all.

4087. CHAIRMAN.—You did not put in as executive sanitary officer.

Mr. Boyle.—No.

4088. CHAIRMAN.—Would you make any other change except that of going back to the old electoral division rating for out-door relief; would you make any change at all in the way of charging rates?—None.

4089. Or in administration; you would leave it to the Board of Guardians at Letterkenny as before?—Yes.

4090. If you thought you would get your rates reduced would you be ready to make any other suggestion?—I would prefer we were not amalgamated with Letterkenny; I would suggest, in case Milford was dissolved, we got nine divisions from Milford and one from Letterkenny as an alternative; I should say Mulroy Bay should be the boundary.

4091. Keenot at the head of Mulroy Bay?—I would take in Milford, Ballyvary, Loughkeel, Farnon, Kilmurran, and Garrahan.

4092. You would have union-at-large rating?—Yes.

4093. Did you ever consider the question of county rating for part of your expenditure?—I never considered that.

4094. Of course you would like that?—I am sure it would be very good.

4095. You would not like the high valuation of East Dundahilly to help you up there?—Certainly; that was one reason why we would wish to be amalgamated with Letterkenny.

4096. Supposing you were left as you are and had your rate brought as low as Letterkenny, or perhaps lower, by means of a county rate, what would your rate be?—We would be in favour of a county rate.

4097. As against amalgamation?—Yes.

4098. I suppose you have very few people who pay in this hospital?—Very few.

4099. Are there any people who would not pay say 1s. a week?—Yes, there are.

4100. Would you be in favour of having a discretionary power vested in the Guardians, enabling them to charge whatever would be fair, according to the earnings of the people?—Yes, I would like that.

4101. Do you think that would be good for the people themselves?—I do.

4102. You have not many tramps?—We have a fair average of tramps; in the summer time they come and leave there.

4103. For the sea air?—Yes.

4104. Have you a hearty welcome for them?—We have not. I certainly would deal with them under the vagrancy laws, and my opinion is that professional tramps should not be received in the workhouse. There should be a home for them; they should be arrested under the vagrancy laws, and remanded and brought before the magistrate at Petty Sessions. I would give them from six months to two years, and compel them, if they had a trade, to work in this home; and this home would be self-supporting if properly conducted.

4105. It might be a little awkward if these people have no place to stay. They sometimes make themselves objectionable outside?—I find it is nearly always the case class of people who come here for relief, and make it a regular point to come here time after time.

4106. Mr. MURPHY.—In your last suggestion you said your Board was in favour of amalgamating this union with Letterkenny?—Yes.

4107. And you also said that you would not require any accommodation for the sick here, outside the fever hospital?—None.

4108. Does it not occur to you that by that suggestion you would be depriving yourself of the benefit of the Poor Law very much as regards this whole district?

—Taking into consideration that a central hospital would be erected at Letterkenny, it would be just as convenient to send patients to Letterkenny as here, provided the accommodation was here.

4109. Do you not think that there are some aged people, that would require some little care in the neighbourhood, that would not go long distances?—I have no doubt that is right, but I think the medical officers would be quite competent to look after cases of that description in their own homes.

4110. Your object then principally in amalgamating with Letterkenny would be the desire to cut down the rates?—Certainly.

4111. You say you have no children here but one?—I think there are three small children in the house, and one boarded out.

4112. How do you find the boarding-out system work?—It is doing very well; good reports coming in.

4113. The child has a good home?—Yes, a comfortable home; well looked after, and attends school regularly.

4114. Regular inspection by the relieving officer?—Yes.

4115. There was a suggestion at Letterkenny that the Letterkenny Union should be amalgamated with some neighbouring union, for instance, Milford and part of this. Did you think over that question?—It was only last night I saw that in the press.

4116. It was suggested that Letterkenny being a central point in the county, would be a suitable place for an infirmary, or some place for accommodating the whole county?—Yes; the Guardians here would be in favour of having a central hospital at Letterkenny.

4117. And you would be in favour of some kind of a general rate all over the county in place of a union rate?—Yes; if it tended to reduce the rates at present, I would be in favour of it.

4118. Dr. BOGGER.—Have you any knowledge of a cottage hospital?—I have not.

4119. Did you go into the subject at all?—We have been talking over it, but we came to the conclusion that it would be a very costly business.

4120. It was on the score of expense you thought you would be as well without it?—Yes.

4121. Do you know the population of the union from any twenty miles distant to Letterkenny?—The population of this union is nearly 15,000.

4122. How many of these would be beyond this distance from Letterkenny?

CHAIRMAN.—The greater part, 10,000, at all events, beyond twenty miles radius, Glenties and Gweedore?—Falcarragh is twenty-four miles from Letterkenny.

Mr. Boyle.—Falcarragh has 6,000 and Gweedore 5,000.

4123. Dr. BOGGER.—That would be a large population to have practically without a hospital?—But it would be as easy to bring a patient from Gweedore to Letterkenny.

4124. How would it be as easy?—There is railway accommodation.

4125. The railway does not run on Sundays, does it?—Yes, it does.

4126. CHAIRMAN.—Supposing there were cases that could not be removed by rail, how far would it be by Enniskill and Glenties to Letterkenny, and how far is it to Dundahilly in the usual way?—By road to Letterkenny would be thirty miles, English.

4127. And to Dundahilly?—About twenty miles. Then you see the convenience of going by railway is much quicker, if they could not be conveyed by rail they could not be conveyed by ambulance.

4128. Oh, yes; you can get a man in at his own door on a four-wheeled ambulance, and bring him a great distance?—A four-wheeled ambulance would not be suitable for this country.

4129. You may take my word that it would. I have driven these roads. If you could keep a cottage hospital say at some central place, Gweedore, or Gweedore, or O'Neill Bridge, wherever considered desirable, and if you had a county contribution under which your rating would not be increased, would you then have any objection to that?—Well, I believe there would be none.

4130. It is entirely on the ground of expense, and owing to the fact that you have such a small valuation, where 1d. in the £ only produces £50, that you cannot afford to increase your expenses?—Our expenses are up £300 for the last three years; our rates have increased 6d. in the £.

4131. Dr. BOGGER.—What is that owing to?—Increase in the staff, and repairs, and so forth.

4132. You had no epidemics?—None whatsoever.

Oct. 1, 1903.
Mr. Michael
Colgan.

4133. Mr. Mackey, Solicitor.—You said supporting Milford was discredited you would propose to add nine electoral divisions to this place?—Certainly.

4134. What would you do with the other ten?—That is for the people to consider themselves.

4135. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose they would have to go to Letterkenny?—Yes; my idea is that the peninsula of Fennel should go to Letterkenny—the district that lies between Malbeg and the Swilly.

4136. Would you take in Ballynure?—Yes.

4137. Mr. Mackey.—Is not that the kidney of Letterkenny. If you look at the map it would be a line ball, and you would like to have the advantage of it?—Yes.

4138. Mr. Kelly.—These districts of Bongsall and Carrigart that you propose to take in, you would have seems as easily there as to Letterkenny. Terms is currently near?—Yes.

4139. The facilities for the poor are equal as regards Letterkenny on account of the railway?—Yes.

4140. You said the expense of this institution had increased £300?—Yes, for the last three years.

4141. You think there would be a saving of £400 by the amalgamation?—Yes, I have made that estimate.

4142. If this union is retained, do you know it is then a question that a large amount will have to be expended on the repairs?—Certainly.

4143. Will it be required immediately?—Yes, it is well as coming down over our heads.

4144. And there is some question of the sewerage?—Yes.

4145. Would you retain the fever hospital here and transfer one of the nurses?—Yes.

Mr. John Irvine.

Mr. JOHN IARVIE examined.

4146. CHAIRMAN.—You have heard the evidence that the chairman of the union gave. On the whole, do you agree with him?—I do.

4147. Is there any point on which you decidedly differ from him?—No.

4148. Is there anything you would like to add to what he has said?—I don't think I could add very much, his evidence was so exhaustive.

4149. He really has expressed your views and that of the Guardians?—Yes. With regard to the establishment of cottage hospitals, it just occurred to me, when he was giving his evidence, that should such a thing be decided on, I don't think this locality here would be the best centre for one.

4150. You would have the fever hospital here?—Yes.

4151. And you would have the cottage hospital at?—Some place at Cloughaneely or Gweedore.

4152. Or supposing you had it at Grally Bridge, and get the two unions to support it?—Yes; we have a very thickly populated district near there.

4153. Annagry; and you would have the two unions served by hospitals of that sort?—Yes; although I don't approve of them generally.

4154. Is that because you have not seen any of them working?—No.

4155. Is it because you don't like the idea of the expense?—It is not. My idea is that an isolated hospital like that is away from supervision, with only a nurse, and assistant nurse, and a dispensary doctor.

4156. The utility depends very much on the character of the nurse—whether she is an attentive, nice person?—I don't think they would be as well looked after as in a place where there was a large staff.

4157. Mr. MURKIN.—And one official to watch another?—Yes; one head.

4158. CHAIRMAN.—Of course, you would have the clergy of the district looking in. They would be looking after the welfare of the people?—I don't want to go into details.

4159. But they would as regards supervision?—Certainly.

4160. But what you say is, especially if there was any risk to do, there is a certain temptation to be lax and careless?—That is one of the ideas that would make me not be in favour of these hospitals.

4161. They have been tried elsewhere, and what you say has been observed, but the general opinion about these hospitals is that they are greatly liked by the people of the locality having a hospital in their midst?—Another notion I have is that in the unpopulated district, or poor district, as to Gweedore, and round the whole West, I think that in those communities where the great army of labour comes from, and they send out their own people all over the country to the best districts for labour, when they get worn out from old age and debility, or accident, it is too bad that they should be thrown back on the poor community from which they sprang.

4162. These poor people naturally go home again?—Yes; and they are apt to be sent into the workhouse.

4163. Would not a rate over the whole county or country in aid of these poor districts meet your objection?—Yes, but I was thinking there should be a Government subsidy. I think the whole country is served by this class of people going to Scotland and England, and expending their lives and energies there.

4164. Therefore you would suggest that the county at large should contribute?—Should contribute more or less. When the rate is over 1s. in the £ on those poor people for permanent purposes, it is too much.

4165. Mr. Kelly.—At present here you not a striking instance of what you are talking about. Is there not a pauper here at present who was forty years in Scotland?—Yes; he was sent back to us; in fact he was so long away that the Guardians of the neighbourhood he said he belonged to could not remember him at all. They argued at first that no such man came from the place, but after a while he proved who he was.

4166. Since he turned up he was able to punish them?—Yes.

4167. Dr. BIRNIE.—How long is that ago?—Two months ago.

4168. He was forty years in Scotland?—Yes.

4169. Mr. MURKIN.—Had he not acquired a settlement?—It appears not; they sent one or two down Scotland.

4170. Mr. Kelly.—Is not the railway four or five miles from Duffanagh?—It is 4½ Irish miles.

4171. Would you, as regards facilities, consider it as cheap to bring paupers to Letterkenny as to Duffanagh?—It would be cheaper to bring them to Letterkenny.

4172. And if you had a cottage hospital about Gweedore, you think the wants of the infirm and sick would be attended to?—I think they would be very well.

4173. Do you know the capacity of this house for holding paupers?—Yes.

CHAIRMAN.—You need not go into that.

Mr. Kelly.—The chairman of the District Council, and Mr. Murphy, intended to come here, but have been prevented, but they are unanimous in your resolution.

Mr. James
Boyle.

Mr. JAMES BOYLE examined.

4174. CHAIRMAN.—I intend to send a return to Mr. Boyle to get some statistics. The Guardians passed a resolution unanimously in favour of the amalgamation of this union with Letterkenny?—They did; preferably, Letterkenny.

4175. Was that unanimous?—It was; there was a special meeting summoned.

4176. Mr. Kelly.—The question was mooted six or seven months ago in the neighbourhood. Was there a public meeting?—Yes; it is about twelve months ago since it was started.

4177. Was there not a resolution three or four years ago?—Three years ago a similar resolution was passed. It was started twelve years ago.

4178. Mr. MURKIN.—How many Guardians were present on the session of the meeting?—Seven.

4179. What is the composition of the body; how many members?—Twenty-three.

4180. CHAIRMAN.—Was there any movement outside as far as you are aware, showing there was any difference of opinion on the part of the people of the district?—No.

4181. They seemed to agree with the seven who passed that resolution unanimously?—The general popular opinion is for amalgamation, except in the vicinity of Duffanagh.

4182. The trades, I suppose?—Yes.

4183. Mr. MURKIN.—The ground principally, I suppose, was economy?—Yes; it was estimated it would reduce the rates by 6d. in the £.

4184. So the universal opinion almost is that this institution should be amalgamated with a neighbouring one?—Yes.

4185. CHAIRMAN.—Did the Guardians in the Dunfally Electoral Division dissent from that?—They did not; it was passed unanimously.

4186. Were the Guardians of Dunfally present?—Mr. Murphy and Mr. Irvine, there were only five present.

4187. Mr. MURKIN.—Out of a body of twenty-three?—Yes.

4188. Dr. BUCHAN.—Did they get notice of it?—Yes, the meeting was specially summoned.

4189. Mr. Kelly.—What was the time?—Six of August.

4190. Were they busy at the harvest, when the few weather was coming in?

Mr. KELLY.—I think it was in 1889 or 1890. There was a full Board here, and a resolution was passed in favour of amalgamation.

Dr. J. J. MACGRATH EXAMINED.

4191. CHAIRMAN.—Did you happen to be present when the chairman was giving his evidence?—I was not.

4192. The question has arisen, supposing this workhouse was broken up, whether any hardship would result to the sick of the union by the closing of the hospital for the ordinary medical and surgical cases, as distinguished from the fever cases. Do you think any hardship would result in the union if the workhouse infirmary were closed, and no other general hospital opened in Dunfally Union for the sick?—I would say that if there were a small hospital it would be very advantageous to the people about, and it would certainly result, to some extent, in a hardship to the people, in this way, that they would have to be removed altogether from their own people.

4193. Is it your experience that their friends come in frequently to see them, or do you find that they do not?—They come in very frequently; too frequently sometimes.

4194. Even from a distance like Greendale or Cloughanally?—They come in to see their friends.

4195. Would any hardship result to the sick from the closing of the hospital beyond what you might call the sentimental, or separation from friends?—There are some of these districts it would be very difficult to get people from to railway stations. The station is five miles from the village.

4196. Take the further districts, Coosroads, and beyond it?—From Coosroads they could be conveyed, if not immediately, by railway. There are just as good facilities to remove them to Letterkenny and other places as to here, having regard to distance.

4197. There would be a large proportion of medical and surgical cases that could not be carried by railway?—Many of them.

4198. How would it work out as regards those?—I would say that there should still be some sort of small hospital in the union for those.

4199. What would you think would be a good site or place for the erection of such a hospital?—Of course I would say, as you have one here, to have it here. Then it would be a question also, perhaps, to have another one in another district—another cottage hospital.

4200. At where?—I am not sufficiently acquainted with the districts.

4201. You would be guided by the extent of the population?—Something like that. I would say there ought to be one or two hospitals, perhaps.

4202. You would not keep up this building here as a hospital?—It is a small hospital, and it could be made a very effective and good hospital.

4203. You are now speaking from a medical point of view; but if you were considering it from a ratepayer's point of view, would you see any economy in breaking up the union, and at the same time keeping up this large building as a hospital?—I certainly would, even as a ratepayer. I think the union ought to be broken up, though.

4204. Would it be on economical grounds?—On economical grounds.

CHAIRMAN.—I was at it, and there was an inquiry. Oct. 1, 1900.

4205. Mr. Kelly.—There was a public meeting held outside the Board; when was that?—There was no public meeting held since this Commission was appointed. Mr. Harkin addressed a meeting at Creenough.

Mr. KELLY.—He was chairman of the Guardians.

4206. CHAIRMAN.—Was he in favour of amalgamation?—Yes; he read a lot of statistics.

4207. Mr. MURKIN.—How many inmates in the house at present?—Forty.

4208. How many in the infirmary?—Eight.

4209. And the body of the house?—Thirty-two.

4210. Mr. Kelly.—What is the average cost of a patient?—About 3s. 7d.; that is for food and clothing only.

4211. It would cost about £25 entirely, the maintenance?—About that; it costs £1,000 to keep the union going.

CHAIRMAN.—Do you propose to examine the doctor?

Mr. KELLY.—I have examined all the witnesses I am instructed to examine.

Dr. J. J. MacGrath.

4212. You did not consider what the saving would be, if any, if you still keep on the fever hospital and infirmary. Would you have much saving?—Well, the fever hospital, if I understand, in the fever hospital and infirmary the patients cost £28 a year each, and the ordinary patients cost about £23. I apprehend if the ordinary patients in the hospital were taken and put out—I am speaking, of course, of this union—with their friends, to lodge, as it were, the saving would be considerable.

4213. Boarded out; that is the aged and infirm, who are not really acute cases?—Yes; I would suggest that, and even children.

4214. That they should be boarded out and the Guardians pay for them?—With their friends; and I apprehend they would board with their friends for some small thing.

4215. It would be a kind of out-door relief?—Yes; there are people that are at present in the workhouse who could more economically live outside, if their friends were given a small sum to keep them.

4216. Do you think that if the Guardians took the present number of infirm persons—say thirty—that there are in the workhouse, and if they were to put those out of the workhouse and send them back to the districts they came from, as boarded-out patients, do you think you would not be likely to have a very large number of applications from other people for similar privileges?—That would be the objection.

4217. How would you meet that?—I have not thought that out. I did not give that sufficient consideration. I was not prepared for examination here.

Mr. KELLY.—The doctor was not deputed to give evidence.

4218. CHAIRMAN.—I understand that. But that would be the difficulty—I know that would be the difficulty. I foresee that.

4219. Dr. BUCHAN.—Have you much consumption in this union?—There is a good deal.

4220. CHAIRMAN.—Whereabouts is it, chiefly?—I would say in the village of Dunfally, a great deal of it.

4221. Do they know anything about isolation?—It is very difficult, I find, to teach them isolation. For instance, I admitted a case last week so extremely bad that really, although she was in the village of Dunfally, I rather feared she would die on roads, although it is only a very short distance; but she is living still, and there are at present in Dunfally several cases of phthisis.

4222. Living in small houses?—Yes; and there is no doubt they will contaminate a great deal more.

4223. CHAIRMAN.—Is it spreading?—It is spreading.

4224. Do you think there is anything in the conditions of life here, or in the situation, that predisposes this place to be liable to consumption?—No, I don't think so, not more than other places. I was sometimes in Coosroads, and I believe there was more consumption there; and I was also in County Waterford for some time, and I believe even there, though it is rather a rich country, there is more consumption; but there are a few places about here that are very bad for consumption. The village of Dunfally is really bad.

On 1, 1900.

Dr. J. J.
MacGeach.

I apprehend a good deal of it is want of proper sewerage; also from the conditions of life under which they live, so that they merely exist, and they are then liable to all sorts of diseases.

4222. Is there anything in this place that would make it a bad site. This workhouse, if the workhouse were closed, would there be anything against making this, after making due structural changes, making this a sanatorium for the county, or for the adjacent counties, for consumption cases?—I believe it would be a very good site; the site of this workhouse and hospital is an excellent site.

4223. Do you know anything against it; you have the railway, too, within four miles?—We have.

4224. So that you would get patients brought within four miles of the workhouse, and then ambulated over?—Certainly; in nearly all cases of consumption, except in a case such as I spoke of, where the patient was very far gone.

4225. You think it would be a good plan?—I do.

4226. What ground have you there?—I don't know how many acres.

Mr. Boyle.—There are about four acres.

4227. CHAIRMAN.—You would have exercise ground?—Yes.

4228. I suppose that idea did not occur to the Guardians?—I dare say it did occur, but perhaps they did not care for it.

4229. If they were not paying for it, perhaps they would not mind?—No; I think they would be rather pleased. There was a consumptive patient sent here from Lifford because this was his native place, but I had no ward for consumptive patients.

4230. Was it an advanced case?—It was, but he was able to go about; it was in the third stage. I applied to the Guardians, and they sent him on to Lifford. I don't know what arrangement the Guardians made. But this last case was so far advanced I was obliged to admit him, and I have him here in an isolation ward, but I have no hope of arresting the disease.

4231. Dr. BOGGER.—Do you know anything of a fever case being sent from this union to Derry?—I know only what I have seen in the public papers; that is all.

4232. There was some mention of the fever hospital not having been used for three years?—That is quite untrue.

4233. CHAIRMAN.—You contradicted it, I think, in this morning's papers?—I did. It must have been an understatement, because the people with whom the case occurred are well aware that some of their own people were treated in the fever hospital recently.

4234. It was not thought that that was a fever case when it was started?—I am not aware of that. I heard there was a telegram sent to Derry to prepare a bed for a fever case.

4235. At all events the patient was not received into the Foyls Hill Hospital?—So I am informed.

4236. Mr. MASSEY.—Is it recently that consumption has developed in Derryferry?—As far as I know, it is of long standing. My predecessor found it also; it is the village doctor.

4237. Mr. IRVINE.—How many houses in the village have families suffering from that disease?—I did not come here prepared—well, say four houses.

4238. Dr. BOGGER.—In the four houses, do the patients sleep with any person else?—I have tried to keep them from it, but I have found it very difficult.

4239. You think they do sleep with others?—Certainly.

4240. And take no precautions otherwise as to expectation?—I don't think it would be well to say that, because I am trying to alter it.

4241. CHAIRMAN.—Are you apprehensive that they don't?—I am apprehensive that they cannot, even if they did try, that they cannot sufficiently keep away.

4242. Dr. BOGGER.—But do they carry it on to some extent?—Some of them are very intelligent people, and I must say some of them realise the danger.

4243. Mr. KELLY.—Those people would go into a sanatorium much sooner than into the infirmary of a workhouse?—Decidedly. I have tried, as a matter of fact, to get some of them into a sanatorium, but unfortunately, cannot, as there are no vacancies at present.

4244. So that the infirmary is practically a dead letter as regards giving any benefit to those people?—It is.

4245. Dr. BOGGER.—Do you get any paying patients in the infirmary?—Not in my experience.

4246. If there was a cottage hospital, would they go in and pay?—I am sure you would have a very large number of people coming in if there were a cottage hospital independently. They have an objection to coming here because it is a fever hospital.

4247. Mr. KELLY.—Are you aware that many of the patients are paying in the infirmary for the last six or three years?—I am only here for eighteen months, and I have no knowledge.

4248. Have you had many patients in the infirmary during that time?—I did not calculate, but I shall find out.

CHAIRMAN.—We are sending a circular for statistics on that point.

4249. Mr. KELLY.—Roughly, would there be five admissions in the year?—A great deal more.

4250. In recent years the fact that they were building a railway here caused the number of admissions to the infirmary to increase?—I have heard that.

4251. Accidents came here?—Oh, yes.

Mr. Michael
Colgan.

Mr. MICHAEL COLGAN recalled.

4252. CHAIRMAN.—Up to the present, have you got much from paying patients, except from the police?—For the last five years there were only two police constables treated; all the others were civilians—four or five accidents on the railway, and three others from the neighbourhood.

Mr. James
Sweeney.

Mr. JAMES SWEENEY examined.

I was not present at Letterkenny, but I have been told what Mr. DUNNELL said with regard to the Ramelton Fever Hospital. I am one of the governors of the Hospital, and I give the statement I have heard; he made use of a most unqualified contradiction, as to the way the Hospital was conducted.

4253. CHAIRMAN.—He had not a very high opinion of it?—He has never been there to form an opinion.

4254. You think Ramelton Hospital is useful to the locality?—Most useful.

4255. And it has relieved serious cases of illness?—Most undoubtedly. I know quite a number of poor people who have been brought there who were well, and would die on the roadside sooner than go to Millford Hospital. They go most willingly and cheerfully to Ramelton Hospital. There have been quite a number of difficult operations performed there, as can easily be proved from the books.

4256. And it is managed at a very low cost?—Yes, at a very low cost. The cost of supporting the nurses in Ramelton Fever Hospital, and also the payment of the doctor, is much less than the payment of one nurse at the Millford Hospital, owing to the action of a number of stipendiaries. That is my experience. I don't feel at all sure, and I will prove it beyond the shadow of a doubt. The medical officer in attendance is a credit to his profession, and the nurses that have been trained under the charge of the hospital have become most devoted and successful when they have been appointed to other institutions.

CHAIRMAN.—We saw the hospital yesterday morning.

4257. Dr. BOGGER.—Do many people go long distances to Ramelton Fever Hospital?—Oh, yes, they come from a considerable distance away; even quite a number come from His Majesty's army.

4258. CHAIRMAN.—From Rathfriland?—Yes.

Mr. MASSEY.—They come from Knockalla.

Witness.—They come seven or eight miles, probably ten.

4259. Dr. BOGGER.—From Rathfriland?—Yes.

4260. Mr. MURPHY.—The number of patients there seemed to be very few?—They are not many.

4254. Dr. BROSSE.—Would you take them from any portion?

CHAIRMAN.—The doctor has the power of admitting?—Yes, and also on the recommendation of a governor.

4255. Does he refuse admissions, as far as you are aware, in many cases?—Very few are refused.

Dr. BROSSE.—Not only does he not refuse, but do the people, beyond a certain limit, know they can get in?—The people do not know any definite limits.

Mr. MACKAY.—They think it belongs to Ramelton.

4256. CHAIRMAN.—Do they come from Kilmacrennan?—Not generally. They are under the impression it belongs to the Ramelton dispensary district.

4257. Dr. BROSSE.—Where do you raise your subscriptions from. Is it altogether from Ramelton?—Chiefly, and also from a few miles outside the town; we rarely go over it.

4258. And I suppose you think you have a right to admit those people?—We don't go quite on that ground.

Mr. MACKAY.—I have been receiving this in my mind. I know one case that came from Milford. It was the doctor there sent it on, because he had not the means of operating.

4259. Mr. MURKIN.—How do the contributions compare at the present time with the contributions of six or eight years ago?—I was not a governor six or eight years ago.

4260. And the County Council contribute in proportion?—Yes; in proportion to the amount we contribute privately.

4261. You are satisfied the hospital there does a lot of good?—Quite satisfied.

4262. And it would be a great mistake to have it removed?—Certainly.

4263. Mr. KELLY.—A man who was in the hospital last year made a bequest when he was dying?—Yes.

4264. CHAIRMAN.—Are there any other witnesses?

Witness.—Seeing that Mr. Diamond is now present, I would be very glad to repeat my evidence in his presence.

CHAIRMAN.—This witness, Mr. Diamond, who has gone down, holds a diametrically opposite opinion to yours on the subject of the Ramelton Hospital.

Oct. 1, 1902.

Mr. James
Sweeney

Mr. JAMES A. DIAMOND examined.

I anticipated as much.

4273. CHAIRMAN.—And you are both free to express your opinions.

Witness.—The chairman has been there and saw it, but he did not see it in its deshabitilla.

Mr. Sweeney.—Neither have you; you have never been there in your life.

Witness.—I walked round it.

Mr. James A.
Diamond.

Mr. E. WATERS examined.

4278. CHAIRMAN.—Was there anything that you wish, on behalf of the Milford Board of Guardians, to say?—No.

CHAIRMAN.—Because we have finished the evidence as far as the Dunsfonghy Union is concerned. They are in favour of amalgamating with Letterkenny instead of any other union.

Mr. Diamond.—If they conduct themselves properly, we have no objection to their going to Milford.

CHAIRMAN.—They don't want Milford, but if Milford is to go, they would take half of it.

Mr. Diamond.—There is just one thing I would like to refer to. You heard Mr. Hayes say the people lost all affection for their pauper friends when they went into the workhouse. He also followed up that remark by saying that the people, as a rule, were all buried in the union grounds. I yesterday called upon the clerk, and out of fifteen deaths in Milford for the past twelve months, three were buried in the workhouse, who were troops.—Here is the list:—Wm. Rodden, Kilmacrennan; Mudge M. Fadden, Rathfriland; Wm. Wason, Kilmacrennan; Wm. Callaghan, Masserunt; James McLaughlin, Tully; Catherine M'Atter, Masserunt; Ellen Wharekey, Killygarra. All the deaths during last year ending 31st March, 1903, interred out. None buried in the workhouse. Wm. Ward, buried in Milford graveyard; Mary McGeoghan, in workhouse; Patrick McGettigan, Meavegh; John Gallagher, Meavegh; Patrick M'Atter, Masserunt; James O'Shaughnessy, Meavegh; Bolla Byrne, workhouse; Sarah McBrick, Killygarra. Half-year ended 30th September, 1903. During the past year ended September, fifteen deaths—twelve buried out, and three in the workhouse.

4279. CHAIRMAN.—Yes, fifteen deaths, and twelve were taken out by relatives?—Yes; I have been a witness to it when going to my place of worship on a Sunday.

4280. I must say I heard it with great surprise.—Yes; he was speaking from reconciliation when he said so. I have watched with pleasure the relatives and friends of paupers coming there on a Sunday.

4279. I see two of these are from Mr. Hayes' own district?—Yes; they are buried in Meavegh.

4280. That is a very long way to take them?—Yes; their friends came for them.

4281. What about the bodies from their friends?—They all generally come to see them.

4282. And they are not deserted?—Nothing of the sort. It would be a terrible impression to leave on you to say that they were altogether neglected as soon as they went into a workhouse. Nothing of the kind is the fact.

4283. Mr. MURKIN.—Then your idea would be to retain in the localities some institution or other for the accommodation of the infirm and aged?—Decidedly; it would be a very inhuman thing to have these poor creatures removed a distance of eighteen miles to Milford, and then to Letterkenny; and Dunsfonghy is out of the question altogether.

4284. You would not believe in a central county institution for such a class?—Not for that class, but I would say the county infirmary is altogether in the wrong location when it is located at Milford. If we had a county hospital at Letterkenny it would be a central place.

4285. Mr. KELLY.—Or Ramelton?—Ramelton is very well supplied with the hospital it has if it is continued. I hope Mr. Sweeney has treated you to a detailed account of the operations that I described as tooth extractions the day before yesterday.

CHAIRMAN.—You were wrong in that.

Mr. Sweeney.—He is often wrong.

Witness.—Leave that for the gentlemen just to find out.

4286. Mr. MURKIN.—You are not specially interested in the Dunsfonghy Union being amalgamated or otherwise?—No; they are able to take care of themselves.

Dr. McGraff.—You might perhaps consider that phthisis was only in Dunsfonghy village. I forgot to say there is a great deal in the upper end, Cresslonga direction.

Mr. E.
Waters.

The sitting was adjourned.

TENTH PUBLIC SITTING.—TUESDAY, OCTOBER 13TH, 1903.

At the Workhouse, Ballyshannon.

Present:—Mr. MILES (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. CONY BROGER.

CHAIRMAN.—Gentlemen, this is an adjournment of the Letterberry Inquiry, and I would like to know who are the legal gentlemen present?

Mr. Philip Law Smith, M.P.—I appear, instructed by Mr. Reid, for the Ballyshannon Rural District No. 1, for the Urban Council of Ballyshannon, and for the Board of Guardians of Ballyshannon.

CHAIRMAN.—Are the other two counties represented, Leitrim and Fermanagh?

Mr. Smith.—We will produce evidence before you, sir. They are not separately represented, except as part of the Board of Guardians.

CHAIRMAN.—Is there any division of opinion?

Mr. Smith.—I think not; there have been resolutions passed. I will tell you shortly the position that the bodies I represent take up. As you are aware, sir, the valuation of the entire of Donegal is about £306,000, and the valuation of the Union of Ballyshannon amounts to £22,290, that is more than one-sixth of the entire county of Donegal. There are 122,328 acres in this union, and it is divided between three counties—41,570 for Donegal, 52,386 for Fermanagh, and 28,452 for the County Leitrim. There are five dispensary districts in this union—Ballintra, Ballyshannon, Belleek, Charahill, and Keshbeg—and I think, from your experience, having been here before, you have some idea of the way in which this workhouse has been done. I think it is one of the few workhouses in Ireland at which there has never been an inquiry, or in reference to which any complaint made. It has been singularly efficient in the management of its business, and the way the paupers are looked after. The body I represent are in favour of amalgamation. There are at present eight unions in Donegal.

CHAIRMAN.—Before you pass away from that, have you got the valuations of the three rural divisions?

Mr. Smith.—I can hand them in to you in a moment; Mr. CHURCH will give it to you. What we are in favour of doing is this. There are eight unions in the County Donegal. What we suggest is that four should remain, and the four we suggest should remain are, Ballyshannon, Glenties, either Letterberry or Milford, and Inishowen. We say the other four—Donegal, Dunfemphry, Stranorlar, and either Milford or Letterberry—should be abolished. If you look at the formation of this union on the map, Ballyshannon is the largest town coming through Donegal to Londonderry from Sligo. It has this large workhouse in close proximity to Banagher, and you know the Flaxer camp is there. We suggest that we should take in position of the County Fermanagh. I understand, by a resolution passed by the Fermanagh County Council, they are in favour of amalgamation, and only want one union for the County Fermanagh.

CHAIRMAN.—Taking your part?

Mr. Smith.—No; they have us over and will give us a portion of Inishowen. We are prepared to take up Brookhill and Roskeshober; that will extend down to the village of Pettigo. Mr. West, the Secretary of the Fermanagh County Council, has been kind enough to give me the resolution passed by a Committee of the County Council of Fermanagh, consisting of the Earl of Erne, Earl of Belmore, Mr. Jordan, M.P., and Mr. Cranley. We have the assistance and support of the Fermanagh County Council. They don't want any portion of our union, and I understand they are willing to give us Brookhill and Roskeshober. The town of Donegal is about half the size of the town of Ballyshannon. At present our union boundary runs up to the middle of the village of Ballintra, and we suggest we should get all Killybeg.

CHAIRMAN.—You would take the town of Donegal?

Mr. Smith.—We would take the entire of Inishowen—we have half of that already—and also Templemore.

CHAIRMAN.—How far would you go—up to Lough Beg?

Mr. Smith.—Up to Lough Beg.

Mr. Maguire.—Up to the top of the hills.

CHAIRMAN.—The sky line.

Mr. Smith.—As far as Letterberry is concerned, we are prepared to take in the entire parish of Ballyshannon and Killybeg. Although Ballyshannon is at the extreme end of Donegal, you will see from its position, and the class of roads, and the facilities, between towns and roads, of getting into Ballyshannon, that it is the most suitable place in the whole of Donegal for carrying on a large union. Ballyshannon is here (on map), and it extends to Pettigo on the other side, and the result of all this will be a great economy by abolishing some of the other unions. You have good train service, and the people of Donegal won't have as far to go to Glenties on that side. The answers that were given by the Board of Guardians to the queries that you submitted to them are:—"The Board of Guardians of Ballyshannon Union are in favour of reducing the number of union workhouses; that such reduction can be brought about by amalgamation. The facilities for the conveyance of the destitute to the workhouse by railways, and otherwise, are vastly improved in recent years. The Board of Guardians of Ballyshannon are of opinion that all workhouses having an average number of inmates of 100 or over, should be retained; and those workhouses having a low average of inmates might with advantage be discontinued." The number in the workhouse of Ballyshannon is 127—that is an average; in Donegal, 50; Dunfemphry, 43; Glenties, 19; Inishowen, 123; Letterberry, 27; Milford, 72; and Stranorlar, 55, and we suggest that the unions with over 100 inmates should be retained. "We do not approve of auxiliary inmate asylums; such institutions would make county management too expensive. The present system of having inmates at one centre is a better arrangement. Workhouses with a small average number of inmates, if financed, might, with advantage to their surrounding localities, be utilized as technical schools, or converted into houses of industry, according to the respective requirements of the districts. We do not approve of the maintenance of any class or class of paupers in the workhouse of another union when there is amalgamation in the case of the two most affected thereby, and we disapprove of the boarding of inmates. Amalgamation or no amalgamation of unions, combination or no combination, or whether any changes as to administration are made, we are in favour of opinion there should be a change in the mode of granting outdoor relief. We think outdoor relief should only be granted by the Board of Guardians on the production of a certificate from a dispensary medical officer, or on the joint recommendation of the Guardians representing the electoral division in which the applicant resides. We consider outdoor relief for support to the former system of divisional rating. We consider that no additional accommodation for the treatment of the sick poor is required in Ballyshannon Union. The good reputation of the Ballyshannon workhouse and hospital is sufficient to show that the treatment of the poor inmates has always been excellent, and we have never yet heard any complaint on the ground of want of, or of bad, treatment. We consider wherever a patient is able, he should contribute. More vigilance is necessary on the part of the Guardians in enforcing the provisions of the Vagrancy Act, and the improvement not to be less than two months." The Town Commissioners of Ballyshannon have given the following reply:—"That we, the Town Commissioners of Ballyshannon, in full meeting assembled, unanimously resolve that in consequence of the central position occupied by the Ballyshannon workhouse and fever hospital, their convenience in respect of the districts which they serve, the splendid accommodation which they can afford, their proximity to the large towns of Ballyshannon and Buncrana, and the smaller ones of Ballintra, Belleek, Kilmough, Garrison, and Tullaghan, we are strongly of opinion that no change can be effected whereby the interests of the sick and destitute poor could be so well safeguarded. We also respectfully urge that before deciding on their report dealing with the Ballyshannon Union, the Poor Law Reform Commissioners should consider the good management that prevails in the union and at the workhouse, the good condition of the union parishes, and the efficiency and harmony that exist among all the officials. Signed—Michael Maguire, solicitor, Chairman; Edward Lynch, Town Clerk." The Fermanagh County Council are also in favour of amalgamation. The number of people that were admitted to the Ballyshannon Workhouse during the year 1902 amounts in all to the number of 920—that is, 704 were admitted during the year, three were born in the house, and the number that were in the house at the beginning of the year, making in all 920 persons. I now call Mr. Chas. who will give you the details of these figures.

Oct. 16, 1906.

Mr. J. B. CHAS. EXAMINED.

Mr. J. B. Chas.

4287. Mr. Smith.—You were formerly Clerk of the Poor Law Board here?—Yes.

4288. And you now occupy the corresponding position with the Rural District Council?—That is so.

4289. For how many years have you occupied these positions?—Nearly thirty-four years.

4290. During that time, as far as you know, have the workhouse buildings and the staff of the Union at Ballyshannon been kept in efficient working order?—They have, particularly since the Chairman of this Commission inaugurated a new system of running.

4291. Can you give the date of that?—I think it was about 1885.

CHAIRMAN.—1886 or 1891.

4292. Mr. Smith.—That system was adopted then?—It was. We were the first union, I think, in the North of Ireland.

4293. And with satisfactory results to the sick poor?—Most satisfactory.

4294. I see you have adopted the scale of dietary, and everything else recommended by the Local Government Board?—We improved the dietary.

4295. Have you carried out, as far as possible, the different recommendations of the Local Government Board as regards the workhouse?—We have.

4296. CHAIRMAN.—Except as to the flags in the workhouse?—We are advancing; we will do that in time, too.

4297. Mr. Smith.—The union, as at present constituted, is made up of three counties?—Yes. The valuation is £25,475 in Donegal, £17,049 in Fermanagh, and £9,796 in Leitrim, making £52,320 in round numbers.

4298. Am I right in saying that Ballyshannon is the largest town in Donegal, and the largest town on the way from Derry to Sligo?—Oh, certainly.

4299. Much larger than the town of Donegal?—Oh, yes; much larger.

4300. CHAIRMAN.—You would not go through Strabane or Omeath that way?—No.

4301. Mr. Smith.—Am I right in saying that there is a railway in course of construction between Donegal and Ballyshannon?—Yes; I expect it will be open in a year.

4302. And that will carry you into Donegal?—Yes.

4303. You have the answers which I read, which were given by your Board. Was that adopted after due notice to all the members of the Board?—It was.

4304. CHAIRMAN.—Was it after the decision of the Donegal County Council?—It was passed and approved of on the 10th of the month, that is last Saturday. I sent an advance copy to you.

4305. Mr. Smith.—That was the result, after full notice to every member representing those counties?—Yes, sir.

4306. With reference to the districts, take it that there is amalgamation in the County Fermanagh, and Limavady Union is abolished. That would leave you the districts of Breckhill and Rossharbour?—Yes, that would go close to Pettigo.

4307. Can those districts be conveniently and suitably served from Ballyshannon?—Certainly. They are quite as near as a great many of our districts already. They are nearer than Cheshill.

4308. Now take it on the Donegal side. The Union at present goes up to the middle of the town of Belleek?—Runs to the police barracks.

4309. That is the parish of Drumahaire. Take it now that Donegal is abolished. Could that district be conveniently served by Ballyshannon?—I believe so, because there would be railway communication the whole way. It is not further away from us than Church Hill in Tullaghan.

4310. At any rate, the other half of the street cannot be inconvenient?—No.

4311. CHAIRMAN.—Is it proposed to take in the town of Donegal?—Well, as far as the parish of Killybeg Drumahaire goes very close to it.

4312. Laghey is in Drumahaire, and I think Donegal too?—I would not be surprised. Templemore runs towards Pettigo.

4313. Mr. Smith.—Is Templemore down near Pettigo?—It is.

4314. And that, you say, should also be taken into Ballyshannon?—Yes, we have the railway from Pettigo to Ballyshannon.

4315. On the Leitrim side, have we at present any portion of the parish of Ballyshannon?—It is the parish of Rosinver. All our Leitrim divisions are in Rosinver.

4316. Should the entire of Rosinver be brought into the union?—I believe we could do with it.

4317. Killybeg?—We run on the very edge of it at the present time.

4318. CHAIRMAN.—Is it in Mohill or Manorbennet?—Manorbennet. At Leitrim, we are further away than Killybeg.

4319. Mr. Smith.—The number of paupers relieved in the house was 127. How many more people could the building accommodate. Would there be sufficient to take in the ordinary requirements of these districts?—I have no doubt of it whatever. Of course the workhouse will not accommodate now the numbers put on them at the start, on account of the changes—the cable space, &c.—but I believe we could do up to 250 or 300, although the workhouse was intended at first for double that number.

4320. Now will you tell the Commission the number of people that were actually admitted to the workhouse during the year 1902. How many had you at the beginning of the year ending March, 1902. The number of persons who were in the workhouse at the beginning of the year was 125, and there were three born. There were actually admitted to the workhouse during the year 794, making in all 920 persons?—Yes, that is copied from my book.

CHAIRMAN.—One aspect of the question you have not gone into, the fact that the County Council of Donegal contend that all the unions should be within the county, and they propose to sacrifice Ballyshannon for that reason. Will you have any further rebutting evidence; some County Councillor from this neighbourhood?

Mr. Smith.—Certainly; Mr. Maguire. But I wanted to get from Mr. Chas. what owing to the position of the place, and the number of people who were actually relieved, being an enormous number in this district, that it would be a fatal mistake in the interests of the poor to abolish this union, notwithstanding the opinion of the County Council. We are strongly of opinion that owing to the condemnation of the district round, Ballyshannon is the natural selection for a workhouse union.

Mr. MURPHY.—Then we are to understand that the bodies you represent adopt a different view to the view taken by the County Council of Donegal?

Mr. Smith.—Yes. We don't bind ourselves to county divisions. You are sent out to see whether there is to be economy or not, amalgamation or not. That must necessarily bring increased distance, and the county divisions are not mandatory upon you, or upon us, to meet the exigencies of a particular case. We say Ballyshannon is a special case with three counties round it. Take the Fermanagh people—they would have to go to Belleek, the Leitrim people would have to go to Manorbennet or Sligo, and the people of Ballyshannon, where 920 people are relieved, would have to go to Donegal or Glenties.

Mr. MURPHY.—Then your position is identical with that of Derry city. They have taken up the position that owing to the facilities afforded by the Derry

Oct. 12, 1892.

Mr. J. B.
Union.

Union, it would be an injury to concede to the demands of the Donegal County Council that the county should be self-contained for all purposes.

Mr. Smith.—They can carry that theory of self-contained counties too far. We can show you that, by limiting it to the County Donegal, you would be putting extreme hardship not only on the poor and sick, but also upon any representatives that have to go there, and we will show that the desire of this district and of the three counties, as voiced by their representatives, is that this union should not only be preserved, but should be extended.

4321. CHAIRMAN.—Is this the market town for the union including the Leitrim and Fermanagh parts? It is, sir. It is the only market town in it, too. Ballyshannon has no market at all. This is the market town for the whole union.

4322. Mr. Smith.—And for the outside districts even, that we seek to take in?—Drumshelm people come here, too.

Mr. Michael
Maguire.

Mr. MICHAEL MAGUIRE, Solicitor, examined.

4323. Mr. Smith.—You are the Chairman of the Town Commissioners?—Yes.

4324. And you are also Chairman of the District Council?—Yes.

4325. And you are also a County Councillor?—Yes.

4326. CHAIRMAN.—Were you present at the County Council meeting?—I was present at a few meetings when the matter was discussed, but the situation of Ballyshannon never was considered fully there; in fact it was hardly mentioned. The urgent discussion at the County Council was with regard to the districts near Derry and Strabane, in the County Donegal, that formed portion of the unions of Derry and Strabane. Ballyshannon never was considered. I was not at the last meeting, where something occurred about it, and I don't know what it was. I was present at those meetings where the Derry Union and Strabane Union were considered, and I voted on the subject that those portions should be taken away from Derry and from Strabane, for the reason that those are rich portions of the County Donegal, and that they should be thrown in with the unions of the County Donegal for rating purposes, and the relief of the rates all over those districts now in the Strabane and Letterkenny Unions.

4327. Mr. Smith.—You say the case of Ballyshannon is different?—Entirely different, for the reasons, partly, that I have mentioned, that those districts there are rich districts, and would be useful to the unions of Strabane, Letterkenny, and Limavady. Here the districts which we seek to retain from Fermanagh and Leitrim are not rich districts, not near so rich as the Ballyshannon rural district itself, which forms portion of the union, and the districts which we would seek to have added on are also districts poorer than we have here in the Ballyshannon rural district in this county.

4328. Your Board, both the District Council and the Town Commissioners, unanimously adopted the answer that I have read?—Yes. The Ballyshannon Town Commissioners have unanimously adopted the resolution you read, and I understand a similar resolution was passed by the Board of Guardians. I was not present.

4329. You have been living for some time in and about the town of Ballyshannon?—Yes, sixteen years.

4330. Ballyshannon is the market town and the business centre for the entire union?—Yes, the entire union, and for very large districts outside the union boundaries. For instance, Ballyshannon is the market town as far as Orange, County Sligo, and people in the County Fermanagh and in the County Leitrim who are not at present in this union, come here for their markets; also people in the parish of Drumshelm, who are in the Donegal Union, do their marketing at Ballyshannon.

4331. And do you state to the Commission that the sick and poor of the added districts that I have mentioned can be adequately served from Ballyshannon?—Yes, I make that statement.

4332. And the buildings here would be sufficient to accommodate the increased number that might reasonably be expected to be brought from the added area?—The buildings are ample for the purpose.

4333. You know the buildings in Donegal?—Not very well. The Chairman here knows the buildings all over the district.

4334. I think I am right in saying that the buildings here are much larger than the buildings in Donegal?—

CHAIRMAN.—They are large enough in each place for all possible requirements.

4335. Mr. Smith.—You think that these districts can be adequately served?—Yes, that is my opinion.

4336. With reference to this boundary question, do you know of any desire of the people of the County Donegal to limit the unions to the County Donegal?—No, I know of no such desire here.

4337. Or any desire on the part of the people of Fermanagh?—No, there is no such desire.

4338. Or Leitrim?—I don't know of any.

4339. CHAIRMAN.—The Guardians are unanimous?—Yes.

4340. Mr. Smith.—There is a unanimity of opinion in favour of preserving this union, which seems to have worked satisfactorily, and of extending it?—Yes.

4341. Mr. MAGUIRE.—It seems that the bodies with which you are connected disapprove of making asylums?—They do, sir, on the ground that it would make the management very expensive. You would require an entirely new set of officials for each sanitary asylum. The officials that you have at the workhouses, in the event of any workhouses being discontinued, would not be suitable officials for the management of an asylum.

4342. Are you aware that the asylums in this country are conducted on an economic line as the workhouses?—I don't know the management.

4343. It is principally on the ground of expense that you would object?—On the ground of expense.

4344. If you could be satisfied that sanitary asylums could be conducted as economically and at as little cost to the ratepayers as the existing institutions, the system involving better treatment, would your objection then disappear?—It would not. I would prefer to see lunatics at one centre for the county. I think the management and supervision is much better than it could be if you had a number of asylums.

4345. Do you think it is well for a great aggregation of people to be in one particular place such as would be absolutely necessary if all the insane of the county are kept in one district?—That would be a question for an expert on insanity; he would be better able to answer than I would.

4346. It seems you disapprove of the boarding-out of children?—No, sir; we disapprove of the boarding-out of inmates; we mean adults.

4347. Not of children?—No; personally, I am in favour of the boarding-out of children.

4348. Still this institution acts on that principle, because they do not board out any here?—They do board out some.

4349. You have three boarded out and twenty-two in the house?—That is so. Since I became connected with the Board, there was no great desire on the part of the Guardians to board out, and no person moved in the system. That is the explanation.

4350. The question of able-bodied paupers does not seem to arise much in this institution?—We have not got any; as soon as it is ascertained that there is an able-bodied pauper here he is turned out.

4351. So that is not a question really that troubles this Board very much?—No, sir, it does not.

4352. You have no voice upon what should be done with regard to vagrants?—I thank the answer to the queries given by the Guardians and Town Commissioners would go a good way in meeting the case. If the police were more vigilant, when they found these people wandering about, they should call upon them to give an account of themselves, and they should put the vagrancy laws in force, and the period of imprisonment which the magistrates might impose should be two months at least. That was the opinion of the Board here. I think if they got two months' hard labour they would be slow to trouble the same locality again.

4353. Mr. Smith.—In some other counties they get to employ them at useful manual labour in the workhouses?—Yes.

4354. With reference to this outdoor relief, you say:—"We consider among rating far superior to the former system of divisional rating." Will you explain that?—The explanation of that is this, that while there is union rating, every member of the Board is equally interested, whereas if it were divisional rating with regard to outdoor relief, you might have all the Guardians in favour of relief in a particular electoral division save the Guardians representing that electoral division, and the two Guardians representing a particular electoral division might be over-ruled in the case of their own division.

4353. Your Board suggested that there should be a change in the mode of granting outdoor relief?—Yes, I think that there should be more evidence given in some form when an applicant comes for outdoor relief. There should be the evidence of the doctor that he is a fit subject, or the Guardians representing the electoral division in which the applicant resides should be unanimous in their view that it is a fit case for outdoor relief.

4354. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you think it would be a proper thing that the Guardians of the division should have a deciding vote in what the whole union would have to pay?—No, I do not, but I think on their representation, if they were unanimous, the Board would not refuse.

4355. Still they would be dealing with money contributed by other divisions?—No, that would come before the full Board.

4356. You would not allow the full Board any voice?—I would on the recommendation.

4357. CHAIRMAN.—You would not allow the case to come before the full Board unless it had the urgent recommendation of the two Councils?—Yes, representing the division in which the applicant resides.

4358. Mr. MURKIN.—Is the outdoor relief question a big one here? Do you give much outdoor relief?—It is fairly large. We give to all deserving cases.

4359. CHAIRMAN.—Has it increased very much within the last five or six years?—I am informed that it has not increased within the last five or ten years.

Mr. CHILDS.—It has not. It was £503 a year. Since the new system came into force it has not increased. The new Board merely carried forward the practice which was on outdoor relief under the old system.

4360. Mr. Smith.—You get a legacy from the old Board?—That is it.

MR. ROBERT SWEENEY EXAMINED.

4361. Mr. Smith.—Are you a Guardian?—Yes.

4362. And you are a Town Commissioner?—Yes.

4363. You know Ballyshannon and the requirements of it for some time?—Yes.

4364. With reference to this resolution of the Donegal County Council as to limiting the unions within the boundaries of the county, do you approve of that?—No, I do not. I think there is a great deal of sentiment in that, and I think making the unions county units would be very inconvenient for the destitute poor and the poor generally.

4365. And especially now, will you deal for a moment with the particular requirements of Ballyshannon, and saying that county law to Ballyshannon would be injurious to the sick poor?—I think it would be very injurious.

4366. You have been connected in business for some time with Ballyshannon?—Yes.

4367. Do you agree with the other witnesses that it is the central market town for the entire union?—It is; and for districts outside the union.

4368. With reference to the added areas that we suggest, can they all be as conveniently worked from Ballyshannon?—Well, taking the divisions already in Ballyshannon from the neighbouring counties, those divisions appear in some cases to be more convenient than those already attached to the union.

4369. Is it the feeling of the entire of the Guardians that the present state of things as to the union should continue?—As far as I know.

4370. And to take in the other portions?—It is.

4371. Mr. MURKIN.—Of course, you are aware that this is the only section of this county that takes the position that Donegal should not be self-contained as regards the union and county purposes?—Yes, sir.

4372. I suppose it is in the interests of self-preservation that Ballyshannon does that?—I think the interests of the poor were what were considered when the present boundaries of the union were defined.

4373. Supposing an arrangement could be made whereby the neighbouring unions could send to an institution such as Ballyshannon all the paupers of the adjoining unions, would not that meet your view as well?—I don't think it would. I think there should be a representation of the union that the paupers came 4353. CHAIRMAN.—You approve, of course, of people paying coming into the hospital?—Yes; I think that is the arrangement at present.

4354. You would like to make it discretionary with the Guardians what sum people should pay according to their means?—Yes, the Guardians have better means of ascertaining the ability of the person to pay.

4355. Mr. MURKIN.—In regard to outdoor relief, is not the custom at present that the Guardians representing the divisions in question give recommendations?—No, sir; the relieving officer may come forward before the Board and say there is a case in a particular electoral division that is fit for outdoor relief, and the Guardians representing that division may not be present at all at the Board, and the outdoor relief would be granted. Of course, the relieving officer is sifted in every case; he is examined by the Guardians to know is it a proper case to give relief in.

4356. In some unions the custom is that when an application comes before the Board the matter is referred to the relieving officer to report on a stated day in the month—for instance the second meeting in the month—and then he makes his report, and it is open to all the Guardians to decide as to whether the relief should be given or not?—That is very much the case here; the relieving officer is examined, and if he does not know the person, and the Guardians representing the district are not present, the matter is held over for further inquiry.

4357. So there is nothing in the way of extravagance in this union as regards outdoor relief?—Not that I am aware of. I know the union for a long time, and I know other unions, and I think a better-managed union than the Ballyshannon Union could hardly be found. There is the greatest humanity among all the officials; no friction of any sort, and the Guardians never hear any complaints, either from inmates or ratepayers, so far as I know, as to the management of the affairs of the union.

from in the house they went to. I think if the paupers from a neighbouring union came in here it would not be a fair thing, and I think it would create a system that would be very difficult to work out satisfactorily.

4360. CHAIRMAN.—I take Mr. MURKIN to mean that if No. 2 and No. 3 Districts should be added to the Fermanagh and Leitrim Unions, and if it were thought that the distance that the sick poor would have to be sent would be rather too much, would you see any objection to their being sent as board-out from the Fermanagh or Leitrim Union to Ballyshannon, paying so much a head, in the same way as you send patients to be treated in Dublin and other hospitals?—I don't think that would work well.

4361. What drawback would you see to that, where they gave, say 7s. 6d., or whatever it would be, a week, and you fed, supported, and looked after the patient, what objection would you see to that?—I would say that it would disarrange the system that is so well-known to the people, and I don't know how it would work within the workhouse; these are the outsiders.

4362. The relieving officer, or medical officer, in No. 2 or No. 3 Districts would give an order for admission here, and under that order the Guardians of the Fermanagh or Leitrim Union would have to pay for the patients so sent?—That class of pauper, I think, would not be received so well, or, at least, looked upon as a union pauper in the same way they now are; he is an outsider brought in. Supposing you made it a county boundary the feeling would be "You had better go to your own county."

4363. You would be glad to get anything that would relieve your rates?—I don't know that it would relieve our rates.

4364. He would pay a full share of the establishment and other charges, 10s., or whatever it would be; that would include all these things, and the pauper would be paying his full share?—I cannot see that that is a course likely to work out well.

4365. Your receipts would be practically the same for Poor Law purposes; you now get so much poundage rate for Poor Law purposes the difference would be that you would get per capita payments for the number of sick that came in. Do you think there would be any

Oct. 18, 1908.

Mr. Michael Maguire.

Mr. Robert Sweeney

Oct. 15, 1903
Mr. Robert
Sweeney.

difference in the amount of your receipts?—Well, I don't suppose there would be. How would we do in connection with outdoor relief?

CHAIRMAN.—That would be for the other unions.

4387. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—The proposal I make would be only to get rid of the travelling difficulty.—You mean to avoid long distances. I think whenever unions are retained they really should comprise the representatives and the poor of that union, and it would not be advisable to send outside paupers to a union they are not connected with.

Mr. Patrick
Trevelin.

4390. Mr. Smith.—You are a Rural District Councillor, and live in the County Donegal?—Yes.

4392. You and Mr. Daly were appointed on behalf of the Board to give evidence here?—Yes.

4393. Do you agree with Mr. Sweeney and Mr. Maguire with reference to the suitability of Ballyshannon Union for the purpose for which it was intended?—Yes; I agree that there could be no more suitable place.

4394. And you think it should be preserved?—Yes.

4395. And the added area can be worked with convenience to the poor?—I think so.

4396. Yes, as a Donegal man, know the resolution of the Donegal County Council with regard to this boundary question; do you think that as applied to Ballyshannon would be a mistake?—I think the case altogether different in Ballyshannon. My idea about the matter is this: that poor and rich areas should be grouped together irrespective of boundaries, so as to equalise as far as possible the taxation.

4397. CHAIRMAN.—Throughout the whole country?—Yes.

4398. Mr. Smith.—The old county divisions were created for a purpose that is now obsolete; you think the other districts can be served just as well?—Yes.

4399. How long have you been a District Councillor?—I was an old Guardian.

4400. During your time there have been no complaints with reference to the administration of the Poor Law by the Board?—No; never heard any. I would further suggest that in case of amalgamation this matter of grouping poor parts of the country with rich parts should be very seriously considered. I would also suggest to the Commission that the valuation and population of the different centres where workhouses are to be retained should be considered.

4401. That is irrespective of the county boundaries?—Yes. Also the number of inmates in the houses at present, the number of inmates the house can accommodate, and the management of the workhouse and the care and treatment of the inmates; also the facilities for moving the poor to the workhouse.

4402. CHAIRMAN.—Had you any particular idea how you would equalise the rates: did you think of any particular districts that you would, if you were dealing with the matter yourself, join together for the purpose of equalising rates?—It would suggest itself to me that the congested districts should be joined with richer parts of the country if possible.

4403. It would be places like Glenties and Derryfaherty?—Yes; and even here.

4404. How would you help Glenties and Derryfaherty?—They are practically all congested—very poor, low valuation. How would you help them?—I don't know how I could help them if there were no rich areas to which I could add them.

4405. There are no rich areas there; is there any other way you think?—Except by a loan or grant.

4406. How would you manage that grant?

Mr. Smith.—Would you go on the valuation list or the population test?

CHAIRMAN.—Or the poverty test—the relation between poverty and valuation?—I think I would go on all three.

4407. So that if Government grants, say half a million, for the sake of argument, all over Ireland, you would not be in favour of giving that chiefly to the wealthy and thinly populated districts in Meath and Westmeath?—Oh, no.

4408. Are you aware that these districts get the most grants at present?—That is on the valuation, I suppose. I would not be in favour of that.

4388. Well, the thing prevails already; you send people to different institutions?—We send them to the asylum.

4389. And the dumb and dumb institutions and places for the blind?—Yes. You see, these institutions are only few in number compared with workhouses.

4390. Institutions of the kind might not be very numerous. I just put the question in order to get your view. The matter is worth considering; it is a not beneficial it should not be adopted?—I think it would work up friction; I don't think it would work satisfactorily.

Mr. PATRICK BREKIN assumed.

4409. There are some unions with a valuation of nearly one and a quarter million sterling; that, of course, gets four times the amount of Donegal?—That is not fair.

4410. Would you be strongly in favour of redistributing the grants on the basis of poverty?—I would; if a grant is given for the purpose of relieving those that are overtaxed I think it should be used for that purpose.

4411. A grant is given for a great many purposes—it is given for medical purposes, part of the salaries of officers, school teachers, and other purposes like that, and it is distributed according to the valuation. You would not do that?—No.

4412. You prefer seeing it distributed in some other way, by which the poorer districts ought to get what would be really a fair share?—Yes; that those who were most in need of it should get most of it.

4413. You would take population and poverty largely into consideration?—Yes.

4414. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—You say you think it would be right that the richer portions of the district should contribute to the help of the poorer portions in the assistance of the poor of the whole area?—Yes, sir.

4415. Did you ever consider the question of county rating for Poor Law as well as for other purposes. You would meet your view, for instance, if instead of having union rating for the County Donegal there would be a county rating for Poor Law purposes; then do you not think that this question of boundaries or opposition to it would disappear if the whole County of Donegal were to contribute, proportionately, its share to the upkeep of the poor?—The divisions of other counties that we propose to take in or keep are all poor portions.

4416. You say that you do not think that it is right that a poor locality should have to support its poor alone without outside assistance; you think their rich neighbours should contribute to that support?—Yes; I think in any case of amalgamation that should be considered.

4417. Suppose some kind of county rating was proposed that would take in the rich and poor portions together, and then the Union would be spread equally all over the area, would that meet with your sympathy?—No doubt the rates would be very high in a county rating.

4418. They would not be high in the poor districts; they would be low in the poor districts, and they would be added to a little in the richer districts?—I don't think the local Guardians would take the same interest in keeping down the rates if it was county rating.

4419. CHAIRMAN.—Would you meet Mr. MURKAGHAN's suggestion half way, and, say, suppose there was a quarter of the expenditure a county rate when you come to a rate in aid of the poor districts, or under a particular head, supposing the expenditure on the sick—at present it is almost impossible to remove county hospitals to keep the sick as they should be kept, it is the 6 won't produce 650 altogether—would you propose that some particular head, such as expenditure on the sick, might be made a county charge, or even a county charge?—I don't think I know sufficient of the subject to answer that.

4420. Your idea was that you would like to see the poor people aided in their hard task of paying their way?—Yes; I had it in my mind that some of the unions of Donegal were very poor, and if they could be added to the rich ones I think it would be better for them.

4421. Mr. Smith.—But having thought over the question seriously, you are of opinion that Ballyshannon is a centre that ought to be preserved for a union?—Oh, yes.

Mr. JOHN DALY examined.

Oct 18, 1906

4422. Mr. Smith.—You are a District Councillor also in Donegal?—Yes, sir.

4423. And you were appointed, along with Mr. Desha, to give evidence here?—Yes.

4424. You agree, I need scarcely say, with the terms of this report that I have read?—Certainly.

4425. And you are of opinion that Ballyshannon should be preserved?—Yes.

4426. And that the other districts that have been mentioned can be, usefully to the poor, added to it?—Yes; and for the benefit of the sick.

4427. They can get here conveniently by train?—Very conveniently.

Mr. HENRY STUBBS examined.

Mr. Henry Stubbs.

4431. Mr. Smith.—You are a member of the Town Commissioners of Ballyshannon?—Yes.

4432. And you approve of the resolution that was passed, and which I read?—Yes.

4433. Were the Commissioners unanimous in favour of maintaining the present state of things?—Yes.

4434. From what you know of the district here, from your experience, are you convinced that Ballyshannon should be preserved as a union for the benefit of the poor of the district around?—Yes; I think it should. Ballyshannon is the centre of a very important district in the county; it is the largest town in the county, and in addition to that there is the rising town of Bandon, rapidly increasing, within three miles. It serves a large district with a number of small towns—Tullaghan, Garrison, Belleek, and Ballintra. Ballyshannon is practically the centre market town for them, and the workhouse here has always had a large average of inmates.

4435. CHAIRMAN.—A large average from the town?—Oh, yes; and from the districts around.

4436. About what is the population of the town, taking in Bandon?—Ballyshannon itself is 5,000.

4437. I suppose it would come to 4,000 people now, including Bandon?—I think it would be quite that. Of course, in summer there are much more.

4438. That furnishes a good many sick and infirm inmates to the house?—Yes.

Mr. JAMES TIMONEY, J.P., examined.

Mr. James Timoney.

4440. Mr. Smith.—You are a Justice of the Peace?—Yes.

4441. And are you also Chairman of the Belleek District Council?—Yes.

4442. That is in the County Fermanagh?—Yes.

4443. Where do the council assemble?—Here, for auxiliary purposes.

4444. As regards that district, what are your views with reference to maintaining as you are, attached to the Ballyshannon Union?—We would be strongly in favour of retaining.

4445. CHAIRMAN.—Is that the unanimous opinion of your council?—As far as I have been able to ascertain.

4446. Mr. Smith.—Mr. Stubbs has stated that for that district around, Ballyshannon is the real market town and business centre?—Yes; we regard it as the centre of the district; it is the banking centre and everything.

4447. As far as you know, to abolish this Ballyshannon Union, as it stands at present, would that inflict serious injury on the sick and poor of the district here?—We think it would be very inconvenient for the poor; there is no union nearer than Enniskillen.

4448. The resolution I have read, passed by the Fermanagh County Council, says they are in favour of amalgamation and only one union. I presume that would be Enniskillen. Assuming Enniskillen was gone, what workhouse or hospital accommodation would be available for the poor of your district?—If cut off from here, Enniskillen would be the nearest.

4449. On your side of the lake is there any railway?—No railway.

4450. How would you get to Enniskillen?—We would have to go by road.

4451. What distance?—Twenty-one or twenty-two Irish miles.

4452. CHAIRMAN.—How far are you beyond Belleek?—Five miles; I live in Church Hill.

4428. Have you heard of any desire on the part of the people of this district to be limited to the county boundary as suggested?—I never heard any.

4429. And do you think it would be to their advantage to have it so limited?—I think it would be an advantage to let it remain as it is—a great advantage to the poor people.

4430. Mr. MURKIN.—In regard now to the infirmaries, don't you have to send cases as far as Lifford?—I never knew of any case from here to go to Lifford; we have the Shiel Hospital.

Mr. SMITH.—A certain class of cases can only be treated in the Shiel Hospital.

4439. The Ballyshannon and Bandon people send a great many inmates here?—Yes; unfortunately.

4440. If Ballyshannon were closed what would be your nearest workhouse?—Donegal; that is eleven Irish miles.

4441. You would have a great number of people to send that distance if the workhouse here were closed?—Oh, yes; a great number of cases would have to go to some other place.

4442. Mr. Smith.—And the number in Donegal, as at present constituted, is only 50. You know the resolution about the county boundaries of the Donegal County Council; do you think in reference to this union that the county boundary should be preserved?—No; I think it should not; decidedly the portions of Fermanagh and Leitrim that are in the Ballyshannon Union; they, practically, although not in the County Donegal, belong to this district; all by Garrison and up there, in fact all this side of the Derry range, belongs to this district.

4443. Is in the natural conformation?—Yes; as far as Sligo, including Tullaghan.

4444. Do you know the districts we have suggested should be added in portion of Enniskillen; that can be as conveniently served now as Church Hill?—I cannot speak for that; I only know the circumstances about here.

4445. And the Town Commissioners unanimously adopted that resolution?—Yes.

4450. Mr. Smith.—You know the district we suggest—Brookhill and Rensborough—do you think they could be conveniently served from Ballyshannon?—I don't see any inconvenience from Church Hill, and they are nearer than Church Hill.

4451. And they have a railway the entire way?—Which we have not.

4452. With regard to the Donegal boundaries, the sentimental question, when it comes to a question of taxation and the relief of the poor, does not affect the question of your district?—Oh, no. I think it is largely a question of sentiment. If the workhouse were to be built now it might be another thing, but as we have them standing—

4453. You are in favour of preserving Ballyshannon, and extending it by taking in portion of Fermanagh?—Yes.

4454. CHAIRMAN.—You know the County Councils for your district?—I do.

4455. What do they think about this question?—There are some of them here to-day.

4456. Mr. MURKIN.—Your evidence is based on the supposition that the view of the Fermanagh County Council would be carried out, that there would be only one workhouse in Fermanagh; supposing that view would not be carried out at all, supposing there could be an institution fairly convenient to your district, would you not prefer to be inside your own county?—As a matter of sentiment, we might.

4457. Lines have to be drawn somewhere, and what better lines can be drawn than such ancient landmarks as county boundaries?—I think twenty-two Irish miles too far away.

4458. I quite agree with you, but suppose there was some institution convenient, not very far from your locality, would you not rather remain in your own county than come here?—Yes; if it were more convenient.

Oct. 18, 1905.
Mr. James
Timoney.

4458. We are not bound to any hard and fast line, and what we want to get at is what would be the best way of reforming the present system by giving facilities to every county in the most suitable places.

Mr. Smith.—The difficulty about Fermanagh is the lake.

Witness.—Unless there would be new premises built altogether.

Mr. MURPHY.—That might be possibly the best thing to do—to build new premises and not keep up these old barnacles.

4459. Dr. HUGHES.—All premises have you, as a District Council, to go to some other centre for certain duties?—No. In connection with roads we sit in Belleek.

4460. Does it mean that you have to attend more frequently—that is between the two places—that you would if you sat in one place?—Oh, no.

4461. CHAIRMAN.—You come for sanitary business on the same day that you come for Poor Law?—Yes; it is market day.

4462. Dr. HUGHES.—Then the other days that you sit at Belleek are extra days?—Yes.

4463. CHAIRMAN.—Partly for the convenience of the contractors, I suppose?—Yes.

Mr. CHURCH.—Night meetings in the year.

4464. Dr. HUGHES.—Have you any idea of the rates on the adjoining districts how they compare with the rate for your district?—I cannot say since it was union rating, but in the neighbouring districts to Enniskillen, when it was divisional rating, it was something lower than ours.

4465. At present do you not know?—I am not sure at present.

4466. When the rating question did not affect you in coming to your decision?—We considered the disadvantages and the inconvenience more than anything else; it would be inconvenient for the poor and for the Guardians if they had to go to Enniskillen.

4467. Mr. MURPHY.—Fermanagh is a county of such notoriously economical management that I don't suppose it would be possible to reduce the rates any more there.

Mr. Smith.—Some of the figures are very peculiar; it costs £5,000; it comes to about £35 a head for a pauper.

Mr. MURPHY.—Would not that be including the repayment of loans?

Witness.—They spent a considerable sum of money in putting up a heating apparatus, which I heard has been a failure.

Mr. MURPHY.—You may take it from me that in an asylum, for instance, Omagh Asylum, the average cost per inmate does not exceed £35 a head, and in your workhouse I find it comes to £13 or £13 10s., and remember the per capita contribution is £10. I think there is a wrong view over the country with regard to the extravagance of asylum management.

Mr. John
Duffy.

Mr. JOHN DUFFY examined.

4468. Mr. SMITH.—You are a District Councillor?—Yes.

4469. And you are also the representative of the District Council on the County Council of Fermanagh?—Yes.

4470. You know the requirements of the people of your district?—Yes.

4471. And knowing their requirements and from your own knowledge, are you of opinion that Ballyshannon serves your district properly?—I think you could not serve it so well under any other arrangement.

4472. What is the name of the division you represent?—Belisk Electoral Division.

4473. And you think it can be best served from Ballyshannon?—It can.

4474. And it would be an injury to the poor and sick of your district in the surrounding districts to remove the workhouse of the union from Ballyshannon?—It would; the distance would be very great that they would have to go to Enniskillen in case of emergency was dissolved.

4475. You have no objection on this county business to having the locus of the union in the County Dungal?—None.

4476. You think the natural formation of the county shows it is an entire district that ought to be served by one union?—If the workhouse was confined to Dungal county it would cut off the Fermanagh portion, and it would have to be annexed to Enniskillen.

4477. How would the poor of your district get across the lake?—There are two roads that would lead from Enniskillen—one on each side of the lake—to Belleek. The one on my side of the lake is considerably longer than the other side. The one on the north side is twenty miles, and on the north side of the lake it would be twenty-eight miles from Enniskillen to Belleek.

4478. And there is no connection between the two roads?—No; no bridge across.

4479. So that from your knowledge of the district, and of what the people require, is it your evidence that the Ballyshannon Union is necessary for the relief of the poor?—That is so.

4480. CHAIRMAN.—Have you heard the question raised at the County Council of Fermanagh about how the county might be made the unit for Poor Law administration?—I have not.

4481. There has been no expression of that county similar to what we have had in Donegal?—No.

4482. The resolution you put forward is rather against that count?—Oh; the chief clerk of the Fermanagh County Council is present.

4483. I did not mean so much a resolution as a discussion on the subject?—I did not hear any discussion. 4484. Were you on the committee of the County Council?—I was on the committee, but could not attend, but from the report Mr. West has they appear to be in favour of amalgamation.

4485. Leaving your position, as it is, free?—Yes.

4486. Mr. Smith.—Do you know whether they expressed any opinion about giving us any portion of Irvinestown if it was abolished?—I think they are in favour of giving a portion, as far as Pettigo.

Mr. W. H.
West.

Mr. W. H. WEST examined.

4477. Mr. SMITH.—You are the Secretary of the County Council of Fermanagh?—Assistant Secretary.

4488. Do you produce the resolutions of the committee, consisting of the Earl of Erne, the Earl of Belmore, Mr. Jordan, and Mr. Cranley?—Yes; those were all that were present at the meeting; there were three or four more on the committee, but they did not attend. The County Council deputed this committee to deal with the whole question.

4489. Mr. MURPHY.—You had no special meeting about it?—No.

4490. No public discussion on the matter?—No public discussion.

4491. No question as to the boundaries of the county?—Yes; that was discussed at this meeting of the committee. They expressed themselves in favour of a county workhouse in case Ballyshannon was abolished here, but should Ballyshannon workhouse be kept where it is they would not interfere with it, because they believed it would be unreasonable to ask such a thing, and their opinion also was that the increase of the sick poor would be better served by having a workhouse here.

4492. They went on the view that there would be only one institution?—And the distance being so great on account of the lake dividing our county.

4493. They never took into consideration the probability of auxiliary institutions?—No.

4494. Built on a small scale to accommodate different classes?—No; they never did; their opinion was against that. They thought the bigger the institution it would be the cheaper. The one ought to do the whole county with the exception of the two ends towards Clones and Donagh.

4495. They were moved principally by matters of money?—No; the interests of the sick poor were considered, too, as much as anything else.

4496. CHAIRMAN.—They showed their interest in the sick poor by not claiming that those distant parts of the union should be annexed to them?—Yes; they said in the case of Belleek, which is within three or four miles of Ballyshannon, it would be unreasonable to ask those people to go to Enniskillen.

4507. They have a large slice of Cavan, and they propose it should go to Cavan?—The opinion was it should not be retained.

4508. Perhaps they did not see any monetary advantage in retaining the portion of the county that is in the Ballyshannon Union?—The Belleek Rural District comes within three miles of this workhouse, and it is twenty-five miles from Belleek to Enniskillen, and they thought it would be much better to have the workhouse.

4509. Mr. Smith.—Your answers are?—1st, Considering the number of paupers in this county and the facilities for locomotion, we think amalgamation would be very desirable if all the interests concerned could be satisfied. 2, We are unable to answer this question at present; ultimately the County Council may be able to advise them for some useful purpose. 3, With reference to class arrangement, it would not, in our opinion, be desirable to board out aged and infirm paupers and hospital patients; it would be desirable to make new arrangements in relation to families, and to improve the treatment of the aged and infirm. 4, We are of opinion the section of the Local Government Act which abolishes dispositive committees should be repealed; we also think the name "workhouse" should be changed. 5, There is sufficient hospital accommodation in the county, the only difficulty would be with fever patients.

6, It is possible, with amalgamation, one half of the present officials would be sufficient, thereby effecting a very considerable economy. 7, It would be desirable to introduce a system of payments and cost of treatment for this class. 8, We recommend all tramps should be detained at least three days and employed at some manual labour. All members of committees wish to be examined generally in relation to the whole question.

4510. You have stated now the views of the County Council as far as you have been able to gather them in reference to this, and you are expounding the opinion you gathered from them that Ballyshannon should be preserved in the interests of economy and of the poor?—The opinion was that it would be better to preserve it.

4511. With reference to the divisions, I have mentioned the names of two districts—Brookhill and Roseharbour, down to Pettigo—from what you know of the opinions of the County Council of Fermanagh, would there be any objection to giving those two districts that I have mentioned and adding them to Ballyshannon Union?—I have never heard any opinion on the subject.

4512. Are they inconvenient at present, supposing Irvinestown is abolished?—It would be far more convenient to Enniskillen.

Mr. HOSE M'GOWAN examined.

4513. Mr. Smith.—You are a District Councillor from the County Leitrim?—Yes.

4514. Am I right in saying that the district you represent is down near Lake Melvin?—Yes; along the side of it.

4515. Is it the opinion of the people of your district and your own opinion that Ballyshannon Union should be preserved, and that it is the most suitable and central place?—Yes; it is. The division I represent is in favour of retaining Ballyshannon.

4516. Is it the market town for the people of your district?—Yes; it is the only market town; all the people come there.

Oct 18, 1903.

Mr. W. H. Wash.

Mr. Hugh M'Gowan.

4517. You know from your own knowledge that it would be the place for them to come to?—Yes.

4518. Any sick from your district, have they to come here to the infirmary?—Yes.

4519. And you have no objection on the question of county boundaries to having the workhouse here in Ballyshannon?—No; no objection.

4520. CHAIRMAN.—Has there been any resolution of the Leitrim County Council on this question of union boundaries and county boundaries?—Not any that I am aware of. There are three Leitrim County Councillors adjoining this union.

Mr. THOMAS MAGUIRE examined.

Mr. Thomas Maguire.

4521. Mr. Smith.—You are also a District Councillor?—Yes.

4522. Where is your district?—Tullaghan.

4523. Is it in the Sligo direction?—Yes.

CHAIRMAN.—A couple of miles beyond Bundoran.

4524. Mr. Smith.—Are the people of your district and are you yourself in favour of preserving the Ballyshannon Union?—Yes.

4525. Is it your market town?—Yes.

4526. And do the sick and paupers come to this union?—Yes.

4527. And you are in favour of preserving it?—Yes.

4528. Take it that Ballyshannon was abolished, and you had a county workhouse in Leitrim, how far would it be from Macerhamilton?—Eighteen miles.

Mr. BERNARD CONNOLLY examined.

Mr. Bernard Connolly.

I happen to be appointed by the Kesh District Council to come here.

4529. CHAIRMAN.—What is the view of the Council?—That they are in favour of amalgamation with Macerhamilton. I don't speak personally; I speak for the council.

4530. Are you a Guardian here?—Yes.

4531. When the question was discussed here were you present?—I understand there was a question sent down by you gentlemen, and I think with such a very important question coming before this Board that there should be cards sent round to the Councillors or Guardians. I happened to be the only man from Leitrim who was there that day, and Fermanagh had only one representative; there were five or six from Ballyshannon, and I think that cannot be taken as the voice of the Guardians of the Ballyshannon Union. And I came here from the Kesh District Council, authorised by that council, to speak in favour of joining the Macerhamilton Union.

4532. Mr. Smith.—Was there a special meeting called for this purpose by the Kesh District Council?—Yes; it was at this meeting I was appointed; there was no special meeting.

4533. And how far from Carrish-on-Shannon?—About three times as much.

4534. And you would never get to Mohill?—There is no railway running to it.

4535. So as far as the people of Leitrim are concerned, you say this theory of counties is a mistake?—It would not be right for our portion of Leitrim.

4536. The sentimental business of the various counties being self-contained will have to be regulated by the immediate requirements of the poor of your district?—Yes.

4537. And you say that is best done by preserving this workhouse in Ballyshannon?—I think so.

4538. Mr. MICHAEL.—Do you know has the question been considered by your County Council?—I don't think so.

4539. Mr. MICHAEL.—Do you come authoritatively to speak for the council?—For the council.

4540. And the expression of your council is?—And it is the expression of the people.

4541. That you would prefer to join with an institution in your own county rather than go to an adjoining county for Poor Law purposes?—Yes.

4542. Mr. Smith.—You thought it was necessary in a matter so important as that that cards should be sent out; did you not get one of those yourself (produced), look at the date of it?—Yes; but the answering of the questions.

4543. Here it is—"September 12th, 1903.—A special meeting of the council will be held on the 26th inst. to appoint two members of the council to give evidence before the Poor Law Reform Commission." On the 12th of September—"The following business will be transacted at the Guardians' meeting on the 19th:—Consent of Guardians to give evidence before the Poor Law Reform Commission." Have you any further complaints to make against Mr. Chinn?—I made no complaints against Mr. Chinn, but I say it was on last Saturday that this report was signed.

4544. Were you there?—I was.

Y

Oct. 15, 1861.

Mr. Bernard
Connolly.

4544. Did you object?—I did not object.

4545. You were the representative of the people there, and do you consider it your duty, when acting as representative, not to object?—There was no other man from Leitrim, only one, and there was no use in my objecting.

4547. Are you a miller, that when a resolution was passed that you did not approve of that you did not dissent?—It was handed to the chairman.

4548. Have you not ears, and did you not hear it?—I did not object.

4549. Do you come here with a pocket resolution to object to this?—No; but I come here as a representative of the Keshmonee Council to represent their views.

4550. Keep quiet, sir, you are not at a meeting of the Guardians now! You could not stand up to object when the time was, when the resolution of the Ballyshannon Board was passed, when you were sent there and supposed to do your duty; if you had any objection to it why did you not make it then; were you afraid or ashamed? I give you my choice!

CHAIRMAN.—Or did you know the views of your constituents until you got back again?—I knew them three years ago. Even then went through the country to ascertain the views of the people, who were in favour of Manohamilton, and who were in favour of Ballyshannon, and 60 per cent. signed the papers in favour of Manohamilton.

4561. Dr. ROONEY.—How many signatures might there be?—I could not say; there are seven electoral divisions.

4562. Was it largely signed?—It was.

4563. Mr. MURPHY.—Well, we are to take it that Leitrim, as a whole, is not in favour of remaining in Ballyshannon?—Leitrim, as a whole, is in favour of Manohamilton.

4564. Mr. Smith.—Are you a co-opted, not an elected, District Councillor; are you elected?—I am co-opted.

4565. So the voice of Leitrim is expressed not by its elected representative but by the co-opted of Keshmonee?—I don't want to give my own opinions, but the opinions of my council, and I appeal to you, Mr. Chairman, for protection.

4566. Was there, or was there not, a special meeting called to ascertain the views of Keshmonee?—There was not.

4567. Show me out of the books any authority given to this co-opted Mr. Connolly to appear before this Board to give evidence.

Mr. CHAIRMAN.—Oh, yes; Messrs. Bernard Connolly and Roger Rooney were appointed to give evidence.

Mr. Smith.—Were any special instructions given to them?

Mr. CHAIRMAN.—That was all! It was at the meeting of the 25th of August on his own motion.

WITNESS.—I was appointed on the motion of the chairman.

Mr. CHAIRMAN.—Messrs. Bernard Connolly and Roger Rooney were appointed to give evidence on behalf of the council before the Poor Law Reform Commission."

4568. Mr. Smith.—Now show me any authority or statement from the Board telling you what their opinions were—have you any?—I have ascertained the views of the council.

4569. How many members are there on the Keshmonee District Council?—Seventeen.

4570. How many did you discuss this matter with?—Six, I think.

4571. Of course, you had a strong view on this point?—Yes.

4572. And you went to the men that you thought had the same views as yourself?—No. It has been publicly known that I was in favour of the Keshmonee District Council forming part of the Manohamilton Union, and it was on that understanding that I was appointed.

4573. Mr. MURPHY.—You give expression to these views?—Yes.

4574. Mr. Smith.—Who nominated you?—The chairman of the Keshmonee District Council.

4575. Is Mr. Roger Rooney here?—He is. There is a quarterly meeting of the Keshmonee District Council this day, and it prevented people coming.

Mr. Smith.—And they sent the two men they could best spare.

4576. Mr. MURPHY.—How far is your division from this town of Ballyshannon?—About twelve miles.

4577. CHAIRMAN.—How far from Keshmonee?—I live four miles from it, and the electoral division I represent is still further away; one part adjoins Manohamilton, seven miles away.

4578. How far from Keshmonee?

4579. Mr. MURPHY.—How many miles from Ballyshannon?—I could not say; it is ten from my house to Ballyshannon.

4580. On the question of convenience and names, Manohamilton is nearer?—Yes.

4581. Mr. Smith.—How would you get to Manohamilton from your place?—The same as from Ballyshannon—by car.

4582. Do you come through Keshmonee?—Yes.

4583. And is not Ballyshannon nearer than Manohamilton?—It is a bit nearer from where I live, but not from the division I represent.

4584. CHAIRMAN.—There seems to be not much difference in the question of distances. Did you go to any of the Guardians of Keshmonee and Tullaghan?—Yes.

4585. Are they in favour of going to Manohamilton?—I was speaking to the Keshmonee Guardians—one of them—that day—the chairman of the Keshmonee District Council—who sent me here, and they are in favour of amalgamation with Manohamilton.

4586. Would they, right down the whole way from Keshmonee to Tullaghan, be in favour of amalgamation?—I could not say that.

4587. Mr. MURPHY.—I suppose you will take steps to ascertain the views of your county before we go to Leitrim?—If there is a sitting of this Commission in Leitrim we will attend and give the voice of the people there.

CHAIRMAN.—There will be.

Mr. Roger Rooney.

Mr. ROGER ROONEY EXAMINED.

4598. CHAIRMAN.—What are the views of the Keshmonee Council, as far as you know them?—I have not their views; I did not get their views at the meeting.

4599. Did the council come to any decision, as a whole, as to whether they would like to be cut off from Ballyshannon and added to Manohamilton, or not?—Not that I know of.

4600. There has been no meeting to consider that question?—Not that I know of.

4601. What is your personal view; where do you live?—Three miles from Keshmonee, the Glenside way.

4602. How far are you from Manohamilton?—Eleven miles. Manohamilton, as far as I see, is more the market town for the Glenside people than Ballyshannon, and I think it would be more convenient.

4603. Mr. MURPHY.—Then, you would be in favour of disincorporating?—I have no authority to speak for anybody, except I speak to a few of the councilors.—Here.

4604. CHAIRMAN.—Of your own neighbourhood?—The councilors for Glenside, and they did not give me any views. I wanted them to tell me what their view was, and they did not give me any views, one way or another. I told them that I had got a card that the Commission would be here in Ballyshannon.

4605. You will have a meeting before we go to Leitrim?—Very likely.

Mr. Thomas
Ferguson.

Mr. THOMAS FERGUSON EXAMINED.

4606. Mr. Smith.—Are you a County Councillor from Fermanagh?—Yes.

4607. What division do you represent?—Inishmacsaint and Church Hill.

4608. Were you appointed to give evidence here?—Yes; by the County Council.

4609. What is your view with reference to preserving the divisions of Fermanagh as they are at present in the Ballyshannon Union?—I would be for it.

4610. That is your evidence here; you are in favour of preserving these divisions in Ballyshannon Union?—Certainly.

4611. Do you know the requirements of the people of your district?—Yes.

4612. Is this your market town?—It is, principally; there are smaller places.

4613. Of course, they go into Belleek?—Yes; and Killybegs.

4594. And this is their principal business town?—

Yes.

4595. Do you think it would be a serious loss to the poor and sick of the district if this union were abolished?—I do.

4596. Or if the people of your district were cut off from Ballyshannon?—They would not like it at all.

4597. They have no objection to having a central place here in Ballyshannon, although they are Fermanagh men?—On the contrary, they like it.

4598. Mr. MURKIN.—Was this matter discussed at a meeting of the County Council?—Not in my hearing.

4599. You were not present?—I was not; but I was at most of the meetings; they would leave the people to their own free will; they would leave the decisions that came to Ballyshannon to their own free will to come to Ballyshannon as usual.

4600. Mr. Smith.—They don't want to take them all into Fermanagh?—They do not.

4601. Mr. MURKIN.—Was there any notice of motion that the question would be discussed at the County Council?—Not in my presence; it might be in committee; it was a long meeting the last one, and I was not at the end.

Mr. Smith.—They appointed a committee to draw up resolutions, and you will see it was a representative board—two Ealas, a Member of Parliament, and the chairman of the Town Commissioners.

Mr. W. H. WHEAT further examined.

4602. Mr. Smith.—Have you the resolution appointing the committee to draw up the answers to the questions?

CHAIRMAN.—Or authorising these gentlemen to come here.

Witness.—That was the meeting on Friday; there was a letter from your Commission read, stating that you would sit here to-day, and they deputed Mr. Duffy, Mr. Ferguson, and myself to come here to answer any questions.

4603. Dr. BROWN.—Did they give you any instructions?—No; but to answer any question put to them. At first when that memorandum came out we put it on the agenda paper and discussed it at the County Council meeting, and there was a committee appointed to deal with the subject and answer the questions, and they sent the answers on to your secretary, and the committee expressed their opinion that each member should give evidence as he thought and express his own views.

4604. Mr. Smith.—That is the joint result of their opinions?—Yes; after two or three hours' deliberation.

4605. Mr. MURKIN.—At the last meeting what occurred?—I read your letter, and the chairman said it would be better for somebody to come and be present at this inquiry, and they deputed these two gentlemen and myself to come; they both live in the Belleek Rural District.

Mr. Smith.—The County Council nominated the men from the district who would know most about it to come here and give their views to you.

Mr. EDWARD STEPHENS examined.

4606. Mr. Smith.—You are a Town Commissioner here?—Yes.

4607. Were you present when this resolution was drawn up and passed that has been read here?—Yes; it was passed unanimously.

4608. And is that, as far as you have been able to gather, the opinion of the entire town of Ballyshannon?—It is, certainly.

4609. Do you know the districts?—I was bred and born in the town, and know all the people.

4610. You know the districts outside the County Donegal—the Leitrim and Fermanagh portions?—I don't know much about those districts.

Dr. R. H. CHAMBERLAIN examined.

4611. Dr. BROWN.—Are you one of the officials attached to the Shell Hospital?—Yes.

4612. Have you any other position?—Well, I am medical officer to the soldiers and police; I have no Poor Law appointment.

4613. Do you know anything about the workhouse hospital?—I have assisted a few times at operations in it; I have never acted as locum tenens for the workhouse; I have once or twice acted as locum tenens for a dispensary district.

4614. Can you tell the Commission the conditions of the trust established for this hospital?—I have lately read Dr. Shell's will; Dr. Shell left, practically, all his money to the hospital, but part of it was left as a life interest, I think you would call it, to his widow and his sister, so that the hospital is now receiving approximately half of what it will have.

4615. What is it at present?—I have no official knowledge, but I believe about £750. The Shell Hospital was built rather larger than that was fit to keep going, so as a result at present we can only take in acute cases or cases requiring operations; we have had to refuse cases of chronic bronchial trouble and inoperable cancer. As regards that rule it is only temporary, and on any time be changed by the governors, as you will find if you refer to the last rule on the list. You must not take me as being in favour of admitting all chronic cases, for I am not.

4616. Mr. Smith.—That scheme had to be approved of by the Lord Chancellor, and these rules were drawn up with the sanction of the Chancery Division, so it cannot be altered as easily as you think?—I think if you read the last one;—but, as a matter of fact, they were altered in the beginning of last November. At present in the Shell Hospital we have been asked not to take in more than twenty patients at a time on account of the want of money—that is twelve free and eight paying. We have once or twice exceeded the number of free patients under special circumstances. In the will itself there is nothing forbidden.

4617. Dr. BROWN.—Therefore it runs with the trustees, with the sanction of the Lord Chancellor, to alter the rules or make new ones?—One of the governors is present here to-day, Canon McKenna, of Bundoran.

4618. Mr. Smith.—I see it is limited to twelve people free?—Generally altogether it is all we have got accommodation for at present, but, of course, there are several empty wards, unfurnished.

4619. Take it then you get the entire amount of the charity, that the other £750 comes in?—I cannot give you definitely, but I am of opinion that there is nothing like £750 more, and I do not think if the rest fell in you would be able to keep forty beds going; but, of course, I have not got that absolutely definite.

4620. You think you have about £750 at present?—About.

4621. That supplies twelve free patients and eight paying patients, who are self-supporting?—Not necessarily because they pay from 7s. a week up, but some do not.

4622. You could not keep twenty free patients at present?—We could not; but, if I might qualify one thing, that seems an enormous price per bed, but the explanation is that we have not a full equipment of instruments, and every year something extra is being got. For example, at the last board meeting they

Oct. 16, 1905.

Mr. TERENCE FERGUSON.

Mr. W. H. WHEAT.

Mr. Edward Stephens.

Dr. R. H. Chamberlain.

Oct. 18, 1903.
Dr. R. H.
Creighton.

ordered a new sterilizer, and they laid out the grounds last autumn, an £750 divided by twenty would not represent, it would exceed, the actual cost of the bed.

4625. You don't think there will be anything like that coming in in the future?—I think not.

4626. And an £750 won't support twenty on your own showing you could not possibly keep more than twenty-five free patients?—As far as my knowledge goes, I think not, unless the amount is increased.

4627. Had you not to close recently for want of means?—No, we have not been closed for that reason; we have had patients from as far as Dublin.

4628. Dr. Brown.—What other income have you?—None; except, of course, from paying patients.

4629. How much do you think you get annually from paying patients?—I could not hazard a guess.

4630. You have no subscriptions from the district?—No.

4631. Could you tell me what area is served by the hospital?—I had myself a patient who came down from Dublin for an operation; as a matter of fact, we have patients from Kilbeggan. I had a letter the other day from a patient at Belmullet who wanted to come here, and I have had patients from Macmahonstown.

4632. Do the governors allow patients to come from any length?—They do.

4633. Therefore it could act as a county hospital?—There is no reason why it should not.

4634. Or for a large district; there is nothing in the will to limit it to this district?—No; I think that is specially objected to; it is laid down—

Mr. Smith.—It would be better that you should have a copy of the will.

4635. Dr. Brown.—If a patient applies for admission?—They go to the doctor—any doctor they like—and he gives them a certificate that they are fit for admission; that certificate is then taken to one of the governors, and he issues a ticket, and on that he either marks "free" or the amount per week that they are to pay. Then the case comes before Dr. Condon or myself, whatever admission day it happens to be, and we decide whether the case is a suitable one for admission or not; that, of course, is to exclude infectious diseases.

4636. Cases that would require operations or urgent cases, how would they be admitted?—In practice, Dr. Condon and I admit on our own responsibility, and go as soon as possible to a governor.

4637. Have you any means of conveying a patient to the hospital?—None; the union ambulance has been used once or twice.

4638. How long is the hospital closed in the year?—It was closed this year for six weeks, and during that time a lot of painting had to be done, and the operation room and wards were painted and the floors stained.

4639. How long was it closed before that; for twelve months?—It was; but I would rather not go into the circumstances under which it was closed; it would not be advisable to publish them.

4640. These last six weeks, was it closed principally on account of cleaning up and painting?—I have been on two different accounts of that.

4641. One said it was an account of want of money?—I don't know.

4642. What about the medical staff?—It consists of two visiting surgeons, Dr. Condon and myself, on equal terms, each with an equal number of beds. There is also an anaesthetist appointed, and three consulting surgeons, so that if we want further advice on any one we can call in one of those at the hospital expense; they are Dr. Thompson, Oungah; Dr. Wernock, Dergal; and Dr. Byrne, Derry; we can call in the one we think best suited for the case.

4643. And they get a fixed fee?—£25; that is fixed, it is an honorarium rather than a fee.

4644. Are you appointed honorary?—No; salary; we have £30 a year each for constant attendance during the year, and in addition to that we have the right to charge paying patients. In the case of a patient of my own I can charge any fee I like, but if the patient is one that comes accidentally under me the governors have a right of veto if they think the fee too high, but that question has never arisen.

4645. What are the charges for admission?—Fees, and from 7s. a week up to £3 a week, according to what the governor who admits may think.

4646. That is for the cost of nursing and maintenance; that has nothing to do with your fee?—No; there are one or two extras. For instance, in the administration of chloroform or in an operation, the patient would pay that.

4647. What is the average number of inmates in the year?—Last year about 150; I am speaking from memory. We have to refuse many deserving cases; we have to carry out strictly that rule. My colleague, Dr. Condon, is here now.

Dr. Condon.

Dr. Condon examined.

4648. Dr. Brown.—Do you agree with the evidence given by your colleagues as far as the Shell Hospital is concerned?—Yes.

4649. CHAIRMAN.—Is there anything you wish to add; you are not a dispensary doctor?—No. With reference to the workhouse children, I think it would be a good plan that children up to six years old should be boarded out under strict supervision, and after that put into some industrial school.

4650. You think their health is not good here?—Their health is very good, but I don't think it is just beneficial to their morals, and that a training outside after six years would be better for them.

4651. You would board them out at what age?—I would board them out from between five and six.

4652. From what age would you put them out of the workhouse; two or three?—I would put them out, if anyone would take them, as soon as they are infants.

4653. Dr. Brown.—At what age?—From a year up.

4654. Have you much consumption in the district?—There is a great deal of consumption scattered about.

4655. Have you any means of treating them in the workhouse?—None.

4656. What would you propose?—To build an isolation ward for them.

4657. In the workhouse?—Outside it.

4658. Would you not attach it to the Shell Hospital?—I don't think so.

4659. Is there anything else you wish to say?—That is all, except that it would be wise to have all lunatics removed from the workhouse.

4660. Mr. MURKIN.—I suppose you are aware that the Guardians are not in favour of an asylum system; they have expressed themselves so?—I am not aware of it.

4661. Dr. Brown.—You mean patients should go from this to the asylum proper?—I mean that all these harmless lunatics should be removed out of the workhouse.

4662. Mr. MURKIN.—Where do you suggest they should go?—I think the place where lunatics are treated is the proper place for lunatics; not to be mixing up with others in the workhouse.

4663. Do you think that some of the institutions could be used properly for that purpose?—I think so; I think some of the institutions could be set aside for these harmless lunatics; it would be a great saving to the workhouse in looking after them, and so forth; of course, the majority of them are harmless; any that got outrageous here to be sent away, but the others would be much better in an institution by themselves.

4664. You say this professionally, as a medical man of experience?—Quite so.

4665. Dr. Brown.—At present do you ever send any of the cases from the workhouse to the Shell Hospital for operations?—Very few come here; any that do come are sent over.

CHAIRMAN.—My colleagues and I wish to express my admiration of the business-like way the evidence has been put before us.

Mr. F. Lewis Smith.—On behalf of the Board I represent, we thank you for the great care and attention you have displayed in conducting this inquiry.

The sitting terminated.

Oct. 14, 1903.

ELEVENTH PUBLIC SITTING.—WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 14TH, 1903.

At the Courthouse, Donegal.

Present:—Mr. MICKS, (Chairman), Mr. MURNAHAN, and Dr. COREY BOGGER.

Mr. J. DUNLOP.—I represent the Donegal Board, and the Stranorlar Board is also represented by Mr. Boyle, solicitor. We think it would facilitate the Stranorlar men if we let them get on first; it would let them catch their train.

CHAIRMAN.—If you like to arrange that, it is all the same to us. Then, Mr. Boyle, are you ready with the Stranorlar evidence?

Mr. Boyle.—We have only two witnesses.

Mr. YEAGUE MOYEN.—We cannot get away until half-past six in any case.

Mr. D. C. FRANKON, Clerk of the Donegal Union, examined.

Mr. D. C. Frankon.

4666. Mr. DUNLOP.—How long are you Clerk of the Union?—Over thirty years.

4667. Have you looked into this matter of amalgamation of unions?—I have.

4668. And you have made out statistics?—I have made out answers to the queries.

4669. Take No. 1 query?—In my opinion, having regard to the fact that the population of the County Donegal is little more than half what it was when the present union boundaries were settled, and that the proportion of the remaining population at all likely to require workhouse relief under any circumstances is still more reduced, and that the facilities for transport and for communication are vastly better, I am of opinion that it would tend to economy and efficiency to amalgamate some of the unions. But it is idle to suppose that this can be done on the basis of any workhouse accommodating the number of inmates for which it was originally intended, as modern ideas and requirements would render such huddling together impossible.

4670. Now take No. 2 query?—I agree with the opinion expressed by the Board of Guardians that, with the exception of Letterkenny, no workhouse in this county could, with advantage, be utilised as an auxiliary lunatic asylum. If you had to provide an entirely separate staff to supervise it it would not tend to economy.

4671. No. 3?—I do not think that any of the suggestions in this query would tend to economy, except in so far as (a) and (b) would be carried out under complete amalgamation. Clause (c) I would consider absolutely unworkable and likely to make the position of the paupers so boarded out very much worse than under existing circumstances. Any classification of workhouses for the maintenance of different classes of paupers would, in my opinion, tend to greatly increase the cost without any compensating advantage.

4672. CHAIRMAN.—What do you take to be the meaning of sub-head (d)?—I assumed boarding them in external hospitals, as we do now.

4673. Do you think that might not be advantageous in some cases?—I think that if you retain the staff of the workhouse that it would not tend to economy.

4674. I can understand it not being of much importance in this union, but where you have portions of a union up close to another workhouse it may conceivably be of advantage for the people in a district remote from their own workhouse to be boarded out in the nearest workhouse to them. Did you think of it in that point of view?—I did, but my opinion is it is hardly likely any workhouse would arrange for boarding out in another workhouse the class of persons that they had accommodated for themselves.

4675. I am dealing with the sick altogether?—Well, of course, in acute cases, as a general rule in workhouses there are not a large percentage of acute cases, it is only chronic cases.

4676. But still there is a percentage?—There is a percentage, of course, and it would tend to relieve suffering if the person was brought to the nearest hospital, but it would be a very small percentage of the cases arising in any union that would be so dealt with.

4677. I suppose you think amalgamation could be carried out on a large scale if it were not for acute and fever cases; if people were able to travel you could have very much fewer workhouses, but the difficult question is how to provide for the acute sick?—There are only two cases in this county where it occurs to me that anything like that would be likely to arise—the extreme end of Glenties, Glencolumbkille, and the Lower Rosses. I think in any other part of the county, with any probable amalgamation, they would still be within a nearer distance of an infirmary than the remote parts of Glenties Union are now.

4678. Oh, yes; they are practically cut off from hospital accommodation?—They are; Glencolumbkille is much nearer to Donegal than it is to Glenties.

4679. Mr. DUNLOP.—What answer would you give to No. 4?—I think considerable changes would be necessary or desirable. For instance, the present boards are too large, and if two or more were added together they would be quite unworkable, if not unworkable, and the present system of representation, whether looked at from the basis of taxation or population, is indefensible. For instance, taking Donegal Union as an example, and there are far worse cases, one electoral division has about one-seventh of the population, one-seventh of the voting power, about one-fifth of the valuation, and contributes one-fourth of the present rate, but its representation is one-eighth.

4680. CHAIRMAN.—That is where we are sitting now?—That is where you sit now. Again, six divisions have more than half the voting power, more than half the valuation, contribute more than half the rates, and are represented by twelve Guardians, while the other twelve divisions, less important in every way, have a representation of twenty-four Guardians.

4681. Then you think the system of representation is utterly unjust?—I think it cannot be defended from any point of view.

4682. Mr. MURNAHAN.—The money point of view?—No; not the population; there are a larger proportion of destitute round the towns and villages than are in rural districts.

4683. Is it not a fact that in the poorer districts there are a larger number of destitute people than in the richer?—So far as this union is concerned, there is hardly a single electoral division that has not some poor and some good land. Nearly all the divisions run from the sea to the mountains, and I think there is no division that has a larger proportion of poor in that respect than Donegal; I am looking at it entirely from a domestic point of view.

4684. From a money point of view it might be so, but there is something more important even than money—that is the care of the destitute. If your suggestion was given effect to would it not have an injurious effect on the poor people of these districts that you say have a preponderance of voting power at the present time?—I don't think so at all; as a matter of fact

Oct. 14, 1903.
No. D. C.
Dublin.

these smaller divisions, when we had electoral division rating, most of them never had a pauper in the workhouse. My opinion is that there is more poverty in what you would call the richer divisions. Before they think of coming to the workhouse they migrate towards the towns.

4665. CHAIRMAN.—Had you any idea what you would suggest as an alternative representative plan?

Mr. DUNDY.—Do you know how the present representation was fixed?—The basis on which the present representation was fixed was the old idea of having double representation, an ex-officio and an elected Guardian for every electoral division.

4666. CHAIRMAN.—And the electoral divisions were founded largely on the boundaries of owners' properties?—Yes; under the old scheme sometimes two or more divisions were grouped together for the purpose of election, but under the Local Government Act those have been doubled, and even tripled, by separating them, and in Ballymahon they have only in one division a valuation of £150 for two Guardians, and in another division a valuation of £1,500.

4667. You wish to point out that there are great inequalities that should be remedied some way?—Yes.

4668. You don't suggest how?—It could be done by grouping the smaller divisions, and some of the larger ones would require to be divided into wards.

4669. That would tend to keep up a large number of representatives?—I am strongly of opinion that single constituencies are better than double ones.

4670. Single constituencies and fewer of them?—Exactly. There is another result that I am sure no one having any experience in carrying out the district council part of the work can have failed to notice, and that is that the towns and villages suffer now by the over-representation of the rural districts.

4671. Under the Public Health Act?—And under the ordinary road expenditure; the rural districts grudge any expenditure on the towns or villages.

4672. What is outside our scope, but I see the point of what you say?—On that question I also agree with the reply given by the Guardians—that in the case of amalgamation something should be done to protect the unions at present moderately well served being handicapped by having a highly-rated district added on.

4673. Does that affect this union?—I have not the most remote idea whether it is to survive and have another added on to it, or whether it is to be added on to another, but I think the interests of existing ratepayers should in some way be protected.

4674. That is, you would like not to have any raising of taxation on one part by having another poorer part added on to it?—As far as possible, but I would not at all say that a small thing should stand in the way of a great good.

4675. If you got Glencolumbkille in?—There are parts of Glenties Union that I would be much more unwilling to take in than Glencolumbkille itself.

4676. Mr. DUNDY.—Coming to query No. 3, what answer would you give?—I have already given an answer to questions that apply to that. I think that the remote districts of Glencolumbkille and the Rosses could be provided with small hospitals to which cases unable to be removed to the workhouse hospital could be admitted, but, with these exceptions, I imagine that all parts of the county would be within reasonable reach of a hospital, even after amalgamation, considering the present facilities for communication and transit. In the past communicating with the centre was as slow as peevish as sending out and getting a person in; but now, considering that motor cars will bring any part of the county into communication with another where an ambulance is required, I think that the added facilities for transit being the remote parts much nearer than they were when the present boundaries were fixed.

4677. CHAIRMAN.—The sick were not much considered when the present boundaries were fixed; it was entirely meant for able-bodied people?—Of course it was. To No. 4, my reply is that I do not think any change except amalgamation would be likely to tend to economise.

4678. Do you approve of keeping the insane in the workhouse?—I do not.

4679. You would send all the insane away to the bead institutions?—I would; in Donegal we have done that for many years.

4680. You don't board out children at all in this union?—We have not had for years what I would think a suitable case for boarding out. We have had some few, a very few, illegitimate and deserted children. For a long time back I can only recall one case, and that a good many years ago.

4681. Therefore that really is not a practical question here?—No. I am quite satisfied that the Board of Guardians are practically unanimous in favour of it as a suitable case arose. I would like to say in respect of that, that notwithstanding the way the workhouses are abused as homes for children we have had some very marked successes; more than I have ever known a case boarded out.

4682. But you have not had boarded-out cases?—No, I had some years ago, but my experience of the boarded-out cases was that they certainly never rose above the level of the people with whom they were boarded out.

4683. You did not get them back again?—No; I don't think we did.

4684. Mr. DUNDY.—Query 7?—I think that with the present facilities for getting away to general hospitals it is neither necessary nor desirable to go further than the present law admits of to meet this class of case. A considerable expenditure would be required to enable Guardians to enter for them, and even if this was done I imagine persons able to pay a reasonable sum would prefer going to a city or county hospital.

4685. CHAIRMAN.—But suppose they could pay very little, 5s. or 7s. a week?—At present the law enables us to deal with these cases, and we do; we have quite a number of cases always on the separate register.

4686. Paying from how much?—We have one case as low as 1s. a week, and with one notable exception, it is the highest; we have had them up as high as 12s. The Guardians use a discretion as to the means of the person; if it is a person who is very poor, but at the same time wishes to avoid the heat of pauperism, we would admit him at a small sum; we admitted one last evening case at 1s.

4687. Mr. MUNNAGHAN.—Except in the matter of amalgamation, you don't see any way of economising on the present system; did you say that?—I did.

4688. Have you any suggestion to make as to who would be a suitable amalgamation for Donegal?—I prefer not suggesting.

4689. You say that old chronic cases supply the did number in the institutions?—They do.

4690. Do you see any difficulty in removing these chronic cases to some central position?—I don't think so.

4691. You don't think there would be much hardship?—I don't think there would be.

4692. And you see no difficulty in regard to the children being boarded out or sent to some industrial institution?—No, I do not.

4693. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think if they were sent to a distance from their friends, for instance to the Letterkenny Asylum, do you think they would feel out of their friends?—I don't think so.

4694. You think the visits are not frequent or regular?—They are not frequent with chronic cases; with a case comes in first for the first few weeks they are visited.

4695. I suppose the people coming in are mostly people whose friends are few outside?—Yes.

4696. Mr. MUNNAGHAN.—And they remain in the institutions?—Yes; as a general rule it is a hospital in the dying; they remain in there until they die.

4697. How many have you in hospital at present?—There are thirty-eight in the infirmary and five in the fever hospital; forty-two in all.

4698. Dr. BURNES.—That is twenty-six in the body of the house?—Thirty-four; eight of those are children.

4699. Mr. MUNNAGHAN.—Does the tramp question figure any in your union?—Not at all largely; we have practically solved the question.

4700. CHAIRMAN.—How did you solve it?—We simply don't admit them; if it is a wet day and my hardship would occur we do admit; if there is a woman and children we always admit; but able-bodied tramps we do not admit.

4701. Mr. DUNDY.—On what grounds?—I don't think the Poor Law, the letter of it may be, but I don't think the spirit of it was intended to meet cases going from one union to another for the purpose of getting a night's lodging. I think it was for the purpose of relieving distress arising in the union; they were never intended to be tramp hotels.

4702. CHAIRMAN.—If the people are not destitute you have discretion to refuse admission, and you do so?—There is evidently a tendency among them that comes the news, and they don't come to us, and after the first year of taking a firm stand against admitting them they have ceased to come.

4733. You would be aware whether there were any complaints from the farmers about these people quartering themselves in their homes or haggards?—I have not heard any appreciable complaint. I have heard a great many complaints about their going into country houses and demanding food and money, and intimidating women and children if they were there, but I have not heard complaints.

4734. As to night lodging?—No, I have not.

4735. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—How long have you been experimenting on that matter?—For more than twelve years.

4736. And you have no tramps at all now?—Oh, we have.

4737. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose you will have some to-morrow for the reason?—I don't think that class are likely to get in.

4738. Mr. DUNLOP.—Is there anything else you would like to add?—That is the only thing.

4739. CHAIRMAN.—We won't press you on the question of amalgamation?—I don't think it would be right for me to say what workhouses should be continued or discontinued.

4740. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—But on the broad question you think something should be done?—I think it is almost to maintain institutions intended for eight millions for four millions now.

4741. CHAIRMAN.—Then they were founded on the idea of having a large house for the maintenance and support of starving adult people; that has ceased altogether, and they have become rural hospitals?—They have practically.

4742. So the matter would be to see what number of hospitals are necessary?—Exactly; if you were beginning again I would say that there ought to be a cottage hospital for nearly every two dispensary districts.

4743. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Suppose we did begin again, what would you suggest?—I believe myself it might in the long run be cheaper to begin again. I am strongly of opinion that it would be desirable to have a hospital there with accommodation for a few of the other classes as well as the acute sick, and you would serve very big districts all round.

4744. Chronic sick?—Yes, and even the old infirm. I think that you cannot economically work a workhouse on any other basis than the present, because if you have all the sick in one you must pay for every particle of labour done in it. I don't at all approve of pauper nursing, but there is a great deal of work that paupers able to work can do that will reduce the expenditure of the establishment. On the other hand, if you crowd all the able-bodied into one workhouse you leave them without help in the other; so I think the present system is the most economical.

4745. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—What do you mean by able-bodied; as far as we have gone in this county we have not found able-bodied paupers?—Well, there are able-bodied women with children, and they do a great deal of work, and there are men who are able to work, but, of course, no one would dream of employing them as able-bodied men; we have only two at present—one is a big strong man, who, though not classed as infirm, is a man of weak mind; the other is a man with one leg and a large family.

4746. Are the family in the institution?—Five of eight children are in the institution; they are not permanent cases; they generally come in the winter.

4747. The poor man is not able in the good time to make enough to support him in the winter?—I don't think he is willing if he were able. He has been a vagrant all his life; he is a native of the moon.

4748. CHAIRMAN.—Then, really, you think all Donegal instead of being divided into eight unions might be divided into sixteen or twenty hospital districts?—If it could be done, and there was money for it, I think the sick poor would be infinitely better served by an arrangement of that sort. As to the rating, I have seen that a number of suggestions have been made that you should revert to electoral division rating; I think that would be, certainly, a very retrograde step. I admit you cannot control outdoor relief otherwise except by rating it practically altogether; you must either give outdoor relief unaltered.

4749. For general expenditure, you would keep the union as large, and as regards outdoor relief you think it would be more economical to have electoral division rating?—If you give it at all; we don't give outdoor relief except on the certificate of the medical officer or provisional relief by the relieving officer. The Guardians do not put any chronic cases on the relief list.

4750. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Do you not think that that injuriously affects some very deserving people?—I don't think so; my experience of over thirty years is that nine-tenths of the applicants for outdoor relief are simply cases of contributing the rent for parties who otherwise maintain themselves begging, and they would be much more comfortable in the workhouse.

4751. Are you not aware that it is the most economical way of furnishing relief to the destitute if properly given?—I am not, and don't believe it. If you can restrict it, but with union rating you certainly cannot. If a case is given outdoor relief in one district, the Guardians of another district, knowing that they won't have any extra charge on their own immediate neighbours, will say, "Well, there is a very old woman of mine just as bad as that one," and in any union I am acquainted with, and I am acquainted with a great many, the cases are so numerous it would entail a very large expenditure. My experience is that where outdoor relief is pretty generally given there the rates are high, and where it is not given except in cases that cannot be removed to the workhouse, the rates are low.

4752. Don't you know that there is amongst the poor a feeling of dislike to come into the workhouse?—I found that some years ago there was an intense feeling, and it exists in isolated cases to this day, but the proportion compared with what it was before is very small, and as regards the sick it is very nearly gone.

4753. But still it might happen that some family might unexpectedly meet with reverse and be left in a destitute condition, and be unwilling to come into the workhouse; don't you think such a case should be assisted?—There are so many cases nearly on the level; it is opening a gate that it will be hard to close.

4754. But once a person enters the workhouse, do you not think the dislike to go there has removed, and it is an attraction to them afterwards?—I don't think so. I know of cases saved in the workhouse, and although of kindly disposition and liking to see their old acquaintances, they would shun it as they would a plague, and some have risen to great eminence.

4755. We have had evidence before us where the Guardians refused outdoor relief in every case except on a certificate, and the Guardians themselves, out of pure charity, had contributed to keep these people from starving; do you think it is right that deserving people should be treated like that?—You cannot make any general rule that will apply to every case, there will be occasional exceptions, but there will be no exception to the fact that if you give outdoor relief to that class of person you will have other classes that are not so deserving getting it, and you cannot avoid it.

4756. But still if the relieving officer had placed upon himself the responsibility of deciding as to the merits of the claim for outdoor relief, and he felt that responsibility would be closely investigated and inquired into by the auditor, do you not think that outdoor relief judiciously administered would be very economical?—I have never known the Guardians even reflect upon the relieving officer for giving provisional relief; my remarks refer not to the cases of emergency but to chronic cases.

4757. I would just like to get your opinion, because you seem to be a very level-headed man, and have had many years' experience?—I have had a good many years' experience.

4758. CHAIRMAN.—Do all the cases come up on the application of the relieving officer?—If he finds it necessary during the week.

4759. But I mean you have no such thing as chronic cases?—Yes, we have.

4760. Are they brought forward by Guardians?—The only chronic cases we have on the books are cases we carried forward from the old Board of Guardians. Immediately after the Local Government Act was passed the new board passed a resolution handing themselves that except in cases relieved by the relieving officer, and cases given on the certificate of the doctor, they would not add to the list, but allow the old list to die out.

4761. Do you think if the relieving officer were made the person responsible for outdoor relief in all cases, and if he could be pulled up by the Guardians and auditor of the Local Government Board, do you think abuses would be likely to arise then?—I think just as

Oct. 14, 1905.

Mr. D. C. Pearson.

Oct. 14, 1905.

Mr. D. C.
Pearson.

likely; it would require to be a very firm relieving officer that would resist the appeals of local Guardians.

4753. Do you think the first aid might not suffer him?—I think he could do a great deal quite within the law that no auditor could touch.

4754. If the law were tightened?—I hardly know how you could tighten it more than describing the class, for no law will classify the cases, though the present law does classify them as well as can possibly be done.

4755. You don't see any advantage in putting the responsibility, as in the case of provincial relief, on the relieving officer instead of the Guardians?—I do not think so; I think a body like the Board of Guardians are more likely to deal impartially than a relieving officer, who, perhaps, by refusing a particular case, would make enemies.

4756. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—I suppose you see the point I am trying to get at; it is this, that in giving outdoor relief, if judiciously and properly given, the recipient receives the whole benefit of the grant; none of it goes to officers or establishment charges; what we would like to arrive at would be to find a method of giving the poor the best possible relief.—I do not think it would be possible to discriminate as wisely as you suggest. I think not only Boards of Guardians but all charitable institutions have found that they were constantly imposed on. I have before my mind a case something like you refer to, where the Guardians put their hands in their pockets and contributed in that form to poor persons who were not eligible within the law. It was distinctly proved to the Guardians that they managed to convert the relief given into whiskey, and the Guardians themselves contributed to purchase clothing and blankets for them. And I am personally certain that in outdoor relief the small sums that would be likely to be given would simply go to pay the house rent for parties who live by common begging, and certainly my experience is that the parties who apply for outdoor relief are not the class of persons who would die rather than come into the workhouse; you will get an exceptional case now and again; parties are much more likely to die from starvation without their poverty being known than parties who would take outdoor relief are to do because they would not come into the workhouse.

4757. How are the people who are very poor who do not beg?—We always do that; the law provides for that; when a person in the County Donegal dies his relatives will apply to the relieving officer for a coffin and a shroud, and a deputation will go round the town and beg the means of providing a cat.

Mr. Connell,
M. Ward.

Mr. CONNELL, M.

WARD examined.

4757. Mr. Dawley.—You are the Chairman of the Donegal Board of Guardians?—Yes, sir.

4758. And have been for some years?—Yes.

4759. You and the Guardians stand in answers to all the queries?—Yes.

4760. Is there anything you would wish to add to the answers you have given to those queries?—No; there is nothing I would wish to add; anything I would be inclined to add has been added by Mr. Pearson, and I entirely concur in everything he has said on the matter. Those answers are somewhat similar to the answers he gave, and they were the answers we arrived at after considering the matter as seriously as we could, and the Board were all unanimous that those answers were the best answers we could give to the several questions, and any additional information that Mr. Pearson has given I fully concur with him.

4761. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—The clerk has told us that your board, immediately after the entrance on their duties, came to the decision that they would give no outdoor relief?—We did.

4762. Would you give the Commission the reasons which influenced the members?—Yes; we all believed that it would be wiser to do so for the simple reason that if a person got outdoor relief in a certain district that a Guardian in another district would say to himself, "My neighbour requires outdoor relief too," and he would use all the influence he could to get outdoor relief for this person, and the thing would go from one district to another, so that it would become too general; people would be asking for outdoor relief that could do without it; it would demoralise the people to a certain extent; it would become very general, and be an expensive item on the rates.

4763. Since you came to that resolution has it affected the number in the house in any way; did more come in?—No; I don't believe it did affect it appreciably at all; those that were getting outdoor relief when our board came into existence we continued outdoor relief to them, and any provisional relief the relieving officer gives we give him liberty to use his discretion. We passed a resolution that without a doctor's certificate that the persons were not fit to be admitted to the house we would give no outdoor relief.

4764. You make all the destitute who are able to be removed come into the workhouse?—Yes.

4765. Has any case of hardship come under your notice?—Well, no; the only case of hardship that came under my notice was the case alluded to by Mr. Pearson, where the Guardians made a subscription themselves and bought clothing for the parties, and gave them provisional relief in that way; some of these people came to the workhouse afterwards and died there.

4766. Does the feeling exist among the people outside, living in the country, of a desire to come into the workhouse?—Well, no; when the people become destitute I don't think the feeling is much against coming into the workhouse now; they believe they get very good treatment, and all that. There are some people who may have a feeling.

4767. CHAIRMAN.—Among the very old people—Old people come in; they have no remorse, I believe.

4768. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Have you many laborers in your union?—No; they are nearly all small farmers.

4769. Then the question is not so strong in your union as in some others?—I think not; they are nearly all small farmers, with the exception of an odd person about the town; but in the country they are all small farmers.

4770. What is your view as regards emigration; do you think the number of workhouses in this county is too great?—I think there are too many, certainly; if it would reduce the rates I believe they should be reduced.

4771. Have you any suggestions to make?—I have not. I mentioned before, I believe, that from the decrease of the population and that sort of thing, and the facilities for transit and going from one place to another, that certainly less workhouses would do now than formerly. When the union boundaries were first fixed communication was very poor, but now there are good facilities for travelling.

4772. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think this union could be abolished?—No; I think this union should be retained.

4773. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—If Donegal were to be preserved in all its glory and increased you think some of the other unions could be done away with?—I think so.

4774. CHAIRMAN.—Supposing this union were broken up, have you any idea how it could be dealt with?—I would be of opinion that there should be a workhouse in every parliamentary division of the county, and I think the workhouse should be in the most central part of the division. I think then that Donegal should stand for South Donegal.

4775. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—You have the credit of bringing forward a new proposal as regards parliamentary areas?—I think it would be wise to have one in every parliamentary division of the county, and I think Donegal would be the most central place for South Donegal.

4776. You have heard Mr. Pearson say that a good number of the inmates of the house are chronic cases, and he has also said he does not think there would be any hardship in reserving those inmates to some central position; do you agree with that?—I think that the facilities for travelling now that there would not be; of course, there are some exceptional cases in which there would be hardship, but, on the whole, there would not.

4777. Have you many children?—There are not many children.

4778. CHAIRMAN.—Right?—Sometimes there does not be that many even.

4779. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Has the question of boarding out ever come before the board?—We never had many children at a time. I believe it would be advisable in a great many cases to board out. I know some cases myself before I became acquainted with the workhouse that were boarded out, and they did very well; the people that had them in charge sent them to school, and they became quiet, industrious boys afterwards.

4789. And never sought the house again?—No, they never did; and, in fact, the people who had them in charge would keep them for ever, as fond as of their own children—some of them. I believe the system of boarding out, if it was seen that they were properly conducted and sent to school, is a system I would approve of.

4790. Would you think there would be any difficulty in getting suitable homes?—I think not if there was a fair fee given to the parties; the fee might not be so large, but if there was a pretty good fee given there would be no reluctance on the part of some farmers taking them in; then, of course, the Guardians in the neighbourhood should see that these were properly sent to school and conducted; if not they should be taken from them.

4791. CHAIRMAN.—You would not be afraid of any personal cruelty towards the children?—I would not be a bit afraid of any personal cruelty to the children.

4792. Mr. MURKIN.—Your general experience is that persons boarded out receive fairly good treatment from their foster parents?—They do.

4793. CHAIRMAN.—The only danger would be not sending them to school, but taking as much work out of them as possible?—That could be seen to by the Guardians of the district; but I believe there would be no danger of that.

4794. Dr. BAKER.—In your evidence you mentioned something about the county infirmary at Lefford?—Yes; I believe the infirmary at Lefford would be quite sufficient for the wants of the sick poor in a considerable area round about, and the Small Hospital at Dallyshannon could give accommodation to some of the people about Ballyshannon.

4795. CHAIRMAN.—And you would be willing to pay for patients going from here to the Small Hospital?—Some of them would be willing to pay for themselves.

4796. But the Guardians?

4797. Mr. MURKIN.—They would cost no more than the present cost?—No.

4798. The Guardians would be willing to give as much assistance as they could?—They would, I believe.

4799. Supposing Donegal was preserved, have you in your mind's eye any of the unions that could be done without in Donegal. We must begin with some unions, and we would like to get the opinion of a sensible gentleman, like you?—I would have Donegal in South Donegal, but it is a question I would not like to answer.

4800. CHAIRMAN.—Are you afraid of Mr. Boyle?—No, I am not, nor of Mr. Magee either. I should say Glenties should be retained for West Donegal and Milford for East Donegal, and Lishaven for Lishaven; and I would say, of course, the reason I would pass over Letterkenny is that I believe it could be added to the present asylum, not as an auxiliary requiring an extra staff, but as part of the present building, because it is sufficiently near the present building to be managed by the staff with some extra assistance.

4801. What would you do for Stranorlar?—I would turn it into a large establishment for the whole county.

4802. For what class?—If children would not be boarded out it would be a grand place in which to train the children of the county, learn them trades, and turn them out good members of society; either that or to turn it into a technical school or agricultural school. I believe that any of these workhouses that could be dispensed with should be turned into technical or agricultural schools.

4803. Mr. MURKIN.—What about Ballyshannon?—Ballyshannon could be turned into something of the kind too.

4804. Mr. DUFFY.—Would you sell it to the War Office for barracks?—We could do that; I am sure they would be very glad to buy it.

4805. Mr. Boyle.—Is there any railway into Milford; is it a very accessible place?—It is not a very accessible place, but it is not very far away from the railway.

4806. Is it not at the very end of North Donegal and within one mile of West Donegal?—Well, I am not quite sure.

4807. Would it not be about the most inaccessible workhouse that you could have for East Donegal?—Of course I admit Stranorlar is the most accessible.

4808. Is not that a point in its favour. You have promulgated the novel idea that there should be a workhouse in each parliamentary division, but if a redistribution of seats came, and there were perhaps only two parliamentary divisions in Donegal, would you have the workhouses then reduced?—The number of parliamentary divisions will last for some time.

Mr. CHARLES CAMPBELL, EXAMINED.

4798. Mr. DUFFY.—You are a member of the District Board of Guardians and District Council?—Yes.

4800. And have been since the passing of the Local Government Act?—Yes.

4801. You sent in your answer already to the Commission to these queries?—Yes, sir.

4802. Have you anything that you would wish to add now to the answers that have been sent in; did you hear the evidence of Mr. Ward?—Yes; I did.

4803. Do you agree with it?—Yes.

4804. CHAIRMAN.—Do you agree with him as regards the unions that ought to be closed up?—Yes.

4805. You would close up Dallyshannon, Stranorlar, Ballyshannon, and Letterkenny?—Yes.

4806. Mr. MURKIN.—Was that matter considered by your County Council—District Council?

Mr. PEARSON.—We have only the one district council in the one union; it is exactly the same body.

4807. CHAIRMAN.—You have no urban district?—No.

4808. Mr. DUFFY.—Was it considered by the district council what unions should remain and what should be closed?—Yes, sir.

4809. Mr. MURKIN.—A special meeting summoned for the purpose was there?—Yes, sir.

4810. And the decision was?—Unanimous.

4811. You think Ballyshannon is an situated and the town is of such importance that it is necessary the institution should be retained there?—It is made up of three unions.

4812. I should have said Donegal?—Yes; I think it is in a central position.

4813. CHAIRMAN.—Then you would take the Donegal part of Ballyshannon?—Yes.

4814. Mr. MURKIN.—Would there be any difficulty in doing that as regards the transfer of people to this house?—No difficulty whatever; in a short time we will have a railway from Ballyshannon into this town, the line is being constructed; I think there will be no difficulty at all.

4815. Donegal is situated in a fairly central position?—The most central I am aware of.

4816. Because there was a suggestion yesterday at Ballyshannon that Donegal could be done without, and I would like to know from you something on the other side?—I don't see how it could be easily done without, because it is in my opinion, and has been the opinion of all the counsel who met at the deposition summoned, that Donegal was the most central place for South Donegal, and I believe it too.

4817. CHAIRMAN.—It was pointed out in Ballyshannon that they had more than twice as many inmates as you have here, that there are more people seeking relief in the infirmary and workhouse than here, and then consideration ought to be given to them as the more important centre of population?—Ballyshannon is on the seaward skirts of Donegal altogether.

4818. They were pointing out that the railway would be made, and it would be very handy for bringing your people into them?—The Small Hospital is in Dallyshannon, and for the sick and infirm I think it would be quite sufficient to accommodate the Ballyshannon section, and by conveying persons from Kilgobbin to Ballyshannon would be a distance of thirty-six miles, while the distance from Ballyshannon to Donegal would be only about thirteen miles, and it would meet the Glenties section of this part.

4819. Do you agree with Mr. Pearson in thinking that no matter how the matter was settled some small local hospital would be necessary about Carrick or Glenties?—Yes, I do; it is a very far distance from Glenties to any workhouse, but you Donegal, owing to the railway facilities from Killybegs, would be as convenient, and more convenient for bringing them than any other workhouse I am aware of.

4820. For the people who could be removed?—For the people who could be removed.

Oct. 14, 1902

Mr. Campbell,
H. Ward.

Mr. Charles
Campbell.

Oct. 14, 1898.

Mr. Charles
Gawdy.

4821. But the people who could not be removed would require some small hospital in economical lines?—Yes; I agree with that.

4822. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—There was a suggestion also made yesterday that Ballyshannon Union could accommodate a number of outlying divisions in other counties, such as Fermanagh and Leitrim; did that question ever come up before your council to consider?—No, sir.

4823. But what you think is that if this union were retained that it would be in a suitable position to accommodate any person living inside the boundary of Donagall as it exists at present?—Yes, I do.

4824. You think it would be a very suitable place?—The most suitable I know.

4825. And the doing away with it would be an injury to the poor?—I believe that; and it would be very inconvenient.

4826. Mr. Doolery.—Would not Irvinestown workhouse be sufficient to look after the Fermanagh portion of the Ballyshannon Union?—Yes; and it would be nearer than Ballyshannon.

4827. And Manchesterhamilton Union for the Leitrim portion?—Yes.

4828. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—I understood your board does not give any outdoor relief except in provisional cases and under the certificate of the doctor?—No, sir.

4829. Could you tell the Commission what was the reason for that; did you find it was abused?—We met, we passed a resolution, according to the law, and we are of opinion still it is the best plan we could adopt, because in a great many cases the people who would receive outdoor relief, what they got would not be far outdoor relief, but it might be converted, and the poor are far better provided, I am of opinion, and know it, within the workhouse here at present than they could be outside.

4830. As far as food and clothing, perhaps, they are better provided, but they have not the freedom that human nature seeks; the confinement is very cruel under this; if there was a careful system adopted of outdoor relief that would give only to those that would be fully entitled to it, do you not think that would relieve the institution of a great many inmates and bring comfort to the destitute?—I don't see how the poor who would receive outdoor relief could be as comfortable as they would be within the walls of the workhouse, nor as well cared and looked after.

4831. Supposing there was 2s. a week or so given to the destitute person, could they not subsist on that by earning 2s. or 3s. more, and living more comfortably and be happier than in the barracks here?—There are very few of them that apply for outdoor relief that are able to work.

4832. For instance, people living in the towns and getting little jobs, do you think it is right that those people should be allowed to starve or go to the workhouse?—The only case that I know that that applied to was subscribed for.

4833. I may tell you it does happen in other cases. It is the only case since I became a member of the board.

4834. You don't think any better system of outdoor relief could be devised than the present system?—I believe they could not be better accommodated, and I have known cases that it was painful to see them living there until they were removed to the house, and they were not within the walls of the houses when I want to see them in a short time, and they would not leave on any consideration; parties that I visited from my own division.

4835. Did you not think you were doing an injury to the union by bringing these people into such comfortable quarters instead of giving them assistance outside temporarily?—I do not believe it; I believe I was doing justice to them.

4836. CHAIRMAN.—You would not do anything that you thought would produce real hardship to the people outside?—No, sir.

4837. Have you heard any complaint at all about hardship arising to your refusing to give outdoor relief, or have you known any case of hardship resulting?—No, sir.

4838. What is your own division?—Innymore.

4839. I suppose people occasionally from time to time have mentioned outdoor relief as a possibility to you?—No.

4840. Since you became a member they don't look for it in your division?—No. Within the division I represent no person has applied to me or spoken to me.

Mr. Doolery.—That is the evidence I produce on behalf of the Donagall Board.

CHAIRMAN.—The doctor is here; we might hear him.

Dr. WARNOCK examined.

4841. Dr. BUCHAN.—Do you wish to supplement the evidence you have already given?—I don't know that I have anything to add to the evidence I gave at Derry, except upon the subject of amalgamation. I think there are too many workhouses in the county, and a good many of them could be done away with. In the first instance, the population is not anything like it was when they were first instituted, and in the second place, there are not the same number of people, according to the population, requiring support in workhouses. I think, of course, that the question of workhouses and hospitals should be kept entirely distinct, and when the subject of removing them from one place to another is discussed that that should be kept in mind. To remove the residents in a workhouse from one place to another would, in my mind, entail no hardship at all when you have railway accommodation; they are supposed to be healthy inmates—some are children, some are old and infirm, but they are capable of removal. Those who are incapable of removal are, of course, confined to the hospital.

4842. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think the question of removing these people from their friends is a practical question; do you think they would feel being removed from a distance, say from Ballyshannon to Donagall?—I think in some cases they would, but for those resident in the body of the house it would not apply in the same way as it does in the case of those in the hospital.

4843. You don't think that would prevail to any extent, that would be a bar to an economical arrangement for the good of the community?—No, I don't think it would to any very great extent. I think in the case of old people resident in the house, in families, that a better arrangement should be made. I think in the case of an old couple in the house, that have lived together all their lives, they should not be separated when coming into the house; some arrangement should be made by which they would continue to live together, either in small rooms by themselves, or outside.

4844. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—You said you think there would be no hardship in changing cases of removal. The persons who are resident in the body of the house are not patients; they are not invalids, as a general rule; there are some of them invalids, but those who are invalids and infirm are treated in the hospital when the hospital can accommodate them; that is why I say I don't think the question of hardship, with regard to removal, or degree of removal, where there is railway accommodation, can come in. For instance, take Ballyshannon, Donagall, Stranorlar, and Glenties, in my mind one workhouse would accommodate all the able-bodied and all outside the hospitals, and I think it is immaterial which workhouses they are accommodated in, because you have at present railway communication between Stranorlar and Glenties and between Donagall and Stranorlar, and in a year or two we will have communication with Ballyshannon.

4845. Then as regards temporary cases, cases that might not be permanent—destitute for the moment—and still would like to keep out of the house?—In that case it would just mean the railway fare from one place to another.

4846. CHAIRMAN.—What would you do as regards the sick?—I would maintain all the present hospitals and improve them; I would separate them entirely from the body of the house and convert them into a block by themselves, and, as I stated in Derry, place them under an infirmary board on the same level and footing as the county infirmary, and under the management of the same board, with, perhaps, in the district hospitals, the addition of a few local men added on to the committee.

4847. Would you hope to have economy?—Certainly.

Oct. 14, 1903.
Dr. Warrack.

4853. Mr. MURRAY.—Do you find the elected representatives are extravagant?—I don't find they are extravagant at all; the reason I mentioned that in Derry is I think it would work for economy to have them all under one head, chiefly with regard to the nursing; the same staff of nurses, particularly the fever nurses, could be changed from one hospital to another as required.

4854. You say you would have a nominated board instead of a representative?—No; I said the present infirmary board—the County Council—and, as a matter of supervision, that question was raised in Derry by some one; the County Council could nominate or elect, whichever you choose.

4855. CHAIRMAN.—The same as they do on the asylum committee?—Exactly; a few local representatives in each district; the same thing applies to the county infirmary; it is from the point of view of economy I mention this. It is not that there is any fault to be found with the present boards, but I think it would be much better, particularly with regard to nursing, to have the whole thing under one control. As I pointed out in Derry, there are times when there is a demand for more than one nurse in a fever hospital, then you could transfer the nurses from another hospital which was not required for the time being, and the vice versa as well.

4856. So that having the nurses under one control you could move them about according to the exigencies of the case?—Exactly.

4857. And in this way arrive at an economical arrangement?—Certainly.

4858. Dr. BROWN.—Is it your opinion that very few of the old and infirm have friends, or, if they have friends, do they often go to see them?—That is why I said it would not apply so much in the body of the house as in the infirmary; they do not have the same number of visitors going to see them.

4859. Very often their friends are dead?—Sometimes they are, but, as a rule, people do not come into the body of the house if they have friends who can support them. Their friends don't allow them to come in; they are generally people who have not many friends or relatives outside.

4860. That is different from the sick?—Yes; because they come in as a matter of necessity and for treatment.

4861. Have you anything to say with regard to the location or consequences?—With regard to the consequences I can only repeat what I said in Derry, that I think there should be a special institution for them that would serve a number of counties, not one county at all, because there are not a sufficient number in one county to make it economical to provide an institution for them. One institution would be quite sufficient to accommodate all the consumptives in two or three, or perhaps more, counties.

4862. But then the difficulty would be that their friends would not allow them to go long distances?—That is not my experience; of course, it is not much good sending them at all unless you send them in the early stage, and my experience is that in the early stage they will consent to their going any distance; in a later stage, when you cannot tell them there is much hope it is then that they don't like to let them go; they want to have them die at home. With regard to the question of location, we all know that increased accommodation is necessary, and I think when it can be at all arranged that the workhouse, I mean now the body of the house—I am not talking of the infirmary, because I think the infirmaries, except in towns where there are county infirmaries, I think the workhouse infirmaries will all be required—but I think the body of the house should be converted into an auxiliary asylum in addition to the asylum, and, again, for economic reasons, because it would be there under the immediate control of the staff of the asylum, and it would not require so many additional attendants, because the cases put into an auxiliary asylum are not the acute cases that require special supervision.

4863. Mr. MURRAY.—That could only be done in your county at Letterkenney?—That could only be done at Letterkenney.

4864. The asylum, I understand, is overcrowded, and they are building additional wings?—Yes; and the workhouse, with some improvements, would be capable of accommodating harmless lunatics with a certain number of epileptics.

4865. You think an institution of that kind would be a better home for these afflicted people than a workhouse?—Unquestionably, because they would be under a trained staff.

4866. And it would be better for the harmless lunatics already in the asylum to be away from the noisy people?—Unquestionably.

4867. Dr. BROWN.—With regard to the fever hospitals, should they be decreased or increased?—They could not possibly be reduced with safety to the public, and I think in certain localities small hospitals should be established that could be used either as fever hospitals or as district hospitals, as occasion required. I mentioned in Derry the two localities that I think require such accommodation.

4868. One hospital that might be used for either purpose?—According to emergency cases.

4869. CHAIRMAN.—You don't think it would be possible to have a cottage hospital common to both infectious and non-infectious diseases?—You could not possibly, where you had fever, admit other cases.

4870. But suppose you were a long time without fever, suppose, as often happens, for six months or a year?—I think that in the interval a case might be admitted.

4871. The awkwardness would occur if you had half a dozen ordinary, serious, medical, or surgical cases in this hospital; then, if a fever case came, you would have to send it somewhere else?—You would have to have a small isolated block so arranged that you could isolate it completely; that would be required even in surgical cases, because a case of erysipelas might arise, which you should isolate.

4872. Dr. BROWN.—If they had two wards that would give them time to have the other patient removed?—Yes; but it is only in case of emergency.

4873. CHAIRMAN.—I think the districts you referred to were Glencolumbkille and the Rosses?—Yes; there may be others in the northern end of the county that I cannot speak of.

4874. You might fix a site that would accommodate both at Greencastle?—Yes; now, particularly that you have a railway there, I don't mean that fever patients should be conveyed by railway, but many others could be.

4875. Mr. MURRAY.—Have you any suggestion about the island of Arranmore?—I think there should be a small cottage hospital that would be used entirely in the case of an outbreak of fever, and an arrangement should be made to send fever cases there when required. The people won't consent to go to hospital until the disease is advanced, and then there is a difficulty about getting them on to the mainland, and there is a danger as well in removing them; I mean danger to themselves in removing them when the disease arrives at that stage.

4876. Is there any diseased institution in that locality that could be turned into such a hospital?—I have not been on the island lately, but I have heard there is; I don't know anything about it of my own knowledge at present. Of course, if there was a permanent cottage hospital established for the accommodation of the Rosses people this small hospital on Arranmore could be worked in connection with it as required.

Mr. GEORGE McLAUGHLIN, Clerk

4877. Mr. ROYLE.—Have you sent a reply to the queries?—Yes.

4878. It is before the Commissioners; have you anything to add to that?—Yes; there are some general statements I wish to add.

4879. On the question of outdoor relief, would you say anything as far as your board is concerned?—Our board is rather reluctant to give outdoor relief, but in case of temporary distress or where there are two or of Stranraer Union, examined.

three in the household they would be in favour of granting it, but taking it as a whole the majority of the Guardians think that granting 2s. or 3s. a week as outdoor relief is not to be advocated, for they think that if the workhouse is not a suitable place for treating such cases it ought to be brought up to the standard to meet such cases. From a sanitary point of view and other reasons they would be much better treated in the workhouse than in their own buildings, but where

Mr. George McLaughlin.

Oct. 14, 1902,

Mr. George
H. Langhills.

urgent cases are brought up and advocated by the Guardians of the district the board are in favour of granting them.

4389. Is it only in case of exceptional years they have given outdoor relief?—Our outdoor relief is only £1 13s. 6d. a week; we are really a poor district. In Strabane No. 2 they are giving £9 a week in outdoor relief; we are the poorer part of the county, and are paupers supporting paupers.

4390. How much is the standard rate in Stranorlar?—Our standard rate was the lowest in the county, except Londonderry No. 2. Ballyshannon was 1s. 1d.; Donagall, 10d.; Milford, 1s. 9d.; Glenties, 2s. 8d.; Inishowen, 1s. 4d.; Letterkenny, 10d.; Londonderry, 1d.; Derry, 10d.; of course we suffer by that now. I sent in a statement to the Commission, but I find that what I sent in to the Commission was only the rates levied on "the other hereditaments." Ballyshannon, to be deducted in respect of agricultural grants for county charges, 55s.; to be levied off other hereditaments, 185s.; union charges, 127s.; sums deducted in respect of agricultural grant, 64s. 6d. In Donagall the union charges to be levied off agricultural land are 72s.; deducted in respect of agricultural grant, 81s.; other hereditaments, 184s. 6d. Derry, 10d.; deducted in respect of agricultural grant, 10s. 11d.; to be levied off other hereditaments, 70s. 6d. Glenties, union charges, 146s.; sums to be deducted in respect of agricultural grant, 104s.; to be levied off other hereditaments, 122s. 6d. Londonderry No. 2, union charges on land, 74s.; agricultural grant, 55s.; to be levied off other hereditaments, 154s. Letterkenny, union charges, 70s.; sums to be deducted in respect of agricultural grant, 81s.; to be levied off other hereditaments, 122s. 6d. Londonderry No. 2, union charges on land, 34s.; to be deducted in respect of agricultural grant, 34s.; to be levied off other hereditaments, 72s. 6d. In Milford, union charges, 74s.; to be deducted in respect of agricultural grant, 72s.; to be levied off other hereditaments, 157s. Strabane No. 2, union charges, 146s.; sums to be deducted in respect of agricultural grant, 55s.; on other hereditaments, 20s. In Stranorlar, union charges, 84s.; to be deducted in respect of agricultural grant, 87s.; to be levied off other hereditaments, 158s. 6d.

4392. How much was Strabane No. 2?—The rate this year in Strabane No. 2 to be levied off agricultural land, 144s.; the grant, 55s.; and to be levied off other hereditaments, 20s.

4393. Mr. MURKHAM.—That is 1s. 8d.; what is it in Stranorlar?—13s. 6d.

4394. I suppose there is exceptional reason this year for the high rate in Strabane?—Yes; apparently.

Mr. MURKHAM.—We understand that in the County Tyrone the reason was there was an under calculation.

4395. Mr. Boyle.—Have you any observations to make about the representation of the electoral division?—Yes; we have one electoral division with a valuation of £200, and they send forward two representatives, and we have another division with a valuation of over £6,000, and they only send forward two representatives as well.

4396. Mr. MURKHAM.—What is the number of people in the house at present?—There are thirty-five in the infirmary and three in the fever hospital.

4397. Mr. Boyle.—How is Stranorlar situated for the purpose of transit and railway facilities?—It is the centre of the railway system of the Donegal railways; all the other railways radiate from Stranorlar towards Donegal.

4398. CHAIRMAN.—That is the southern branch; the ones radiating from Letterkenny have no connection with you?—No, sir; but Strabane No. 2 and Glenties.

4399. Mr. MURKHAM.—Suppose in the case of amalgamation the union of Stranorlar was abolished, would it cause any inconvenience to the poor of that locality?—I would be in favour of retaining all the infirmaries attached to the various workhouses. Taking our own union, if cases of illness occur on the mountain portion, sixteen or seventeen miles away, or fever or sudden accidents, it would be cruel to remove the cases from those parts to any other workhouse. I think the same argument applies to all the unions situated in the county.

4400. Is there any neighbouring union that Stranorlar, owing to its situation, could serve in the case of amalgamation?—There is railway communication to Strabane, Donagall, and Glenties, but none towards Letterkenny.

4391. Is Stranorlar so situated that it is in the central portion of the county?—I believe it is.

4402. What is the valuation of the union?—£21,000.

4403. What is the annual outlay?—The demand is £2,500.

4404. CHAIRMAN.—For what purpose?—All purposes—medical charges.

4405. Have you the demand for Poor Law purposes only; could you tell the amount, excluding the Public Health and medical charges?—The expenditure for inmates, including clothing, is about £200 a year.

4406. That does not cover the establishment?—No, sir; it does not.

4407. Have you got what would have been the old poor rate?—The average for the last five years in the old poor rate was 10s. 6d.

4408. What services did you do out of that?—All the services in connection with the Poor Law medical charges, registration, establishment, maintenance of paupers.

4409. Public Health?—Yes.

4410. Can you tell me for Poor Law purposes only what would be the present rate?

Mr. Pearson.—It was £1,611 last year.

4411. CHAIRMAN.—Out of £2,500?

Mr. Pearson.—Yes.

4412. Mr. MURKHAM.—I notice that the rate in the standard year was not as high as it is at present. No, sir, it was not; but we had to expend between 1890 and 1900 since the Act came into operation in making improvements in the workhouse and on the additional nursing staff.

4413. How were they paid for; by means of a loan?—£200 was by means of a loan.

4414. Has the other £200 been paid out of the fund?

—Yes; the ordinary funds of the union.

4415. You say there is an inequality in some of the electoral divisions owing to the low rate?—Yes, sir.

4416. You mention one case in which the valuation is £250 and another case where the valuation is over £6,000?—Yes.

4417. You think it is hardly fair to the high rated division that it should only have the same representation as a low-rated one?—Yes, I think so.

4418. Have you any suggestion to make to relieve that inequality?—Personally, I think an electoral division under £2,000 valuation should have only one representative.

4419. Then you would create a representation according to the valuation?—Yes; I think it is a very high estimate to have one. And as regards outdoor relief chargeability, I would be in favour of making it a divisional rating.

4420. Simply on economical grounds?—Yes.

4421. And the reason is to put on every electoral division the cost of its own district?—Yes; besides I think when a district councillor advocates Poor Law relief for a pauper in his district, he should be responsible for that, knowing that his division has to bear its expense.

4422. You can look at that from another point of view. Of course, on the ground of economy and keeping down the rates, that would be very right, but you must take into consideration that a poor electoral division might have a considerable number of poor and a rich electoral division might have very few poor, but you would be putting the whole burden of keeping up the poor on the poor electoral division; how would it affect you if the rating system was changed from a case rating to a county rating, such as a compounding charge; do you think that would be a better distribution?—I don't know. I would be inclined to believe that the district councillors and Guardians would be rather inclined to put more cases on outdoor relief in their respective divisions; I think if it was made a divisional charge and brought more home to them they would do that the cases were proper cases.

4423. CHAIRMAN.—If you put outdoor relief out of the question?—Leaving outdoor relief out of the question, I think it should be county rating.

Mr. MURKHAM.—What is the area of the Strabane Union?

Mr. Boyle.—The next witness will tell you that.

4424. Mr. MURKHAM.—How many children have you put in the house?—Ten.

4425. Are your Guardians in favour of the system of boarding out?—They would be in favour of boarding out, but there are only two children at present boarded out in the union; I think the consensus of opinion is that the boarding-out system is better. I would like to hand in a dietary scale, showing the liberal treatment of the paupers and inmates in Stranorlar Workhouse: the class that uses tobacco get an ounce and a half weekly, those who are not confined to bed; and one ounce those who are; and the doctor gets a great lot of snuff in the infirmary.

4016. How many people are there in the infirmary?—Twenty-five.

4017. And in the body of the house?—It takes up the balance.

4018. Have you any harmless inmates in the house?—Five.

4019. Did your Guardians ever express an opinion as regards the benefits of an auxiliary system?—They are of opinion that all these classes of inmates should be treated in a separate institution.

4020. Any trouble with the tramp question in your union?—Yes, sir.

4021. You don't adopt the treatment they adopt in Donegal?—No, sir. In wet weather it is very hard on the poor tramp who comes from Strabane or Donegal; it is a very difficult matter to refuse them admission, but I would be in favour in summer weather of absolutely refusing admission, but in the case of women and children I would always admit them.

4022. CHAIRMAN.—You were master in Stranorlar before you became clerk?—Yes.

4023. For a great number of years you had this discretion in your hands of admitting them or not admitting them, and that is the way you exercised it?—Yes.

4024. You were slow to refuse admission?—In winter weather.

4025. And the Guardians did not impose any extra order on you with regard to the regulations or rules?—They imposed that they should do a certain amount of work before leaving the house in the morning.

4026. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Are there any able-bodied inmates in the house?—There are two men and four women; there is one of the men who is a lunatic, so, practically, there is only one.

4027. How many could the house accommodate in addition to what you have?—The accommodation is 592 under the old conditions.

4028. That would be cut down very largely now, perhaps to nearly half the number, on account of the space that is considered desirable?—It would be reduced; a half would be rather a big estimate.

4029. Do you think Stranorlar would be a central point?—Yes. And in recent years we are trying to bring it up to the standard, and the vacant portion is perfectly in repair. We are at present spending £140 in sewerage improvements; on the introduction of water-closets it was necessary to provide new sewerage.

4030. The Guardians make no objection to provide these necessary things?—No; they are in favour of bringing the house up to as modern a standard as possible. There is one thing I would like to add: the farm at Stranorlar Workhouse is a source of great revenue; I hand in the auditor's statement for the last half-year.

4031. CHAIRMAN.—Have you the farm account?—I have not the farm account with me. For the last six years the average profit on the farm is £169 11s. 9d.

4032. If you had the farm account I would ask you a few questions on it. You charge labour against the farm account?—Yes.

4033. What do you charge for labour?—Nothing for the inmates.

4034. So that the inmates give their work for nothing and that does not go into the account as an outgoing?—It does not.

4035. Then as regards what you produce on the farm—milk and potatoes—how much do you sell the milk for to the Guardians?—3d. a quart.

4036. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—What is the contract price?—At present I am paying 3d. a quart in Stranorlar.

4037. CHAIRMAN.—How much do you charge for potatoes?—The potatoes are at the current price of the market.

4038. I am afraid these farm accounts don't impress me very much; I have had a good deal of experience of them; I am never impressed with farm accounts until I have examined them?—It is at the current price, and we think the milk is very good value.

4039. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—How many cows have you got?—Four at present.

4040. Do they furnish a sufficient supply?—They do.

Mr. THOMAS MAGUIRE, J.P., examined.

4041. Mr. Boyle.—Are you a member of the Stranorlar Board of Guardians?—Yes.

4042. You are also a member of the County Council for the Stranorlar district and a member of the asylum committee, and of the County Infirmary?—Yes.

4043. You have sent forward replies to the Commission, but in addition to that have you any evidence to offer. Are you in favour of a decrease in the workhouses in Donegal?—I am, on account of the decrease in the population.

4044. I believe since 1841 the population of the county has decreased by 123,000 odd?—Yes.

4045. In connection with the question of amalgamation, you are in favour of the amalgamation of some of the workhouses?—I am.

4046. As to the individual workhouses, would you express an opinion?—I would not; I think it is for the Commission.

4047. CHAIRMAN.—Would you go so far as to say whether in your opinion Stranorlar should be kept on?—The Guardians are unanimous that Stranorlar should be retained, and have passed a resolution to that effect; that is my own opinion too.

4048. Mr. Boyle.—Why is it your opinion?—It is the centre of the county, and connected in every way with railway communication; they have the railway to Strabane, Dungannon, and Killybegs, and in a short time we will have one to Ballyshannon and Glenties.

4049. CHAIRMAN.—There is none projected to Letterkenny yet?—A guarantee has passed the County Council for a railway from Strabane to Omagh and then to Letterkenny.

4050. But not direct to Stranorlar?—No.

4051. Mr. Boyle.—How far in the Letterkenny direction does the Stranorlar Union extend?—It goes within four miles of Letterkenny, and some parts less, at Magua McFadden's.

4052. I suppose in your opinion the management and equipment of this institution and its geographical situation should be an important element for the consideration of this Commission?—I consider so; I think the Stranorlar Guardians have spared nothing in the way of making the place comfortable for the poor.

4053. Since 1869 how much have they expended on improvements in the place?—£225.

4054. And I believe that Strabane No. 2 adjoins Stranorlar?—It does; they have removed all the beds from the infirmary and got four beds and mattresses.

4055. They will see that when they go there. I believe Strabane No. 2 adjoins Stranorlar; within how many miles is the nearest portion?—Two and a half or three miles from Stranorlar workhouse.

4056. How much is the population of Strabane No. 2, am I right in saying it is 10,463?—Yes; and the valuation £42,750.

4057. How much is the population of Stranorlar Union altogether?—43,792.

4058. How much is the valuation of that union?—£31,000.

4059. How much does the fever hospital in Letterkenny get from the county?—From the county-at-large £114 a year, and there is one at Ramoth that receives 25s.

4060. Would you be in favour of that going elsewhere?—I would be in favour of them being sent somewhere else; in the good old days they were planted one near the Letterkenny workhouse and the other three miles from Milford.

4061. CHAIRMAN.—They were built before the workhouse?—I have been fighting in the County Council to have those removed to some other parts of the county.

4062. Mr. Boyle.—As far as railway facilities are concerned Stranorlar is the most central part?—It is the most central part of the county.

4063. Is it not the headquarters of the light railway system?—It is.

4064. CHAIRMAN.—I think Letterkenny would have a somewhat different view to that?—No; I think, sir, at the time the system was built it was only carried by one line.

Oct. 14, 1903.

Mr. George McLaughlin.

Mr. Thomas Maguire.

Oct. 14, 1893.
 ———
 Mr. Tugue
 Magee.

4065. Mr. Boyle.—How much is the area of Strabane Union; is it 190,093 acres?—Yes, the whole union; Stranorlar is 121,151 acres, and there are six congested districts in Stranorlar Union and five non-congested.

4066. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—You are a member of the Donagall County Council?—Yes.

4067. Did the question of the amalgamation of workhouses come up before that body?—It did.

4068. What decision did they arrive at?—It was considered four would be sufficient, but it was a very small meeting.

4069. It was not summoned on notice?—It was summoned to answer the queries and something about the boundary question, but the claim of Stranorlar is interlocked with the boundary question, because we consider those portions of the union going into Strabane should go to Stranorlar; it should be county government.

4070. That is the claim of Stranorlar Union?—Yes.

4071. Is that the claim of the County Council?—That is the claim of the County Council, and they have passed several resolutions to that effect.

4072. CHAIRMAN.—They are quite willing to give up the Leitrim and Fermanagh portions of Ballyshannon?—They are.

4073. Because the question came up yesterday as regards the boundaries in another portion of the county, and we did not have the benefit of the opinion of the County Council of Donagall on the subject?—I must say that was not brought before the Council, but I know the opinion of the members, and they still think it should be county government. The chairman is here. They passed resolutions several times on the boundary question.

4074. Mr. Boyle.—Do you think the situation of Stranorlar is such that it could give accommodation to that portion of Donagall included at present in Strabane No. 2?—I do. There are about fifty inmates from Strabane No. 2 in Strabane Workhouse, and if you look at to-day's paper you will see the doctor's report on the congestion of the infirmary in Strabane; they have not room for them there. That congestion we can relieve without any expense, while they must spend £1,000 in Strabane in building an infirmary, and they must get officers and assistants to carry this on, while we have everything ready for them to come into.

4075. CHAIRMAN.—And welcome?—And welcome, and without any expense; we have an infirmary that can accommodate all that is in both unions, and well equipped; we have two nursing sisters.

4076. If you get Strabane No. 2 you would not be able to absorb Donagall as well?—I did not put forward anything about absorbing any union.

4077. You don't think that would be too big a mouthful with the other?—I think if we get Strabane No. 2 we would be pretty well off; we think we have a claim on Strabane No. 2 because for historical purposes it always comes to Stranorlar.

4078. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—You think the getting over of that portion of Donagall that is at present in Strabane Union would be a help to the ratepayers in the existing union of Stranorlar?—It would, and it would be no loss to the ratepayers going into Strabane, because our rates for five years are lower than Strabane; we have sixty-five or sixty-six in the house at present, and giving us these fifty we would have only 115; we could accommodate those well without any extension of premises.

4079. In regard to the tramp question, have you any trouble?—We have very little trouble; we make them do work up to the amount that they cut us nearly; we make them break stones, and don't let them out until they do that work; sometimes I myself have sent some of them further off if they are in any way troublesome.

Mr. Boyle.—If you please, Mr. Chairman, I have only a few words to say with regard to the amalgamation of workhouses, in so far as the workhouses of the County Donagall are concerned, but Stranorlar as at present under this Commission is labouring, and must labour, under a disadvantage, for the recent boundary inquiry that was held by you on the 15th and 16th of August must inevitably affect Stranorlar. I am not going to put forward any personal view of mine, I only put forward the view of the Stranorlar Union. We do not say that another union should cease to exist; we say that is essentially a question for the Commission, because they are an unbiased Commission as any Commission could possibly be; no member of this Commission is from the County Donagall, and if I produced 500 witnesses from Stranorlar to say that Stranorlar should be maintained, or there were 500 witnesses from Donagall to say that Donagall should be maintained, the Commission would still consider the question as a whole. But in so far as the amalgamation of Strabane No. 2 with Stranorlar is concerned I would humbly submit that is the only way to deal fairly with Stranorlar. You have heard the figures, you have heard that Strabane No. 2 in the County Donagall with a population of nearly 10,000 has a valuation of over £42,000, a valuation in excess of an existing union in the County Donagall, the union of Stranorlar, which has only a valuation of £31,000 odd; that is a fact that is before you, and it is one of the most important facts to be dealt with by the Commission, which has to decide on the amalgamation of unions without fear, favour, or affection, and with due regard to the economic administration of the Poor Laws for the poor and only for the poor.

2½: Sitting terminated.

TWELFTH PUBLIC SITTING—WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 28TH, 1903.

Oct. 28, 1903.

At the Courthouse, Omagh.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. CONY BIGGERS.

Mr. John Muldoon, B.L. (instructed by Mr. F. J. O'Connor, solicitor), appeared for the Omagh Rural District Council.

CHAIRMAN.—Gentlemen, I suppose the object of our inquiry to-day is understood to be the question of how far, if at all, the administration of the Poor Law can be improved in the County Tyrone. Is there any appearance here for the County Council, any professional appearance? You appear, I suppose, Mr. Montgomery as one of the County Council?

Mr. Montgomery.—I was deputed to give evidence for the County Council; the County Council did not employ a professional man.

CHAIRMAN.—We generally take the County Council evidence first.

Mr. Montgomery.—I think Mr. Moore is the other witness appointed, and he is upstairs; there is some County Council business going on, and we could relieve each other.

CHAIRMAN.—Then if you would come first.

Mr. H. DE F. MONTGOMERY, D.L., examined.

MR. H. DE F. MONTGOMERY.

4030. CHAIRMAN.—Mr. Montgomery, have the County Council considered definitely whether there ought to be any breaking up of unions in the county; are they in favour of it?—The committee that was appointed and authorised to deal with the point decided that there should be no amalgamation, though they considered that there may possibly be some alteration of boundaries and some readjustment of establishments and drains. I think possibly I had better put in the answers to your queries; they embody the different points that were agreed upon by the committee appointed by the County Council.

4031. That is this printed document?—That is that document.

The committee appointed by Tyrone County Council, with authority to deal with queries from Poor-Law Union Commissioners, met on July 24th, and agreed upon the following general answers to the queries:—

Query 1.—The ratepayers of the remote parts of the smaller unions in the county could not secure adequate representation at such distant centres as Omagh, Strabane, and Dungannon.

The administration of outdoor relief requires to be decentralised rather than further centralised, in order to secure that it should be carried out with due care and adequate local knowledge.

An infirmary for the sick poor and a refuge for destitute aged and infirm is required at a reasonable distance from the remote districts.

As it would not be expedient to reduce the numbers and increase the areas administered by Rural District Councils as road authorities, sanitary authorities, &c., the extra expense of maintaining those councils, as Boards of Guardians for their respective districts, will be inconsiderable.

Query 2.—No union should be dissolved.

Query 3.—The cost of maintenance of unnecessary buildings and an unnecessary staff in the smaller unions could be lessened, and the care of certain classes of paupers improved.

1. By lodging all the homeless lunatics and idiots in the county (or in the two Counties of Tyrone and Fermanagh) in the superfluous space existing in the workhouse of one of the smaller unions.

2. By providing for the mere epileptics in some central, national, or provincial institution.

3. By sending the children to an industrial school, possibly to one established in a disused workhouse.

4. By abolishing lodging accommodation for tramps or "casuals," in all but the three large workhouses in the county.

Query 4.—Provision would be required to adjust financial relations between the smaller unions, to be placed on a more economic basis, and larger unions, relieving them of some of their liabilities as regards the entertainment of tramps, &c.

Some boundaries might advantageously be changed to meet new circumstances arising from the construction of railways and otherwise; also to lessen inequalities between areas.

Unions voting does not work well as regards the administration of out-door relief, medical charities, and sanitary matters.

Dispensary district voting would work better. The people of a dispensary district have some knowledge of the whole of such district, and have common local interests in the same market town, &c., which are not identical with those of other dispensary districts in the same union.

Query 5.—Improvement or enlargement, or both, are required in the infirmaries at Cookstown, Clogher, and Omeagher, which might be facilitated by the changes suggested in the answer to query 3.

Query 5—(a) See answer to query 5.

(b) See answer to query 3.

(c) See answer to query 3.

Query 7.—The district infirmaries should be made available to the surrounding ratepayers and, to some extent, remunerative, by the establishment of paying wards, at rates of pay graduated according to means or valuation, with some discretion to Boards of Guardians in applying the scale.

Query 8.—The number of workhouses at which accommodation for casuals is provided might, with advantage, be reduced to one half, strict measures being taken in the way of cleansing and medical control.

4032. Then the opinion of the County Council committee was that no union should be dissolved?—Yes.

4033. Has that view of the committee come before the County Council at any meeting specially summoned to consider it?—I was abroad at the last County Council meeting, and I am not sure whether it did come before it or not; possibly Mr. Moore will be able to tell you that.

4034. This document is the report of the committee; now would you tell briefly in your own words the views of the committee?—There was a very strong feeling that the unions were so situated that the remote parts of them would not be properly represented at board meetings at the centres of the larger unions.

4035. And if the smaller unions were broken up the ratepayers of such small unions would not be adequately represented at meetings?—Yes. Also that the sick poor could not be adequately dealt with, that the distances would be too great, not, of course, from the parts of the smaller unions nearest to the centre of the large unions, but that the portions of the unions most remote

On 24, 1905.
Mr. H. De P.
Montgomery.

from the centres of the large unions would be altogether too far off for dealing with cases of sickness and the aged and infirm.

4995. Did you consider the question whether it would be economical, if possible, to provide for the sick in such a case by the erection of cottage hospitals?—The idea is that there should be something, either that there should be a cottage hospital in lieu of the present workhouse, or that the workhouse, or some part of the workhouse, as might turn out desirable, should be made into a hospital, or the infirmary improved so that the hospital accommodation should be rather better, and that the unused places should be either used for a more useful purpose in some way or other, either used for infirmary purposes or for some other purpose altogether so as to leave the infirmary as the only thing to keep up in the smaller unions.

4997. Then they mention something about the Rural District Councils, but our function does not include such bodies or such districts at all, of course?—That was merely put in as another reason against the dissolving of the Boards of Guardians of the smaller unions that they would actually exist; the same bodies of men would necessarily go on existing for another purpose, and therefore you would not save much by abolishing them for one purpose when they would go on existing for another.

4998. And you so double the work on the representatives going to distant places for the Poor Law business and transacting the business of the Rural District Council in another place?—Precisely.

4999. Therefore you come to the conclusion that no union should be amalgamated?—There was also another point, we consider that the administration of outdoor relief suffers rather from the centralisation under the present Act, from the substitution of union voting for divisional rating, and if the outdoor relief would be virtually administered over the remote districts of these amalgamated unions it would be administered by people who knew nothing about the applicants; very likely the whole board would know nothing, because the attendance from these remote districts would be so very bad that it would be administered by people who knew nothing about the people concerned.

5000. That is under query 41—it is also mentioned in the answer to query 1.

5001. Then under query 31—That I think we are all agreed about; that the harmless lunatics and idiots should be lodged in some one place, and probably the harmless lunatics and idiots from two counties could very well be put in one place. I think the figures in your last report show that the total number of these lunatics is small in the county; I have not the figure with me.

5002. It is small?—Then, of course, the number of some epileptics is still smaller, and rather points to the view that one asylum for the whole country would be the proper arrangement for them.

5003. It is rather under 400 altogether. About the lunatics, did you consider whether it would be better to provide for the lunatics in an auxiliary asylum, such as a closed workhouse, or by an enlargement of the existing asylums?—We are anxious, of course, if possible, to utilise the present buildings, which at present are larger than are wanted, and, personally, my own first idea was, if it could be possible, to convert Omagh Workhouse, or part of it, into an auxiliary asylum. There it is, and it would be close to the asylum and under the same officers. But it appears in the Omagh Workhouse there are more able-bodied paupers, and it is more required for various purposes than the smaller workhouses, so that it might not be practicable, but whether by adding to the infirmary so as to enable the infirmary at Omagh to serve the purpose of a county infirmary and union infirmary, the body of the workhouse might be possibly vacated and made available for idiots, is a thing I have not been able to go into.

5004. You did not go into the figures whether it would be cheaper to keep all the lunatics in an enlarged asylum or whether it would be cheaper to send them to a distant workhouse?—No; I did not go into the figures.

5005. The capitulation grant would be less if you had an auxiliary asylum?—Yes.

5006. Half?—No I understand.

5007. You would get 2s. instead of 4s. 1s.—Yes. No, I am sorry to say, we did not go into that calculation, but I take it, whichever is the most economical plan we should certainly approve, having been quite agreed that they should all go to some one place.

5008. If you had an auxiliary asylum you would require an extra medical staff and an extra trained supervising staff, whereas if you had your existing asylum increased?—The same staff would go further.

5009. The first paragraph of the answer to query 1 speaks of lessening the cost of the maintenance of unnecessary buildings?—Well, I sent up a more elaborate note of evidence with regard to Clagher, for which I am also deputed to give evidence, and possibly it might be better to take up that in connection with Clagher.

5010. Very well, we will pass over that for the present—I can only give that as an instance; I believe something similar would probably be the case in the other smaller unions.

5011. Then, with regard to the children?—The children are largely boarded out, and the more children are boarded out the more unsuitable in the workhouse for the remaining children as a place of education; therefore we recommend that those children that cannot be boarded out for various reasons should be sent to some sort of an industrial school.

5012. Under Poor Law management, or do you mean an ordinary industrial school? do you mean a Poor Law school as there is at Trim?—I don't think we run into that point; we were merely satisfied that these children should not be left in the workhouse; that would be one thing that would reduce the staff and the number of rooms wanted in these workhouses, and the children would be better in some form of well-conducted school.

5013. Cut away from workhouse associations?—Yes.

5014. Did you consider whether it would be possible to enlarge by legislation the powers of the Guardians so that they might board out a larger number, if not all the children?—I don't think that that was considered, but I have no hesitation in saying I think it would be approved.

5015. Children of women, for instance, who would have two or more illegitimate children?—Yes.

5016. Would you go as far as advocating that such a woman should be deprived of the custody of her children?—That must depend on the merits of the case; I should say in some cases it would be very desirable.

5017. The woman who has had two or three illegitimate children you cannot look on her in the same light as a woman who has had one illegitimate?—No; I think where the merits of the case clearly point to that then should be power to take them away.

5018. And as regards women who come into the workhouse to be confined of the first illegitimate child, would you still keep up the ward in every workhouse for the admission of such persons?—I don't think we went into that; that is a very difficult question I should not like to give an ill-considered answer on.

5019. Of course there are risks of increasing instead of diminishing immoral tendencies by kindly treatment?—As far as I can judge from experience, it would be rather difficult to abolish that refuge altogether.

5020. That ward in the workhouse infirmary. It was suggested to us by some of the witnesses that it might be possible that religious associations or religious communities of various sorts, as they have those refuges, that they, and not the workhouses, should be the people who would take charge of such cases, that those refuges should have a lying-in ward attached, and that the Guardians might pay, as they do now, for patients in extern hospitals; pay so much a head for women going there, and under religious influences it might be hoped that these women would be turned aside from their evil course after their first lapse and not fall again?—That would be probably very desirable where such places are accessible, but in those remote unions here I don't know that there are such places.

5021. I don't know whether you have any nearer than Belfast here?—No; I apprehend that would not meet the case.

5022. Then it would really come to a question whether if a county or two counties combined an institution might not arise which would be willing to take in such cases?—Yes; but then I imagine in many cases the women don't come in until too late to give time for removal for long distances.

5023. My own experience of inspection in workhouses is that you see these poor girls in, unfortunately, for a considerable length of time?—You probably have a much larger experience than I have.

5014. They seem to come in some months before, as soon as their condition makes them ashamed of remaining outside, and when they can no longer remain in a situation.—Then, if that is the case, I think your suggestion would be good.

5015. They would be under good influences for months before their confinement, and the child could be provided for some way.—That is only a suggestion; I think that would be very desirable indeed.

5016. That would remove a class from the workhouse that everyone is anxious to see removed.—Yes, and it would reduce the number of cases it would be necessary to take in very much; there is a practical difficulty about it, unfortunately, and that is that in some of the smaller unions, where we really have no able-bodied people, these unfortunate women are the only people that act as servants to do the work.

5017. That is so, but then it would be cheaper to pay servants.—I think to myself, but it would be a difficulty in the eyes of some Poor Law Guardians.

5018. Hardly, I think, if they considered that the salvation of the woman's future was put in one side of the scale.—Personally, I entirely take your view.

5019. Then, about tramps.—Clearly, the present system is all wrong, but I am sorry to say I have not found time to go into that matter thoroughly, and I should not like to offer an opinion as to the best mode of dealing with them. But with regard to the question of reducing the establishments of these small workhouses, it has occurred to me that whatever is done with tramps it will not be necessary to allow them so many places to sleep at. For instance, in Tyrone if the tramps were only received at one or two, or at the outside three workhouses, it would be enough, and the smaller workhouses might be relieved of having to provide a casual ward, and I suppose there would have to be some little financial arrangement between them and the larger.

5020. I don't think any financial arrangement would be necessary as regards the tramps.—I should hope not. I think if the tramps are put under a proper system there would be no such arrangement necessary.

5021. What would you do at Clogher, supposing you closed the casual ward there, what provision would you have, or would you have any provision at all there for wandering and destitute people?—My impression is that no provision would be necessary; after all, wandering, destitute people can generally get some sort of shelter; it is necessary there should be some sort of public shelter for them perhaps, but I think Enniskillen, Dungannon, and Omagh would be near enough to serve the Clogher district. I understand it is the opinion of the Guardians at Clogher that that is so, that that would not cause any serious hardship. Then we also think that the boundaries might advantageously be changed in some respects owing to the means of communication being entirely changed by the making of new railroads. However I will come back to that when I am dealing with Clogher.

5022. That would affect the attendance of Guardians at board meetings and the removal of able-bodied people, but not the removal of the sick?—To a certain extent it would; you could get a sick person at Glenties on the train to bring the person straight to Clogher, who has now either to be carried all the way across to Dungannon or sent round to Petterson.

5023. You don't have sick people removed by train to any of your workhouses?—I think to a certain extent.

5024. You might have a certain amount of sifting people, but you won't have people who are seriously ill?—Yes; but for the attendance of Guardians it would be a great convenience. Then the general opinion is that union rating does not work well as regards the administration of outdoor relief and medical charities and sanitary matters.

5025. What area would you think better?—The dispensary district has been suggested. I take it that the electoral division is too small an area, though most Guardians I know think that that was much better than union rating, but I believe the electoral division was really taken as a sort of neutral outlet when the thing was first started, and that, of course, is no longer any standard or does not affect the matter at all, but the dispensary district is a district where the people more or less know each other and where the outdoor relief would be controlled by people who know the applicants, and the dispensary district, generally, is a common centre to people having a common interest. Where I have noticed the facts is this, supposing the people of some dispensary district want to build a dispensary house and a doctor's residence that the people of the other districts prevent their doing so, because it is made a union charge, and possibly there might be a little jealousy between the little market towns at the centre of the different dispensary districts, and they always consider that they have no right to pay for things that are only for the benefit of one district. And there are other things that turn up from time to time under the Poor Law as well as under the other Local Government branches in which I think that dispensary district rating would work very much better than union rating.

5026. Would you still keep union rating for indoor relief, establishment charges, salaries of officials, and all that?—I suppose there would be union rating for establishment charges; whether the charge for indoor paupers should be put on the dispensary district I don't know. I think, possibly, it would be better to have both on the same sort of rating so as to prevent people being sent into the house because it is a union charge, instead of giving them outdoor relief when they ought to get it, because it is a district charge. I think that possibly the rating for all the paupers supported should be on the same basis.

5027. Now, query 5 deals with certain contingencies in the event of Cholera, Cholera, and Cholera not being closed?—Yes; that certain parts of the house that are used now for other purposes might be used to improve the infirmaries, or if the building, which is largely unused, could be taken over for some other purpose, with some compensation to the union, that compensation might take the form of something that would build a cottage hospital or so improve the present infirmary as to make it a suitable infirmary. Then I think there is a general feeling that the district infirmaries should be rearranged so that respectable people would not be ashamed to go into them, and they should be made remunerative by arrangements being made that paying patients should go in.

5028. Graduated according to the discretion of the Guardians?—There should be some standard, and the Guardians should have some little discretion to vary it, but probably there ought to be some fixed sum for different classes—different wards—which the Guardians might have a discretion to vary in certain cases.

5029. You are a Governor of the Fermanagh Infirmary?—Yes.

5030. They have some such scale there; it is an absolutely discretionary scale?—Yes; they expect the person recommending the patient to say what he ought to pay, and I don't think that works very well.

5031. It would be merely an indication?—It would be merely an indication, but still it puts a job on the person recommending that is not always very convenient.

5032. The person recommending might mention what the man's circumstances are, that he is in receipt of 10s. or 20s. a week, or whatever it may be, and that he has a family of so many persons?—I think reference might be made to the person recommending, but in practice sometimes there is a case that is quite clearly a case to recommend to the infirmary but in which the person recommending does not know the man's whole circumstances, and has not time at the moment to investigate, and cannot keep his recommendation back while he investigates.

5033. He leaves that blank sheet?—He leaves that blank.

5034. And admission would not be refused?—If there was a standard according to valuation or wages, then the recommender might be referred to.

5035. You could hardly do that; that would be utterly knocked out if a man had a family of twelve children, for instance?—It would, but then you would have a reference. If the man said he could not pay according to the scale he came under because of some reason of this sort that would be a case to refer to the recommender, but you don't want to put more work on the recommender than you can help, and in the normal case the man might go under a scale, and then the recommender might be asked when he said he could not go under that scale for any reason.

5036. Query 7 you say the district infirmary, that is the old hospital or the cottage hospital in its place?—Yes.

5037. By what bodies should they be looked after?—Our idea is they should be put under a proper hospital staff—a head nurse and master—but I suppose they would remain under the management of the Boards of Guardians.

Oct. 28, 1890
Mr. R. De F.
Montgomery.

Oct. 26, 1925.
Mr. H. De F.
Montgomery.

5028. Not under the management of a committee such as is indicated in the Local Government Act, a committee comprised partly of the representatives of the Council and partly of resident in the locality appointed by the Guardians.—That might be a useful arrangement. I don't think we, any of us, went into that. We considered merely that the Guardians should still remain established, and should still remain, in the last resort at any rate, the governing body. I think committees of that sort would be useful for various purposes, because the weekly attendance of Guardians at some of these unions is exceedingly bad, and if there were certain committees appointed that would attend and let the Guardians only have to meet once a month—on the day that they meet as District Commissioners—I think the thing might work a great deal better than it does, but then you would have to find a committee that would attend; sometimes committees attend even more than the whole body.

5029. In the County Tyrone you ought to get such committees—I believe in meet once you could. If you leave the administration of these district hospitals in the hands of Guardians they are associated in the public mind altogether with the administration of the Poor Law, and they come to be looked upon as Poor Law hospitals, especially if parts of the old workhouse; if you got a committee that partly has no connection with the Poor Law it does put it on a somewhat better basis.

5030. It might help to put the thing on a right footing, but I think the Guardians would expect to have a predominant voice—it would be a committee constituted something like the Agricultural and Technical Instruction Committee of the County Council; it would be a committee appointed by the County Council consisting of members of its own body with certain other persons associated.

5031. Dr. Brown.—Would that meet with your approval?—I don't know; it is a question that did not occur to me before.

5032. If you had all the district hospitals in the county administered on the same basis?—You mean it would assimilate the board of management of the district hospitals to that of the county infirmary.

5033. Yes; to some extent it might, and also put all the district hospitals pretty much on the same basis, more uniformity in their administration than if they were separate boards?—Yes.

5034. And it might also to some extent assist in economy?—Yes.

5035. In the way of the nursing staff too, they might be changed perhaps from one place to another and utilized?—Yes; I think that the Guardians would like to maintain their authority independent of any central authority as far as possible, but that would not prevent a certain amount of uniformity and interchange of services being made available.

5036. Mr. MURKIN.—You have had considerable experience of the old Poor Law system, Mr. Montgomery?—Yes.

5037. Many years, I believe?—Well, I have been a Guardian for thirty years, I think.

5038. How does the management of the new system compare with that of the old; I mean from an economical and humanitarian point of view?—I don't see very much difference in my own union.

5039. Then you don't see any reason why the Guardians should not have the authority they at present possess; there is no lack of sympathy for the poor in the present administration?—I think not, more than under the old system; I don't see any difference in that respect.

5040. Do you see any advantage in introducing a non-representative person to do the work that a representative man has been doing up to the present?—If you give them a new work to do—the administration of a hospital that would not be a hospital for paupers only, for whose care they were primarily elected and that there are certain people who might be very proper people to be on a board of that sort, who for various reasons are not members of the Board of Guardians, it might be a great advantage for the conduct of the thing to have those people on. But they would be nominated, I understand, by the Board of Guardians, and not an outside body.

5041. In what way will the advantage come?—I think you will find gentlemen, and ladies, and clergymen, and other people living in the district who are the very people to manage a hospital well, who might very likely not be members of the District Council or Board of Guardians, and I think if the District Councils and Board of Guardians could get their assistance in managing the hospital it would be a great advantage to them.

5042. Would not the present system that the Guardians have as regards children sent at nurse meet?—The system with us has been quite a new system, and it is partly that what I suggest, that is of appointing certain ladies in the district to look after the children, ladies who have no connection with the Board of Guardians. They find the inspection by the relieving officer is rather perfunctory, some other machinery is wanted; I believe the relieving officers do their duty according to their lights, but it is not considered with the idea that are now prevalent with regard to the way children should be looked after that that is sufficient.

5043. Have you many children in your workhouse?—No; I think there are only four or five.

5044. Have you tried the boarding-out system?—Yes; there are a large number boarded out; you have three figures.

5045. CHAIRMAN.—We have those figures?—All the children that can be boarded out are boarded out.

5046. Mr. MURKIN.—You have no difficulty in finding suitable homes for them?—No; the homes that have been found for them hitherto have not always been found suitable. I think under the new arrangement, when we have brought in these outside ladies who will be asked to report on the homes before a child is sent to it, that anything like what has happened in the past won't happen in the future.

5047. What is the customary amount you pay for the boarding out of children?—4s and clothes; there has been an addition made to the clothing lately, and the clothing has also been handed to this outside committee of ladies.

5048. You have had no complaints from any neighbours as to the treatment of these children in the homes that they are sent to?—Not that I remember.

5049. You think that they are fairly well treated?—I think so; as well as the people they are with are able to treat them, and where the children are not as well treated as they should be and as well kept it has been the fault of the Guardians for sending them to people without sufficient inquiry.

5050. I suppose you have no trouble with tramps down in Clapham?—Indeed we have plenty.

5051. I did not think they would ever go down there?—I am afraid we have been too good to them.

5052. Have you any suggestion to make with regard to them; what do you think of adopting the English system of compulsory detention for forty-eight hours?—Something of the kind is badly wanted, but it would be very difficult to do in a small workhouse with a small staff—a dozen side-bodied tramps might be too many for the master and the porter. One of our suggestions is that the tramps should not be taken in at those small workhouses, but at the large workhouse. I conceive some such arrangement as that might be made and carried out.

5053. You say you do not think amalgamation would be suitable in this county?—That is the conclusion we came to.

5054. Suppose, for instance, that a cottage hospital with some accommodation for the sick in those outlying districts, suppose some such institution as that was established, would it remove your objection to doing away with some of the workhouses of the county?—Doing away with workhouses is a different thing from amalgamating unions. In Clapham, for instance, if the whole workhouse could be taken over for an infirmity school or idiot asylum, or something of that sort, at a price, that the ratepayers of the union should get paid for it, at a price that would enable them to build a cottage hospital and board room, then in that case we would be glad to see the workhouse taken away. But that would not be amalgamation. We consider the under all circumstances we should have our Boards of Guardians these to administer outdoor relief, and the cottage hospital should be of such a nature as to accommodate a certain number of aged and infirm people who would not under the present system be actually in the infirmary.

5055. CHAIRMAN.—An almshouse?—Well, something of that kind; we don't think it would work well to remove the whole aged and infirm class to distant workhouses any more than it would the actually sick.

5056. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you not think the present system of having so many establishments is very expen-what I think, as far as I have gone into the figures, I think there is an enormous delusion about that; I think by the time you had worked out your amalgamation you would find you would save little or nothing by it. You would have various disadvantages, which I have pointed out, and I believe the idea of saving by it is largely a delusion.

5067. For instance, if such a number of establishments could be reduced by half there would be a great saving, simply in the matter of coal and light.—That would come in under what we recommend; if we are able to reduce the number of wards we have to warm and light and reduce the number of officers we have to have, that would, I believe, secure all the economy that is possible, and if you went further than that and tried to amalgamate the unions I don't think the economy would be appreciable.

5068. I think what we would like to get at is an idea from a man of your experience and great knowledge of what suggestions you could give as that would direct us to a method of simplifying the present Poor Law system, to give as good treatment at less money?—You don't happen to have the copy of my evidence about Clougher that I sent in, because when I was looking for it I could only find a very uncorrected version of it.

5069. CHAIRMAN.—Here it is.—Can I put this in or run through it.

I think if you take Mr. Mangan's question first. 5070. Mr. MANGAN.—What I would like to know from you, because I know you have great knowledge and good judgment, if you could offer the Commission some suggestion that would help us to improve the system without adding any more cost to the ratepayers.—

CHAIRMAN.—You having expressed an opinion contrary to the breaking up of workhouses or Boards of Guardians?—Yes. Well, in this report, which was not absolutely adopted by the Guardians of Clougher, but it was submitted to them, and they knew that these were my views when they appointed me to give evidence for them. I think I had better state them: Clougher Workhouse was designed to accommodate 500 or 550 able-bodied and aged and infirm paupers, and 80 or 90 children; with an annex for 30 or 40 sick and injured persons, and 16 idiots and harmless lunatics. There are now usually 20 or 25 patients in the infirmary and 10 or 12 in the idiot ward. In the body of the house there are now no able-bodied paupers, except a few women with illegitimate children. There are from 20 to 30 aged and infirm men and women, and from 6 to 16 little children who attend school outside the house. From 8 to 10 lodgers per day are accommodated in the gate house. The body of the house consists of the central buildings and two wings. With regard to these figures I have not thought it necessary to go into them and arrange them; these are what I found on going round the house, roughly speaking. I know that you have all the actual figures at the Queen's House. The south-west wing contains 12 large rooms measuring 30 feet by 18 feet and 12 feet high. Nine of these rooms are occupied by from 12 to 20 aged and infirm men. Nine are vacant. The north-west wing contains 12 similar rooms. Two of these are occupied by from 6 to 12 old and infirm women. One as a day nursery for two or three infants in charge of their mothers, one (perhaps) as a sleeping room for two or three women with infants. Eight are vacant. In the centre of the house the boys' dormitory, capable of accommodating 20 or 40 inmates, is vacant. The boys' school-room, about 45 feet by 30 feet, is used as a day-room for three or four little boys and an infirm pauper attendant. The girls' dormitory (45 feet by 30 feet) is used as a bedroom for two or three little boys and the cook. The girls' school room (30 feet by 30 feet) had been divided by a partition into (1) a school room (now used as a day-room for two or three little girls and a pauper attendant), and (2) a Roman Catholic place of worship. Because we have done away with our workhouse school, we send our children to the National School, which is already a great improvement. The large dining-hall is now unused, a portion has been boarded off and converted into bedrooms for infirm women. The laundry arrangements are unsatisfactory and wasteful of fuel. The kitchen was recently supplied with a patent cooking range, which seems satisfactory. The scattering of small classes of aged and juvenile persons about these vast apartments involves an immense consumption of fuel which produces very little comfort. The upkeep of the workhouse, including staff, fuel, repairs, etc., costs the ratepayers a large sum of money, for which they receive very poor value. So far we are with you, Mr. Mangan.

5071. Mr. MANGAN.—Then let us see how we get the value?—We say the complete abandonment of the workhouse and the amalgamation of Clougher Union with neighbouring unions cannot be recommended, as the geographical position of the Clougher Valley calls for a local infirmary for the sick and injured poor, and for a local asylum for a section of the aged and infirm poor. Many of the latter are now provided for by outdoor relief; there are, however, always a certain number of cases not suitable for outdoor relief, and a system of outdoor relief without the check of the house test has ultimately led, wherever tried, to a very heavy charge on the ratepayers, and other evils. Owing to the distance between most parts of Clougher Union and the centres of the unions with which it would have to be amalgamated, if amalgamation took place, and to the fact that the persons who enjoy the ratepayers' expenditure are busy men, to whom long drives to attend frequent board meetings would be impossible, the result of the amalgamation would be to deprive the ratepayers of effective representation on the boards by which their affairs would be managed. The Clougher Union is small and its resources limited. Three electoral divisions formerly belonging to it were transferred to Monaghan Union in 1892. The facilities of transit afforded by the Clougher Valley Railway make it desirable that the loss of the Monaghan divisions should be made up for by the transfer of the Clonmel electoral division (formerly part of Armagh Union) and the Rellymannan electoral division from Dungannon Union to Clougher Union. The loss to Dungannon Union might be made up by the transfer of a portion of Omagh Union, which is far too large, to Dungannon. In any case, however, some relief from the present improvable expenditure on the maintenance of Clougher Workhouse is urgently called for. The idiots and sane epileptics should be removed to some central institution where they could be better cared for than is possible at Clougher without disproportionate cost. The children should be sent to an industrial school under the provisions of the Pauper Children (Ireland) Act, 1888. That was the only thing that struck us at the time. If there is a better form of school than that so much the better. While it is necessary to provide some local refuge for the sick and injured, and aged and infirm poor of the district, no hardship would be involved in the abolition of the local accommodation for tramp lodgers, who could be sufficiently provided for at Baniskillen, Omagh, and Dungannon, where complete workhouses will probably, in any case, have to be maintained. But when they get there they should certainly be put under some more effective form of discipline, at least those that deserve it, than they are under now. The removal of the above-named classes from Clougher would enable a reduction to be made in the official staff. The offices of master and matron could be abolished and the aged and infirm, the kitchen, the laundry, etc., be placed under the care and control of the nursing staff, who would have the assistance of the porter if one of trouble. The present master who has served the Guardians for thirty years is prepared to retire at any time. The matron, who is an excellent officer, should be given an opportunity of qualifying as head nurse. It would be worth the Guardians while to defray her expenses while qualifying and pay a substitute during the needed time. These changes would, however, render the existing buildings still more out of proportion to the requirements than they now are. The ratepayers being as anxious for some reduction of local taxation as they are for better value for what they pay, would prefer some arrangement by which the main building would be taken off their hands altogether by some central body for conversion into an industrial school, an asylum for harmless lunatics, or for some other suitable purpose, on terms, as to rent or purchase, which would, at the same time, relieve the rates, and defray the expenses of some necessary addition to the accommodation for the sick, injured and infirm, in the portion of the buildings the Guardians wish to retain. Of course these general words I have put in, because as regards the Clougher Guardians they are willing to give over this house for any purpose. It is a healthy district and situation, and would be a suitable one for an asylum for idiotic children, or any other purpose. Then we come to the following improvements. The following improvements are absolutely necessary if the present infirmary is to be permanently retained for the present

Oct 28, 1903.

Mr. H. De P. Montgomery.

Oct. 25, 1908.
 Mr. H. De F.
 Montgomery.

purpose:—1. A new range of ranges, with boiler or boilers, in the kitchen or kitchens. Perhaps I need not go into these details as to what would be necessary in order to make the present infirmary suitable; in fact it is absolutely necessary; it has been put off from time to time in view of possible changes; these are the things the Local Government Inspector has been pressing on us for some time, and some of them we have complied with, but others we have put off in view of some possible changes which would render other arrangements necessary. We want isolated wards for cancer, consumption, skin diseases, and lying-in. There would be a new staircase wanted, because we cannot get had cases upstairs now, and closets, and so on. Should it prove impracticable to get rid of the main building on advantageous terms, the question will arise of making the best use of it, and it will probably be expedient to abandon the present infirmary, idiot wards, &c., and if they cannot be let or sold for any suitable purpose, to dispose of them as building material to be pulled down and carried away; and to re-arrange the main building to accommodate the sick and injured in one wing, the aged and infirm in the other (or in each part of it as will suffice for the purpose), and the nursing staff, surgery, &c., in the centre. In this case the following arrangements would be the most convenient:—South-east wing ground floor. Two front rooms; infirmary for women, private patients (if any), to occupy room next S.E. wall. Two back rooms; infirmary for men, private patients (if any) to occupy room next S.E. wall. First floor—two front rooms: lying-in ward, and ward for skin diseases and cancer (women)—the former next S.E. wall—

5072. CHAIRMAN.—As regards the separation of the sexes?—My first idea was to put the women in one wing and the men in the other, but they would have a great deal too much room on each side, and in consultation with some of the other Guardians, we devised a scheme by which men and women could be put in the same wing, but completely separated, so that officers and nurses would have access to both divisions, but there would be no communication, by the building up of certain doors and, I think, making another staircase. Two back rooms, rooms next S.E. wall, extra ward for men, the other for skin diseases and cancer (men). Second floor—Two front rooms; consumptive ward for women—day-room next S.E. wall. Two back rooms; consumptive ward for men—day-room to be next S.E. wall. Closets and bathrooms to be erected against S.E. wall for each floor—one set for men and one for women. It is a great pity to take up any part of the south-east aspect for that purpose, but to have a place of that sort separately accessible from both sides that is the only place we could put it. Centre of house—Divide boys' schoolroom (used as Protestant chapel) into two. The portion next master's quarters to be retained as chapel; the portion next new waste to be surgery. Divide boys' dormitory (back) into two bedrooms for nurses. Convert front room into sitting room for nurses. Construct small passage between front and back rooms. Convert schoolmaster's room into kitchen for nurses. (Part of these arrangements might be done without, if master's and matron's quarters become available for nursing staff). These arrangements were partly sketched with a view that the master and matron should remain as they are for the present, but the matron, of course, could get the quarters now occupied by the master and matron, and then some of these rooms might be used for other purposes, but the whole infirmary, with more rooms than there are in the present infirmary, would go into one of the end wings without occupying the whole of the wards. All pauper inmates not in the infirmary to be quartered in north-west wing. Two ground floor south-west rooms—aged and infirm women. Two ground floor north-east rooms—aged and infirm men. Second floor—Two rooms (north-west)—day and night nursery for mothers and infants. You suggest that we should get rid of these and that would give us more space. Build up all communications between men's apartments and women's apartments. Give men access to front yard, and women to back. The girls' dormitory may continue to be used as such till children are removed, and the schoolmaster's room and the one west of it as a boys' dormitory. These would then become spare rooms for future use, or store-rooms. Erect an apparatus for heating with hot water or hot air all the apartments in the main building included in above scheme, with connections to unused apartments, so that heating arrangements may be extended to them at any future time. Heating apparatus to be so constructed as to enable heat to be regulated in each apartment separately, and also to supply hot water for washing, and heat for drying room to the laundry, and hot water on each floor and in each apartment of an infirmary, for baths and other purposes. Where open fires are required, registered grates to be substituted for present fireplaces. Such an arrangement would have the advantage of leaving it open to the Guardians at any future time to further improve and enlarge the infirmary accommodation, by converting some of the spare space into paying wards, and making such other arrangements as would render the infirmary available to any ratepayer suffering from any illness or accident requiring more skilled nursing and better medical and surgical appliances than he can get in his own house. As no ratepayer is exempt from risk of serious illness or accident, all would get value for any money in the shape of rates devoted to this purpose, except the small minority who live in another house and can afford private skilled nursing. The fever hospital should, in any case, remain as it is, subject to such improvements as may from time to time be called for. There is a third alternative which would also meet the case, viz.:—That the whole of the present workhouse buildings should be taken off the hands of the Guardians at such terms as would enable them to build a cottage hospital with a boardroom and clerk's office, and at the same time lighten the burden on the rates.

5073. Mr. MURPHY.—From that scheme that you have delineated, which seems to me to have been well thought over, what saving do you estimate would there be to the Clogher Union?—It depends entirely upon what terms we get in the case of the houses being taken over and the present infirmary being improved, or the houses and the present infirmary being taken over and the cottage hospital being built; it would depend on the terms we should get for what we are giving up.

5074. CHAIRMAN.—Including that capital expenditure, what saving would you have annually?—We see the saving of the master and matron's salary and rations; I think we should have to keep a porter, and we should save a great deal of fuel; our present expense in fuel is something like £600 a year; we should save fully half of that, and we should save, I think, on the candles.

5075. Mr. MURPHY.—And the accommodation would be better than it is at present?—And the accommodation would be better than it is at present, and if the rates are taken up of dragging the hospital out of the slough of pauperism, I think it is properly managed, the improvements should pay for themselves, because people are gradually understanding and being told by their doctors that if they want to recover from illness, and so forth, and accidents, that they require a great many things they cannot possibly get in their own houses in the country, and if the kind of bed now was lifted from the workhouse hospital I believe people would come in and pay as a rate that would keep the thing going and pay for most of the improvements.

5076. Have you thought over the question of consumption?—For the present we have recommended that two of the vacant rooms—it is an inconvenient arrangement, but pending some reconstruction of the whole thing we have recommended that two of the vacant rooms in the body of the house on the first floor, with a good aspect, good airy rooms, should be arranged for the consumptive; of course it is inconvenient for the doctor to have them so far from the nurses, and so on, but as a makeshift we have done that. In the sketch of the conversion of the main building I think I pointed out that there would be two rooms quite by themselves upstairs with a good aspect that could be put aside for consumptives.

5077. CHAIRMAN.—The only reduction in establishment charges, in salary and rations, would be the abolition of the office of master and matron; you would still keep on the clerk?—Yes; I think we should have to keep on the clerk.

5078. Mr. MURPHY.—Perhaps have to increase the nursing staff?—We should have to increase the nursing staff, but then again I think the proper management of the hospital should help to pay for that.

5079. CHAIRMAN.—You look for payment from people who come in who could afford to make some payment?—Yes.

5080. Did you at all consider the question of whether aged and infirm persons could be boarded out at whether such a system would lead to a great abuse?—I don't think we considered that; I think that would lead to abuse; I think the aged and infirm who are able to be boarded out are really the same persons who now get outdoor relief, and there are a certain class that are not suitable for outdoor relief, and I think you must have some refuge to bring them into. I don't see what class you could board out whose case you cannot meet by outdoor relief now.

5021. What do you think of a central county institution for the aged and infirm?—With a view of reducing the number of inmates, if you take away the women and the children, and if you also take away the aged and infirm, to a central place you would practically leave nothing to local administration except the hospital.

5022. The hospital and outdoor relief?—I think there are a certain number of aged and infirm people that come in and out of the house that I would not transfer to Omagh or Enniskillen. I think the numbers might be reduced to a certain extent, would be reduced by taking away the epileptics and so on, but I think there could perfectly well be a couple of wards for aged and infirm, with a nurse and a porter to look after them.

5023. What objection now would you see to removing them to the central institution?—I think it is too far for them to go—a certain class of poor creatures.

5024. Say up to twenty miles or twenty-five miles, do you think that would be too far?—I think so; there are old creatures there that are taken in by kind neighbours, and so on, and there are certain seasons of the year when for some reason or other that is not convenient, and they just go into the workhouse for a while, and I think, on the whole, they are cases that I don't think could go twenty miles, and I don't see why we should cart them twenty miles.

5025. Unless there were some great saving?—It would also tend to increase outdoor relief. There is a sort of case that is not quite deserving of outdoor relief, but at the same time you could not say to them: "You must go all the way to Omagh or Enniskillen," but if there is a workhouse near with an aged and infirm ward, we can say: "We won't give you outdoor relief, you must come into the house." But if it was a question between sending them to Omagh or giving outdoor relief there are cases in which outdoor relief would be given where it ought not to be.

5026. You spoke of two electoral divisions in the Unions of Dungannon and Armagh; were they both in the County Tyrone?—They are both situated in the County Tyrone, and both on the Clogher Valley Railway, and the Caledon people in 1846 were very anxious to come to us, but the people in the intervening district would not move in the matter.

5027. Are those the only divisions in that part of the country situated in the County Tyrone that belong to unions outside the county?—One of them was already in Dungannon, and that was the difficulty no doubt, and that intervened between us and one in Armagh Union that would have been transferred to us if it was contiguous, but the difficulty of taking the connecting link from Dungannon and giving it to us prevented the thing being done.

5028. Is your view about these divisions based on the idea of having the county self-contained for all purposes?—Certainly, and we acted on that principle, and we resigned the three divisions formerly belonging to Clogher that are in Monaghan; we acquiesced in their being included in the Monaghan Union, but we combated the time on getting two Tyrone divisions, but we did not get the compensation.

5029. Mr. MONTAGNAN.—You have told us now that you are decidedly of opinion that there should be no amalgamation of unions in this county, but you are of opinion that improvement in the Poor Law administration could be brought about in another way?—Yes.

5030. What is your great objection to amalgamation; is it that you would deprive the locality of the representatives they are entitled to?—That is one of the reasons, and the other reason is that the geographical position of the Clogher Valley calls for a local infirmary for the sick and injured poor, and I believe that may also be said of Castlederg and Cuckstown, and every local asylum for reception of the aged and infirm poor. Many of the latter are now provided for by outdoor relief, but there are always a certain number of cases not suitable for outdoor relief, and a system of outdoor relief without the check of the house test has ultimately led wherever tried to a very heavy charge on the ratepayers and other evils. That there is the representation with regard to the outdoor relief being dealt with by a body of men who know nothing about the district with which they are dealing.

5031. But you are of opinion that without amalgamation considerable economy and improvement could be effected?—Certainly.

5032. And you think it is not through amalgamation this could be done, but in some other way?—Yes.

5033. CHAIRMAN.—There is one matter—you are not sure whether this report was considered by the County Council; might I suggest that the report should be brought before the County Council to see how far they endorse it, and that we should be informed of the result?—Certainly; you could not bring it before them to-day; our next meeting will be in December; I will certainly mention that. At the time the queries were before them it was supposed you were going to sit rather sooner than you actually did sit, and, therefore, they thought the best plan was to appoint a committee in whom they had confidence with authority to deal with the whole thing.

5034. Dr. RYDER.—Are you a member of the asylum committee?—No.

5035. Mr. MONTAGNAN.—He was for a great many years, and knows all about it?—I was a governor for a good many years, but I declined to be put in in the new system, because it is very troublesome for me to attend.

5036. Dr. BRUCE.—You don't know whether the asylum committee took any action with reference to the admission of inmates from the workhouse?—No; the only thing I know was we had a communication from them in Clogher the other day to say that if we sent inmates from the workhouse we should arrange that they should arrive before some hour in the evening.

5037. You did not go into the question of the relative cost of keeping inmates in the two institutions?—No.

5038. Are you a governor of the County Infirmary?—I am a governor, but not on the new governing board.

5039. Are there any restrictions about the admission of patients there?—I don't think there are.

5040. You think any person requiring infirmary treatment could get admission into the County Infirmary from the county?—As far as my experience goes, they can.

5041. Mr. MONTAGNAN.—Has the order for admission not to be obtained from one of the committees or of the governors?—Yes; but there are governors all over the county; I did not mean you to understand that anybody might go in without a recommendation, but there is no restriction; any deserving case can go in.

5042. CHAIRMAN.—The surgeon could admit an urgent case on his own responsibility?—Certainly.

5043. Dr. BRUCE.—Do many cases go from Clogher?—A good many.

5044. You have spoken about consumption, and providing wards in the contemplated new hospital; do you not think a separate institution would be better?—Very likely; that was not put before us.

5045. You don't know if there is much consumption in your district?—I don't know any statistics about it, but I hear of a good deal; we have had very few cases to deal with in the workhouse; we have no case now at the present moment, but I do hear a good deal about it in the country, and I have heard it said that lately there has been more of it.

5046. Do you not think that your not having cases in the workhouse is partly to be attributed to the fact that you have not good arrangements for them in the workhouse?—I think so; I think the doctors recommend the people to sleep out in the fresh air if they possibly can sooner than come into the workhouse.

5047. Mr. MULLEN.—I would like, on behalf of the Omagh Rural Council to ask Mr. Montgomery some questions. For a considerable time you have been chairman of the Clogher Union?—Yes.

5048. And the other member of the committee who answered these queries, Mr. Gunning Moore, is chairman of the Cuckstown Union?—Yes.

5049. I thought I knew your Roman hand. You don't claim for your evidence to-day that you express the views of the County Council of Tyrone?—I do; because they were drawn up at a meeting duly called of the committee of the council; the meeting to which these surveys were submitted had the authority of the County Council to deal with them.

5050. And you claim that the County Council will hereafter endorse the evidence you have given to-day on behalf, say, of the preservation of the Clogher Union?

Oct 26, 1902.

Mr. H. De F. Montgomery.

Mr. WILLIAM GARNER, Chairman, Castlederg Union, examined.

Oct. 21, 1906

Mr. William
Garner's

5138. CHAIRMAN.—Your Board of Guardians had the queries that were issued by our Commission?—Yes.

5139. What was their opinion on the various questions that were asked?—I think I sent you a resume of what evidence I have to give on this matter. We agree in the main with the answers given by the County Council, and, further, I have had a good long experience myself as these Boards of Guardians. I have been a Guardian there now for upwards of forty years, and I am intimately acquainted with Castlederg Union and administration, and I think that amalgamation would not serve us in any way, for this reason: first, we could have no representation, as hardly any Guardian would attend at Scrabane or Omagh.

5140. Mr. MURKIN.—You think one or other of these towns would be the natural place to go to?—That would be the natural place that the union, supposing it was likely to be amalgamated, would go to. There is a portion which lies in the immediate neighbourhood of Scrabane—not in the immediate neighbourhood, but contiguous to Scrabane—and there is another portion of it that might be amalgamated with Omagh in the case of amalgamation—that is the Drumcree district, within seven or eight miles from Omagh and seven or eight from Castlederg. Then we have another mountainous part that I don't know where it could be taken to, it is so far from either of these places, and the Guardians were quite unanimous in thinking that we might make some economy—in fact I was pleased with Mr. Montgomery's evidence. I think Castlederg comes nearly in the same category as Clough, we have but a very small number of people in it, principally old people, who come in here, in fact to die—come in for one portion of the year and perhaps go out again. We have no outdoor relief in the union. We have a splendid fever hospital, and for more than two years have not had a single case, and we have been thinking if we could get that improved for a cottage hospital.

5141. You were going to turn that into an infirmary?—Yes; the infirmary we have is not a good one; in any case we look upon it that we could not do without a local infirmary, and this fever hospital would make an excellent infirmary.

5142. Would you want the rest of the workhouse if you had the fever hospital done up as an infirmary?—If we keep the workhouse open as a place for administering relief we would want a portion of the workhouse.

5143. The fever hospital would not be big enough for all the inmates you have?—It would be quite big enough for the whole of them.

5144. So you could do without the workhouse?—I believe we could do without the workhouse at all, but at the same time there would be some requisite accommodation required for a kitchen and some cooking apparatus and outbuildings. The workhouse is mainly used by worn-out and infirm people from the district who come in there to die, and it would be inhuman to send them such long distances to crowded hospitals. In reference to query 3, what I have been saying would meet them; that is the change of the fever hospital to a district hospital, and besides that we mean to have one or two or three paying wards in it. We have no outdoor relief, nor, as a rule, do we appear of it except in extreme cases temporarily, and on the certificate of the doctor.

5145. To the effect that the person cannot be removed?—Quite so; we don't give any regular outdoor relief; we never did, except in extreme cases. I never remember it in my forty years' experience, except in a case of cancer that we gave 2s. a week for a very short time.

5146. Mr. MURKIN.—Have applications not been made to you for outdoor relief?—Well, there were some applications made, but the Guardians were all opposed to it, then in under the old regime, but since the new rules came in we have had no application at all for outdoor relief.

5147. Do you not think that such a rigid rule works some hardship in the locality; do you not think it might occur that some person would suddenly become without means and have no option but to come to the workhouse or die?—I have never been acquainted with any such case, and I have spent my lifetime in the country. And this way of giving outdoor relief is open to such abuse that really there are hardly any persons who would require relief but are accommodated by either their friends or neighbours, or otherwise if they are able to be removed to the workhouse they come in here.

5148. Have you many agricultural labourers in the union?—There are in the agricultural parts of it; in the mountainous parts there are not many.

5149. Suppose the head of the family was stricken with illness and the wife could not make any provision for the children, how is that man to provide for the family?—That might be a case for application, but we have never had any of those applications.

5150. I suppose you have some rule on the book that would not allow you to entertain it?—No; there is no hard and fast rule, only it was always a custom with that Board of Guardians since I became a member that there was no outdoor relief given except in extreme cases.

5151. Have there been any extreme cases lately?—No, not that I am aware of; I don't remember any, and I attend as regularly as any other member.

5152. CHAIRMAN.—At all events you have not paid a penny for outdoor relief since 1899?—We have not paid any relief since 1899, when it came under the new system.

5153. Mr. MURKIN.—Does it not occur to you that, for instance in the case of a man stricken with illness, it would be a proper thing to give that man some little help until he would get well?—It might be.

5154. And not compel him to go into the workhouse?—It might.

5155. Do you not think it would be economical?—It might be.

5156. Do you not think that by coming into the workhouse it takes away from a man that horror of the institution; he thinks it is not so bad a place after all, and he may come back again?—It occurs to me that there are a good many people would take outdoor relief if they got it and spend the money in drink.

5157. Well, not many will get it from the Castlederg Board of Guardians. What is the reason you disapprove of the amalgamation of workhouses when you are so economical in your tendencies otherwise?—I am not so much opposed to amalgamation, only for this reason that we would have no representation if we were amalgamated with either Scrabane or Omagh; the Guardians there are perhaps more liberal-minded than we are, and they would help on outdoor relief, because we would have no person there to represent us. We have never had a very high rate in our union; it never amounted to more than 1s. in the £1 on the valuation.

5158. Perhaps you had not many very poor in your union; perhaps they are all fairly well-circumstanced?—There are a great deal of poor farmers, but they are nearly all farmers—the great bulk of them—at least their hold land.

5159. Do you not think now if there was some institution there for the accommodation of the sick that it would be a feasible thing to confine to two or three workhouses in the county all the infirm and destitute?—It might be, but it would take wider bounds than mine to form out a plan to do this.

5160. You know the upkeep of the establishment is very costly?—It is; the fuel, if nothing else.

5161. And suppose some institution based on a more modest system was established, do you not think that you would give that a fair consideration if it could be shown to you that it would be a benefit to the locality, put no more rates on you and give better treatment to the sick?—I don't see that it would give any better treatment to them, when they would have to be removed in teams for great distances; these people are a homely, kindly people, and the greater part provide for their own poor, with the exception of some poor old men or women that their children have all scattered away from them, and they have no shelter to live in; the main thing that brings them into the workhouse with us is want of a shelter, want of a house, but there are no persons that I am acquainted with that are so necessitous that they require relief if they have a shelter and a bit of land and children to look after them.

5162. Do you not think it is very costly to have a doctor to look after thirty or forty people that you have there?

CHAIRMAN.—He is the dispensary doctor?—He is the doctor for the district as well.

5163. Mr. MURKIN.—But he has a salary for the workhouse?—Certainly; he gets £50 a year for the workhouse.

5164. Do you know the cost of the coal there by the year?—I do; it is about £120.

Oct. 26, 1902.
Mr. William
Gamble.

5155. Are there not other economies in that direction that might be effected?—I am not aware of any, only the expense of keeping up such a large house that is unoccupied; we have to pay for painting and repairs to the windows and doors and ceilings that get out of order, and the Inspector calls our attention to these, and we have to spend money on them.

5156. You have to have a matron, porter, clerk, ambulance driver, and a whole gallery of assistants?—I don't know how we could do without a clerk there; if you have a hospital I think you must have a clerk to look after the expenses.

5157. But he might have other occupations than that; you did not think over the question in that light?—No; I did not look at it in that way further than what I have stated that I believe that from the experience we have had and what I have heard about the amalgamation of Gortin that it never reduced the rates in Gortin.

5158. CHAIRMAN.—You say you have rarely a case of boarding out?—No; we don't approve of boarding out; we have sometimes boarded out deserted children; invariably we have boarded out deserted children.

5159. You have very few children at all in your workhouse?—There are only three or four; I think there are a few more at present; there is a delicate man with an orphan family of five or six—they came in a week ago.

5160. Mr. MURKHAM.—If you had given that man 3s. or 4s. a week he would have stayed out and kept his children out?—I don't know he came in; he appears to be one of those scheming fellows that has got it into his head that we should keep the children and let him go; he is a kind of preacher.

5161. CHAIRMAN.—Then what would you do with the tramp?—I think we should not admit them at all in the first place; I believe that these tramps are a public nuisance; they should first be sent to the sergeant of police to say whether or not they are a public nuisance, and then if they are strange tramps I would not think so much of them; we are not much troubled with them; we would not have on an average more than one or two in the week. Our workhouse is a little out of the line of tramps; it is not so much in the centre of the county as Strabane or Omagh, and we have only a few previous to the fair days of Castlederg or Drumahaire, and sometimes some of these travelling people demand lodging in the workhouse, but we have so staff there sufficient to manage them—only the master, who is rather a feeble old man, and the porter—and some of these people are too strong for them, and will do nothing for them, and they have to be taken in charge by the police. I would not admit them at all if I possibly could help it.

5172. What is your view about union ratings?—As far as the general relief is concerned we could not complain about union rating. There used to be a good deal of discussion at the board about the admission of a person when it was put on the electoral division; there was always a great discussion about what division they would be put on, but for all the people we have it does not matter very much.

5173. It economises conversation?—I don't, a great deal.

5174. But it has not increased your outdoor relief?—No.

Mr. Felix
Connolly.

5197. CHAIRMAN.—You have heard the evidence of your chairman?—I did, sir.

5198. Is there anything you would wish to add to that, or do you agree with him in his evidence?—Well, to a certain extent. The valuation is £26,526 12s. 6d. The absorption of Castlederg Union in any adjoining union is not desirable either in the interests of the poor or in the interests of the ratepayers; the comfort of the poor, especially of the old and infirm, is greater in a small house like Castlederg than it would likely be in a larger house, where a great many people would be buddled together. As regards Castlederg Workhouse, the poor there have some friends or acquaintances likely to pay them a visit occasionally; this would be quite impossible if these poor were transferred to either Strabane or Omagh; it would be an inconvenience to the old and infirm to have to go to Strabane or Omagh; as it is, parties of the Castlederg Union is about fourteen miles distant from Castlederg Workhouse. Some destitute people take refuge in the workhouse during the winter months and drift back again during the 5175. If Castlederg were broken up and the distinct divisions amalgamated with other unions, do you think any provision would be necessary for the sick locally?—Certainly; we cannot do without a local infirmary then.

5176. You would require some place for treating the sick?—Certainly; in fact they are nearly all sick that are in our workhouse.

5177. Mr. MURKHAM.—The fever hospital would be utilised for a purpose like that?—That is what we are proposing.

5178. Is it in a pretty good state of repair?—It is in a fairly good state of repair to be so long vacant; it has been vacant for a long time; it feels damp, and would require to be re-modelled a little.

5179. CHAIRMAN.—But it is built much more recently than the workhouse?—I believe it was; it was built fifty-one years ago or so.

5180. Mr. MURKHAM.—Then your objection to amalgamation is simply on the ground that you would not have any representation?—No representation.

5181. Mr. MURKHAM.—You think it would be a great hardship to come into Omagh?—I would not think a very great hardship if I had any business to do.

5182. If you had a Board of Guardians to attend would you think it a hardship to come in?—I would not; I would not take £10 and do it.

5183. How do you get here?—When I come I generally drive my own horse.

5184. Have you not a railway and team all the way?—We have, but that takes you round about, and you have to attend the particular hours of this railway and team, and here, coming up to the various different lines, if we come by the railway we would be too late for the opening in the morning, and we had to start at an earlier hour or run the chance of being fined.

5185. Is not the Union of Castlederg, the borders of it, within eight or nine miles of Omagh?—It is within thirteen miles of Omagh.

5186. You give no outdoor relief?—No; we had no applications for it.

5187. How many relieving officers have you?—One.

5188. What are his duties?—To give lines to them who need relief and to admit to the workhouse people with the doctor's recommendations.

5189. To offer the house to all applicants for outdoor relief?—No, I don't know that.

5190. You attend the Board meetings there pretty frequently?—I do.

5191. Within the last seven years did you have an application for outdoor relief at all?—Not that I remember.

5192. It is perfectly well known in the locality that no outdoor relief would be given?—I suppose so.

5193. And then no application comes; don't you think that works hardship in a number of cases?—I don't believe it does.

5194. It saves the rates! Have you built any labourers' cottages in your union?—Not yet.

5195. CHAIRMAN.—Have you heard of any case of alleged hardship to people by your not giving outdoor relief?—No, I have not heard of any.

5196. No allegation that it was cruel on the part of Guardians not to give in a certain particular case?—No.

Mr. FELIX CONNOLLY, Castlederg, examined.

spring and summer to their own neighbourhood, where they get some light employment sufficient to support them part of the year. These would not find their way back so readily to their own neighbourhood if they were in a workhouse at a long distance from their old homes. Very few of the Guardians in the Board of Guardians could attend meetings of the Board of Guardians either in Strabane or Omagh, so the greater part of Castlederg Union would be practically disinterested in the case of amalgamation. It is not evident that the absorption of Castlederg by any other union would in any way lessen the expense to the ratepayers of Castlederg Union. The lodging of tramps in the workhouse is the lot of two evils. What I want to point out, is I agree with Mr. Gamble, it is partly inevitable, that is, I agree with Mr. Gamble, it is partly inevitable, and there are not a great many tramps left. If they are refused they may go into cottages, where they stay, and perhaps set fire to the buildings, as the case may be, and I believe with the few tramps that attend it is the less of the evils. The workhouse is not a suitable place for the bringing up or training of children, then association with the paupers in the body of the house is not conducive to their moral welfare; in opposition to the strict discipline of the teachers or master they invariably mingle with the adult inmates. I would suggest boarding out and education at the primary schools of the country or a central institution for the children of the different unions.

5209. Dr. FUSHER.—Do you know how many children you have?—We had eleven last Friday, but Mr. Gamble states there were five that came in recently, and two others, that their parents are in jail, and, of course, when the parents are liberated they will get out again. Then with reference to outdoor relief, there was some rule before my time—I am four and a half years a member there, and I am on the visiting committee since I was appointed there. They are all small farmers, but there might be an occasional deserving case, but there is some rule that has been severe to giving outdoor relief, and lately, I am afraid, there is another reason that in Parliamentary, it is a very close constituency between the different political parties. I knew an instance myself a year ago of an old man he was not of my own religion or principles politically; he told me he required relief; I told him: "I believe it is impossible; are you aware it may interfere with your vote." "Would it," said he, "then I won't look for it." I believe they go very closely in that respect, although there is practically not any distinction.

5210. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—What about the agricultural labourers who get out of employment, or who, through illness, cannot work?—I know their families get along during that time—I believe they help out with the neighbouring farmers, and the old people perhaps drift into the workhouse.

5211. When a man is ill and not getting any pay, what supports his children?—I am not aware of any case of hardship that I can recall.

5212. You say there is a rule on the book?—Well, at least there is some understanding. I was told always they never gave any Poor Law relief.

5213. And the threat of that terrible rule prevents any Guardian proposing to give relief?—It may have something to do with it.

5214. You made one remark that strikes me as having considerable force, you say if that union was abolished it would interfere in the case of temporary inmates?—Oh, it would.

5215. That is to say you have, of course, in the winter time a larger number of inmates than in the summer time?—There are.

5216. The number fluctuates considerably?—It does.

Mr. RICHARD BERRY, Castlederg, examined.

5217. CHAIRMAN.—You have heard the evidence of your colleagues?—Yes.

5218. Is there any point that you would wish to emphasize?—Yes, sir. There are some respects in which I don't altogether agree with them. I have heard the evidence of Mr. Montgomery, the first witness examined, in reference to Clagher, and to some extent it impressed me as something largely with what my own views would be with reference to Castlederg. It is the unanimous opinion of the Castlederg Guardians that amalgamation is undesirable for several reasons—one is geographical. Castlederg is very remote both from Strabane and Omagh. The town itself is twelve Irish miles from Strabane and fourteen Irish miles from Omagh, and some parts of the union beyond that would be twenty or thirty miles from Omagh or Strabane. Another reason is what you have heard so much about, representation; no Guardian could be got to go from Castlederg to either Strabane or Omagh.

5219. I think we understood all that, but if there is any point of divergence, where do you differ from them?—I think that unions are already too large; they ought to be smaller. I think three or four dispensary districts are large enough to form one union, and, so far as my knowledge of Castlederg Union is concerned, the inmates are composed of three classes—children, infirmity patients who are under the doctor's care, with whom I would include people who are very old, and there are a third class who are there from poverty or destitution, but who are not infirm. I think the children should be boarded out—that would remove No. 1 class—with foster parents. I think that the aged and infirm who are under the doctor's care should be provided for in a 5220. You think if there was a central institution for these people that they would have to stay there summer and winter?—Summer and winter. The general voice is for the union to remain as it is, and some of these people could drift back again in the summer-time to their friends.

5221. So that while some of the inmates only stay perhaps five or six months, by this change to a central institution these people would, you expect, stay as permanent?—Yes.

5222. CHAIRMAN.—Did you ever hear any allegation that paupers suffer owing to outdoor relief not having been given?—No, never; I never did.

5223. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Perhaps these political parties make up for the outdoor relief?—It may be.

5224. Are you good political fighters down there in Castlederg?—I believe so, but I don't know much about it myself. I am separated from politics.

5225. If some system could be devised that would provide for Castlederg suitable accommodation for the sick poor, do you think there would be any hardship in doing away with that institution in order to relieve the ratepayers?—I believe you would get no Guardians to undertake to be elected. I know an instance myself of one electoral unit where the two who were Guardians for the first three years would not at all allow themselves to be re-elected, also we could not get a single one, I mean politically, because politics were very high in the same district; in the same unit we could not get any others; consequently, then, if it was amalgamated with any other union there would be no Guardians, except a few, would attend either Strabane or Omagh.

5226. The difficulty then is rather as regards representation than accommodation for the sick?—Yes.

5227. CHAIRMAN.—Would you be afraid your rates would be increased if you went to Strabane or Omagh?—They are afraid so, because there is talk about Gurin when it was divided between Strabane and Omagh that the rates were higher for years, and it would be the same in Castlederg. They say the clerk would likely be clerk of the District Council, and would have to be retained; then the master. Of course there would be some superintendent; if there was a hospital or some other institution there would have to be some supervision to correspond with the present master of the workhouse.

5228. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—What is the number of inmates in your house now?—There were sixty-one on Friday; the average for each month was 54, 43, 41, 46, 53, 53, 44, 46, 51, 56, 61.

5229. Then the annual average is about fifty?—About fifty; it was built to accommodate up to 200.

5230. You don't see any objection to that?—None whatever. I think it is desirable to have one institution for all who could be transferred without any injury to their health.

5231. People who would be fit to be removed?—Yes; but for the infirm and aged and people dying of old age some sort of cheap institution or infirmary ought to be in every three or four dispensary districts, and that these three or four dispensary districts might form a union.

5232. That would mean increased expense having fresh institutions all over the country?—When I say three or four dispensary districts, Castlederg, for instance, has only three dispensary districts; it forms a union in itself.

5233. There are a great many places that have a great many more?—I am speaking largely from a Castlederg point of view.

5234. Take Omagh, with seven dispensary districts?—Omagh would naturally form—

5235. Two unions?—Even supposing it would, even if it was sufficiently central to bring all the infirm from seven districts, if the distance was not too far.

5236. You don't think additional buildings would be necessary?—No; for instance in Castlederg the fever hospital might form a cottage hospital and the other buildings might be disposed of.

Oct. 28, 1902.

Mr. Felix Connolly.

Mr. Richard Berry,

Oct. 28, 1902.

Mr. Richard
Barke.

5227. In what way?—A school for industrial or technical education, or even disposed of for commercial purposes.

5228. Mr. MURKIN.—Would not that be doing away with the workhouse?—It would not be amalgamation.

5229. Dr. BAKER.—It would be amalgamation for the purposes of your healthy class?—It would be amalgamation to a certain extent.

5230. CHAIRMAN.—Your Guardians would still deal with all the cases and give an order for admission of one of their own people to the central institution?—Yes; and they would still govern the infirmary and outdoor relief.

5231. If you had any; and still govern the children; in fact they would govern everything except the persons who are strong and healthy and who might be maintained in a central institution, such as an infirmary. Have you any views on the subject of outdoor relief?—I believe there are exceptional cases where it might be given, such as have been pointed out by Mr. MURKIN, where the head of the house is ill, but every case should be discussed on its own merits, and I believe to give outdoor relief broadcast would be a very undesirable thing.

5232. You have been a Guardian now for some years?—Three years.

5233. Have you ever heard of any application for outdoor relief being brought up at your board?—No; I have not.

5234. Or have you heard of any case of hardship?—I have never heard an allegation of hardship resulting from outdoor relief not being given; there are a great number of poor, but no subject poverty in the district.

5235. But still are you disposed to think there are some cases?—The case has been pointed out here, for instance, where a labouring man fell ill, and it would be highly desirable.

5236. And yet that application would not come before you?—I am not sure that any such case did occur, but if it did I would be in favour of giving it.

Mr. J. B. GUN-
NING-MOORE.

Mr. J. B. GUNNING-MOORE, B.L.,

5244. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the committee of the County Council with Mr. Montgomery who furnished this report?—Well, I believe I was named on that committee, but I was not present when it was drawn up.

5245. You were not an acting member of it?—My Board of Guardians considered that report, and here, in the main, adopted it as the opinion of the board at Cockerstown. I was present when that was considered. It practically comes to the same thing.

5246. Apart from Cockerstown, is there anything you wish to add to the report of the committee of the County Council?—I have put in a paragraph—I do not know whether you have got the report of the Cockerstown committee. There are just two paragraphs at the end that we were instructed to add that it would be better to lodge harmless lunatics and idiots in Ouzagh, say in the workhouse or County Gaol.

5247. In the workhouse or gaol?—Yes. We thought they should be under the superintendence of the asylum authorities, and the board preferred a return to divisional rating, but in default of that we preferred dispensary district rating. We thought the union rating created more expense.

5248. Was that for all kinds of expenditure you preferred that rating?—That was for the absolute relief of the poor.

5249. For indoor as well as outdoor?—Yes; I think so. I do not think it is really so much with regard to indoor as outdoor; more with regard to outdoor. Outdoor relief has considerably increased with us since the union rating has come into effect, and somehow we do not appear to be able to check it, and yet we feel—there is a prevalent feeling—that it is unduly increasing.

5250. You did not nominate a committee to visit Cuckleding or such places?—No. I heard some of the Cuckleding evidence. About twenty-five years ago there was practically no outdoor relief given in our union. When I first joined the board that was the state of affairs. And it has risen up considerably now, and the tendency is to increase it.

5251. There is no hard and fast rule?—Not that I am aware of.

5252. If there were such a rule you are aware it would be illegal?—I am not aware it exists.

Mr. MURKIN.—The Guardians think any rule is binding until it is rescinded.

CHAIRMAN.—That would be utterly illegal as far as Mr. MURKIN is concerned.

Mr. MURKIN.—It is well there is an authoritative amendment on that point, for some of us Guardians in Ouzagh try to keep the rules very strict.

CHAIRMAN.—That would be a resolution not to carry out the provisions of an Act of Parliament.

5253. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you think that changes of a beneficial character could be made without amalgamation?—I think the unions might be maintained, and, if not reduced in size, at least not made larger, but there are changes that could be made for the benefit of the poor that would not disturb the present arrangements as regards representation. I think a central institution where people could be transferred without detriment to themselves might be maintained as a county institution, but that the unions should be preserved intact for their own aged infirm, and a hospital to which local people could go and even pay.

5254. There would be room for such people in the fever hospital?—I think so.

5255. CHAIRMAN.—You have not accommodation for pay wards there at present?—I think it could be made large enough if it were taken for that purpose.

5256. Mr. MURKIN.—You think this view you have given us here to-day are shared by many of your colleagues?—I am not aware of that; I know they are unanimously agreed upon not desiring amalgamation, but really that is the only question; they have not considered any alternative scheme; these are ideas that have occurred to myself without consultation with my colleagues.

5257. Do you think the people in Cuckleding, as long as their institution would be preserved under whatever name might be selected, would be satisfied provided it did beneficial work?—Provided they were not required to go outside to represent the union at a distance like Ouzagh or Strabane.

Chairman, Cockerstown Union, examined.

5251. What is the test for giving outdoor relief? There are certain classes only to whom it can be given, and what is your test?—When the relieving officer reports them destitute, that they require relief, and when they decline to go into the house.

5252. Do you satisfy yourself always as to the destitution, or do you think it is a cheritable conviction?—Not as a rule. We take the report, and we have to check the report of the relieving officer.

5253. That the people are destitute?—Yes.

5254. And have you any idea what meaning he attaches to the word "destitute"?—If he finds them without food in the house, and no means of getting it, he calls them destitute.

5255. Without means?—If he finds no food in the house, and can see that they have no means of getting it, he reports them destitute.

5256. That certainly means destitution. And you do not give outdoor relief in the Cockerstown Union as far as you know, unless there is evidence before you that destitution exists?—I do not think we do. Possibly speaking, I have very little to do with the putting on of a case for outdoor relief, but I know Guardians do come and say they are informed by their neighbours that such and such a one is in want of outdoor relief, and ought to get relief.

5257. They are reported to be destitute without food in the house or means of getting it?—The Guardians do not say that; then the case is put in the relieving officer's hands, and he visits them and reports.

5258. What is the average relief you would give, say for two people in the house?—They get from 3s. to 6s.

5259. As much as that?—Oh, yes. It depends very much whether they have any means of getting food and whether the neighbours will help them.

5260. The amount of relief given is not such as would support destitute people; it is supplementary to what they would get from other sources?—Sometimes, not always.

5261. Do you ever give weekly payments large enough to support?—I do not know what you consider large enough; if a person has a house they get half a crown a week sometimes.

5252. Do the people who get 2s. 6d. a week pay their own house rent?—They generally have a house free. There are plenty of cases of freedom.

5253. Are you aware of any case in which the outdoor relief goes to pay the rent of the house?—I am sure there are. We generally ask that question, is there any rent to pay, and the answer is "The landlord is not hard to satisfy" or that the house is free. We have a sort of understanding amongst ourselves that if a person is living alone with no one to look after them we are very shy of giving relief, but if, on the other hand, two persons are living together, say an old man and his wife, we do not want to part them, and we are willing to give in that case.

5254. Is it your opinion that destitution is the real ground on which it is given, or is it in the nature of a charitable addition to their resources?—I have no doubt that occasionally it is in the nature of a charitable donation.

5255. Now we have your paper here, the report of the Cookstown committee. We will take this down as it stands on the notes.

COOKSTOWN UNION.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON AMALGAMATION.

Committee—consisting of Messrs J. B. Gunning Moore, D.L. (in the chair), Robert Howard, J.P., William H. Warrack, William Leeper, J.P., John Davis, John Quin, and James McKee—appointed to consider the question of giving evidence before the Visiting Commission on the question of Amalgamation of Unions and Workhouses, met on 1st August, 1903, and submit following report:—

The Board of Guardians of Cookstown Union having considered the report of the Committee of the Tyrone County Council upon the queries submitted by the Poor Law Reform Commission as follows:—

Query 1.—The ratepayers of the remoter parts of the smaller unions in the county could not secure adequate representation at such distant centres as Omagh, Strabane, and Dungannon.

The administration of outdoor relief requires to be decentralised rather than further centralised, in order to secure that it should be carried out with due care and adequate local knowledge.

An infirmary for the sick poor and a refuge for destitute aged and infirm is required at a reasonable distance from the remoter districts.

As it would not be expedient to reduce the numbers and increase the areas administered by rural district councils as road authorities, sanitary authorities, etc., the extra expense of maintaining those councils, as Boards of Guardians for their respective districts, will be inconsiderable.

Query 2.—No union should be dissolved.

Query 3.—The cost of maintenance of unnecessary buildings and an unnecessary staff in the smaller unions could be lessened, and the care of certain classes of paupers improved.

1. By lodging all the harmless lunatics and idiots in the county (or in the two counties of Tyrone and Fermanagh) in the superfluous space existing in the workhouses of one of the smaller unions.

2. By providing for the poor epileptics in some central, national, or provincial institution.

3. By sending the children to an industrial school, possibly to one established in a dissolved workhouse.

4. By abolishing lodging accommodation for tramps or "casuals," in all but the three larger workhouses in the county.

Query 4.—Provision would be required to adjust financial relations between the smaller unions, to be placed on a more economic basis and larger unions, relieving them of some of their liabilities as regards the maintenance of tramps, etc.

Some boundaries might advantageously be changed to meet new circumstances arising from the construction of railways and otherwise; also to lessen inequalities between areas.

Unions rating does not work well as regards the administration of outdoor relief, medical charities, and sanitary matters.

Dispersary district rating would work better. The people of a dispersary district have some knowledge of the whole of such district, and have common local interests in the same market town, etc., which are not identical with those of other dispersary districts in the same union.

Query 5.—Improvement or enlargement, or both, are required in the infirmaries at Cookstown, Clough, and Castlederg, which might be facilitated by the changes suggested in the answer to query 3.

Query 6.—(a.) See answer to query 5.

(b.) See answer to query 5.

(c.) See answer to query 5.

Query 7.—The district infirmaries should be made available to the surrounding ratepayers, and, to some extent, remunerative, by the establishment of paying wards, at rates of pay graduated according to means or valuation, with some discretion to Boards of Guardians in applying the scale.

Query 8.—The number of workhouses at which accommodation for casuals is provided might, with advantage, be reduced to one half, strict measures being taken in the way of cleansing and medical control.

Casuals therein, except in the following points:—

1. This board considers that it would be better to lodge harmless lunatics and idiots in Omagh, say in the workhouse or gaol there, than in any other place in the county, inasmuch as they might be there put under the charge of the asylum medical officers. (See reply query 3, clause 1.)

2. This board would much prefer a return to divisional rating; but, in default of that being granted, prefer dispersary district to union rating.

Messrs. Gunning-Moore and Leeper are appointed to give evidence on behalf of this board before the Commission.

H. ALFRED MOORE,

Clerk of the Union and Rural District Council.

5256. CHAIRMAN.—Is there anything you wish to call our special attention to? This is practically following the lines of the County Council committee, with the two additions you have pointed out to us.—We have considered more than once, several years ago, the question of amalgamation, and have come to the conclusion that they were against amalgamation. On this recent occasion they fully considered it, and they still are opposed to amalgamation. They always considered that if they were amalgamated at all it probably would be with Dungannon, and we did not think it would be any advantage to us at all.

5257. Your rates are higher than Dungannon?—I do not think the poor rate is.

5258. Taking last year, your rate was 10d. and Dungannon 8d. for Poor Law purposes solely?—They have not considered that we should gain by it. We thought, certainly, that there would be a very small attendance of our people even at as near a place as Dungannon, and it would be practically left in the hands of the local at Dungannon. It would not be local government. As far as we can understand, people attend the boards in their market town on their market days, and if you ask our people to go to Dungannon on a Dungannon market day they would not do it, because they would go to our town on their own market day.

5259. They could not afford the two days?—They could not afford the two days.

5260. Dr. Hume.—It might be on the same day?—They are not.

5261. CHAIRMAN.—If they thought they would get a reduction in their rates do you think they would be willing to let the question of representation slide to a certain extent and attend Dungannon, say only once a month?—I think they would be very sceptical as to getting a reduction of rates if they did not attend.

5262. They think that the attendance keeps it down?—They think they would not be cared for by the Dungannon people.

5263. It would be all the same management, the same union?—They would think that they might keep down the rates at the expense of their people whilst spending it on the Dungannon people. They could do that, or else even if we had it, and the Dungannon people were brought to us we might spend the money on our people.

5264. I do not see how you could do that?—We could give large outdoor relief in our own neighbourhood.

5265. Your outdoor relief is rather higher than theirs?—Yes; it is going up since we had union rating. I have no doubt ours was lower than theirs before. The larger the district the more the rate goes up.

5266. Are most of the people in your workhouse chronic cases?—I do not think many go out and in. There are a few. I think there used to be more than there are now.

Oct. 28, 1895.

Mr. J. B. Cunningham-Moore.

5297. Your figures look as if you had not many going in and out—I do not think there are. As to income, we are somewhat divided.

5298. You have not, however, many of them?—We have about ten a week, I think.

5299. Costing 2s. or 4s. a week?—Yes. My own opinion is that they would avoid Cookstown if Cookstown as a house for tempers was abolished. They are coming round the north side of the lake, and they would push on to Dungannon. However, some of my colleagues do not altogether agree with that.

5300. If the workhouse at Cookstown were closed as a union workhouse, what provision, in your opinion, would be necessary for the sick and aged and infirm?—I think there should certainly be an infirmary for the people who are directly under the doctor's charge.

5301. Ten require hospital treatment for the people at Cookstown?—Oh, yes. The district is large enough for that.

5302. As regards the aged and infirm?—I think it would be a pity to take them too far away from the neighbourhood of their friends.

5303. Do you think that class of people are much visited by their friends in the workhouse?—I cannot give you any information of any value as to that.

5304. We have heard evidence in both directions?—I cannot give you anything of any value upon that point.

5305. We were discussing earlier in the day the question of women going into workhouses to have illegitimate children. Have you some of that class in Cookstown?—Yes; we have lately had two sisters of the same family, and one of them has had two or three children.

5306. Do you think if some arrangement could be made by which girls in that position would go to a religious penitentiary, managed by religious people of the same denomination that the girls themselves belong to, do you think that would be an improvement on the present system—that the girls would go to a penitentiary, say in Omeagh or wherever it would be in the county, or for two or three counties, and the Guardians would pay for their maintenance there at practically the same rate that they would in the workhouse?—I do not think the Guardians would mind that, so far as I can see, but I have my doubts.

5307. Do you think it would tend towards the reclamation of some of those girls. You mentioned that girl who had two or three children, if she were taken with her first baby would there be a better chance of reclaiming her?—I have my doubts. I do not think so.

5308. Even under good religious influence, if she went in at a time that she would certainly be in a position to regret her lapse?—I doubt whether she would go.

5309. If she had no place else to go, if the workhouse was not open to her?—Do you mean she would have to go to Omeagh, fifteen or twenty miles from her own place.

5310. The local body or relieving officer would give her an order for admission to the institution, to the penitentiary instead of to the workhouse. These girls, as a rule, like to go as far away from home as they can. There are a great many workhouses where complaints are made that girls not belonging to the union at all go to the workhouse?—I can only speculate as to what they would do. It is possible that religious influence may have some effect upon her. I suppose it would have more effect than the workhouse. The chances are that it would. It is only a speculation on my part.

5311. She would go into a workhouse some month or two before her confinement, and she would meet with girls who had similarly fallen. That would have a bad influence?—It might.

5312. Perhaps fall in twice. If she goes into a penitentiary she would be guarded, and presumably everything that could be done would be done to influence her towards a better course in future?—Nobody can speculate about those chances.

5313. Would you be hopeful or would you be willing, as a practical man?—I should certainly not in any way oppose any change of the sort. It might be a little more hopeful than the workhouse.

5314. Of course nothing can be done except by some special personal influence that may happen or not, but nothing could be done in the workhouse towards reclamation?—I think, as far as I can see of the class that come into the workhouse for that purpose, all sort of chance is probably gone.

5315. You do not say it is gone when they come in first?—Well, as far as I have seen any of them when brought before the board, I would say it was.

5316. Even with the first?—Yes.

5317. They are not always paraded before the full board?—No. They are sometimes asked to come up when the relieving officer cannot get any information as to the percentage.

5318. It would be wiser to have a small committee to visit them than to have a girl brought before a large number of people?—She never seems a bit shy.

5319. Mr. Cunningham-Moore.—In reply to a question by the Chairman, you said that in some cases the granting of outdoor relief was in the nature of a charitable contribution. What do you mean by that?—I mean we know they were getting something from some other source.

5320. Still you are of opinion that unless they get something from the rates?—I—that they would be in a bad state.

5321. You never give it unless you believe they are in absolute need of it?—No.

5322. And you take every possible precaution to see that the granting of outdoor relief is not abused?—We take the report of our relieving officer. He is a man we trust, and, subject, of course, to the knowledge of the Guardians from the neighbourhood who hear of the individual, and very often know him.

5323. Have you any idea of the amount actually paid in the way of outdoor relief?—I am afraid I have not got the figures with me.

CHAIRMAN.—5324.

Witness.—It has been rising rapidly.

5325. Mr. Cunningham-Moore.—Still you do not think that there is any abuse of the outdoor relief system?—I think there is, in this way—I think it is given to as and so, because the previous case is very nearly the same, and if you give to one you have to give to the other, and probably if it stood alone you would not give it.

5326. Dungannon was compared with Cookstown in the matter of parading rate, and it seems that in Dungannon the rate is one penny or 1d. less than in Cookstown. Might there not be structural alterations or some exceptional improvements being made in Cookstown that would account for that?—I have heard figures with regard to amalgamation gone into, and it was rather the other way, that Dungannon was a little higher than Cookstown. These must be some recent figures.

5327. CHAIRMAN.—I am speaking of figures in the last report of the Local Government Board?—That was perhaps a year later than it was gone into with us.

5328. Not taking an average of years, as we would for this Commission, but as a basis to speak on; apparently last year it was 1d. less?—I think there must be something exceptional; either one outdoor relief has risen or there were some exceptional expenses.

5329. You take the entire expenditure of the Guardians?—I take poor rates—the figure of the poor rate.

5330. I take the expenditure for Poor Law purposes only, which, of course, is quite different to the poor rate?—We were judging by the poor rate.

5331. That enhances a great deal of expenditure with which we have nothing to do with here?—Expenses.

5332. Yes we have nothing to do with that; we simply take into consideration expenditures under the Poor Law—indoor and outdoor relief, and establishment charges.

5333. Mr. Cunningham-Moore.—You think if Cookstown were amalgamated with some other union that the poor of Cookstown would be at a disadvantage?—We think they would not have representation on the other board.

5334. And you think that Dungannon, or wherever would be the union to absorb you that they would have the benefit that yours would not have?—I think that if the district were not represented it would not have the claims of the poor advocated to the same extent as if the representatives of the district were present. It is the natural result. I do not think there is any wish on the part of those present to do wrong to those absent, but as the people any there would be nobody present to speak for them.

5335. Is there much fluctuation in the numbers in the house between summer and winter time?—I do not think there is.

5336. You think they are about a regular number?—I do not think there is much going in and out with us. 5337. Do you not think that if some arrangement was made by taking the destitute poor who are not sick to some central institution and leaving Cookstown as an infirmary that economy could be arrived at by that method?—Well, if it would not increase the outdoor relief I think there might, but I think the danger would be that a person who would be willing to go three or four or five or six miles, if he had the workhouse at his hand, the workhouse that he has known all his life from passing it, and knowing the people who have to do with it, he might not be willing to go to a strange home. The consequence is that you would have to give outdoor relief, and what we find is that when you grant outdoor relief to a single person that person in the course of time becomes incapable of taking care of himself at all, and you have to employ nurses at 2s. to 2s. 6d. per week. We have frequently nurses employed among the poor, three or four at a time, by reason of outdoor relief. That tends very largely to increase our outdoor relief.

Oct. 28, 1902.

Mr. J. H. Gunning-Moore.

5327. You think it might have an opposite effect by taking away the workhouse from Cookstown of increasing the charges?—It would increase the charge by largely increasing the outdoor relief. I think it might. Of course that is only a guess. People may say "I know Cookstown Workhouse, I know the people, I know all about it; why should I go twelve or fifteen miles to a place I know nothing about?"

5328. Do you not think something might be done with the Cookstown Workhouse by lessening its size and the expenditure with regard to fuel and up-keep, and in that way arrive at some economy?—If you have a large house you have to keep two wings for male and female. If you had a smaller house you will have economy, but whether you will get any economy by cutting down a big house I do not know.

5329. It has been suggested by some of the witnesses that the institutions in some unions might be altered. In some of them the fever hospital might be used as an infirmary, and the body of the house sold or used for some other purpose, and in that case economy might be arrived at?—In a course the fever hospital is quite away apart from the workhouse. If you could get rid of any buildings it might be the fever hospital, but then you would be without any place to take infectious cases. That is where the difficulty seems to come in.

5330. You do not want such a large institution as the fever hospital for infectious patients?—It is too big. The fever hospital with us is often standing idle for six months in the year.

5331. Have you any infirmary in the neighbourhood?—We have only the workhouse infirmary.

5332. You have no fever hospital?—No.

5333. Dr. BROWN.—Have you a nurse continually in the fever hospital?—We either have one or are trying to get one.

5334. Is it a permanent appointment?—Yes. The last arrangement we had with the nurse was—she was the nurse in the fever hospital, and she was to give her assistance in the workhouse infirmary when there were no patients in the hospital.

5335. You still tie her to some extent in that way?—I get a return the other day from the clerk of ten years of the patients in the fever hospital. In 1890 there was only one patient in the whole year for eleven days. In 1891 there were three patients, altogether 140 days. In 1892 there was an outbreak of measles in the workhouse. In that year there were thirty-two patients, coming to 930 days. When there was an outbreak of fever along Lough Neagh in 1895 there were forty-eight patients, and their total days amounted to 1,420. One year we had only four patients, another year only six, another year ten, and another year sixteen.

5336. The average cost for each patient must have been very high?—I should think it was.

5337. That was the time you did not utilize the fever nurse for any other purpose?—I think the bargain has only been made with the recent appointment. In the old days they were appointed and left there, and very often they had nothing to do at all, but the recent appointment has been made with a stipulation that she is to assist in the infirmary when not required in the fever hospital.

5338. And when you want an extra nurse you have to requisition her from Belfast or Dublin?—Yes.

5339. And that is at a high rate?—It is a high rate, but it is for a short time only.

5340. At 2s. a week?—Yes, but for a very short time.

5341. If there were more county nurses available would it not have a tendency towards economy?—I suppose the charge would be a little less.

5342. Chargeable to the union, but the county would get whatever was received and pay the nurses' salary.

If they were attached to the county hospital, say in Omeagh, and you could requisition them at a fixed rate, would not that be much cheaper than requisitioning them from Dublin or Belfast?—I think the Local Government Board has prevented us requisitioning them from the county hospitals. They have refused to acknowledge that those nurses are qualified.

Dr. BROWN.—They are not qualified, perhaps, for fever nursing, but where qualified, and where available.

5343. CHAIRMAN.—We are not speaking of the place of training. We are speaking of duly trained nurses in the service of the county. You have six unions in the county. There might be fever in only one of them. At present you keep up six fever nurses when perhaps one would be enough for the whole county, or two would be enough—I think that would be a very good arrangement.

5344. Dr. BROWN.—So that if the county worked their own staff it would tend to economy?—Yes, I think it would.

5345. Mr. MURPHY.—You think that amalgamation is not the way to improve the service, but rather by some other method, such as turning the existing institutions into places for the sick, and improvements of that description?—Yes.

5346. Retaining the existing institutions, cutting away the surplus, anything which is unnecessary, utilizing everything that can be used to the best advantage—I mean to the institutions. For instance in Cookstown your institution is very large?—Yes; the workhouse is a considerable size.

5347. Could that fever hospital not be utilized to meet all the requirements of the locality for the sick or infirm, for the 227, or whatever number you have?—Oh, I think it would save us if we could do without a fever hospital, it would save us having to enlarge the infirmary. Our infirmary is attached to the workhouse, and you might have the two places together. The fever hospital in a distinct building. If you wanted to get rid of the workhouse and infirmary you would put the infirm patients in the fever hospital. What would you do then with the people who are simply there as a house of refuge? You would have to send them away to a distance.

5348. And you do not approve of that?—I do not think that that would work out economically. I think outdoor relief would increase more than you would save in the other way.

5349. But could you not lessen the staff by that method?—If you get rid of the tramps I think you can lessen the staff. If you retain the house only as a hospital and as a refuge for the infirm and old I do not think you would require a master. I think one person, a matron, would be sufficient at the head of that place.

5350. CHAIRMAN.—Or a head nurse?—Yes; if it could be done with one person. That would depend on the members there. I do not think you want a master unless you have a number of men who are likely to be unruly or to give trouble.

5351. Dr. BROWN.—Do you board out your children?—We do not board out any at present. A good many years ago there was a good deal of talk about boarding out, and I think we did have two or three boarded out at one time, but they are now all in the house. We clothe them so as not to distinguish them from the other children and send them out to schools in the town.

5352. Do you not think that boarding out would be an improvement?—I really cannot speak from experience. It depends very much whether the people are anxious to take them. We have rarely had applications to get children out except by friends of their own.

5353. In other unions in the county they board them out?—I do not say anything against it.

5354. And you are working on the same principle to a lesser extent by sending them out to the schools?—We send them out to the schools, no doubt.

5355. How many children are there in Cookstown?—I do not think there are very many. There are certainly not a dozen. This paper that the master furnished me with stated that there were seven boys and, I think, four or five girls.

5356. You have no knowledge whether they grow up and still make the house their home?—I do not think they do. The master says that very few come back, and he has known cases of some of them doing very well indeed.

5357. Do they go back to any other workhouse. You have no knowledge?—No.

5358. The county infirmary, how far is it situated from Cookstown?—It is in Omeagh here.

Oct. 28, 1903.

Mr. J. B. Gosling-Moore,

5349. How many miles is Cockstown by the direct road?—But nobody goes that way now.

5350. But for the sick?—About twenty or twenty-two Irish miles.

5351. Are there many patients who come from Cockstown to the county infirmary?—As far as my own recommendations go I have recommended more in the last year or eighteen months than I did for many years before.

5352. Is that since the new infirmary was built?—Yes.

5353. Better accommodation there?—Yes; I suppose there might be something in that.

5354. If your hospital in Cockstown were made a district hospital, that is a hospital for ordinary outpatients or poor outpatients who might take advantage of it, do you think that would increase its usefulness; would you be inclined to advocate it?—Certainly; a paying ward. We quite agree with that.

5355. Do you think there would be much money received from that source?—I cannot tell. The better class people would be a little shy at first.

5356. But even some of these go into the workhouse at present and pay nothing. If there was such a system of small charges according to their circumstances, do you not think they would be inclined to pay something, even some of those who pay nothing?—I think those who go in free at present are, as a rule, too poor to be asked to pay anything.

5357. You think they are too poor?—I think really they are.

5358. CHAIRMAN.—Would some of the people be depending on a man, say earning 15s. a week, or more?—I do not think there are very many of that sort go into the infirmary.

5359. Are they all absolutely destitute?—Oh, not absolutely destitute. They are people, or connected with people, who are earning from 5s. to 4s. or 10s. a week. There might be occasionally people earning 14s. or 15s. a week, and, of course, if it is the head of the family, the money is gone.

5360. Suppose it is someone depending on the head of the family, that person, if at home, would cost some few pence a week; don't you think it would be fair that even that contribution should be asked, and that the Guardians should have power to require payment at their own discretion if they thought it could be paid without hardship?—There would be no harm giving them the power.

5361. Something like that is done at the Fermanagh Infirmary that works very well. They have got quite a respectable sum in small sums?—When you were asking about the number of people going to the county infirmary it is almost in every case for an operation.

5362. Dr. BOAG.—(Not for any ordinary accident?—No.)

5363. It is too far?—Yes; it is too far.

5364. Therefore you require a hospital in the district?—Yes. A good deal depends on the reputation of the doctor. Our present doctor in the Ouzagh Infirmary has a high reputation.

5365. Of course there are some obscure medical cases that go to it?—Yes; when they try all the doctors round and get no benefit they are glad to come here.

5366. About consumption, you have not taken that into consideration?—We have not many cases; when we last talked about consumption there two or three cases seemed to be about the outside we ever had.

5367. That is in the institution?—Yes.

5368. But are there many cases in the district?—I think there are a good many.

5369. Would not it be a great advantage to have them isolated in the institution?—They go on with their work until they are no longer fit to work, then they come in, and you cannot take hold of them. They do it voluntarily.

5370. If there was an institution where they thought there would be a chance of being cured, would not they be more likely to go into it?—If you told a person who knew they were in decline that there was a chance of cure by going in there very likely they would. The desire for liberty and freedom is very strong with our people.

5371. Not where the prospect is death?—Oh, indeed, yes. Very often they think they get on better where they have their liberty than going into a place where they are shut up.

5372. Have you many lunatics in the workhouse?—Well, we have got rid of a good many lately. We had eight or nine, and got rid of five or six. We sent them to Ouzagh.

5373. They do not refuse any?—They have not refused the latest batch.

5374. Were they sent on the ordinary house farm?—I think so.

5375. Not by a magistrate's order?—The doctor got it done.

5376. So that now you are pretty free?—I think we are pretty free. We have one or two.

5377. It is a saving to the ratepayers in Cockstown?—Well, I do not know.

5378. It is not a saving?—I cannot give you an answer. I am not up enough in the figures. We did it under the advice of the Local Government Board.

5379. CHAIRMAN.—They were influenced by the double consideration of economy, most likely, and benefit to the inmates?—Possibly. It has never been any want of desire on the part of the Guardians to send them there. We have known cases when they could not take them in there.

5380. Dr. BOAG.—And now they are more inclined to take them in?—They always take them in when there is room. Ouzagh is generally filled up. I attended meetings of the Board of Governors and they always talk of more building.

5381. Mr. MURPHY.—Regarding the sanitary system, what do you think of a proposal of that kind; do you think it would be well to establish one in the county, or would it be better to enlarge the lunatic asylum?—I think if you had a spare building I think it would be better to use it as an auxiliary. To have one with a new staff, say in Cockstown, instead of our fever hospital, or in Dunganman, with an absolutely new staff, I think that would be more expensive than an addition to the present asylum.

5382. Considering that the Board of Guardians are beginning to see that there is something to be gained by sending out the epileptics and insane and lunatics to the lunatic asylum, do you not think that something would have to be done in the way of enlarging the existing institutions?—From what I have heard, when I attended the Board of Governors in the asylum, I think something will have to be done by way of enlarging.

5383. In Dunganman and your own union you have gone ahead of all the rest of the county by sending to the lunatic asylum your harmless lunatics; the people in Ouzagh and Strabane and other unions will be following your wise example; so then what is going to be done?—If the present asylum cannot take them in you will either have to build or find an auxiliary, but my opinion is that the auxiliary ought to be somewhere in the neighbourhood of the present one.

5384. Do you not think it would be better to enlarge the existing building, because by that you get a week contribution, whereas if you have an auxiliary asylum you will have only 2s. Did that occur to you?—No.

5385. CHAIRMAN.—Are you under the impression that the cost of maintaining an inmate in the workhouse is very much less than the cost of maintaining an inmate of the lunatic asylum on the rates?—I know there is an impression among the Guardians. It has never had any weight in my own mind as to whether it was 1s. or 2s., more or less, but there is a prevalent belief that it is more in the asylum than it is in the workhouse.

5386. I expect they would find it was a little the other way. In the statistics that are given for Poor Law maintenance you simply put in the cost of food and clothing, some places feed alone. You do not put in all their share of the establishment charges and other expenses that are included in the cost of an inmate in the lunatic asylum, so that if you put in everything that should be added to the workhouse inmate you will have him very near the same as a lunatic asylum inmate, and then you will have the 500 1s. contribution from the Government, bringing down the asylum expenditure very much below the workhouse. The establishment charges go on the same in short cost. What you have only to consider is the absolute cost of maintenance.

5387. In the case of the lunatic asylum they put in everything?—That is not a fair comparison.

5388. In the workhouse they simply take the cost of a man's food and clothing and ignore all the other things; therefore it looks as if a man in the workhouse is kept at a very low figure.

5389. Mr. MURPHY.—Do you think something will shortly have to be done in the way of providing new rooms for the lunatics of the county?—Are you asking me that as a member of the Board of Governors of the asylum.

5390. Yes, as a member of the board. You know the space is already nearly taken up!—That is my impression. It is filling up very rapidly.

5391. In fact there are only ten or fifteen spare beds. Something will have to be done in the asylum if the increase goes on as it has been going on in recent years. From your knowledge of the system in connection with the lunatic asylum which do you think will be better, that is to enlarge the present institution or to use one of the existing institutions provided some workhouse was closed?—I understand you get less grant from the Government. On the other hand you have an existing building almost ready for reception.

5392. CHAIRMAN.—Requiring a very large expenditure!—Then it is cheaper to build an annex and to get an extra grant from the Government. If there is no present building that can be made available as an auxiliary without considerable expense I think it is cheaper to the county to build fresh and to get a larger grant from the Government than to spend a large sum in altering an existing building as an auxiliary and getting a small grant.

5393. Mr. MURKHAM.—That is extend the existing system?—It seems to me to be so.

5394. Mr. Muldoon.—Is your chief objection to be amalgamated with Dungannon the fact of the representation?—The fact that our people would not attend. It would not be local government. You might nearly as well let the whole thing be done from Dublin.

5395. If they would not attend!—And they would not.

5396. Is the attendance of your Guardians good at Cookstown?—Yes; it is very good now.

5397. And from Cookstown to Dungannon you have the rail?—We have.

5398. How far is it?—Fourteen miles by rail.

5399. Do you think if there was such a business as an election of master or doctor at Dungannon that your Guardians could be got to go down?—Yes, for a special purpose for a day.

Major HOWARD, DUNGANNON, examined.

5400. CHAIRMAN.—You have considered the list of queries that were issued by the Commission?—The Council appointed a committee to do so, and we have practically to a great extent adopted the County Council answers with this exception, that we consider in reference to queries 1 and 2 that the workhouses of Dungannon, Omagh, and Strabane are sufficient for the able-bodied paupers of the county, and that the other workhouses could be utilised for district hospitals and for concentrating the treatment of lunatics and imbeciles in one or other of them.

5401. Chiefly for the local sick and also for any other object that could be found feasible?—And for utilizing one of these houses in the county for the sole treatment of, say, imbeciles or harmless lunatics, so that they could be specially treated under experts.

5402. Rather than put them into an asylum?—Rather than put them in. We did not consider it in the way it was put here to-day. Personally I would be in favour of concentrating the whole thing at the Omagh Asylum under one special staff, for at present there is not sufficient speciality given to any one class of patients.

5403. As you have a good asylum you would rather extend it than found a subordinate and inferior institution?—Certainly; the more you concentrate it, provided it would not get too large, the better government and the better treatment you get.

5404. That would be your own opinion, but until you come here you were rather disposed to advocate an auxiliary asylum?—Yes; it was because of concentrating the treatment, no matter where it was, either at the Omagh Asylum or in an auxiliary.

5405. But you yourself, after what you have heard to-day, would prefer having patients treated in the Omagh Asylum?—Yes.

5406. You think the three workhouses—Castlederg, Claghoe, and Cookstown—might be closed as such?—Oh, yes.

5407. You have had the advantage of hearing the views of the Guardians from those places; they are opposed to it?—The great thing that they seem all to be opposed to it for is the question of not having representation or not getting a fair share of the rates under 5408. Is it your evidence that they would be apprehensive that their rates would be raised if they would not attend?—Yes.

5409. Still they are the most economical Guardians in Tyrone after Castlederg?—I do not dispute that.

5410. Have you built any labourers' cottages?—We are in process of building.

5411. But you have not up to this?—We have not.

5412. You yourself have been Chairman of the Guardians for a number of years?—Yes.

5413. And you are a member of the County Council?—Yes; as Chairman of the District Council.

5414. And you come to the meetings of the County Council?—Sometimes; not everyone.

5415. Are you a member of the finance committee of the County Council?—Yes.

5416. And you come to Omagh for that?—Sometimes.

5417. And you are a member of the infirmary board?—Yes.

5418. And you come through Dungannon on all these occasions?—I do.

5419. You, at all events, would have no objection to go there?—I would not go every Thursday or Saturday.

5420. It was determined that monthly meetings were sufficient, and that the business was important, do you think there would be any objection to the Guardians going to Dungannon?—There would. They have to attend the Cookstown District Council, and they do that on the same day. They have it on the market day. To go to Dungannon, they would lose more days from their own labour. One day to Dungannon and another day to Cookstown for the District Council, and attend their markets as well.

5421. How many of the Guardians who attend Omagh have as far to go as your Guardians have to go to Dungannon?—I do not know about their circumstances.

5422. That is, at all events, your chief ground of objection?—It is the chief ground of my board and as an individual.

5423. CHAIRMAN.—Is there any other witness?—Mr. Leeper was to have been here; he is very sorry that he is unable to come.

the present system of union rating. That is the great evil all over, because everybody thinks he has not got a fair share of the rates unless he has got as much relief for his district as he can, because he is paying for one and all.

5424. And he thinks the more he can increase the general expenditure the better for his own locality?—Yes; whereas if it were divisional rating the local Guardians would be responsible for any relief they give, and they would not give relief in cases where they knew it was not necessary, because they would have to answer to their own constituents; now they have nobody to answer to. It is the same way in the rural councils on the roads; there is a maximum amount that can go to them, and, of course, every councillor, myself along with the rest, are all fighting who can get the most money for his own district, and it is a case of "The Devil take the hindmost"; there is no question of keeping it under the maximum; that is one reason why I advocate strongly divisional rating; that used to be the way in the old days; it was the Guardians of the district who regulated the relief.

5425. Then you think it is rather an advantage to the district to be without representatives to increase the expenditures?—There is no other Guardian would interfere with their district if it was a division rating.

5426. You think it would be prudent to go back to the smaller area for charging?—Certainly; because then the Guardians would be more careful and would inquire more particularly, because they would have to answer for it themselves.

5427. The idea of a great many people is that if everybody has to pay a proportional part of a single relief case that they all would be against it; is that your experience?—No; that is not my experience. My experience is more this way—supposing I get relief for a party, perhaps 3s. a week or 2s. 6d. a week, and some other neighbouring Guardian gets 2s., or has got 2s. a week for someone of his, he says, "Oh, you got 2s. 6d., I have as much right to 2s. 6d. as you have," or even it comes to be afterwards, if you get up and object to anything, "Oh, I did not say anything when

On 25, 1903
Mr. J. B. Gussning-Mace,

Oct 26, 1902.

Major
Howard.

you got 2s. 6d.?" That is the way of it; whereas if it was divisional raising the Guardians who had to deal with it would be entirely different.

5438. It looks like a sort of jealousy?—It is jealousy, for fear one district would get more than another, and that is the great reason why that increase of outdoor relief goes on.

5439. It comes to about 2d. in the £ in your union; go on to query 37.—As regards the children, I would go in strongly for establishing an industrial school in the country.

5440. Do you prefer that to boarding out?—Certainly; because I think the children would be made more useful in after life, in this way that they could be educated in technical instruction, and learn trades and be sent out into the world.

5441. Did you ever know of any tradesman who received his instruction in an industrial school?—Oh, yes; that is quite common through England and Scotland.

5442. Trades unions don't object to it?—Oh, no.

5443. That is a recognized way of entering a trade?—Quite; some institutions are practically nearly self-supporting that way; after the boys have been a year or two at cabinet-making or bookbinding.

5444. Do you think the children reared in an institution become as good or better citizens than children who are absorbed into the ordinary home life of the country?—I would say they would become more useful citizens afterwards, because they would be better educated and better skilled.

5445. Would they be better versed in how to get on through the intelligence that comes from rubbing on in the world?—At their time of life I would think they would.

5446. Have you had experience of these children in industrial schools?—I have seen a good deal of them.

5447. Have you found them satisfactory as servants or trades-people; have you known them in any actual capacity?—Yes; I have known them in all these capacities.

5448. You have had, for instance, servants from an industrial school?—Yes; I have.

5449. Did you find them satisfactory?—Yes, very, exceptionally; intelligently trained in every way, civil and obliging always, particularly so. The boarding-out system is certainly—in the present way of doing it—the boarding-out system is certainly the best, because it takes away the stigma that seems to attach to a workhouse.

5450. To the institutions?—To the workhouse. An industrial school, such as would need to be established in connection with a thing of this sort, would not be in the position or in the relation of what one would call a reformatory, such as most industrial schools are.

5451. Or committed by a magistrate's warrant?—No; it would be purely a training school; there would be no stigma attached to it.

5452. Would you propose to educate these children, who are from the destitute classes of the community; would you propose to educate these and put them into a better position than the children of any small ratepayer could hope to get into?—It would eventually come to that. If the thing was properly carried out they would be turned out as tradesmen with trades at their fingers' ends; whether they would rise to anything after that I would always give them the means of doing so, and making better citizens of themselves.

5453. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you think it would be a proper thing to ask the poor ratepayers on the mountain slopes to provide such an education for these waifs that they are not able to give to their own children? I would not just exactly go that far, but the expense would be so greater; the thing can be done at the same cost or without any extra expense. I think at this time of day it is only right people should be pushed forward as far as they can be.

5454. Do you not think it would be better to put these children out to board and let them mingle with the ordinary population, such as they spring from, and grow up with the rural population instead of making them artisans and skilled labourers?—No; I don't think so at all; in the one case you would give them the opportunity of improving their position if they had the ability.

5455. But why should you reserve to them special privileges that you won't give to the children of the ordinary ratepayer?—Oh, well, of course—

5456. Would not that be creating a privilege?—It would not be creating a privilege in this way, that you would be doing with the public funds the best you could at the same cost; as long as it did not mean any extra outlay, that is what I mean.

5457. CHAIRMAN.—But would not the cost be many times as great on maintaining a child in an industrial school as boarding out that child?—I don't think so.

5458. You heard Mr. Montgomery's evidence to-day that the cost of boarding out was 6s. a year and a suit of clothes?—In our case it is nearly 2s.

5459. Say 4s. or 4s. or 4s. or 4s.; you are nowhere near the average of the industrial school?

5460. Mr. MURKIN.—An industrial school would mean, at least, from 23s. to 23s. I think it is not a much as that.

Dr. BROWN.—About 21s.—In the one case, the 4s. is only the cost of very young children.

5461. Mr. MURKIN.—Those people that take the boarded-out children, as far as we have any experience, they won't give them up at all; they don't like to get rid of them; the bigger they grow they more they like them!—But in an industrial institution you would have them up to fifteen or sixteen or seventeen years.

5462. The chances are they would get on the Glengue boat and go over to Scotland and give Scotland the benefit of the teaching we have paid for?—No; there are too many of them already.

5463. CHAIRMAN.—Is there anything else you would like to point out in your evidence that you have not called attention to?—The inmates of the workhouse who have always borne—our board brought up that matter—the inmates of the workhouse who have always borne a good character should be kept separate from those who are more of a criminal character; there should be some provision made for that sort of thing.

5464. Some privilege words?—Some privilege words that they should not be mixed; there are justice I know myself who object to entering the house on account of the unpleasant people they have to mix with.

5465. Dr. BROWN.—Have you any means of spending them in Dugganstown?—Oh, yes.

5466. You have never tried it?—No; that is the unfortunate thing; we have a grand establishment, but can get very few to take the benefit of it; outdoor relief has grown to such an extent with us that we are keeping up a staff and a house for very few inmates; it has become a regular crying out cry.

5467. Mr. MURKIN.—What is the annual expenditure for out-door relief?

CHAIRMAN.—£860.

Witness.—It has increased very largely of recent years.

5468. CHAIRMAN.—1,400 in the house?—Yes.

5469. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you not think that outdoor relief when properly given and where need exists that it is an advantageous method of relief?—It is, but there is just where the difficulty comes in, "properly given"; there are a great lot of people who would be far better in the house—that is, I mean, elderly, infirm old people, who are not fit to look after themselves and refuse to come into the house—they get relief, and the next thing you have to do is to pay a man to look after them, and that is the way a great lot of the relief goes. What I object to in the outdoor relief is a great number of cases in where people are getting 2s. 6d. or 2s. outdoor relief, and they are paying 1s. a week and sometimes 1s. 3d. in rent.

5470. CHAIRMAN.—So that the outdoor relief must be only a contribution, not a maintenance?—It is only a contribution.

5471. It is a charitable contribution not supporting the destitute?—It does not support them. Very often then they fall into such bad health that the amount has to be increased and a nurse put on to attend them; that very often follows. When one gets outdoor relief a great number simply follow suit; they think if one gets it, "I have a right to get it." And one Guardian says, "You got outdoor relief for so and so; I have a much right to get outdoor relief for my district."

5472. Do you know of any cases of outdoor relief in your union in which relief goes into a house when members of the family are earning?—I have often seen that.

5473. And you are aware it is so?—Yes.

5474. Of course such relief is absolutely illegal?—There are many illegal things done in connection with that I am afraid. Of course, if we came to know any of the family was earning—

5475. I am speaking of substantial earnings; I am not speaking of chance pickings up?—Oh, in the case of substantial earnings—

Oct. 28, 1903.

Major
Howard.

5465. You don't know of any person, for instance, earning, we will say, in a mill, substantial earnings and the old people in the same household getting outdoor relief?—I know they get outdoor relief in that way, where perhaps the daughters would be earning 6s. or 7s.

5467. That is the kind of case I mean?—6s. or 7s. a week and perhaps two old people or a family besides, so that they could not possibly exist on it.

5468. Mr. MURKIN.—I don't think that would come within Mr. Miles' description?—No.

5469. Two old people and a family would hardly live on 6s. a week?—Oh, of course, not.

CHAIRMAN.—The question then is whether that is destitution; the law only permits relief to be given where there is destitution.

5470. Mr. MURKIN.—I suppose all precautions are taken to see that there is no abuse of outdoor relief?—We are very particular that way, and have got a very good relieving officer who is very conscientious and particular in making inquiries.

5471. CHAIRMAN.—But still you are not satisfied that it is not going ahead too much?—No; but there is a good deal of that sort of fault of the Guardians themselves and union relief; if it reverted back to divisional rating or dispensary rating it would be much more lenient.

5472. Mr. MURKIN.—But notwithstanding this great increase of outdoor relief, does not your rate compare favourably with the rate before the passing of the Local Government Act when you take into consideration the improvements demanded by the Local Government Board?—We, of course, were always a very up-to-date union; they could not make many improvements with us.

5473. CHAIRMAN.—I think your nursing was improved?—It was increased.

5474. Mr. MURKIN.—That means money. If you take into consideration all the changes that have been made in the dietary scale and improvement of nursing and other little things, do you think that would not raise the rate of 1897 up to what it is to-day?—No; I don't think so.

5475. You are treating the people better now than you used to?—They are said to be treated better, but it is a question.

5476. CHAIRMAN.—You are spending more money?—We are spending more money, but the money is not spent as the paupers; it is spent on the staff and the upkeep.

5477. Dr. BROWN.—Is not that a benefit to the paupers?—It is, but if the matter was concentrated more by amalgamation—if there was more amalgamation and less staff, then there could be more money spent on the paupers—the paupers would get the direct benefit of it; now they do not.

5478. Then you advocate amalgamation?—Oh, certainly.

5479. Mr. MURKIN.—But suppose without amalgamation you could derive economy—that is by changing some of the institutions into infirmaries and hospitals for the sick; allowing the same conditions of things to exist as at present as regards representation?—As long as you could reduce the expenditure on the staff and the upkeep of the large workhouses that are standing practically empty.

5480. Say reducing the staff one-third in some of these existing institutions and getting rid of the upkeep of the large buildings, besides other little economies that could be accomplished, how would that meet your view?—That would be so much towards it; there is so much duplication of staffs throughout the country that could be done away with.

5481. Now, suppose you absorbed Cocktown, would you have room for all the Cocktown people?—Oh, yes; and we could nearly take in Omagh too.

5482. When you got them there would you take care of them; we are very liberal with out-door relief?—I believe we would.

CHAIRMAN.—And is your rate for out-door relief and 2d. their's? £300 and £1,200.

5483. Mr. MURKIN.—We are giving £1,400, so that I am afraid the Omagh people would not like to go down to Dungannon?—If it was not for the Mid-Ulster Artillery in the summer our house would be very lonely.

5484. Mr. Miles.—I think you are stronger on the question of amalgamation than you are on any other Poor Law question?—I am strong on the concentrating of the thing.

5485. Dungannon would be willing to take in Cocktown and portion of Clogher at all events?—Yes.

5486. Leave Omagh out, for that raises other difficulties; have your board considered this question of amalgamation?—Yes.

5487. And passed any resolutions on the subject?—Yes.

5488. And they have been in favour of amalgamation, and leaving an existing unions?—Dungannon, Omagh, and Strahane.

5489. And your board think establishments ought not to be maintained in Castlelog, Clogher, and Cocktown for the number of paupers that are now relieved there?—No; they consider those places should be utilized as district hospitals.

5490. You heard the evidence of Mr. Gunning-Moore, the Chairman of the Cocktown Union; do you think there is any ground for his apprehension that the economical Guardians of Dungannon would impose burdens on Cocktown that they would not be willing to bear or share themselves?—I don't think there is any ground for anything of the kind, and if divisional rating was brought in it would remove all that, for the Dungannon Guardians would not interfere with the Cocktown Guardians; they would let them give their own relief.

5491. I would not press that too strongly, for it would rather bear him out in one aspect of it if the Cocktown Guardians did not go up to Dungannon?—They would not interfere with them.

5492. The representatives of Cocktown could get quite readily to Dungannon?—Oh, quite; it is only seven miles by road.

5493. And I suppose the Guardians at Dungannon have quite as strong a reputation for economy as those at Cocktown?—Quite.

5494. And you have been doing everything there to keep down the rates?—We have, so far.

5495. Have you built any labourers' cottages?—No.

5496. That is upon economic grounds?—Upon economic grounds.

5497. Mr. MURKIN.—Are you aware you could build cottages and bring advantages to the rates by doing so in the present position of the agricultural grant?—I quite understand that; but I may tell you that I don't think we ever were very much pressed to build cottages.

5498. No demand for them?—No demand for them; it is a district in which there is a particularly good supply of other dwellings all around there.

5499. Dr. BROWN.—You would not be averse to relieving the rates of the expense of building a few cottages when they would not cost you much?—Oh, no; there has been really no demand for them.

5500. What provisions have you in Dungannon for consumption?—We have no particular provisions; that is one thing I, personally, would be very strongly in favour of, the isolation of consumptives in a central institution.

5501. Have you thought that out at all?—I have never thought it out, particularly because I did not think there were as many consumptives in the wards of the county as would be sufficient to create a necessity.

5502. Not in the wards, but through the county?—I know it is through the county, and it is greatly on the increase there two or three years; I notice it myself even going through the country.

5503. So that there would be a double benefit in having an institution—the cure or relief of some of the cases, and at the same time preventing the spread of the disease. Has your board set apart any ward in your own infirmary?—No; we have no particular ward; we have only got distemper; that is all.

5504. Apart from isolation, it is not much use?—But it is what the Local Government Board suggest.

5505. The Local Government Board suggested separation and separate wards?—Then the Local Government Board have recommended us to build a smallpox hospital, and we have had two smallpox cases within the last twenty years, but I think consumption a much more pressing thing than anything like that.

CHAIRMAN.—Certainly. We hope to visit Dungannon hospital.

Oct. 28, 1862.

Mr. Isaac Kydd.

5506. CHAIRMAN.—You are a Guardian of the Dispensary Union?—I am.

5507. Are you in favour of amalgamation of some of the unions?—It has been discussed on several occasions before the board, and the board are unanimous that amalgamation in the end would be beneficial to the recipients.

5508. What unions do you think ought to be broken up?—I don't know; I think Clagher and Cookstown, and then I heard the evidence from Castlelog, and I think the witnesses gave very good evidence for a break up.

5509. How did you think the evidence was in favour of a break up?—I think they were not treating the poor fairly; I think they were not very charitable to the poor in giving outdoor relief.

5510. You know, of course, that charity is not one of the virtues that a Guardian is supposed to possess; he might find himself with a surcharge hanging over him if he was too charitable; if the Cookstown Guardians made a good case for not having their workhouse closed, and if they said they had room enough to take in Dungannon, do you think Dungannon ought to be put into Cookstown?—Well, I don't know; I would have no objection for my part, but we have room enough; the Dungannon house was built to accommodate 1,200. There have been questions asked about taking in some of the divisions of Armagh after the Local Government Act, and I never heard any complaints that they were unfairly treated. I think divisional rating would be better than union rating; I think it wrought better under the old system.

5511. Less charity?—Yes. Wherever there is a manufacturing locality, such as Dungannon, there is a good deal more poor there, and, of course, the locality is benefited by it, and there is Coleraine, also a manufacturing locality, and there is more poor in those two divisions than there is in all the rest of the union; there are some divisions that there is no poor from in the house at all, and very little outdoor relief, yet they have to pay their proportion of the rates on Dungannon and Coleraine.

5512. Dungannon is a little lower rated than it used to be, and the country electoral divisions have a higher rate?—Exactly.

5513. You would like to see every division pay its own way?—Exactly.

5514. Did you hear Captain Howard say he thought union-at-large rating made the people more extravagant?—Perhaps it makes the Guardians that they would uppe costs in their own divisions.

5515. So as to get their share?—Yes.

Mr. Peter Clarke.

Gentlemen, the Chairman, Mr. Humphreys, could not attend here to-day; he is a very old man.

CHAIRMAN.—We had the benefit of his evidence.

Witness.—I have one or two observations of my own to make. There is a little departure in my report from what I have been listening to all day. Strabane Workhouse was built to accommodate 250; there is a spacious infirmary, and I have ascertained it is capable—5516. Over-crowded?—Capable of accommodating 100 more.

5517. Is your infirmary not over-crowded?—Sometimes; there are other rooms that could be utilized for an infirmary; there are three with nothing but old beams in them; Mr. Lockley and I went into it; we could put in twenty-six on removing the old head-boards. It is divided into two portions, Strabane No. 1 and Strabane No. 2; the valuation of No. 1 is £70,069, and of No. 2, £48,762.

5518. That is in the County Donegal?—Yes; the total valuation is £118,831. Well, I went into another question with regard to the encumbrances of all the officials, because I would like to be very conscientious if I possibly could. For the first half-year ending March, 1862, it was £294 12s. 6d.; for the second half-year ending September it was £209 5s. 1d., and the total, £503 17s. 7d.; the following year, the first half ending March, 1863, it was £261 12s. 1d., and for the half-year ending September, 1863, it was £235 12s. 9d.

5519. What expenses are you talking of?—Of all the officials connected with the institution.

5520. I think you must have got your figures in some queer way. The amount spent on officials and retainers in Strabane Union for the last recorded year in the report is £1,098 for the year?—Well, Mr. Chairman, I got these from Mr. Sharkey, and I can vouch for all.

5521. He surely gave you more than the salaries and retainers of the officers; you must have the dispendary declared?—Of course I have.

5522. We have as much to do with that as—

With the Polar Star, I suppose.

5523. You have nothing to do with that; you may go on the figures of £1,100, in round numbers, for salaries and retainers; I hope that does not put out your calculations?—It is a knock-out, I admit.

5524. I am afraid I must give you that figure, for it is the real one?—I suppose the books must be him if that is so.

5525. You take a number of things that don't come under the Poor Law Act—the doctors and sanitary officers?—Strabane urban valuation, the total is £33,977 10s. Now I am in favour—this is my own personal report, not the general report—I am in favour of the union being amalgamated; take, for instance, in my own native parish, Gortin, which was dissolved some years ago—

5526. Were you a Guardian?—Oh, no; my cousin was—Charles Clarke.

Mr. Isaac Kydd examined.

Strabane, continued.

5527. It was dissolved in the year 1860?—After the division there were eight divisions attached to Strabane, and I think the other eight were attached to Omagh here. The eight that were sent to Strabane are very maintainable, but I have not heard any complaints.

5528. You have not a thick population at that altitude?—No; even sheep sometimes can scurry with over it. I have not heard any complaints regarding the removal of the sick or infirm to Strabane, notwithstanding that there is no railway communication; the roads are very bad and hilly, and I never heard of a complaint.

5529. Well, it is a very severe test; there are big hills on both sides?—Yes; both sides of the valley.

5530. You are in favour of amalgamation?—By all means.

5531. And the Gortin people are satisfied with the results of the amalgamation?—Yes; and, unfortunately, I could prove that conclusively. I had properly before the dissolution and after the dissolution, and I had the receipts in my pocket this morning. I could not agree with some of the evidence I heard to-day; instead of increasing the rates, if I rightly remember—I was going to leave the receipts before you, a couple of years before the dissolution and a year or two after the dissolution—I think it was something like £1 in the £ of a saving; the taxes were reduced that much.

5532. Although you pensioned the Gortin officers?—Yes, and gave Don £58, and well I know it. I am in favour of union rating and the extension of outdoor relief, although it largely increased since we came into office. Many of the poor could not be induced to go into the workhouse. I have had the case of a labouring man who became insane, having a wife and six children, and no visible means of support; what was to be done if he did not get outdoor relief. With regard to that case, it was a real bone fide case, and, unfortunately it was in my own electoral division, which made the matter far worse. I made application, and indeed some of the Guardians remitted the application, but I had the majority anyway; I got 66 for the poor wages, and told her, of course, afterwards to do the best she could, to work occasionally when she would get work that would suit her; it was just immediately before the setting of the hay, and she worked at hay, and so on, and I did not see her for the last couple of months, but she is getting it anyway, for I was at Strabane yesterday at the board, and knew it. I must explain with regard to union rating, as you are I am in favour of it. We have a number of very poor districts—a great number of them—and there are a number of fat divisions down here, and I was thinking, as charity begins at home, if there were to extend their charitable hand up here it would equalize matters, and that is the reason I would go in for union rating. Am I making myself intelligible.

Oct. 26, 1901.

5533. I think I understand; you are very glad to have the rich land here at Omagh paying a share of the necessary land expenses at Gortin?—Why not; would you not always like to be in partnership with a good firm; I would think so! The number of men, women, and children, menials admitted to the house from 5th September, 1900, to the 24th of August, 1901, which is a share for Strabane, amounted to 1,175 men, 234 women, and 111 children; total, 1,500. I think that is rather a departure from the evidence the last year.

5534. Dr. BOGERS.—Admitted for a single night?—Yes, of course.

5535. CHAIRMAN.—For what period?—6th September, 1902, to 29th August, 1903.

5536. That is for a year; you might have given bigger figures than that, I think!—1,500 is a large proportion.

5537. The collective number of days is 77,730 odd!—That is about nearly the contents of my report.

5538. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—You belong to Strabane No. 1?—Yes.

5539. Do you give much outdoor relief in that union?—Personally, there are three receiving it in my own electoral division, and they were so very kind to them on Tuesday week, they got it off them, but I went out yesterday and got it for them again.

5540. You are in favour of amalgamation, are you?—Sincerely.

5541. You want Strabane amalgamated with Omagh?—If you lessen the rates I will.

5542. You know Strabane is at the extreme end of the County Tyrone—the extremity is not very accessible always!—There are two extremes; two points determine a line.

5543. Do you not think it would be better if there was amalgamation to have the workhouse in some central place?—I think, as far as position is concerned, you could not improve matters very much except that you lessen the rates.

Mr. PATRICK MCCARTHY examined.

5554. CHAIRMAN.—What union do you represent?—Trillick, Irvinestown; there is portion of it in this county.

5555. What is your view?—The view of our council is to remain in Irvinestown.

5556. You don't wish to come into your own county?—No; it would be so very inconvenient for us to bring the sick poor; it would be over twenty miles.

5557. What is your nearest railway station?—Trillick.

5558. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Is Trillick not as convenient to Omagh as to Irvinestown?—It is only four miles to Irvinestown.

5559. By road?—Yes, and it is as convenient by railway.

5560. CHAIRMAN.—How far is the county boundary from Irvinestown?—It goes into the very town—at the very edge of the town; that is the reason it is so much nearer; that is the view of our board, to remain there.

5561. And you prefer not to come to Tyrone?—No; in the interests of the sick poor. They could be brought with the same convenience to Omagh or Enniskillen.

5562. How far would the boundary at Irvinestown be from Omagh by road?—Sixteen miles.

5563. A good road?—There are good roads at Irvinestown; this road is not so good.

5564. Have you better roads there than at Omagh?—Far better; but very bad between this and Omagh.

5565. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—I suppose it was on the ground of access to the institution that you decided to continue at Irvinestown?—Yes; and the nuisance of bringing the sick poor. That is the chief ground; it is not the inconvenience I studied at all.

5566. CHAIRMAN.—The inconvenience would not be so very great for the Guardians, because they could get a train from Trillick?—Yes; but it would be more expensive.

5567. You would go by train almost altogether; the other way you have to drive out, I suppose?—No; we have the train for 6d. backwards and forwards, and it would be 2s. 4d. here.

5568. What is your station for Irvinestown?—Bundoran Junction.

5569. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Was the question considered at a meeting of the Board of Guardians?—Yes, sir.

5544. Are there not some improvements in accommodation at Strabane?—Yes.

5545. CHAIRMAN.—Increasing the infirmary?—Yes; we are. Look at the number of hundreds we have spent in making a new bedroom and in modern appliances and cooking; there is not a day but we are spending money. There is space there for 500; I think they were very foolish in building such a big place at first.

5546. They were over full at first, and had to have buildings outside?—I know we are feeding them that well that there is an increase in the year over last year. The number of inmates is only 230, and there is nearly room for 500.

5547. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—You have plenty of space, and still you are going to build more?—Yes; we would like to get it filled.

5548. CHAIRMAN.—You would not, at all events, propose to give away half of your union to Strabane?—That is not my business; that is a boundary question.

5549. It would be a very important consideration as to whether Strabane should continue or not?—It is very important, because it is up-to-date.

5550. Would you be in favour of not breaking up the union?—I would, certainly.

5551. Or dividing it into two parts?—I could not see it; I am not going into that question. I got Mr. Stewart's map, and he told me he gave it to a gentleman down in Derry.

5552. CHAIRMAN.—It was produced, I think, in the courthouse by Mr. Harey, the barrister?—And who has the custody of it now, please? If I had that map I would say a word or two on it; in the absence of that map I will not go into it, although I have my scale and compass here.

5553. Is there any other Guardian from Strabane here?—No; I think they were afraid to be examined before you; but, however, Mr. Humphreys will be here to-morrow.

5570. Was notice sent to the different Guardians that the question would be considered?—Yes; they got that notice.

5571. And they were all unanimous?—Yes.

5572. CHAIRMAN.—The Tyrone men?—Yes; and the Fermanagh men were unanimous to keep as there.

5573. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—But the Tyrone men were mixed up with the Fermanagh?—Yes; but we have a meeting of our own at the District Council.

5574. CHAIRMAN.—Did you go into the question of rates?—Yes; it would be cheaper to belong to Irvinestown.

5575. Do they give any outdoor relief there?—They do; to anyone the doctor certifies is not able to come into the house they get outdoor relief.

5576. That is not many?—No.

5577. Is that one of the chief reasons why you object, from a money point of view, to come to Omagh?—I would give that objection to Omagh, but it is not my chief; it is the distance and the convenience of the sick poor.

5578. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—What about the destitute that are not sick?—It would be as convenient for them to go to Irvinestown as to come here.

5579. CHAIRMAN.—As regards the convenience of the sick poor, suppose a different arrangement altogether was made to any existing arrangement, suppose that the sick poor of the Trillick rural district could be authorized to send their sick to be treated in the Irvinestown hospital and pay so much a head for them there, and if, at the same time, the Trillick rural district was brought into the Omagh Union, your chief objection would disappear about the sick poor, because they would be treated in the place where you say they ought to be treated; then your objection would be the inconvenience to the Guardians?—No; the inconvenience of bringing the sick poor to Omagh by ambulance would be to be treated.

5580. But supposing the Trillick rural district is brought into Omagh Union and that the sick from the divisions next or near Irvinestown were boarded out, or could be sent to be treated in the infirmary of the Irvinestown Union, and the Guardians of the Omagh Union should pay for them there the average cost of maintenance, would you have the same objection?—I would have the same objection.

Oct. 23, 1902.

Mr. Patrick
McCauley.

5581. What would your objection in that case be?—The inconvenience to the Guardians then.

5582. And you would feel it just as strongly as you did before?—Not quite so strong; it is the sick poor I feel the most about.

5583. But if the sick poor were settled as you wish, you would still feel an inconvenience, as a Guardian?—I would.

5584. The inconvenience would be the entire cost—the difference between 6d. and 2s. 6d. 1—Yes.

5585. You would lose most of the day in either case?—You get home quicker from Irwinestown, because the board would be over sooner. But here in Omagh you would have to wait until the last train.

5586. Mr. MURKIN.—No; you would have a train from here at ten past three 1—Well, we get home soon after one o'clock in the other case.

5587. CHAIRMAN.—Do you see any other objection?—I am afraid of the Omagh people being highly rated.

5588. You are afraid they would put outdoor relief on you?—They give outdoor relief indiscriminately; here there is no doctor's test at all, I think.

5589. Mr. Muldoon.—You are aware, of course, that the amalgamation of that portion of Irwinestown Union does not involve the destruction of your District Council—I am aware it would not for some time.

5590. If you were relieved of that, would you take more kindly to amalgamation?—I would not amalgamate with Omagh anyway.

5591. Omagh is not so very inconvenient to that part of Tyrone 1—It is very inconvenient to part of our district.

5592. It is the Quarter Sessions town of all that district 1—It is.

5593. And you are here two or three times at Assizes 1—No, I am not; I don't come for the law.

5594. In the event of the meetings being monthly, don't you think the Guardians would come to Omagh on a Saturday 1—For one, would not.

5595. If there was an election of a doctor do you think you could be persuaded to come 1—I don't believe it.

Mr. DAVID McSHERRY examined.

Mr. David McSherry.

5596. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Trillick Council, too?—Yes.

5597. You have heard the evidence just given 1—Yes.

5598. Is there anything that you would like to dissociate yourself from?—No; there is not.

5599. You agree pretty much with what has been said?—Yes; of course Irwinestown is a great deal nearer to Omagh. Irwinestown is built partly in Tyrone and partly in Fermanagh.

5600. But you would feel very much going away from the workhouse at your door to a place so distant as Omagh 1—Some of us could not come on Saturday. I could not myself, for it is our market day there as well as here, and Irwinestown is very easy to get at. Their meetings are on the market day, and a lot of people go there and kill the two birds with one stone.

5601. There is not much outdoor relief given in Irwinestown 1—There is not any unless certified by the doctor.

5602. I don't suppose it was over 5l. a week 1—I don't suppose it was.

5603. Do you agree with what your colleagues has said about outdoor relief; would you be in favour of confining it on the present lines 1—I would.

5604. Have you ever heard of any hardship resulting from your too strict administration of outdoor relief 1—No; I don't think it is too strict.

5605. Well, any alleged too strictness 1—I don't think so; the doctors certify where it is necessary.

5606. Have you ever heard of any families being in great distress or suffering owing to their unwillingness to go to the workhouse and owing to the fact that they did not get any outdoor relief 1—No, I have not; nothing has come to my notice that way.

5607. Mr. MURKIN.—Have you many labourers in the locality 1—About the average.

5608. What happens to them when the head of the family gets sick 1—If he has not a family to support him he goes to the workhouse.

5609. If he has a wife and family 1—In most cases the family are able to support him before he is ready for the workhouse.

5610. Do labourers' children grow that quick down there 1—Very few go to the workhouse.

5611. Take a man between thirty and forty with four or five young children, who are, none of them, able to earn at all, where there was no earning in the house 1—I don't know of any such case.

5612. If you have many labourers you can hardly help having cases of the kind 1—Well, of course, he has to go to the workhouse if he is not certified by the doctor.

5613. And the family has to go with him 1—There is not any such case in the workhouse.

5614. CHAIRMAN.—You have not had whole families coming in 1—Not since I was there.

5615. You have had a man coming in for treatment, leaving his family outside 1—Yes.

5616. You don't know how that family gets on?—Nearly in every case some of them are able to work.

5617. But where they would not be able to work 1—I don't know of any such case.

5618. Mr. MURKIN.—I suppose there is some resolution on the books to the effect that outdoor relief cannot be granted except on a doctor's certificate 1—I believe so.

5619. Then that detour a Guardian from proposing such a thing 1—I don't know that I have ever known any of the Guardians to propose such a thing.

5620. You have heard the Chairman say that if there is such a resolution it is quite illegal 1—I heard so.

5621. I hope you will hear that in mind if any case of destitution comes under your notice 1—I don't know that there is any such resolution.

5622. What is your objection to having Tyrone a county with in itself instead of separating yourself and going to another county; what is the reason you desire that unusual position 1—Convenience, principally.

5623. CHAIRMAN.—Being so near Irwinestown 1—Yes.

5624. Mr. MURKIN.—Railway facilities are good in connection with Omagh 1—It is hard getting from Trillick to Omagh. It is not so easy getting from Trillick to the railway station; it is fully two miles.

5625. Have you any idea of the number of Tyrone people in the Irwinestown Workhouse 1—I have not.

CHAIRMAN.—There are no other witnesses from a distance here now. I don't know whether it would be worth going into the Omagh evidence.

Mr. Muldoon.—I think not.

CHAIRMAN.—I don't know whether you have any observations to make?

Mr. Muldoon.—We can do that to-morrow morning.

The Sitting was adjourned.

THIRTEENTH PUBLIC SITTING.—THURSDAY, OCTOBER 29TH, 1902.

Oct. 29, 1902.

At the Courthouse, Osnagh.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURNAGHAN, and Dr. COEY BRODER.

Dr. EDWARD C. THOMPSON, M.D., examined.

5620. CHAIRMAN.—We will be very glad to hear the views that you were kind enough to offer to give the Commission?—Well, I will be very glad indeed, I need hardly say, to help the Commission in any way I possibly can by giving an expression of my opinion on the subjects referred to the Commission, but would it not be better for you to put any questions to me on the subject?

5621. If you wish, certainly. The first of our questions was about the amalgamation of unions; is that a subject on which you have any view?—Yes; I have a very strong opinion upon the amalgamation of unions. I am confident that there are a great deal too many workhouses in this country. After the time of the famine, and when the population of Ireland was eight millions, and when the people were very much poorer than, I am glad to say, they are now, of course it is perfectly clear that the workhouses were required, but it is equally clear that they are not wanted now. For instance, in Tyrone we have six workhouses, which house 800 poor between them, very little more than the one asylum for Tyrone and Fermanagh combined; at any rate, three workhouses should be quite sufficient for the County Tyrone.

5622. There are six at present, and you think three would be sufficient?—I think the retention of the workhouses in Strabane, Osnagh, and Dungannon should be more than ample for the County Tyrone.

5623. Then, as regards the other workhouses—Chesham, Clough, and Cookstown—I should imagine they are hardly wanted; the number of poor people in them is very small, and, of course, the expense of maintaining them is very great.

5624. Then, as regards provision for the treatment of the sick locally, if those three workhouses were closed?—I think, as regards the treatment of the sick, if the district hospitals were really made efficient hospitals, which, of course, they are not, they have no pretension to be, and if there was established in our county one efficient surgical hospital—take Derry, Banickillen, or Armagh—some of those hospitals that are really good—

5625. Dr. BRODER.—On your own county?—I am leaving that for others to say. I think by such a system you would have ample accommodation for the care of the sick. Another suggestion I would make, speaking from my experience in County Tyrone, is that I would change workhouse hospitals out of the workhouse altogether and utilise the present fever hospitals as workhouse hospitals. If you changed the name of these hospitals and removed them from actual contact with workhouses it would be a good thing when you have these admirable buildings. In Osnagh you have a first-class fever hospital, also in Dungannon and Strabane. If you changed these hospitals from the body of the workhouse and turned the fever hospitals into workhouse hospitals, with very little expense you would make them very much better hospitals. The present workhouse hospitals in the body of the house could be used for the more infirm inmates.

5626. CHAIRMAN.—That is as regards the workhouses you would keep open; as regards the workhouses that you would close?—There is a good deal of talk about technical education. They could be utilised for that purpose.

5627. I mean more what provision you would make for the sick at the places where you closed the workhouses?—I think if you had a proper system of ambulances connected with the different district hospitals you would be able quite well to convey the sick to the three unions.

5628. The longest distance we heard yesterday was twenty-five miles over a bad road?—That is rather a long distance, but the number that would have to be conveyed for that length would be very few. And then you have got tramways and you have the County Tyrone well supplied with railways. You would not have much difficulty, so far as our county is concerned, in bringing the poor to these different institutions.

5629. A considerable number of sick would have to be removed by ambulance?—They certainly would, but with a proper system of ambulances I think you would have no trouble.

5630. You really think that these three unions, if the workhouses were broken up, could be served by the three you propose to keep on, even for the sick?—I think so, even for the sick.

5631. Then your own cases in your own infirmary, they come from the extreme end of the county?—We have them coming from all directions.

5632. Have they ever to be brought by ambulance?—No; they always come themselves; there is no ambulance connected with our infirmary at all.

5633. They are all cases fit for removal?—They are sent even in carriages; friends take a carriage for them and come with them; there are lots of cases of surgical injuries and strangulated hernia, and other cases, that come to the hospital from long distances.

5634. They would be brought in a carriage with good springs?—Exactly.

5635. Dr. BRODER.—Would it be a great advantage to have an ambulance arrangement?—It would be an advantage if we had, but in our county infirmary we have not the money.

5636. If there was some system for the whole county, an efficient ambulance system, to bring acute cases that could not go by train?—It would be a great advantage if we had it.

5637. In the case of perforations and cases of that kind, owing to the want of a proper system of ambulance, deaths must very often take place when otherwise the patients could be operated on?—My own experience is that the outside public has no idea of the suffering to which the poor are exposed, owing to the want of a good surgical hospital in a county where it does not exist; not only that, but the number of people who are crippled that, if you had a good surgical hospital, could be operated upon, and enabled to earn their own bread. I have seen it not only in this county, but other counties, notably before there was an improved condition of things in the infirmary at Derry there were a number of poor people used to come down here from Derry—people who had to other place but Belfast. There is no comparison between this country and England. In England you have an immense number of wealthy people, millionaires, and others, who like to spend their money in establishing hospitals, and keep them up afterwards by large subscriptions. In this country we have nothing of the sort, and the people who have money are not in the habit of subscribing to these institutions, and won't do it. In Tyrone we have had an example of extreme generosity on the part of a number of gentlemen who have largely subscribed to build the new hospital which you saw to-day. We have got the hospital, but the difficulty we have now is in getting money to keep it up.

5638. CHAIRMAN.—Don't you think it is a sound principle that all hospitals for the treatment of the poor should be maintained out of the rates rather than out of casual subscriptions?—I most certainly think the State should look after the sick and wounded soldiers of the army of labour not only in this country but also in other countries. If you had a perfect system of district hospitals and had then a good central county hospital for the care of surgical cases, manned by a really able surgeon, and paid well, with his practice restricted to consultation work with his professional brethren and time given him to devote himself to the scientific aspect of his profession, able to be called in in any severe surgical case in the district hospitals, you would have in each county a perfect system for looking after the poor, and I have no hesitation in saying that in the absence of that system you have the poor exposed to inefficient treatment, and really torture in many cases, and there are a large number of cripples unable to earn their bread existing in every county in Ireland in consequence of not having a suitable and proper system. I believe it would be a model plan if you could have these district hospitals removed from the care of the Boards of Guardians and placed under an asylum and hospitals committee. The Guardians have the best intentions in the world in this country, I know they have the best intentions to do what is right for the care of the people, but they really don't understand what a hospital should be or what the care of the sick means; they don't understand proper nursing; they think of saving a few pounds, and instead of saving money the result is greatly increased expense. A proper and thoroughly efficient system, such as I suggest, would be the greatest possible benefit to the poor and the taxpayers of this country.

Dr. Edward C. Thompson.

Oct. 29, 1900

Dr. Edward C. Thompson.

5645. Your suggestion would be that all hospitals should be maintained by a committee, such as you have to deal with yourself?—Noted by the County Council, who represent the taxpayers.

5646. Dr. BROWN.—Largely composed of the County Council?—Yes.

5647. Principally composed of the County Council?—You could not have that, because that would give them more work than they could do, but they are sufficiently acquainted with their own county to be enabled to nominate proper people from each district to look after these institutions.

5648. CHAIRMAN.—Should a council could reserve to itself certain matters on which the committee could only report if there was any difficulty to hand over complete control?—Of course they could, but I don't anticipate there would be any difficulty on the part of the County Council; they have nominated an excellent committee for our county hospital.

5649. How do they stand on that hospital committee?—Sixteen of the County Council and eight others.

5650. Therefore the County Council has a preponderating voice?—Because they give the most money.

5651. But you would propose they should have it under the district scheme?—Yes.

5652. Dr. BROWN.—Could you point to any savings by having all hospitals under one management?—I think it would save a good deal of confusion and tend to the same treatment in the different district hospitals, and these people by degrees would become skilled in the requirements of these different hospitals, and probably take a good deal of interest in the management of the hospital and the care of the sick, and I have no doubt by the abolition of these institutions that are not required in our county, and other counties as well, wherever you have efficiency you will have economy, and wherever you have not efficiency you will have waste, and when dealing with the sick and poor a county authority, like the County Council, should take particular care that they are treated with every advantage that can be given to them so as to ensure that they shall not suffer, and shall have the best possible medical care that money can provide them with. As regards the county hospitals, I would like to see the Poor Law medical service in Ireland completely re-organized so that you should give the dispensary medical officers and workhouse officers a chance of something better than they get when appointed in the way of money and position—that is that all these positions should be better than the actual dispensary doctor has got, but he might look forward to being promoted to these different positions or he showed himself efficient and able.

5653. CHAIRMAN.—In what way would you carry such a system out?—By examination.

5654. You have independent County Councils in each county; do you propose promotion should be only within the limits of the county, or that men should be promoted generally throughout Ireland?—I think it would be a good thing if you could have it established that admission to the service should be by examination, and promotion by efficiency, ability, and attention to business.

5655. That would be a good competitive examination, like for India?—Yes; if you want a county surgeon to look after the roads he is examined to see how he knows his business, but in this country in the case of the appointment of a doctor the question is one of politics and religion; it does not matter twopenny if you are the best surgeon in London in certain places in this country; it is simply a question of what religion or politics you are. I would have a man promoted solely for his own professional ability, and brains, and work; the men that succeed generally know something about their business, and I have no doubt it would not be hard to re-organize the Irish Poor Law medical service so that these should be the qualities that should distinguish the men who have to take care of the lives and relieve the suffering of the poor. You should make the service as efficient as you can possibly make it.

5656. You had in your mind some method of promotion by some body?—Suppose there is a vacancy in the Omagh County Infirmary and they want a surgeon, the man appointed in that position should be a man who is able to satisfy a board of examiners that he is capable of holding the position; there is no other way in which you really can have an efficient person appointed.

5657. The mere preliminary qualification of a diploma or degree?—He should have a superior medical qualification in the first instance, and in the next instance he should satisfy the board of examiners. If you appoint an assistant master you examine him to see how he is qualified for the position; how much more necessary is it that a man who has to perform difficult surgical operations should be able to perform them? He should certainly not be appointed surgeon to a surgical hospital unless he has had at any rate five years' experience of surgical work. For instance, in the Asylum the Local Government Act ordains that a fresh appointment is to be made in the position of medical superintendent in the asylum he is to have five or seven years' residence in an asylum before he is capable; how much more necessary is it that the surgeon of a county infirmary should be a man proved able to do the work he is called upon to do. Surgical work, I need not say, is a handicraft. There is a general idea in the country that anybody, once he is qualified, can walk into a hospital and do any surgical operation he is called upon to do. In these days, with abdominal sections, and difficult operations, and septic treatment brought to such perfection, a man is a standing danger if he is brought in to do a surgical operation if he does not know his work. As a rule when you are qualified, you just know about enough, as far as practical work is concerned, not to poison the whole community. It is only by practice and experience that you can become able for hospital work, and it follows as a natural consequence that a person appointed to a very important position should be a person who knows something about how to carry on the work he is appointed for. If you had the district hospitals properly managed, properly assessed—what they are not—the patients properly looked after—what they are not—re-modelled in every way and brought up to date, and difficult cases and other things that could not be well attended to in the district hospitals, moved to the county infirmary, then you would have, I maintain, a perfect system for the care and looking after of the sick. And if you had these institutions not under the care of the Boards of Guardians but under an asylum and hospital committee in each county, nominated by the County Council, you would have a very efficient means indeed of doing all that is necessary for the care of the sick, and those seriously affected by surgical ailments especially.

5658. As regards the question of removal by ambulance, am I right in thinking it is not a matter of very great importance as regards the comfort or health of the patient whether he is removed fifteen or twenty-five miles in a good ambulance?—Not at all; the additional ten miles would be comparatively unimportant, and I need not say in these days, when probably in the near future you will have motor cars and motor ambulances, there will be nothing to prevent them going quickly to these different hospitals; the motor car will probably be as easy to keep up and maintain, and just as cheap as a horse ambulance would be; for these long distances you require a two-horse ambulance probably, and you certainly will get over the ground much quicker in a motor ambulance, and with very much less shaking to the patient. I don't think once you have a patient in an ambulance that it matters very much whether he has to travel ten, fifteen, or twenty-five miles.

5659. A comfortable ambulance with a skilled attendant?—See what happens in campaigns; look at the distances that have to be travelled by patients under conditions that existed in South Africa.

5591. Of course that was necessary!—That was necessary, but still they were conveyed with comparative safety in suitable ambulances. There is another point about infectious hospitals. Supposing the workhouse hospital here was turned into a district hospital there would be nothing in the world to prevent an iron annex being put up, lined with non-inflammable current, and made to contain five beds for men and five for women, or any size. Very often there are no patients here in the workhouse hospital, and, as a rule, there are not more than three or four.

5592. You would want different wards for different diseases?—Certainly; the same as in the asylum.

5593. You would want two or three wards in each fever hospital for each sex?—One for each sex would be sufficient.

5594. Dr. BARNES.—To separate scrofula from typhus, and typhus from typhoid?—Yes; you could easily manage that; four small wards.

5595. You might not have male and female at the same time?—No. Then again, when the fever hospital was not in use you could utilize your fever hospital again; she could be disinfected. We constantly send a nurse from our institution to assist the nurse at the Oagh Workhouse fever hospital, and she is disinfected and comes back to us.

CHAIRMAN.—That is done in a great number of hospitals now.

5596. Dr. BARNES.—In the same way you would not require to staff in the fever hospital?—Only when they were wanted.

5597. You would not require even to keep one; nearly all the fever hospitals have one permanent nurse; a good deal of waste!—A good deal of waste; you could utilize her for the purpose of the other hospital when she was not required. In the asylum they have two nurses for infectious complaints, and the wardens, when not required in the asylum, are used in the body of the house.

5598. Would you transfer cases from the district hospitals to the county infirmary?—Certainly; cases requiring surgical treatment, abdominal sections, &c. It would take a large sum of money to turn the district hospitals into real surgical hospitals.

5599. But cases of emergency might often be done there?—Certainly.

5600. Would you recommend that the surgeon attached to the county infirmary might be available to assist the district surgeon?—Certainly.

5601. And that his remuneration attached to the county infirmary would cover all such charges?—Except his travelling expenses.

5602. His fees?—If it was a difficult operation that would be a matter of arrangement.

5603. It would be much better that he would be available without the idea of a separate fee?—Certainly; that would be simply a question of what, when he was appointed, he agreed to do, under what conditions he was appointed.

5604. About surgery, you mentioned that every doctor is not qualified to be a surgeon; how would you keep up efficiency, even attached to a district hospital?—There is a good deal of minor surgical work that is done in a district hospital, and that should be capable of being done by the man who is in charge of it.

5605. Occasionally, I suppose, if he had a case sent from the district hospital to the county hospital you would recommend that he might come with it if his other arrangements would permit, and in that way keep in touch with better surgery?—Certainly; I need not say in this county my professional brethren constantly send operation cases to the infirmary here and often come and help at the operation, and are very glad to come, and I am very glad to see them.

5606. And in that way they keep in touch with all the newer arrangements; you would not recommend a post-graduate course?—For the dispensary doctors.

5607. No; but as regards the district hospitals?—I would certainly recommend a post-graduate course. Every man that wants to keep himself up in his work must keep in touch with the advance in surgical work. For instance, he should go to London to spend his holiday looking at what is going on in the surgical hospitals, and a good many men do that.

5608. A great many men do that?—Men that are interested in their profession do that, or they lapse back to inefficiency. If a man wants to get on he must work at his profession. He should get every facility such as army surgeons are getting at the present time under the new scheme. A medical officer of the dispensary who applies to the Guardians stating that he wants to go through a post-graduate course, the Guardians should certainly give him leave and be very glad that their officer was so anxious to get on.

5609. With the rapid advance in surgery, you think that is necessary, at least for a man attached to a hospital?—I am sure it is essential.

5610. You know a great deal about the medical men attached to the county infirmaries?—I do.

5611. Do they, as a rule, go?—I am sorry to say that a good many of the county infirmaries in other parts of Ireland are not as good as the infirmaries in the North of Ireland; I think they should be all remodelled.

5612. About the North, do you know that a good many men do go over?—Dr. Palmer—well, I don't want to particularize them; I know them all, and I know they are all men who take the keenest interest in their profession, and do excellent surgical work, every one of them.

5613. Then you would have the district hospitals attached to the county infirmary as a branch hospital; you would not bring down the county infirmary level, but would bring up the district hospital level?—Bringing it up as perfect as you could make it; if you did that you would do a great deal to improve matters in this country which at the present time are in a very bad state.

5614. An interchange of the nursing system would also tend to efficiency?—The central surgical hospital should be the training school for the nurses of the district hospitals. Take the Tyrone County Hospital, the nurses have to pay a fee to become nurses, they are thoroughly trained in practical work; of course there is a great deal of the work of teaching nurses that, in my opinion, is simply useless, but they are trained thoroughly, so far as practical nursing is concerned. They come from the best class of families in the county, they are well-conducted girls, they are in touch with the poor, which is a great matter. For instance, the nurses coming from different parts of Tyrone, when they are trained, if they go to district hospitals they hardly go to one that they don't come in contact with patients that they know belonging to their own county, and the patients are more at home with them than with nurses coming from large city hospitals, and they do their work most admirably. I think the county hospital should be the training place for the nurses of their own county as far as they possibly can learn them. The Local Government Board have got an idea that to require 140 beds to train a nurse; that is not the case; you can train a nurse in a small hospital with fifty or sixty beds, such as we have got, quite efficiently.

5615. Those are matters that have been discussed, and we need not enter into just at present. Regarding some of the other points?—Then there is the question of the workhouse themselves. I need not say that so far as my experience goes of the Irish workhouses that they are in a very inefficient and, I would say, incredible state. They are housing places for the poor where they can linger on in their miserable condition without actually very acute suffering until their time comes to go to their graves, but as far as any comforts or proper care goes it does not exist in the workhouses I have seen.

5616. CHAIRMAN.—You are speaking of workhouses as distinguished from the infirmaries?—I am not speaking of the workhouse infirmaries, they have been vastly improved of late years; you have an excellent one, for instance, in this town of Oagh, where the patients are extremely comfortable and well looked after in every way.

5617. You are talking of the aged and infirm wards?—Yes; where they are all huddled up—good characters with bad characters; there is no separation and no discipline such as should be. I should say the workhouses here should be much the same as the county asylum, where they have reading rooms and some amusements, and patients that are able to work are given little things to do; in these places they do nothing but loll about.

5618. You have some workhouses in your mind?—I have a good number.

5619. Have you visited many?—I have visited a good many. I was a Local Government Board Inspector for some time. I visited a number of the workhouses in the North, Oagh, Derry, Strabane, Lonsdale, Enniskillen, Clough, Castleblair, and Oobokroo; there may be others, but I visited all those, and some recently.

On 19, 1905.
—
Dr. Edward C.
Thompson

Oct. 23, 1892.

Dr. Edward C. Thompson.

5698. And some workhouses in the South?—That, of course, is a good while ago—1881.

5699. Do you remember what workhouse?—I was in Cork; in one of the chief wards in the oldest arrangement was partitioned off the ward, in which they had a McFarlane's patent trough, and that was the closest where the patients had to go for some of the functions of the human body; the stench, of course, was abominable. But I know some workhouses not far from this, and in a place where you would imagine things were much better, where the only sanitary arrangement is a bucket.

5701. At night?—No; that is the only way they have as far as a closet is concerned, and I was speaking to one of the Guardians, who said that was a very much better thing than they have in the country, for there they go behind a ditch for this purpose; but that is a fact. I was not very long ago in this workhouse; there is not a bathroom or a closet in it, and the only arrangement is a bucket.

5702. What ward would that be in; in the sick ward?—In the aged and infirm ward. I must confess I don't see much difference in what ward of the workhouse; this is the general system in this workhouse; it was told me by the master himself.

5703. I am rather sceptical of its accuracy!—There is no mistake about it; I went myself and saw it.

5704. Perhaps you will write me on a slip of paper the name of the workhouse?—I will; I will tell you afterwards. These workhouses, too, are badly lighted.

5705. Dr. BROOKS.—Would you suggest anything in the matter of classification?—Of course I would classify the inmates of the workhouse and remove the children from the workhouses as far as you can possibly do so.

5706. What would you do with the children?—I would board them out as far as possible; I would take them away out of the workhouse, for as sure as you don't you simply are building up a workhouse population for the future.

5707. You would board them out in the district?—Board them out, or take a house in the town, as they have done in Sheffield; get them out of the atmosphere of the workhouse as far as you possibly can. Of course there are some children with their mothers that you cannot separate.

5708. CHAIRMAN.—That is the question; about separation, how far do you think the legislature should sanction separation?—In a great many cases it would be a very good job for children if they could be separated from their mothers.

5709. Could you draw a line?—Where it was proved the mother had no means of living, where she was dragging her children about, as a tramp, from place to place, where the children were suffering, and it was clear had no comfort. The other day I went into the Oragh Workhouse tramp ward, and saw the place after the race; one unfortunate woman came in with four children; she had tramped the whole way from Donagall. There they were, five looking little children; of course they had suffered from want, but it was clear they had a good physique if they got a chance; they were wet through and shivering with cold and hunger; it was a reproach to civilisation to see such a state of affairs.

5710. Dr. BROOKS.—Would you approve of legislation to deal with them?—I would; I know it would have to be carefully guarded.

5711. Could you suggest any safeguards?—It requires a great deal of thought to suggest remedies.

5712. It has not occurred to you?—It has occurred to me, but I know the difficulties surrounding a question of the sort, but where you see children treated in this way by their mothers, and their mother is a bad character, and has no means of existence, but exposes her children to suffering, the children should be taken hold of by the State and put into homes and brought up to be decent members of the community. You may inflict a hardship upon a mother, but really I don't see what the hardship is. In the example I have quoted you have four human beings suffering and likely to suffer in the future, and you can do nothing on account of a sentimental grievance to the mother. It is a question that requires the gravest consideration, but it demands a very great change in the existing system.

5713. What about the tramps?—They are a positive danger to the community and a nuisance; they call the workhouse their hotel, and between the jail and the workhouse they spend their whole time.

5714. What would you do?—Certainly, if they came to the workhouse, I would keep them locked up for three or four days and make them do work that would pay for their keep. I would have a place separate and distinct for them, and in the first place I would keep them thoroughly cleansed, and in most of the workhouses they have no baths for the purpose.

5715. With regard to the inmates?—I would remove all the inmates from workhouses to an auxiliary asylum.

5716. Why an auxiliary asylum?—In the Oragh asylum, if they go on as they are at present doing—they are emptying the workhouses and sending their filth and microbes into the asylum, with the result that the asylum will have to be enlarged at enormous expense. If there was a proper place to put these people in you could take 100 or 150 or 200 patients out of the Oragh asylum and clear all the workhouses, and have an auxiliary asylum under the care of the assistant medical superintendent subject to constant supervision by the medical superintendent of the asylum. For instance, in Oragh you have a jail that could be turned into an auxiliary asylum.

5717. It would mean a separate staff?—It would, but if you throw a large number of people into the asylum you will require an increased staff as well.

5718. Not a new staff?—Not a new staff.

5719. Not a clerk or superintendent or medical?—The cost of building is enormous. These salaries would not be very much, considering the expenditure of capital.

5720. Where would you draw the line; are there not very large numbers in the asylum of practically the same class that are at present in the workhouses?—There are a very large number.

5721. Drawn from the same class in the community?—Yes.

5722. CHAIRMAN.—Your idea is you would not leave the inmates in the workhouse?—I would not; I would put them into an asylum for the insane. If you choose not to make use of an auxiliary asylum, all right; you will have to enlarge the present asylum, but I would not leave an insane person of any description in the workhouse. Another thing that is most necessary is the establishment of a home for the treatment of consumption. Every doctor knows now that phthisis is about one of the most infectious diseases there is; if you don't take care you spread infection right, left, and centre. Unless you isolate the people afflicted with this complaint you spread the disease all over the country. You could utilise one of these disused workhouses and turn it into a consumptive sanatorium; besides you have a much better chance of having a patient cured in a proper place where you have all the arrangements that an increased scientific knowledge of the disease provides.

5723. What kind of a site would you look for—close to the sea or in a mountainous country?—High and dry, with plenty of sun—as much as you can get in this country.

5724. Would the sea be an advantage or a disadvantage?—I don't know that the sea is any great advantage; some of the sanatoria at St. Moritz, Davos Platz, and other places, are up in the dry mountain air.

5725. Would it be an advantage to have one near the sea?—I have a great belief in the sea myself, but this would be rather a difficulty if you want to have a consumption sanatorium in each county.

5726. You have workhouses, which may be rented, near the sea and inland; which would be best?—I cannot say that statistics will prove that there is any great advantage in being near the sea.

5727. Dr. BROOKS.—There is no disadvantage?—There is no disadvantage.

5728. CHAIRMAN.—You would have one for each county or group of counties?—You would require one for each county.

5729. Dr. BROOKS.—From your own knowledge, do you think there is an increase of consumption?—I cannot say about the increase; I think there is a tremendous amount of it.

5730. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose cases are recognised now that used not to be?—Yes; a microscopic examination of the sputum makes you pretty sure you are correct in your diagnosis.

5731. Dr. BROOKS.—Regarding paying patients in the county hospital and also district hospitals, do you think much could be received from that source?—The pay wards in the county hospital are of very great advantage, and they are largely availed of.

5732. I don't exactly mean pay wards, but a patient might pay something?—Every patient that is able to pay should pay something. If we got a patient into our hospital who pays 10s. a week, without giving them anything very elaborate in the way of a better dietary, we do make a difference.

5732. Do you think that fair to a poor person?—Certainly; because it encourages others to pay. I don't see if a person pays 10s. or 15s. in a ward why he should not get some little better food than a person who does not.

5734. Everybody requires the same amount of food?—There are little extra comforts.

5735. CHAIRMAN.—You don't deny to the lowest class of patient any little article of food or comfort?—Certainly not, but if they pay something extra to the hospital I think they should get something extra; I know they don't in the asylum; a patient who pays gets the same; I cannot see the justice of the principle.

5736. In all the large hospitals don't they get exactly the same treatment?—The paying patients get better; for instance, in the Adelaide Hospital.

5737. Very often the medical officer does not know what the patient is paying?—In the pay wards!

5738. Oh, of course; but one patient may pay 5s. a week and another 15s. —Oh, there is no difference made in that way.

5739. It is only to encourage them to pay, so that they should feel a certain independence attached to paying something, even though it may be a small thing?—Yes.

5740. What is the smallest amount you receive?—5s.; it greatly depends on the patient as we know them.

5741. Would it be any advantage to go below that—5s. or 3s. 1?—Certainly it would be a great advantage to the hospital if we could do it.

5742. You think some of the patients would gladly give a few shillings?—I think so.

5743. That system is in operation at Enniskillen?—It is, but there are disadvantages connected with it; there is a difficulty in asking persons about their means. For instance, I would have great hesitation when I admitted a patient to the hospital in asking him about his means and what he is to pay; there is a difficulty about it as far as the head of the institution is concerned.

5744. It is more a matter for the committee?—It is more a matter for the committee.

5745. Dr. BROWN.—Or the matron?—The matron might do it.

5746. If it was done as a systematic thing it would soon be generally known?—Certainly.

5747. Some persons suggested that it was the governor who gave the lines should do it?—Yes; he might give a different coloured line or mark upon the line if a person was able to pay.

5748. You would approve of the principle?—I would, certainly; that as far as they possibly could pay they should be allowed to pay. Another thing about the workhouses is the separation of husband and wife; as far as possible they might be allowed to pass their time together.

5749. CHAIRMAN.—If they wish?—If they wish; some of them don't; a good number don't. Another thing is the day-room for patients that are able to be up; now they have no place to sit in except the wards, and above all things most important in the treatment of the poor is having some person to look after them. In the workhouse they have what they call invalid wards, but I don't see much difference between the invalid wards and the rest of the house in most of the workhouses I have seen.

5750. Do you think the system of Jubilee or district nursing at all prevents the overcrowding of the district hospitals?—I am sure it does.

5751. Would you be in favour of the extension of this system and placing it on the rates?—Certainly; it is just as necessary as having a midwifery nurse.

5752. There are a great many cases that could be treated in their own houses if you had a district nurse?—Certainly.

5753. Dr. BROWN.—And you could discharge them earlier from hospital if you knew there was a district nurse to visit them?—Certainly; that is done every day with people living near Omagh. We tell them to go home, and know the district nurse will attend to them after a little treatment in the hospital.

5754. That would tend to relieve the hospital and tend to economy and efficiency?—Certainly.

5755. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—You say you approve of amalgamation and think that these workhouses would be sufficient for the County Tyrone?—I am sure of it.

5756. What class of inmates would you put in those five workhouses?—The poor, of course; just the same as you have at the present time.

5747. You would put in the infirm and aged?—Certainly; the same as at present.

5748. What about the children?—I would not put the children into the workhouse at all if I could avoid it, but as far as possible keep them out.

5749. What about the harmless lunatics?—I would remove them from the workhouse and put them in an auxiliary asylum. I often wondered why it was that a plan of that sort was not adopted, that one of the workhouses or jails was not utilized for the purpose of an auxiliary asylum. For instance, you will have to build an Omagh asylum before long; it is completely full.

5750. Perhaps if you dug a little deeper you would have changed your opinion; are you aware that auxiliary asylums are more costly than lunatic asylums?—I have dug pretty deeply, because I have been connected with an asylum for thirty years.

5751. Are you aware that patients can be kept cheaper in a lunatic asylum than in an auxiliary?—Certainly I know that, because you don't take into consideration the amount of the capital expenditure in erecting your building; if you take the £50,000 you have spent in Omagh asylum and take the interest on that and add it on to the cost per head of the lunatic I doubt if you will find any difference in the cost.

5752. CHAIRMAN.—Is not that done, doctor; I rather think it is; repayment and interest instalments are calculated as part of the annual income?—Then take the cost per head; if you do that I don't see that you really would have any great increased expenditure by utilizing one of these buildings for the housing of the harmless lunatics.

5753. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Do you mean one of the disused workhouses or a building in addition to the present asylum?—Closing one of the disused workhouses or jails.

5754. Are you aware by doing so you lose £5 per head per patient?—Yes; but is not this Commission going to make recommendations, and if that is a mistake can they not say that the same percentage per head should be given for these harmless lunatics that are going to be put into a separate institution.

5755. Do you think the British Treasury is so soft?—They have been liberal lately; I don't see why they should not give us more money.

5756. Have you been able during your time in Parliament to get any extra grant from the Treasury?—I don't say that I have, but I don't know whether you have not. If a lunatic is entitled to a capitation grant of 4s. per head in the county asylum, surely if you have an auxiliary asylum under the control and management of the same board, because they happen to be in a different building it is no reason they should not get the same capitation grant, and I have no doubt if this Commission recommends that one of these workhouses or jails should be utilized for harmless lunatics the Government will give us the capitation grant.

5757. Is it your view that by amalgamation economy could be produced; are you aware amalgamation presents considerable difficulty?—I am sure of that; for everything good you want to do you have to conquer insuperable difficulties before you succeed.

5758. Do you think it is by retrenchment and reform rather than amalgamation?—You can do a good deal by retrenchment and reform, but I doubt if you can save much money as workhouses are at present managed.

5759. You say we could shut up Cloghery, Castlederg, and Omeagher?—I think so.

5760. What would you do with the inmates of those localities?—I would bring them to those other remodelled and improved workhouses, or almshouses, or homes for the poor; I would abolish the name workhouse, because if they are anything they are not workhouses.

5761. Still by some other name you would allow the institution to remain?—I would keep no institution in these places.

5762. What would you do with the sick?—The sick would be brought to the hospitals of Dungannon, Omagh, or Bisham.

5763. You would deprive those outlying localities of the facilities you would give to other parts of the county?—Patients from parts of the Castlederg Union have to go long distances to the Castlederg Workhouse.

5764. Do you not think some institution would be required in these localities?—I do not; I think once you have a patient in an ambulance it matters little, as far as the patient is concerned, whether you have to take him fifteen miles or twenty miles.

Oct. 29, 1901.
 Dr Edward C.
 Thompson.

5765. Might it not happen that they would die on the way?—They might die going five miles; not more likely to die by being an extra half hour in the ambulance.

5766. Why should you take the advantage of having an institution for the healing of the sick and the care of the aged and infirm from one locality to another?—That is the difficulty you have to deal with; all the witnesses that come to you from the different districts are interested witnesses, and will all tell you that they want the institution in their own locality.

5767. I think it is the general view of almost every witness that some institution will be required in the district in place of the workhouses amalgamated—something in the shape of a cottage hospital or something that will give facilities for the sick?—I think we have too many workhouses in this country.

5768. But you don't think we have too many hospitals?—I think you would be much better off if you had an arrangement such as I suggest.

5769. There is the difficulty of transportation?—I don't look upon that as a very great difficulty.

5770. The bringing of the sick and the aged long distances?—In our country there should not be much difficulty, because it is well supplied with railways.

5771. Would it not appear to you that it would be just as well to try and remodel those existing institutions—that is to cut down the staff and expenditure?—I don't think you have got a large enough staff. What do you think of a ward with twenty-five helpless people with no proper person trained to look after them except pauper inmates, and when they want to get their meals the workhouse master has to go in and help; is that proper care of the sick? I say it is anything but that. I maintain, and do so from long experience and a very great deal of thought, that if you really want to look after the poor and treat them as they have a right to be treated you will have to remodel all these workhouses and greatly increase the cost of looking after the poor; it is a scandal the way the poor are looked after.

5772. Are you aware the object of our Commission is to cheapen the method and not to increase the cost?—I had a good deal to do with suggesting this Commission. I brought under the notice of the House of Commons the perfectly scandalous and disgraceful treatment of the poor in the workhouses.

5773. How does the treatment of the poor in Ireland compare with the treatment of the poor in England?—Very badly; the workhouses in England is a great many instances are a great deal too good.

5774. Have you not yourself said in the House of Commons that the poor in England were not as well treated as they are in the poor country of Ireland?—No, I never did; because I did not know, and I never like to say anything in the House of Commons that I am not pretty sure of. I have seen some of the workhouses in England, and, as I say, I think they are almost too good; you must take care and not make the workhouses too comfortable; but I do say that when you have a workhouse filled with helpless poor people you cannot treat them too kindly or look after them too well, and I say it is no way to manage a ward for twenty-five patients with no proper nurse to look after them—no trained nurses, but paupers.

5775. CHAIRMAN.—That is not a nurse in the shape of a sick nurse?—But the workhouse people are all sick.

5776. Would you call being aged and infirm sick?—I call them all sick.

5777. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Then why take them away from their localities?—If you go into the Oranagh Workhouse and walk through the wards you will find they are not suffering from acute trouble, still there they are; they are old and infirm and feeble, and complaining of pains and aches, and you could not cure them as anything else but broken down and worn out.

5778. That being so, would not these people require some local institution?—Yes; but, believe me, you will have them far better looked after in a large institution, such as I say, than in these little small workhouses. If you want to see really bad workhouses go and look at the small ones; the larger ones, as a rule, are much better.

5779. CHAIRMAN.—Including Cork?—I don't know anything about Cork now; I am only telling you what I saw.

5780. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—About the Guardians, you say they are very extravagant in their management?—Oh, faith, they are not; there are very few Guardians who bother themselves much about the workhouse business at all; they like to go and attend the meetings and have discussions, and all that, but as to knowing anything about what the workhouse is or should be they simply know nothing about it.

5781. I suppose they know how they get the money to keep up the workhouses?—Yes; but if these institutions were properly managed you would not lose any money; the reason you are squandering money is simply from inefficiency.

5782. Let us take a concrete case—the Oranagh County Infirmary—Is surely it efficiently managed?—I am not going to say anything about it.

5783. Let us compare the two institutions?—You could not compare them.

5784. What is the cost per head of the inmates of the County Infirmary?—I think it is wonderfully cheap; 2s each about.

5785. CHAIRMAN.—The average cost of each bed is £42 and the cost of each patient £2 12s. 6d.—But it is a hospital; you cannot compare them.

5786. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Is not the workhouse but a hospital?—It is a different story; look what it costs to perform a serious surgical operation.

5787. When you have made such a sweeping charge against the Guardians of Ireland you ought to have some ground to offer for it?—I am not making a sweeping charge.

5788. I take your own institution to compare with the infirmaries; it does seem to me that you cannot show that the Boards of Guardians are extravagant—I simply say you have a thing to do, and must do, and you should do it as efficiently as you can, and are a much money, but at the same time have your institutions efficient institutions that you should not be ashamed of, and you should be ashamed of a great number of the Irish workhouses. If we had our own government in this country, as you and I want to have, we would have very different workhouses.

5789. Have there not been a great many improvements made recently in the workhouses in the North?—Certainly, there have been a great deal of changes.

5790. Supposing there is a continuation of that, in ten years won't they be almost perfect?—I don't know; if you take the amount of progress in the last thirty years and compare the condition now with what they were thirty years ago, and then look forward to thirty years more, I am afraid if you measured the change by the years it would not be very much.

5791. You say the infirmaries are fairly well managed?—Yes, some of them; the district hospitals are greatly improved, but the Local Government Board insisted that they should be improved, and proper nursing, for instance, introduced.

5792. Have you ever looked at the distery role of the Oranagh Workhouse?—I have; the doctor has ample power to give a potent anything he wants; they ask me to be very well cared and fed.

5793. And has not the doctor the same supervision over the distery in the body of the house?—Of course he has, but he cannot well interfere with the general diet; if there was anyone in the house that he might require extra diet he has power to order it.

5794. I was rather surprised to hear the comment you passed on the doctors in public positions; you said there ought to be a board of examiners?—I did not pass any unfavourable comment.

5795. Did you not say that these men were not fully qualified for the positions they hold?—Oh, no.

5796. I understood you to say that a board of examiners should be established to judge of the merits of these officers?—I think I gave voice to the general opinion of medical men in this country.—Dr. Biggar will correct me if I am wrong—that if you want to have an efficient medical service for the army and navy, for instance, the admission to that is by examination; no man not admitted who is not competent and fit to look after the lives of the soldiers and sailors. Thus you have got a medical service in this country to look after the sick, and afflicted, and poor. If you require an examination to test the fitness of the medical officers in the army and navy to look after the soldiers and sailors, why should you not test the medical officers who go to look after the broken-down soldiers of labour, who give their services to the people, and everyone of whom when he comes to a certain time of life, should have an adequate pension.

5797. The ordinary laymen think that when these gentlemen are sent out of college they are fully qualified?—I am very sorry for the ordinary laymen.

Oct. 29, 1903.
Dr. Edward G.
Thompson.

5290 If the Colleges of Surgeons and Physicians are serious in the matter, do you think it rests with the Poor Law Guardians of Ireland to remedy that?—I think there should be a further test.

5291 Dr. Thompson.—If a man had been in the ordinary medical service for ten years you would not consider him competent to take charge of important surgical operations, although he might be a thoroughly efficient officer otherwise.—There is no medical man I am acquainted with who would think so little of his duty, except in the case of a pressing emergency, as to attempt a severe surgical operation, as we understand it in these days, unless he was specially qualified. Surgery, though associated with experience and knowledge and judgment, is a handicraft; a man must have his hand in continually at it in order to be any use at it.

5292 Mr. Macrae.—You think that the ratepayers of Ireland should assist these gentlemen to climb to a higher level?—In the interests of the poor.

5293 Is not the population of Ireland poor?—Certainly.

5294 Are they not all poor?—Not all; they are poor, I am very sorry to say.

5295 And would you ask these poor people to assist men comparatively better off than themselves?—That the doctors are well off! I am afraid not.

5296 In comparison with the ordinary ratepayer?—Surely the doctor must be better off in some respects than the ordinary ratepayer, though I am sorry to say in many instances I doubt that they are.

5297 Do you not think that the burden on the ratepayers of Ireland is heavy enough?—If you can make the Government take hold of the service and pay the doctors you will be able to manage to have a much more efficient service and save the ratepayers a great deal. Again, if you have got a very capable doctor when you can thoroughly rely on and trust you will not be putting more charge on the ratepayers if you pay that doctor £250 a year; I dare say he would save the ratepayers £200.

5298 How do you make that out?—In his administration—the treatment of the sick, the way he treats wounds, the medicines he gives, and the appliances he gets; in fifty ways that you might not have any cognizance of at all. A doctor who does not know his work would not do it so economically.

5299 What are you going to do with the young men when they come out?—Make the Irish Poor Law service an attractive service—a number of the Irish doctors would like to stay in their own country rather than go into the army or navy if they had any prospect. Make the Irish Poor Law service the same as the army and navy, and give the man who goes into it some hope that by his successful treatment of the poor and by proving he knows his work he may gradually creep up into the higher positions in the service and you will have a very different sort of men going into the service. A man goes to a dispensary in the West of Ireland; he is hopeless and helpless; he has as much money at the beginning as he will have at the end; he cannot even hope for a pension. Let him go into a service in which he can rise by ability, brains, and attention to his business, and kindness to the poor, and you will have a very different condition of things; you will not have waste and extravagance, for I venture to say if you had a service of that sort you would have it conducted for a great deal less money than at present. At the present time, on the question of superannuation, a doctor is dependent on the Board of Guardians; if he has been independent and done his work well he is not at all well—he may have offended the Guardians in many ways, and not be popular with them, although an able man, and they won't give him a pension, although he is entitled to it. Let him get a pension as a right, the same as any other officer in the Civil Service; let him get a pension as a right when he comes to a certain age. Is it an efficient service for a doctor of seventy, seventy-five, or eighty to have to look after the poor; is he able to get up at night, exposed to all weathers? Has he the physical capacity of giving efficient service to the poor? I say he has not, and I say that inefficient service of that kind is simply waste; not only that, but, of course, the poor are not properly attended to or looked after.

5300 So you think three workhouses in this county sufficient?—I am sure of it.

5301 And you would board out all the children?—I would. I think Sheffield in England is a good example; they have taken a house in the town and take the children away altogether, put them under proper people to look after them who understand bringing up children, and they take them away from the workhouse atmosphere as far as they can possibly remove them, and, of course, the result is extremely beneficial to the community and the children themselves.

5302 When you say that the Guardians, as already constituted, are not a suitable body for conducting the Poor Law system?—I don't say that; I only say about the hospitals and asylums. I state that is my opinion hospitals are different from workhouses, and they should be under the care of the asylum and hospital committees of the County Council.

5303 You think representative government should come to an end in that respect?—That is representative government; is not the County Council representative in the last sense?

5304 You think the County Council should support the county infirmary, although they have only a representation of two-thirds?—The county infirmary is in great difficulties; we have been moved out of our hospital to a very much more expensive hospital, and are expected to do the same work. The result of moving the patients out has been very greatly increased work. When I came to the hospital in 1877 there were only about 500 patients and sixty operations that year. Now this year we will have 750 internal patients and on an average from 120 to 140 surgical operations every year. The place is growing and increasing simply because we have got a better institution; the people like it.

5305 CHAIRMAN.—Your view is that the rates ought to maintain such a hospital?—Certainly; and give us the money we want in order to do our work properly; the addition to the rates would be a trifle, and it could be saved in other ways. You have no idea of the cost of surgical dressings at the present day—everything connected with the treatment of patients; instruments, for instance; everything is very costly; then there is the electrical treatment of surgical diseases—every county infirmary should have a hospital fully equipped with all these new plans of dealing with disease. Take the treatment of lupus, as an example; we have got a small fund in connection with the infirmary, the Black Memorial Fund, and by means of that I am able to send a patient suffering from lupus to Dublin; but we cannot treat them here.

5306 Dr. Thompson.—Does the county pay for them?—No; we have a little memorial fund to the late Mr. Black.

5307 Do you not think that that would be a case in which, if the patient was not able to pay, that the Guardians should pay?—Certainly; but they come to us, and they come from a distance.

Dr. FLEMING, Medical Officer, Omagh Workhouse, examined.

I don't know that there is very much that I have considered views on, but if there was anything that you would wish to ask me.

5310 CHAIRMAN.—You have heard Dr. Thompson?—Yes.

5311 Do you concur with him?—In a general sort of way I do concur with him.

5312 Is there anything as regards your own particular hospital?—One of the things that I have the strongest views on is that the system of appointing officials in the workhouse is not satisfactory. I don't think the system of appointing officials by a Board of Guardians consisting of seventy members is satisfactory. I don't think a body of that sort is in a fit position to judge impartially of who are fit from the medical officer down through the master, matron, and other officials. It ends in embarrassing the Guardians, and in questions of that sort being decided on political, religious, or some other ground than efficiency; personal friendship forms a large element in the matter. And I think if there was a committee of some sort which would represent all shades of opinion and selected from people who were known to be intelligent, held responsible positions, were above being influenced by various petty motives—a small committee to make these appointments or, at all events, examine the candidates for these appointments in some way or other, and say whether they were fit, and their recommendations should be

Dr. Fleming.

Oct. 29, 1900.
Dr. Fleming.

practically binding on the Guardians—if the Guardians are to retain the power of electing that would be satisfactory. I don't think any plan of work-house management will produce satisfactory results if it is to be administered by incompetent, inefficient, and unsatisfactory officials. The worst of rules will work well if administered by trustworthy, honest, upright people. These really are the views that I hold chiefly strongly. As to the question of amalgamation of workhouses, I really have not gone closely into that matter. I am inclined to think amalgamation would be an advantage; I don't know how many for this county as compared with the six that do duty at present, but I would think a fewer number of somewhat larger institutions in which more expense might be gone to in seeing that every ward was looked after by some really capable responsible officer. The wards filled with old and infirm people might be bigger wards, and should have a head over each—some really capable person, man or woman, who would see that the work in the ward was satisfactorily done.

5833. Dr. BROWN.—About hospitals themselves, have you any suggestion to make?—At present our workhouse hospital is, I consider, a pretty satisfactory one—the people are comfortable in it, well fed, and well looked after. I have a very efficient head nurse there, who is very conscientious and very capable.

5833. CHAIRMAN.—What about the female side of the house?—The accommodation is insufficient in some respects. Some time ago, on Dr. Bigger's suggestions, we had plans drawn out by the architect for an enlargement of the hospital, giving us a better surgery and operating room, giving us two wards for convalescences, and increased accommodation generally, and I thought it would be a very good thing if these suggestions were carried out. However, there were various other questions looming in the distance, and the Guardians did not think well to go on with that suggestion at the time; I was sorry they did it. There is no question whatever that the hospital could be greatly improved.

5833. Dr. BROWN.—Do you think it is a good thing to have a hospital in three different places all separated by a considerable space?—Do you mean the way we have now?

5833. CHAIRMAN.—On the male and female infirm side you have large sick wards?—That was part of the plan that these two wards at present occupied by sick should be abolished in that part of the house and established in the hospital proper.

5833. Dr. BIGNER.—Would that have a tendency towards inefficiency? for instance, a day like this, how is a nurse to cross from one part to another?—She doubt about that.

5834. How do you do the night nursing?—There is no real night nursing done; if there is a sick or bed case the nurses take turns to sit up, but in the wards under ordinary circumstances, if a person takes ill in the night some of the other attendants have to get up and call a nurse.

5835. Do you think it right to leave the sick so that a nurse has to be called by an attendant?—It would be better if there was a night nurse who went regularly round.

5836. What is the present number of your infirm patients?—There are not many.

5837. CHAIRMAN.—About forty?—There are hardly as many; there are very few on the men's side of the hospital proper.

5838. Dr. BROWN.—Do you think it right that forty people should be left without a nurse at night?—I have not known that anything has gone wrong.

5839. You might not know; it is not the interest of the present staff to tell you that anything has gone wrong during the night?—No; but I really have not known of anything; there are always several others in the ward, and if a person was to be taken suddenly ill they could ring the bell or go for the nurse.

5840. Are they not equally sick?—No; there is generally a proportion not so bad, and there is in every ward what we call a ward attendant, who is not sick, and who sleeps in the ward.

5841. If there is a sick patient at the very far end, has he to go and wake that attendant?—That would be the case; but even supposing you had a night nurse going regularly round, that nurse might not be in every ward every hour.

5832. If you had them in one place, could she not almost hear any person moving in any of the wards during the night?—She would have to go round; I think it is a good thing; I don't want to argue against it.

5833. Would she not know the cases that were particularly ill and look after them; do you think it is right to call on a nurse at night who has been on duty from seven o'clock the previous morning?—No; that is a standing grievance.

5834. Could you call that efficiency?—It is not efficiency.

5835. Mr. MURKHAUGH.—You say the system of appointments is very unsatisfactory in your eyes?—It is.

5836. Does it differ very much from what it was formerly?—If a complaint has to be made about an individual for not satisfactorily doing their duty that question comes before a large body of something like fifty people who have not necessarily the time or opportunity of giving close attention to the matter, and they cannot possibly get hold of the merits or demerits of the question, whereas a small committee could investigate the whole matter and try and understand it properly.

5837. Have any appointments made under the new system been more unsatisfactory than those made by the old Guardians?—I am not comparing the present Board of Guardians with the old Guardians; that was not the idea in my head; I consider any large body of Guardians an incompetent body to judge. I don't think as much care has been taken in appointing the various officials in various workhouses as an ordinary man would take in selecting a servant for his own house.

5838. Have any unsatisfactory appointments come under your notice lately?—Not just immediately lately, but I have in my mind various unsatisfactory appointments, and I have sufficiently indicated to the Guardians at various times what I thought of these appointments, and my opinion has been overruled in most cases, scotched even, and in fact my giving any opinion as to the efficiency of a person who was likely to be appointed has rather seemed to have the effect that my recommendation has done them harm rather than otherwise.

5839. If my recollection serves me right, I think the Guardians insisted that your authority should be supreme in that house, and gave orders that all under your control would have to obey you or leave the institution?—Yes; but it is very difficult to be continually bringing definite and specific charges against people when you know that the result of that will be a very unpleasant scene, and different people making statements that it is not possible to substantiate. I make one statement, and various other people come up there and make other statements, and I don't think a body like a Board of Guardians is in a position to weigh the value of my statements against the value of the statements of other people.

5840. Do you not think that the representatives chosen by the people who pay the money are the people to make the appointments?—I would be quite willing that the representatives chosen by the people should select from their own number a sufficient number of specially qualified people, but I don't think a crowd of representatives are the proper people.

5841. Then your objection is to the large number and not on account of any want of judgment on the part of the Guardians or fair play?—Not as a body; but I don't think a crowd of any number of people elected indiscriminately, and not for their particular intelligence about various things I have in my mind, are the proper people to decide on the question. They should select from their own body a certain number, a comparatively small number, of specially qualified individuals, who would see after these things.

5842. Have the Guardians shown any lack of sympathy towards the poor or the destitute in the workhouse under your control?—I don't know; I am not prepared to answer that question quite straight; I am not sure about that.

5843. You don't know of any instance where they have shown lack of sympathy?—I think they have often shown lack of wise sympathy.

5844. In what way?—I cannot exactly specify, but many things have been done which I am not prepared to bring up just now, which certainly did not end with my approval, but I thought in general an endeavour was being made to set fairly in the poor, though it often had, in my idea, an opposite result from what was intended, such as the appointment of inefficient and unsatisfactory, and continuing in that place of inefficient and unsatisfactory officials.

5845. Has the new body made any recent appointments?—I don't like to specify any appointments that have been made; I don't think it would be quite fair for me to do that.

5846. Are you not aware that in all conditions of life wherever a position is sought concerning proceeds even for the highest offices?—Yes.

5847. Then why should the Guardians be deprived of the same privilege of being canvassed?—I am not saying that they should be altogether, but I think they should delegate that to a small number of specially intelligent people.

M. T. W. D. HUMPHREYS, J.P., examined.

I have to apologise for not being here yesterday. I don't think I could give you very much more information than you had from me at Londonderry.

5851. CHAIRMAN.—Is there anything you would like to say now?—There is nothing I would like to say, only the great question is about casual paupers, and, as you know very well, it is a matter involving great difficulty. The numbers, I think, were given you yesterday, and three appear to be nearly one-third of women and children. If you had only to deal with adult males it would be a very easy matter. After two or three instances of coming back to the union they could be prosecuted and sent to jail; whether that would be right or not is not a matter for me to say, but how can you deal with the other one-third of over 1,300 people who are women and children. In Strabane a great many of these casual paupers are people who come to the farms to be hired; they get their money together, one man keeps it, and five or six come into the workhouse merely for the lodgings and to get their breakfast; they are rather casuals and are their perpetual tramps; that is the only thing; it is a very difficult matter.

5852. Where you keep a workhouse open do you think you might still keep the casual ward open, putting restrictions on their going out so soon?—If you do that you add to the rates.

5853. Or you might keep out such people altogether?—You cannot do that.

5854. The effect of the rule would be to keep out people who come for a night's lodging only. I think they might be given a certain amount of work to do before they get their breakfast?—Then they would go without their breakfast; you cannot stop them. You know what they did at Limerick; it was at the time of the severe shock smallpox, and they vaccinated all of them; that lasted very well until the doctor refused to go on, because according to the present law you cannot pay a doctor for vaccination unless he proves that the vaccination has been effective, and they never came back on the third day to show their arms, so the doctor got nothing, and therefore he refused to go on. I believe that has relieved the Limerick people of a great many casual paupers. I saw that one of the leading councillors in Donagh made a rather curious allusion to the distance from Strabane Workhouse to the outside boundaries of the locality. He said that moving the people of St. Johnston's to Stranorlar would not be nearly as far as to Strabane, but he forgot to mention that far the intermediate place Strabane is much nearer than any of the places he mentioned, and he also forgot to say that there is no union in the whole of Tyrone nearer than Strabane to the place that he took as his point d'appui.

Mr. McAlister.—I have only a few observations to address to this Commission on the part of the Omagh Guardians, who principally advised me on the question of amalgamation. First of all, I should say, on behalf of the Guardians, they have listened this morning to the evidence of Dr. Thompson and Dr. Fleming, and they are not in entire agreement with the evidence given by those gentlemen, and will express their own views when they come into the box. At their meeting on the 19th of October they considered the question of amalgamation as affecting the County Tyrone, and they passed a resolution in favour of absorbing three of the unions of the county in the other three by a majority of twenty-one votes to three; that resolution is their minutes. If we could differ from our minds the evidence given on behalf of the three doomed unions and looked at the map of the County Tyrone, I think it would be seen that the three unions proposed to be 5848. CHAIRMAN.—Perhaps you would like to relieve the Guardians from that privilege?—To some extent; they could do it themselves. If I was one of a crowd who wanted to carry out some project the first thing I would propose would be that we should select from our own selves half a dozen men who would deal with the details.

5849. In case three of the six unions in the county were amalgamated, what would you put in their place?—I have not given much consideration to the question of amalgamation, and I am not prepared to give an opinion that I think is worth anything on that point.

5850. You would not care to venture an opinion?—No.

Left—Strabane, Omagh, and Dungannon—cover the arms of the County Tyrone fairly well, and evidence has already been given, and will be repeated, that the three unions which will remain will be amply sufficient to house the poor. Mr. Cathcart, one of the most capable officials in the county, is prepared to give evidence that even one union in Tyrone would be amply sufficient, and he has worked out a scheme for one union to be retained in Omagh, which is a central place, and easily reached from all parts of the county. I don't think the other witnesses will go as far, but they will give positive evidence that the three unions proposed to be left will be amply sufficient for the county. As to the evidence given yesterday for Clough, Castleberg, and Cookstown, there is this to be said—it was the evidence given not by members of the County Council in that capacity but by men with local sympathies, and such institutions as workhouses did hard and will always have advocates for their retention. The principal objection, apparently, to the dissolving of these unions arises from the difficulty of getting Guardians, it is said, to attend at further distances in the new unions. Of course the difficulty of Guardians attending unions and to the duties they were elected to discharge has always been to some extent one in Ireland. It was recognised in the Local Government Act itself, and Parliament has imposed penalties and fines upon men who are elected to public positions and fail to turn up at a reasonable number of meetings, and the Guardians of the Omagh Union are convinced that these safeguards are amply sufficient to protect the taxpayers of those places, and are quite confident that there will be no difficulties on that head. Mr. Cathcart is prepared, further, to state that it will be possible under the reform that we believe will result from this Commission that fewer meetings will be necessary, and his experience is that when there is important business to be discharged at a meeting he has a full attendance, and it is only when what the newspapers call routine business comes on that it is not always possible to get a quorum. As regards the deportation of paupers, I think, after the evidence of Dr. Thompson this morning, we may dismiss that from our minds; it is an objection that will not really press, especially if there is established in the district some provision by which the sick poor will be attended to in a disused workhouse, which is part of the scheme of the committee of the County Council who contemplate that some of the unions would disappear. The Guardians of the Omagh Union think that the financial advantages to be gained by this amalgamation will be considerable, and that the taxpayers of these places have not considered how much they will gain by having removed from them these three terrible establishments in Cookstown, Clough, and Castleberg. The dissolution of the Gortin Workhouse has worked well, and I am informed Mr. Clarke will give very valuable evidence of the advantage gained by that locality by being dissolved and amalgamated with the two neighbouring unions. The Guardians quite admit that the evidence, generally, which Dr. Thompson gave about the Omagh infirmary is perfectly accurate, and it has been very largely availed of. The Guardians of Omagh think it is an intolerable burden on the county to maintain six unions when three of them cannot be defended on any principle or any information that they are doing work adequate to the expenditure which must now be involved in their maintenance. They also think that there is now an opportunity for reform, and they are before a strong Commission which they believe and hope will resolutely grapple with this subject and relieve them of the intolerable burden of maintaining so many unions in this county.

Oct. 26, 1903.

Dr. Fleming.

M. T. W. D. HUMPHREYS.

Oct. 25, 1894.

Mr. William
Cassidy.

I would wish to inform you that I don't appear on behalf of the District Council; they are not bound by anything I say.

MR. CHAIRMAN.—They permit you to appear and give us your own view.—They are not bound by anything I say.

MR. CHAIRMAN.—They are aware you are coming up.—The committee are aware; I believe they agree with me to a large extent.

The first question to be considered in connection with Poor Law Reform is the proper working of the Poor Laws with, at least, equal comfort for the poor, and thus leads to the question, can unions be profitably amalgamated? In my opinion amalgamation of unions ought to take place for the reasons—first, that the number of poor seeking relief has decreased at a rate never expected at the time when the present workhouses were erected; secondly, that the facilities for travelling are now so practically perfect as to provide a ready and efficient means for removal of the old and infirm to any reasonable distance; thirdly, that the inmates of workhouses in rural districts are very largely composed of persons suffering from sickness, who could be more effectively nursed and treated in district hospitals. Dealing particularly with the County Tyrone, I would propose that only one workhouse should be maintained in the county for the reception of able-bodied paupers, situated at Omagh, as distinct from sick and infirm; this would admit of all the able-bodied inmates being removed from the other six workhouses in the county to the County Workhouse, where they could be employed in some industry, such as nail-making or basket-making for the men, and sewing for the women, whereby they would contribute to their support. In the County Workhouse the services of the medical officer and trained nurses would not be required, as any acute case of sickness occurring amongst the inmates could be treated by the dispensary medical officer in the ordinary way upon a "red line," while urgent surgical cases could be treated in the county hospital, which is an institution also supported by the poor rate. The workhouses of Dungannon and Strabane should be converted into district hospitals, to be used exclusively for the treatment of the sick poor, and the old and infirm over seventy years of age. For this purpose the sick and infirm from the Unions of Clough, Cookstown, and Dungannon should be maintained and treated in Dungannon district hospital, and those in the workhouses of Castlederg, Irvinestown, Strabane, and Omagh in the Strabane district hospital. These two district hospitals could then be fitted with modern appliances and a competent nursing staff, the expense of which would not press so heavily upon the ratepayers, when the area of location would be so much increased. (The paupers in Irvinestown Workhouse belonging to the portion of the union in the County Fermanagh would have to be similarly transferred to whatever accommodation would be provided in the County Fermanagh.) The following unions could then be dissolved, viz.: Castlederg, Clough, Cookstown, and Irvinestown. A dissolved workhouse in each province, or otherwise, as considered necessary, should be fitted up for the treatment of consumption. This institution should be equipped and maintained by the Government, and a fixed charge should then be made on each Board of Guardians in accordance with the number of patients sent from any union. When a consumptive person becomes chargeable on the rate, either by outdoor relief or otherwise, his removal to the special consumptive hospital should be compulsory if, in the opinion of the medical officer who is in charge of the case, the condition of the patient will admit of his removal with safety. District hospitals should contain wards for the exclusive use of patients willing and able to contribute to their support, the inmates of which should not be compelled to wear uniform except in cases where, in the opinion of the medical officer (from a sanitary point of view) it is necessary to do so. Boarding out of decrepit children should be compulsory, and no child should be retained in the workhouse except those of able-bodied inmates. The boarding out of children is open to abuse, and requires much care in the selection of homes and in the inspection of the children at their new homes. The children should on no account be brought back to the workhouse for inspection, as this periodic visit to the workhouse reminds the children of their origin, while one of the objects of the boarding-out system should be to induce the children to forget their past and to become merged in the population of the district. Outdoor relief is a subject that very few people agree upon. In my opinion this form of relief should be discontinued in all cases except in those of widows having families depending on them, and where the bread-winner of the family is disabled by sickness or accident from providing for his wife and family; all other cases should only be relieved in the district hospital or workhouse, as the case might require, except the medical officer shall certify that removal to such hospital or workhouse would be attended with risk to the patient, in which case outdoor relief might be given while the patient is unable to be removed. If the present system of outdoor relief is to be continued (the annual expenditure under this head in the Omagh Union is about £1,400), I would suggest dispensary relief for all purposes, so as to constitute a certain ceiling on the granting of outdoor relief, as I believe the increased areas of unions likely to be brought about by amalgamation would make it impossible for the Guardians attending a meeting to properly judge of the merits of an application from a remote part of the union otherwise than by acting on the report of the relieving officer. The cost of maintenance in the County Workhouse and in the district hospitals could then be apportioned and levied on the several dispensary districts in proportion to the number of inmates or patients supported from each. The matter of dispensary relief would necessarily involve the question of dispensary representation as distinguished from the present system of clerical division representation. I am of opinion that the increased number of Guardians in any union brought about by a large scheme of amalgamation, such as I have endeavored to outline, would make the board of council entirely cumbersome, and to obviate this difficulty two or three members should be elected for each dispensary district, who could also act as a dispensary committee for the examination of the medical officer's books and records. The question of district councils presents the greatest difficulty, but I think this might be met by forming the members elected to represent the dispensary districts comprised in the present Poor Law unions into a district council, in a similar way to that at present existing, and that the present clerks of unions and councils should continue to act as clerks of the district councils. For this purpose the law should be so altered as to provide for the existing clerks of the councils continuing to discharge their duties in connection with the preparation of the voters' and jurors' lists notwithstanding that he has ceased to hold the position of clerk of the union. This would materially reduce the amount of compensation to be paid in the retiring clerks of unions which have been dissolved, without inflicting hardship on any other person. If it is considered advisable to convert a workhouse in this county into an auxiliary asylum in preference to building additional accommodation at the district asylum, I would recommend that the Omagh Workhouse should be selected for that purpose, as its proximity to the present asylum would admit of the same committee of management conducting the business and the same medical supervision being enabled to, in addition to which the same set of convicts could supply both institutions under the same contract. If this were carried out the County Workhouse could be located at Dungannon, and the district hospitals at Cookstown and Strabane. Fever hospitals should be continued at the three large towns, as this class of patient could not be removed by rail. The tramp nuisance seems to be beyond the reach of reformation, nevertheless I make the suggestion for what it is worth, that all strangers to the district seeking relief should be obliged to make application in the first instance to the constabulary, and produce a letter from his last employer giving satisfactory reasons for his presence in the district. Thereupon the constabulary should have power to issue an order for admission to the County Workhouse. In all other cases the tramp should be dealt with under the Vagrancy Act. I would strongly recommend that the meetings of Boards of Guardians, and the ordinary meetings of district councils, should be held monthly instead of weekly, as at present. This would enable all the business to be sanctioned at a meeting to be printed on an agenda and distributed to the members previous to the day of meeting. I admit the preparation of an agenda is contemplated in the rules for the guidance of district councils, but where the meetings are held weekly the correspondence is mostly received on the meeting of the meeting, which prevents the agenda being issued. Without knowing what business is to be transacted, Guardians generally take it for granted that there will be nothing of importance, and thus their absence from any weekly meeting can be made up for by their presence at the next ordinary meeting, only a week distant, whereas if the meetings are fixed as monthly, business of sufficient importance will be contained on the agenda to induce the Guardians or councillor to make an effort to be present. The committee of management of lunatic asylums hold their meetings monthly, while the expenditure to be dealt with is many times greater than that of an ordinary workhouse. I have previously referred to, and might be taken as recommending, dispensary relief; that is not so, except as a safeguard in respect of outdoor relief and to cover what I consider an injustice, the practice of fixing dispensary areas for sanitary purposes. In the event of a general scheme of amalgamation, I would be in favour of county relief, as this would simplify the keeping of accounts in connection with district hospitals, fever hospitals, and workhouses, and would admit of patients being sent from one hospital in the county to another; it would also admit of the nursing staff being distributed as their services might be required. Cottage hospitals, such as I have seen recommended, would be quite unworkable. Each cottage hospital would require to be equipped with a doctor, nursing staff, accoucheur, medicines, medical appliances, provision stores, etc., which would make the expense of this class of hospital out of all proportion to its usefulness. Much might be done in this direction by providing in each dispensary district a midwife with nursing qualifications, who could take charge of a patient pending his removal to hospital. In future transactions in the office of relieving officer I would recommend that the new appointments should be for comparatively small districts with proportionately smaller salaries. It is not necessary that a relieving officer should devote his whole time to the duties of his office, but I think it is most necessary that a person seeking relief should not be obliged to visit a relieving officer ten or twelve miles distant; this will be still more important in the event of amalgamation. These are my ideas.

Mr. WILLIAM CASSIDY, Clerk of the Omagh Union, examined.

5837. Dr. ROBERTS.—Would you explain why you think cottage hospitals would be unworkable?—The great expense in connection with them.

5838. What great expense?—Dr. Thompson appears to think all institutions for the treatment of the sick should be elaborately, and thoroughly fitted up.

5839. Not necessarily?—I think he stated so; and that is one of the reasons I would recommend that only one or two institutions should be kept in the county thoroughly equipped and up to date.

5840. CHAIRMAN.—You don't know yourself anything about the management of the hospital?—Oh, no.

5841. You would not venture to offer an observation on it?—I would not.

5842. Mr. BULDOON.—Did you wish to say anything about the matter of fever nursing or consumption?—Nothing more in connection with consumption; I think the medical men who were examined here to-day perhaps gave better information than I could be expected to do. In my opinion the number of consumptive patients is not to be judged by the number that are contained in the different workhouse hospitals, for in my opinion there are a great many people in the county suffering from consumption that would not take refuge in an ordinary workhouse hospital. There is a belief very prevalent in the county that consumption is incurable, and they may as well remain at home and die as go into the workhouse hospital, whereas if a proper institution was established, with up-to-date appliances, people would take advantage of it, and be glad to pay for it. That is my opinion.

Mr. MATTHEW RODGER, J.P., examined.

Mr. Matthew Rodger.

5853. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Omagh District Council?—I am.

5854. You have heard Mr. Cathcart's statement recommending that three unions should be broken up?—Generally speaking, I fall in with Mr. Cathcart's view of the subject; there is one thing in which I differ with him, and that is in regard to outdoor relief.

5855. You think the grants have not been excessive?—I do.

5856. And you would not restrict them in any way?—I would not; I would rather extend the outdoor relief.

5857. In what direction?—I would extend it in the Clough and Cullinagh directions in the case of amalgamation.

5858. Would you increase the class of persons who get it, or give it to a larger number of applicants?—I think the people are very happy who receive outdoor relief; it is impossible to bring those poor people to the workhouse at all.

5859. What class of people would you propose should be added to the number?—I refer to the deserving poor.

5860. Give me an instance of a family that in your opinion would not be likely to get it now and that you think ought to get it?—I don't know of any case; we are very careful in investigating each case, and we have also very reliable officers who inquire into each case. Supposing the Guardians from a distance know nothing at all about the case the relieving officer gets notice a week or two weeks previous, and investigates each case, and gives all the information. I don't know of any case unless in the town of Omagh. It might be very difficult to investigate a case thoroughly in Omagh, but in the rural districts I don't think there are any abuses.

5861. In your neighbourhood, in the cases you know of, what kind of people are getting outdoor relief?—Most deserving poor.

5862. Without mentioning any names, if you give me the circumstances of one or two cases?—We had a late case—it is off the books now—a widow with a large family, her husband died some time ago, and this poor creature was getting 4s. a week; of course the children were very young.

5873. Where did she live?—She lived in the village where I reside, with 400 inhabitants.

5874. She had a house there; what rent did she pay?—1s. a week.

5875. And then she had 2s. from the Guardians in addition?—Yes; she is very industrious herself.

5876. She was earning something was she?—Yes.

5877. How many shillings did she earn a week?—2s. and her food per day; 2s. a week.

5878. What ages were the children?—One was quite an infant; the others up to eight years of age when we began the outdoor relief.

5879. All at school and some earning?—As a rule the children attend school very well with us; the clergy look after them and see that they attend school.

5880. Do you know any elderly people who are receiving relief in your neighbourhood?—Yes; we have eight in our division.

5881. You have given one case, now some other cases?—Generally speaking, they are all widows; we had a widower who was receiving relief, and some of his children came from the army, but they did not stand to his wants in any way; they were rather spendthrifts; they simply left the poor old fellow, and he came down to the workhouse, although it was against his wishes. I have known cases where the priest and even the police went to a place where it was not safe to go in with the roof and walls falling, and the poor people would die there sooner than come into the workhouse; such cases I think are deserving of outdoor relief; besides there are many in the workhouse who, if they were getting outdoor relief, would be very useful in the country.

5882. How much would they earn?—They would earn their food at any rate, or the rent of their little rooms.

5883. Would they earn 5s. or 6s. a week?—No; of course they would be disqualified from relief if they were earning such a sum at all; we understand it is only the quite destitute are eligible for outdoor relief; there is great sympathy for these old people when they are getting a little allowance. I think many of these poor creatures should be boarded out in respectable families, the same as the children. It is a wonderful

Oct. 29, 1913.

Mr. William Cathcart.

Oct. 29, 1901.
Mr. Matthew
Kedgers.

contrast between supporting these people outside and in the workhouse. I see from the abstract it is almost 7s. a week we pay in the house, that is taking into consideration the upkeep of the house; outside we are only paying 2s. on an average. Supposing we increased it to 4s. we would make them happy and comfortable; they would have liberty and freedom; nothing could compensate them for want of liberty and freedom.

5894. Would you not be afraid you would have too many applications?—I don't know; we would use the supervision we are using; I don't think there would be any abuses; they have a horror of mixing with some of the characters that are in these workhouses; of course classification would be a great improvement.

5895. Mr. MURPHY.—You are in favour of boarding out children?—I am.

5896. You think that in a good system, and works well?—It works well, and I need not tell you that our Guardians are very particular in giving these children to proper families.

5897. An impression seems to have got into the minds of some of the Guardians from other unions that the Omagh board is rather extravagant in the matter of outdoor relief?—I am convinced that these gentlemen are not in touch with the poor people at all. I heard some of them yesterday.

5898. You think it would be a hardship for any Board of Guardians to refuse to grant outdoor relief to deserving cases?—It would be very cruel; personally, I would abolish all the workhouses; I am prejudiced against the system; I would change it all to outdoor relief and hospitals.

5899. The trouble would be giving relief to the proper people?—With proper supervision I think it could be conducted pretty well.

5900. Do you think if the Guardians of Omagh did not give so much outdoor relief, would some of those people who are receiving the relief come into the house?—Many would die outside and starve before they would come in.

5901. They have such a dislike to the institution?—They have a horror of it, I mean the very deserving poor—old respectable people many of them—their children have gone out of the country.

Mr. Edward Collagher.

5902. CHAIRMAN.—What did you wish to tell us?—I have very little to say. I came in deference to a notice that the Commissioners were sitting here. I am not a Guardian; I am Chairman of the Urban District Council of Strabane, and having received a notice I thought it respectful that I should come here.

5903. A proposal has been made here by the Omagh Guardians that three unions should be allowed to remain—Strabane, Omagh, and Dranganish?—That is a question we, in the Urban Council, did not touch. I find the districts that are proposed to be abolished have opposed it, and the districts that are serious would like to be strengthened. It seems to be a question that there is a great deal of division on, and I don't wish to express an opinion.

5904. Do you think your own union is too large; do you wish to have it?—No; I don't think there is any desire on our part.

5905. Do you think the union should remain as it is?—That is with regard to Donagel; that is a question we, in the Urban Council, have avoided; we don't wish to touch on these contentious matters at all. We have studiously avoided giving any opinion upon that.

5906. You have opinions upon it, I suppose?—As the Chairman of the board I would not be disposed, seeing that we took no vote on it and our council would probably be divided, I would prefer not, as representing the board, to say anything.

5907. Is there anything you would wish to mention?—Anything that I would say, I think, has been pretty well said already; there would be a desire that there should be more infirmary or hospital accommodation.

5908. There was a view put forward by the County Donagel, and the Lifford people especially, that your district about Strabane should be enabled to contribute to the cost of any people you sent in to the Lifford infirmary; do you think that would be fair? You send a large number of patients from the Tyrone por-

5892. You heard the evidence of Dr. Fleming, our medical officer, as regards the appointments; what do you think; you are a member of the new board, and you were a member of the old board; how does the new board compare with the old?—I think the new board should take great credit to themselves.

5893. It is quite true that the doctor did not draw any distinction in the matter, but you heard his comments on the method of appointing officials?—I was surprised indeed to hear Dr. Fleming make any complaints, because there is great attention paid to every suggestion he made to the board; I think there is nothing the new board should take more credit for than the five appointments they have made.

5904. I find there has arisen in the country since the new bodies came into office a great desire to change the system. I would like to know from you, as a member of the old and a member of the new body, what do you think of the new bodies as compared with the old in the management of the workhouse and the treatment of the poor?—They certainly have a very warm feeling of sympathy with the poor, to do all in their power for them, but I must say they are a most economical body. I have had experience of both; they seem to be altogether governed by economy in the management of the whole concern and the administration of the Poor Laws.

5905. And from your experience of both systems do you think that due care is taken in making appointments to any office that falls vacant?—I don't think it could be done in any better way than they have managed their business; of course they have a great feeling for the ratepayers; they truly represent the ratepayers; they come from amongst them, and know the grievances of the ratepayers and the position they are in, that they cannot afford to pay more rates.

5906. When a recommendation comes from the doctor for any comfort or improvement in the house, how is it treated by the present Board of Guardians?—With the greatest respect; I never saw anything towards Dr. Fleming, any courtesy, or to any official in his position—any other doctor coming there.

Mr. COLLAGE.—Would you allow me to mention with reference to outdoor relief; I would not be in favour at all of abolishing outdoor relief except that provision was previously provided for them in a district hospital or almshouse.

Mr. EDWARD GALLAGHER, J.P., examined.

5907. What did you wish to tell us?—I do, but some of our people contribute towards them by giving three guineas; for instance, I myself subscribe three guineas a year; that entitles you to a bed.

5908. That is done by the County Donagel people, but they have to pay as well, you say that infirmary is a good deal; do you think it is fair you should be called upon to pay for your patients that you send there?—It would not be unreasonable, but a good many who go there are acrobats, who belong to the County Donagel largely; they have a claim there as Donagel people.

5909. There are some, I suppose, who go who are bona fide Tyrone people?—They are; in the case of accidents.

5910. And they don't pay?—The county itself does not pay, but individuals do. From Shim Mills there are a great many accidents, and the Messrs. Harison contribute to the institution very liberally, and so do a good many Strabane people. If we, in Tyrone, had a claim there it would require in all probability that the hospital should be enlarged.

5911. But any that you did send that you should pay for them?—It would not be unreasonable; but I would not like to give a decided opinion.

5912. You think some of the workhouses might be remodelled and made into homes for the aged and infirm poor?—That is the prevailing opinion.

5913. With apartments for married couples?—With apartments for married couples, because there is a great aversion, even among the very poor, to go into the workhouse hospital.

5914. As regards transport?—That is a very hard question; it is very difficult to know how to deal with them. I think that the suggestion made by Mr. Outhart that they should first have the authority of the constabulary would have a very salutary effect, I believe, because the police have to visit these in the morning to get the names and everything, and if they were obliged to go to the police before they entered—the police very often have the record of these people—it would deter some of those who are professional crimps; on the other hand, there are some people who may be out of employment, and hardships might be imposed on those.

5011. I think that touches all the questions dealt with by your counsel?—That, and they refer to the hospitals and the outdoor relief question. I think it is pretty well attended to in Strabane; I don't think it is abused.

5012. You give it almost at the same rate as in Omagh?—I think so; there is just one particular case, where there are some people who become unable to take care of themselves; there should be some means of compelling those people to be removed to whatever place would be provided for them. I know a case recently where a woman was lying alone, she had cancer of the face, and she lived in a mere hovel, as dirty as possible; she would not hear of being removed to the house, and she was only removed to the workhouse hospital when some of her neighbours found her lying on the floor miserable, and within a few days of her death.

5013. It would be very difficult to get an Act of Parliament passed compelling a sick person to go to the house?—It is a very difficult case to deal with, because they are a source of danger.

5014. Some of these people will ultimately yield to the persuasions of their clergy?—No; some of them will not, and they run the risk, and some of them die without having the ministrations of the church. It is very difficult unless some kind neighbour looks after them.

5015. There are a number of cases like that occur, but they are comparatively few?—A good many, where they are lone people and will not go into the workhouse.

5016. You would like a law passed giving Boards of Guardians power to make them go?—Yes, under certain conditions; that the doctor should investigate the case and see it is a case in which they are likely to be in danger and die.

5017. There is no such law in any other part of the kingdom?—There is not; but there are new laws every day, and there is no reason Ireland should not contribute to the statute book.

5018. Dr. BROWN.—You would not give those cases outdoor relief?—I would not where they are living alone and unable to take care of themselves, and after a certain age they are virtually unable to take care of themselves.

5019. You said something about improving the hospitals?—Yes; it would require a change altogether in the workhouse hospitals.

5020. In what way?—Not connected with the workhouse directly, but having more an infirmary, a district hospital; the name would be changed at all events, and not so immediately associated with the workhouse, because there are many people who would require to go to hospital and would not touch the workhouse hospital.

5021. They would go more readily?—They would if it were isolated and on different lines.

Mr. ROBERT S. CHAMBERS examined.

5022. CHAIRMAN.—What is your view about the unions in the County Tyrone; how many ought to be left open?—I have been of opinion for a long time that we might do with less; something about what was suggested here to-day and yesterday. To go as far back as 1823, we put in a candidate here for Parliament, and that was his chief plank; that and tenant right; that was Mr. Macartney, so I am not a new convert to it at all. There may be some difficulty about it; if they were willing to be amalgamated or join with us, or be annexed, the same as Gortin, there would be little trouble, or if we could show them that the rates would be less.

5023. You would be in favour of carrying out an amalgamation of how many unions?—I would be in favour in any case, but we would have less trouble if we could show them it would be an advantage to them.

5024. In how many unions?—I think three would do, but when giving evidence I would go for amalgamation generally all over Ireland—with a decrease in population, and I do not think there are as many poor as formerly.

5025. There is no doubt about that. In three days of the workhouses were founded there were as many poor as the whole population now?—Yes; I remember myself about that time; there were 1,400 in Omagh at the end of the Famine years, and in Clogher over 1,100; I was there as a mere boy.

5026. Would you leave any provision for the sick at these places or be willing to follow the Gortin precedent of removing them entirely?—No doubt there would be a difficulty there; they would not be so near as Gortin; that was only eight or ten miles.

5027. But the most distant part of Gortin from Omagh or Strabane would be a considerable distance?—Yes; we got six electoral divisions, and they are all well valued except Gortin and Moyle; the others are small valuations, mountains, and we have not many poor from that quarter, nor there is not so much outdoor relief there as in other places, say Omagh town.

5028. The Gortin people have come into a larger valuation, and ought to get a good deal of benefit out of it?—Yes; Mr. Clarke could tell how they are benefited; something about one-third.

5029. You think that is fair that poor districts should be aided by being brought into larger valuations to have lower rates?—Indirectly it might benefit them, but I am not in favour of union rating, because it tends to some abuses that I will explain by and by.

5030. You mean outdoor relief abuses?—That is one of them.

5031. As a general principle, do you think it fair that the better off parts of the country should aid the very poor parts of the country?—Yes, if the ratepayers should consider themselves philanthropists.

5032. But considering themselves fair-minded men?—There is such a diversity of opinion about it; I heard a gentleman explain yesterday that it was hard for them to pay for Castleland and Dungannon, where they got the poor and worked them out, and had the benefit of their time; it was hard for other people to pay for them; that was his evidence, and I believe it.

5033. Mr. MURKIN.—Those people that go to the towns, have they not spent a good many years of their life in the country and gratified to the towns?—It is possible some of them may, but they generally don't stop in the towns; it is the parties reared in the towns stop there most. I know some of my own men come back after being away, and say they would much prefer to live where they were reared.

5034. People who have been evicted out of their farms and have no shelter, they have to come to the towns?—Yes; but there are very few cases of hardship of that kind in our parts of the country, or even in this union.

5035. I have often heard it mentioned at the Board of Guardians when the question was raised about outdoor relief being so largely given to the town of Omagh; it was pointed out that a good many of the recipients of outdoor relief had come from the country?—There might be a few of them, but if you make inquiries you will find they are a different class; I could describe some of them very well.

5036. CHAIRMAN.—What kind would they be?—I believe there is a large number in Omagh getting outdoor relief that spend the money in drink; it is not denied.

5037. Dr. BROWN.—Spend part of the money they receive?—Certainly; it is not denied; there is not a relieving officer does not know it perfectly well, but they cannot help it; they have stated so. Some respectable people in Omagh have told me they used to get women to wash, and when outdoor relief was given so freely in the town of Omagh they said "No; we are getting outdoor relief; we will wash no more."

5038. Mr. MURKIN.—How much relief do those people get?—If you take up the lists of outdoor relief furnished to the Guardians twice a year nearly the half is in the town of Omagh.

Dr. BROWN.—What is the valuation of the town?—Mr. MURKIN.—Between £12,000 and £15,000.

Dr. BROWN.—What is the valuation of the union?—Mr. MURKIN.—£101,000. (To Witness).—

Do you think any person in receipt of 2s. a week has such an amount of money that they can give up working and live in luxury and drink on that?—No, I don't think so for a moment, but they generally have some other means of supporting themselves.

Oct. 26, 1905.

Mr. Robert S. Clements.

5940. You say they give up work when they get outdoor relief?—I say just that.

5941. But you said it?—Well, some of them; I can give you the names of the people who told me those things—Miss Charlton is my authority that the woman refused to wash. The Guardians for Omagh don't belong to the District Council, and they come here for the express purpose of putting parties on outdoor relief, and if they don't succeed on one day they try another with a different board and a different chairman; the clerk is here and can verify everything I say.

5942. Don't you know the method at the Omagh board is when an application is made to hand over the application to the relieving officer, and for the relieving officer to make a report, and never in any case when the relieving officer does not say the person is in destitute circumstances to give relief?—That is perfectly true what you say, but they modify it in another way; it is so similar to other cases that they can make no distinction, and must give it; the Guardians act on the report, but they act over it. You know, Mr. Murnaghan, you are not always the chairman; you are in the House of Commons.

5943. I am not ashamed a bit of saying I give outdoor relief?—I know you take more pains than any chairman in Ireland, and I don't say that outdoor relief is given properly is not well laid out money.

5944. CHAIRMAN.—But in practice it is very difficult to ensure that proper persons only get it?—Very difficult; and it is more difficult still since there was union making. The first year I went there was in 1873, the population was far greater than then now, and more poor; there might be cases of hardship then, but I don't know that they were greater than now. In 1873 there were twenty-eight on outdoor relief at a cost of £124 4s. 6d. In 1878, twenty-eight on outdoor relief, at a cost of £131 15s.; 1883, this was immediately before the Gorlin Union was annexed, there were 192 on outdoor relief, at a cost of £403 7s. 6d. When Gorlin Union was annexed in 1890 we had 167 on outdoor relief; I don't think Gorlin swelled it so much, for they are pretty cautious down there; the amount was £266. In 1898 it was £26, and £261 3s. 4d. In 1900, 290 paupers, at a cost of £1,833 4s. And in the two half-years previous to this £1,408 10s.; that shows a great increase.

5945. In your opinion the poverty is less?—Far less—with a decrease in population and so many of the old people dead and less in the country. The statistics show every ten years what we lose in population.

5946. The word destitution is a very strict word?—It is.

5947. Do you think it must be given on a less strict basis than destitution?—What we complain of is this—what is everybody's business is no one's. Since divisional ruling was abolished a great many try to get the most they can; I never did in all my life refuse a case, or was a party to refusing a case, where I believed they were destitute, in my own division or anybody else's.

5948. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—In the old Board of Guardians did you allow the Guardians for the electoral division making the claim to decide whether it should be given or not?—We gave them more discretionary power, and the other Guardians did not interfere so much; now it is different; if it was on the electoral division or even dispensary district it would not be as bad. The electoral division would be the best, but feeling that I would take the dispensary district. Another point I have not heard touched on, and that is what should be the period for chargeability on the electoral division, or dispensary district; formerly three years out of five would make it chargeable on the electoral division; it was varied several times; we would require to fix a basis in the event of going back to the old rating; that, almost every witness, admits is fair; we would like to know what is fair to make them chargeable.

5949. CHAIRMAN.—Those that advocate going back to the electoral division might not like going back to the law of chargeability as it was at the time the change was made?—I think it would give a lot of trouble, because it would require to have one almost living a long time there. I think six months' residence in a dispensary or electoral district should make them chargeable.

5950. That is very short?—If you go for longer it will give a great deal of trouble in getting up the evidence.

5951. The reason you suggest that is that you are afraid if you had a longer qualifying period the change would be a union charge?—That would be one of my reasons, and then the difficulty of finding it out. Now the papers would not give us the facts when fixing it on the old chargeability.

5952. You are aware, being so long connected with it, there have been a great many changes in the chargeability?—That was a point none of the witnesses touched on, and I thought that was an omission.

5953. They all thought they should go back to the old state of things?—If you took six months or one month, or a year or three years; but something that could be got at that would be far the best.

5954. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—What would you think of a county rate for Poor Law purposes?—Over the whole county?

5955. Yes?—Then I think you might abolish a good many of the Guardians; I am an advocate for doing away with them to half. I find we have eighty-one or eighty-seven, and it is unworkable. They don't take the same interest as if one was left single to represent a division.

5956. CHAIRMAN.—You think it is difficult to do business when there is a full meeting?—It is possible to do business, but it is unworkable.

5957. Dr. BURNHAM.—It is a loss of time to the representative himself?—When the Act was framed first there was no intention of having more than one for each electoral division; it was Major Gordonson proposed it; it is only a name; it will give no representation except in a few instances. In this union, if forty-four could not manage it, I don't know how it could be managed at all.

5958. CHAIRMAN.—There are some Boards of Guardians much larger than yours?—I met a gentleman from Wicklow, and he told me they had eighty-six also.

5959. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—Suppose three workhouses out of six were abolished, would you put anything in their place for the accommodation of the sick?—I think it would be a very convenient thing to have a hospital.

5960. CHAIRMAN.—You heard Dr. Thompson's evidence?—There was a lot of his evidence I could not follow.

5961. About the removal of the sick?—I heard of that.

5962. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—The doctor has very high notions?—Very; and I think if they were all followed it would double our rates.

5963. You think the doctor should go to the Treasury and not to the newspapers?—We should not depend altogether on the Treasury; we should pay a little consultation and get what was fair from the Treasury by fair means.

5964. You think there might be hardship in the case of a transportation of twenty or twenty-five men?—There might be, but there are far greater facilities for sending them now than formerly.

5965. CHAIRMAN.—I suppose you remember the time when they used to come in here in a cart and a feather-bed?—I do, and I was the first that proposed an ambulance; I thought that was terrible.

5966. Mr. MURNAGHAN.—You heard Dr. Fleming's evidence?—Yes, but not all.

5967. Do you agree with him in what he said about the method of appointments?—Oh, I don't think we can revert to that method of appointment at all.

5968. He suggested a committee?—A committee might not be much better than we have.

5969. You think as a rule the ordinary man does his business fairly well?—I think they do the best they can in any appointments made since I went there, except one or two nurses that did not turn out well.

5970. In the matter of nurses, it is pretty hard for an ordinary layman to judge?—It is, and except in the case of one nurse or an assistant, we had not any differences of opinion with Dr. Fleming at all except in one case; he had very little to complain of.

5971. What is your experience when the doctor asks for any improvement or change of a hospital character?—I see the board that is there now quite as willing, if not more willing, to comply with his request as the old board, and no obstacle put in the way. I never saw any suggestion put forward that was not granted.

5972. Have you any suggestions to make about tramps?—Very little; the same thing troubles them in all countries, and sometimes in England, and they do not do much more than we do. There were some suggestions put forward here that I would not entirely agree with. I think some of these tramps might be decent, honest, hard-working men, but the majority are the reverse. I think if there were a ticket for relief given by the police, and they were made go to the police barrack instead of to the relieving officer, it would have a good effect; and let the police question them. Now the arrangements are that a member of the police force comes in the morning before they are discharged, and I think it is putting the wrong end of the stick first. If they saw them coming in it would be far better, for the police informed me a few days ago that about one-third of the tramps that come into the house are either drunk or under the influence of drink, and I think if the police saw them the evening before their admission it would be much better. If they went for the ticket first they might not come in. This could be worked out very easily, for in every town where there is a workhouse there is a police barrack, and it would be far easier to meet a member of the force at the barrack than probably the relieving officer, who might be on other duties, and it would be no hardship on the applicants.

5973. Mr. MADDON.—You were present at the board meeting when the resolution in favour of amalgamation was passed?—I was.

Mr. CHARLES CLARKE examined.

5974. CHAIRMAN.—We are hoping to hear from you how the amalgamation of Gortin Union acted on the divisions that used to make up Gortin Union?—It acted most favourably.

5975. Did you take any notes of it in a business way yourself?—No; I just practically know it from work.

5976. How did it act in regard to the rates?—It took on an average 4d. off the 5s; some years it might be more off and other years not so much.

5977. That was, I suppose, very largely owing to your small valuation under the old system and the large valuation in the new union?—I think the rates were saved very much by the cutting down of officials.

5978. Their pensions are still existing?—They are, but we made them as small as we could, and that was a considerable saving. We did not send very many paupers to Omagh; it is doubtful if there are half a dozen.

5979. A good number went; I was there the day they arrived, and there was a large number went up to Omagh?—There was.

5980. They don't go now as much as they used to?—Not at all.

5981. You give them outdoor relief instead?—I think the outdoor relief is about the same. When we find there is a fit case we give it, and sometimes they may show it, but in the meantime until we find it is so when we don't take it off, but as soon as we find there 5974. And it was carried by twenty-one votes to three?—With reference to rating, I would first go on the electoral division, and in the event of the majority not agreeing with that, the dispensary district.

5975. CHAIRMAN.—That is what you said already?—I have to add something to that with regard to sanitary works.

5976. We have nothing to do with that?—We have to find out how many cess and poor rates—that we have always paid—now they are collected together; they have all got the same of poor rate; nothing appears to be levied now for any purpose but poor rate. I think it rather a stigma on Ireland to say that we are levying poor rate all the time, and no other rate; why should it not be called district rate or county rate; you would think we were a nation of paupers. I would suggest that we change it to county rate or district rate.

5977. Mr. MADDON.—You must go into Parliament to alter that?—I don't see why it was done.

5978. CHAIRMAN.—It is a long story, Mr. Clarence?—I suppose it is, but I hope there will be a change yet.

is a penny spent wrongfully we take it off. There are a lot of summers, but there are a lot of things that are not true when you go to the bottom of them.

5987. Mr. MADDON.—You know some of the inmates of the Gortin Union who did not come to Omagh?—I did; some of them did not enter a workhouse since; you see the place was handy, and when it was handy they would slip in back and forwards.

5988. CHAIRMAN.—And a nice homely management?—Yes; and when the house was taken away they went to work.

5989. Mr. MADDON.—And you think it would probably have the same effect if some of the other smaller unions were closed up?—I believe it would, for it pains the locality to have the workhouses out of it. So far as the removal of the sick poor is concerned there is portion of the union thirteen or fourteen miles from Omagh, and there is no complaint at all. If a pauper wants to be removed I send a note as here to Omagh and they send out the ambulance; it is no inconvenience at all or hardship; in fact not easy come; very few indeed. I would be strongly in favour of cutting down the number of unions to area two in Tyrone; well, three would do simply, and in the course of a few years two, and in time only one will be necessary.

5990. CHAIRMAN.—You would always want some place for the sick?—Undoubtedly.

Mr. JOHN GORMLEY examined.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I can scarcely add anything to what has been already said with regard to the Omagh Union.

5991. CHAIRMAN.—You heard Mr. Outhurst's statement?—Yes, and also the doctor's, the County Council, and a couple of J.P.s, and it is behind time for me to make any remarks at all.

5992. You are in favour of amalgamation?—Yes; I was deputed by the board to express my views on that point.

5993. How many workhouses do you think you would close?—I agree to a great extent with Mr. Clarke that the nearer they are to the door of the workhouse the more ready they are to go in. For instance, Castleblayney is much like Gortin, it is middling mountainous, and I believe the same thing would apply there in a few years that applies to Gortin; they would not know anything at all about a workhouse nearby, and the saving of the upkeep of the other union would mean a saving of the rates; but then I heard Dr. Thompson's elaborate report, showing that these hospitals would cost up all our savings.

5994. You would be afraid of that?—I would.

5995. Mr. MADDON.—What do you think of the doctor's proposals?—I am sure, from his point of view, they are very good no doubt; he is always a kind man to the sick and the poor, but the ratepayers have to be considered, and he knows very little about the difficulties the people who represent them have to contend with when the rates go up, and this new staff of governors, if they were deputed to come in between the elected ratepayers and the ratepayers themselves, and be lavish with the rates, I am sure things would not work very sweetly.

5996. CHAIRMAN.—You think the ratepayers would not be satisfied?—They would not; they have full confidence in the man who represents them.

5997. They think the Poor Law is administered economically at present?—I have heard no complaints.

5998. Even regarding the outdoor relief?—Some complaints that people get it that don't deserve it, but it is very hard to draw the line. In our district we only give it to the destitute, or where the bread-winner of a family is knocked down we give it temporarily.

5999. Dr. BROOME.—Are you frequently in the workhouse hospital?—Yes.

6000. How often have you visited it in the last year?—It is the standing rule that the clerk summons us in turn—five or six to visit monthly. My month was July, but being on a number of committees I have occasion to visit it more frequently. For the last twelve months I had occasion to be in the hospital once a month on one committee or another, even in the fever hospital of late.

Oct. 29, 1905.
Mr. Robert B. Clements.

Mr. Charles
Clarke.

Mr. John
Gormley.

Oct. 29, 1903.
 Mr. John
 Gurnley.

6001. Is that a rule with the Guardians to visit so often?—No; the rule is that in their turn the clerk sends them notice to come, and that committee when summoned does attend.

6002. Where do they attend?—They meet an hour earlier on a board morning.

6003. In the clerk's office?—Yes; and inspect the whole house—hospital and all.

6004. Do they go round the hospital and inquire what is necessary?—Any committee I was over on we did, and if there were any complaints we were anxious to hear them from the patients.

6005. CHAIRMAN.—Of course the doctor and nurses go with you and call attention to whatever they think necessary to look after?—Yes.

6006. Dr. RUSSELL.—Did the doctor ever accompany you?—He did; I was a couple of seasons around with him with regard to the enlargement of the hospital, and on other occasions we had the assistant doctor several times; we always called upon him if we thought his assistance was useful, and he kindly consented to give his assistance.

6007. Mr. MURPHY.—You heard Dr. Fleming's evidence here to-day; do you agree with what he said as regards the method of management of the present body?—No; I was rather surprised.

6008. In your experience have not the recommendations of the doctor been generally carried out?—As far as possible. I am there at forty or fifty out of the fifty-two board meetings; I have missed very few meetings, and I never yet heard any complaint or remarks passed when the supplies of the hospital were asked for, whether the doctor was lavish or not; there was no complaint; the doctor and the board pull well together; I never saw any reason for him to complain.

6009. And when the visiting committee go through the house and any improvements are asked for, is it not customary for the visiting committee to make a report as to the desirability of having these requisitions complied with?—Yes.

6010. How does the report be received by the Guardians?—It is always carried out except it was some very elaborate report at enormous cost, which, I suppose it is in the memory of gentlemen sitting here, there was one such report; that has not been carried out yet; that was for the enlargement of the hospital, which was going to cost £2500 or £3000.

6011. As far as you knew, as a Guardian and a regular visitor to the institution, how is the house conducted at present, and how do you think the officers perform their duties?—I have been there now for thirteen years, and I am almost sure the inmates are as well cared for and the house is as well conducted as ever it was. I never heard any complaints or my paper complaining that any officer was asked to bark, and, for Dr. Thompson, I might also state I heard people who got in a terrible time with Dr. Fleming in the workhouse hospital, and also with Dr. Thompson in the county infirmary, say they were far more satisfied with the treatment they got under Dr. Fleming's care than in the Tyone infirmary, and the cost was only half.

6012. Patients that had been in the infirmary and in the workhouse hospital, and they said the treatment in the workhouse hospital was better than in the infirmary?—Yes, as far as food is concerned; I am not talking of medical attendance.

6013. That is the Guardians' part of the business; that is what I wanted to get at, because we heard Dr. Thompson speak rather harshly about the management of the workhouses of the country; he did not indicate enough particularly, but the workhouses throughout the land; he said they were disgracefully managed. From your experience of the house, are the people not fairly comfortable?—Yes.

6014. Are they not as well off as labourers in the country outside as far as food and clothes and firing are concerned?—As far as food and heating and comforts, they are far superior to many labourers.

CHAIRMAN.—I think Dr. Thompson excluded the infirmaries from his remarks.

6015. Mr. MURPHY.—But I ask Mr. Gurnley as regards the body of the house. How do you think the inmates are treated as regards food and clothing and firing?—A great portion of the inmates of the house are far too well treated. I suppose in the recollection of a great many here about four or five years ago we improved the treatment there; I think they got better twice a week to their dinner, which is a great improvement; I was one of the committee that recommended that. I may also add that was on Dr. Fleming's recommendation, and we carried it out, even though we knew it put an additional cost on the ratepayers. My experience always was that the doctor was taken as supreme judge, and we always conceded as far as possible to his views and wants.

6016. Mr. MADDEN.—Would you be in favour of continuing union rating?—There is a difference of opinion on that; dispensary district rating, I think, would be no harm. I believe it causes more hardship on the District Council than on the Board of Guardians with regard to it, so I don't think I can express an opinion on that.

The sitting terminated.

FOURTEENTH PUBLIC SITTING,—WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 11TH, 1903. Nov. 11, 1903.

At the Courthouse, Enniskillen.

Present:—Mr. MICKS (Chairman), Mr. MURFAGHAN, and Dr. COVE BIGGER.

Mr. John Muldoon, B.L. (instructed by Mr. J. F. Ward), appeared for Enniskillen Rural District No. 2; and (instructed by Mr. Walsley) appeared for Lismakee Guardians.

Mr. C. Dransfield, B.L. (instructed by Mr. M. E. Knight), appeared for Clonoe Guardians.

CHAIRMAN.—Gentlemen, the main object of this Commission is to inquire and report whether any, and what, administrative and financial changes are desirable in order to secure a more economical system under the Poor Laws for the relief of the sick, the insane, and all classes of the destitute poor in Ireland without impairing efficiency of administration. Various questions are involved in such an inquiry; for instance, the dissolution of Poor Law Unions, the alteration of boundaries in various areas, the provision of auxiliary lunatic asylums, the better classification of the insane, sick, healthy, and children, the means of dealing with casuals or tramps, the erection of additional hospitals in some locality remote from existing hospitals, the best methods of obtaining payments or contributions from such patients as may be able to defray the cost of their treatment, either wholly or in part, together with various other questions of interest and importance. The usual course the Commission takes is to examine, in the first instance, the Chairman of the County Council, or some leading witness on behalf of the County Council, and if the Chairman of the County Council of Fermanagh is in attendance we shall be glad to examine him.

Mr. JEREMIAH JORDAN, M.P., examined.

6017. CHAIRMAN.—At present there are three Poor Law Union Workhouses situated within the boundaries of the County Fermanagh—Irvinestown, Enniskillen, and Lismakee—and there are two other parts of the County Fermanagh, situated in other unions—part of Clonoe and part of Ballyshannon, the Belleek district. As far as your knowledge goes, do you think any of the unions in the county could be broken up and other arrangements made for dealing with the sick poor?—Well, sir, without any prejudice whatever against any of the unions, I am, generally, for amalgamation on the basis of economy, and any observations that I have to make will be on an economical basis mainly, but also upon efficiency as well as economy.

6018. You think it would be possible in the County Fermanagh to have a smaller number of workhouses?—I think it would, sir; that is my present conviction.

6019. And if any workhouses were closed for Poor Law purposes what would you suggest might be done with the disarmed workhouses?—Well, before leaving the other point, I would like to say that the County Fermanagh is a small county, and I think if unions were broken up at all the area should be coterminous with the county, with one exception, that is the addition of the eight divisions in the County Cavan that under peculiar circumstances—very peculiar circumstances—were continued at the passing of the Local Government Act, and in opposition to the vote of the Board of Guardians in the Union of Enniskillen. The circumstances came up before the House of Commons, and under very strong pressure your board consented that for convenience sake and all the matters stated in the memorial that went to your board, that these eight divisions should remain connected with the Union of Enniskillen, and I would say that the county and those eight divisions, with various adjustments, ought to be amalgamated as one area.

6020. One union the entire county?—The entire county with those additional divisions; that would be Enniskillen No. 2 Rural District.

6021. The county with district No. 2 added to it should be one Poor Law area?—Yes; the boundary of the union should be coterminous with the county, with the addition of those eight divisions; that will be able to make a very special claim. They did make a very special claim before you and before the House of Commons, and will be able now to make a very special claim before this Commission.

6022. What are the grounds on which you suggest that these eight Cavan divisions should be continued with Enniskillen Poor Law Union?—Well, Mr. Micks,

I would prefer if you could get the petition that was sent to the Local Government Board at the passing of the Local Government Act of 1898; if you could get that by any means you have stated there much more fully the justifiable ground that caused you to add these to the Enniskillen Union contrary to the vote of the Enniskillen Guardians.

6023. That is not to remove them from the Enniskillen Union?—Not to remove them, because they have been in connection with Enniskillen Union since the Poor Law came into operation.

6024. That proposal of yours would involve the closing of Irvinestown and Lismakee Workhouses?—the workhouses.

6025. Have you any suggestion to make as to what should be done with those workhouses if they were dissolved?—I have not at the moment any distinct plan to lay before you, but plans or suggestions might arise in the development. I think it would be wrong to hurry, until some development would take place, to try to find some occupation for these, just for the sake of finding occupation for them, until matters would develop, and some for which they could be used. But at the present time my impression is that the Lismakee Workhouse might be turned into an auxiliary asylum.

6026. For Omagh?—an auxiliary asylum for the Counties Fermanagh and Tyrone; for the harmless idiots of those two counties; and also that the hospital might remain for the sick at the Lismakee Union.

6027. Then you would only close the workhouse so far as it related to the able-bodied and infirm; you would not close it for the sick?—I would not close Lismakee Workhouse for the sick at all, and if possible I should make it an auxiliary asylum, that is always having in view economy.

6028. Do you think there could be any economy in that; in using the entire building for another purpose, how would you effect any economy?—That is certainly a matter of calculation—of pounds, shillings, and pence. Assuming that these harmless idiots will not be permitted to remain in workhouses, I believe it would be economical to put them there rather than to send them to Omagh.

6029. They would occupy the main block of the workhouse—the sick would be in the present infirmary and the fever hospital patients would be in the fever hospital I suppose?—Yes; that is assuming that harmless idiots must leave the workhouse, as I think it ultimately will be, for they are not well treated in the workhouses.

Mr. Jeremiah Jordan.

Nov. 11, 1903

Mr. Jeremiah
Jordan.

5030. What reduction in the Poor Law staff would you make owing to such changes as that?—I could not tell you.

5031. You would not want the clerk of the union?—No; I don't know that you would want the master.

5032. You would want some similar officers?—You would want some similar officers—both male and female attendants at any rate.

5033. Unless you had only one sex there?—That opens another question that the other sex might go somewhere else, but a friend of mine has a theory which seems justifiable that about one of these ill-considered asylums would be sufficient for the North of Ireland without making an auxiliary asylum in each county. However that is a matter of detail, and he will give it to you himself when he comes up.

5034. Then you have not gone into the question of pounds, shillings, and pence as to what might be the money position?—No, I have not; my view at the present time is more for efficiency and classification than the money question.

5035. What would you do then with the various classes, the aged and infirm we will say, of Lismacul and Levestown; they would come into Enniskillen Workhouse?—They would come in here or wherever the central place would be.

5036. Enniskillen, I believe, would be the centre?—I suppose it would be for the Local Government Board to settle that, and I think it would settle itself.

5037. Then as regards the women who come in with illegitimate children, that class?—I cannot tell you what you would do with them.

5038. They would come in similarly to the central institution?—Oh, of course, if you could not devise some other remedy they should come in similarly.

5039. You have no other attachment in contemplation?—I have not. I heard it suggested—but it is not my idea, so I need not detail it.

5040. What is it?—I heard it suggested that these women might be handed over to the care of charitable communities.

5041. Penitentiaries?—That these women might be handed over to penitentiaries of different denominations, where ladies would take charge of them, and reduce the immorality, and I heard it also suggested that in proper time the children should be taken from these people and boarded out, as we board out orphans now.

5042. What is your experience of boarding out children?—We are very much in favour of boarding out children at Enniskillen Workhouse, and we have boarded out all the available children.

5043. Under the existing law?—Yes; and I am for boarding out children.

5044. Do you see any objection to getting the law stretched so as to include other classes, say people whom the Guardians might not think proper people to have charge of children; would you give them sanction?—I have no objection to stretch the law so far as to enable us to board out children to the utmost extreme, because I think they get incorporated in society and become better members of the community.

5045. You have not much outdoor relief in Enniskillen Union?—Comparatively little; the clerk of the union can tell you, but relatively, I think, in other places it is very small, and I think the tendency is to keep it small.

5046. On what general lines do you deal with applications for outdoor relief?—All I can say is, as a member of the board, that when an outdoor relief case is brought up by the relieving officer some Guardian that knows it will advocate it, and it is generally discussed; in fact I don't think there is anything at the board so much discussed with us as outdoor relief.

5047. What class of cases do you give outdoor relief to?—The people who are living in small cottages—isolated poor people, old people.

5048. Are they people who are not capable of being removed to the workhouse owing to their health?—I believe they might be; I believe that the workhouse after all would be probably healthier and a better place for them from a sanitary point of view than where they live, but they have an objection to come in—some old people—and we respect that objection.

5049. You don't adopt the test that some unions adopt and say to the destitute, "If you want relief you will have to take it in the workhouse unless a doctor certifies you are not fit for removal."—We used to do that in the Enniskillen Union, but we are not doing that now; at the same time I think we are exercising a fair discretion, not to be too rigid; I think the other test was too rigid, and did not leave any room for any sympathy or charity whatever. Before you go any further the question of representation would come up, and if there was amalgamation and the present representation remains I think it would be unwieldy; we would have to build a hall for them if they came here; that is one thing that stands in the way of amalgamation, except you are able to remedy that by legislation.

5050. To what extent would you reduce the representation?—The representation under those circumstances would surely bear to be reduced one half; in fact it ought never to be more than one half, but some friends in the House of Commons thought it would be desirable to give the various sections of the community a chance to get in. They proposed it and it was accepted by the Government, and was not seriously opposed, but it was felt all round that the representation was nearly too many; it was doubled, and I think it is unwieldy, and it would be much more unwieldy if there was amalgamation; there really would have to be legislation in reference to that, or an amendment of the Local Government Act.

5051. You would suggest simply that you should go back to the old one-member constituency; I take that to be your suggestion?—No; my suggestion is that it should be reduced to half, but then the question of the area of representation comes up.

5052. The electoral division?—I heard it suggested that dispensary districts should be the area for taxation or representation.

5053. Or both?—Well, I am not in favour of taxation by small areas; I don't know how it would work out; we should have so many representatives, say from each dispensary district; I don't know how that would work out, but I think it would reduce the numbers; that would be advisable. Then as to the area of taxation, I am not in favour of that; I am in favour of the widest area for taxation possible.

5054. Would you go to the extent of a county rate or even a rate over the whole country?—I am at present in favour of union rating, as we have, for all purposes, and if I was asked to choose between the two I would take county rating and vote for it, and if it was a matter over the whole country I would vote for that again in preference. I go for the widest possible area of taxation.

5055. On what ground would you go for such a wide area as the entire country of Ireland?—I think it would assist the needy portions—the poor portions—by those which are richer and not in need at all.

5056. If it were thought that would be going a little too far and that the locality ought to have some check on its expenditure, would you think it a prudent thing to have a certain portion of the expenditure paid out of a county or country rate and the remainder charged on a particular area?—Such as outdoor relief?

5057. Whatever it may be?—What would the portion be that would be on a restricted area?

5058. I have no portion in my mind; it might be a fourth or a half of the entire expenditure without distinguishing between any class of expenditure, so as to make the local people have direct personal interest in economy—I don't know why they should have so very much less interest as to make them careless. I think any man taking a public position ought to discharge it to the best of his ability, whether it is local or whether it is on a wider range, and so far as I am concerned, except there would be enormous pressure brought to bear upon me, as sometimes there is, except that I would discharge my own duties as well as I possibly could, irrespective of whether it was local or not.

5059. Indubitably, but sometimes human nature is weak!—Sometimes we are not very strong.

5060. Do you think there ought to be anything to strengthen one a bit?—So far as my present expression goes, unless I see to the contrary, I would not be in favour of that.

5061. You would rather have the wide area?—Yes; but I may be wrong. I am not giving the opinion of the County Council, it is only my own personal opinion. There are gentlemen here belonging to the County Council who may have different views, and they have as good a right to their views as I have. Then I think the idea, both the men and women, ought to be out of the workhouse, for on my visits to the workhouse I did not think the state of the harmless idiots was satisfactory; I don't think they are properly superintended, and they ought to go to Omagh for the two counties, and then I suppose there would have to be buildings erected for between 300 and 500 people at a cost of £30,000 or £40,000, and County Fermanagh built at any rate it has paid enough to Omagh without building. And when we have a place like Lisnaskea or Irvinestown, if the cost would be the same there as it would be at Omagh, and you would save the building of a house, it would be better to send them to one of those places. I think so, but, of course, this is subject to shinking oak.

6052. There are just your personal views at present?—Then the sick; as far as I see it would be very difficult to remove the sick of any class, say from near Clones, Newtownbutler, or near Belleek; it would be difficult to remove them by train.

6053. At present they come to the county infirmary, and there is no ambulance connected with the county infirmary?—No.

6054. They are generally people who can travel by train?—Very often they are of the better class.

6055. And they come in a vehicle of their own or hired?—But no contagious diseases go to the county infirmary. I think if you could utilize the hospitals in connection with any disused workhouses—you have the dispensary doctor there, and the addition of a nurse or two would save the poor from being brought down to the central place—if it would not cost more than at present.

6056. We have had medical testimony of a very high quality to the fact that patients could be removed, say twenty-five miles, in a good ambulance as easily as they can be removed fifteen?—That is a question I could not go into; that is a question for yourself; but if there were any inconvenience whatever in removing them, as there seems not to be now from what you say, I would say that it would be better to utilize the hospitals connected with those other places.

6057. The existing hospitals?—Yes; if it would not cost more than it costs now. Anything that would be in the interests of the poor, and efficient without excessive cost, I would be favourable to.

6058. Mr. McMAHON.—You say that on general principles you believe that a county should be self-contained in the matter of the administration of the relief of the poor?—I did not say that; I only said that one county being a small county.

6059. Perhaps I should have said your own county; we are dealing with Fermanagh now; on general principles you say that the county should be self-contained?—Now, in the state of the population and facility for conveying.

6070. And you think one workhouse in the county would be sufficient for the needs of the poor?—I think it would.

6071. You think there should be some place in these deserted workhouses for the care of the sick?—I do.

6072. Do you think now that there would be no injury to the poor by the abandoning of some of the houses in the county; by the giving up, for instance, of Irvinestown and Lisnaskea?—I don't think there would be any injury to the poor.

6073. There would be no difficulty in the way of locomotion getting the people sent to Enniskillen?—There is a railway running through the whole county from Clones on the one hand to Ballyshannon on the other.

6074. So that there would be no difficulty from that point of view. And instead of tramping ten or twelve miles these poor people should be sent by train.

6075. Do you think the Enniskillen Union is sufficiently large to accommodate the whole county as a workhouse?—I think the Enniskillen Workhouse was built for a larger number at first, and accommodated a larger number at first, than you would have in the whole county now.

6076. As regards the homeless lunatic, you think that if it would not be any additional cost it would be better to have an auxiliary asylum than to send them to the lunatic asylum at Omagh?—I think, in the first place, it would be better to have them separated from the workhouse and from the poor, and sent somewhere—the only somewhere they could be sent to would be Omagh or an auxiliary asylum—and I think an auxiliary asylum would be cheaper.

6077. You know if they were sent to Omagh additional buildings would have to be erected at an additional cost of money; the house at Omagh is already full?—You and I know that from being members of the committee.

6078. The Chairman asked you if you had gone into the cost of an auxiliary asylum as compared with that in the asylum; I suppose you would not be able to do that, because you could not fix the staff that would be necessary?—No; the observations I make are subject to this contingency.

6079. It is only medical experts that could tell the staff and what would be the requirements of an auxiliary asylum?—Quite so.

6080. And until that was known it would be hard for any ordinary man to make a calculation as to the cost?—I make no calculation; there are general opinions of my own, and, as I say, to be regulated by efficiency and economy.

6081. But still if the auxiliary asylum could be managed at a cost no greater than that in the lunatic asylum you would prefer the auxiliary asylum?—I think so.

6082. You think it is not well to have a great number of people together if it could possibly be avoided?—For the people we have—the idlers, both male and female—in Enniskillen, I think they would be as well in an auxiliary asylum, and if you take into account the extra buildings we would have to erect at a cost of £30,000 or £40,000. The County Fermanagh has spent far too much on buildings in the same asylum. I think they would be as well, if not better, in an auxiliary asylum, whether that would be a county asylum or whether one of two or three for the province of Ulster; that is a matter of detail, and I am not fixed to any principle in relation to the merits of these two.

6083. As regards the boarding out of children, you are in favour of that?—I am in favour of boarding out the children and getting them incorporated in the community, and I am in favour of dressing them like other people's children and sending them out to school without any distinctive badge of pauperism on them.

6084. You have a comparatively large number of children in the Enniskillen Union at present; how does that happen?—I suppose the parents are there, and we cannot board out the children without the consent of their parents.

6085. I am informed there are a number of orphans still in your house?—I suppose they are not of age yet.

6086. Have you an age limit?—We have; the Chairman of the Board of Guardians is here, and he is so efficient that I reply—"Don't tax my mind with anything that comes into his sphere; he will be able to give you clearer evidence on that than I can."

6087. Mr. Dromgoole.—You have said that, with regard to Fermanagh at any rate, you think the boundaries of the union should be coterminous with the boundary of the county; you know, of course, the district of Rosslea?—Well, I know something about it.

6088. You know where it lies?—I do, right well.

6089. And that is in the Clones Union?—Yes.

6090. And I think I am right in saying that Rosslea is about eight miles from Clones?—I don't know; I have driven it several times, and it is a pretty long journey; that is all I know.

6091. Clones is the town to which the Rosslea people would naturally go on an appeal to Enniskillen?—I think it is their market town.

6092. Enniskillen would be up to twenty or thirty miles away from it according to the part of the district you take?—Yes, it would; but I would not consider it more than eight miles, because if they get to Clones it would be very easy coming down on the train.

6093. That is the Rosslea people could get to Enniskillen conveniently by first going to Clones and then taking the train, which is something under an hour; do you think it would be very easy to get the people from the district of Rosslea to serve as Poor Law Guardians in Enniskillen?—I don't suppose it would, but we have them serving in Enniskillen at a greater inconvenience than that.

6094. But you think it would be easier to get them to serve in Clones than in Enniskillen?—It would be easier, of course.

6095. It would add considerably to the expenditure of time and of their own private means in doing the journey you speak of?—Yes.

6096. You spoke of Lisnaskea and suggested that that should be discontinued as a workhouse; it should be used as an auxiliary asylum?—And hospital.

6097. Of course it would be necessary in any building you would turn to this purpose; it would be very important that there should be a proper sanitary system and water supply?—Yes.

Nov 11, 1900.

Mr. Jeremiah Jordan.

Nov. 11, 1903.

Mr. Jeremiah Jordan

6089. And, of course, if those did not exist it would be almost a necessary part of turning it to this purpose that money should be expended in doing so?—If it did not exist, do you mean the water?

6090. I mean a proper water supply and proper sanitary arrangements in the place?—I don't know whether you want to apply that to Lismuckish or not, because I was at Lismuckish Workhouse the other day and I saw a very efficient pump going to pump the water to the house, and I was talking to the chairman of the board, and he said Lismuckish is probably one of the most sanitary places in Fermanagh.

6100. Are there any sanitary arrangements inside?—I don't know.

6101. If there were no sanitary arrangements inside that would be one reason, to a large extent, why the place should be discontinued?—That I would take it that under the efficient chairman they have—

6102. They would spend the money in doing it, I have no doubt. Did you notice the motive power that drove the pump?—I did.

6103. What was it?—It was a donkey and one of those harmless Riels.

6104. Mr. Alderson.—I believe Lismuckish is in the centre of your own division which you have the honour to represent in Parliament?—Yes, it is.

6105. And you know the district extremely well?—I ought to know it; I was reared in that part.

6106. I am sure I am right in saying that you have not consulted them before giving your evidence here to-day?—I think I should not be compelled to submit my personal opinions to them.

6107. You are aware, of course, that in Lismuckish there is a very strong idea that they should remain the centre of a workhouse system?—They have as good a right to their idea as I have to mine, but I have told the Commission that I am giving nothing but my private opinion, and you should not subject my private opinion to political influences of that sort.

6108. I should not like to?—The very moment our friends in Lismuckish or elsewhere like they have a remedy with me; they have only to get rid of me, do you see, and I would not have the slightest objection to anything they do, for they are very respectable people, and considerate, and I will not object to any course they take.

6109. Would you be in favour of the Enniskillen Union absorbing the portion of Irvinestown, that is in the County Fermanagh, and that portion of Ballyshannon that is in this county?—I would; that is theoretically, without having any idea of it.

6110. And you think in the peculiar circumstances of these eight electoral divisions in Cavan they must continue to come to Enniskillen?—I think they are forced by the Act of Parliament and the Local Government Board in their adjournment of the union in harmony with the Act of Parliament; I think they are forced to come here.

6111. When you take these additional burdens on Enniskillen and retain that portion of Cavan, don't you think Enniskillen is fairly well off?—It is not a matter of well off; it is how you make these divisions well off.

6112. Do you think it is competent to take on any more?—I think it is quite competent by readjustment and classification; we would not be taking on so many more as would appear on the books now if there were a readjustment and redistribution of the different classes.

6113. Lismuckish Union is situated on the top of a hill—the workhouse and the infirmary?—Yes.

6114. Has it not always been regarded as a model workhouse and a healthy situation?—I have told you I have heard from the chairman that it is one of the healthiest places in Fermanagh, and I have nothing to put against that.

6115. And its district comprises all the islands in the Upper Lake?—I could not tell you that; I would think some of the islands in the Upper Lake might go to Cavan, but I am not certain. Is it all Upper Lake from Enniskillen to Belleek?

6116. And the union workhouse is situated near the lake?—It is.

6117. Would you think it convenient or possible to make such arrangements for the transit of the sick poor to Enniskillen, or paupers, taking them from these islands?—Once they got to the mainland they would be all right, the difficulty is getting out of the islands. I was up at Belleekwater the other day in connection with this question, and I was sympathizing deeply with the people in the islands.

6118. Would it not make a great difference if they had, in addition to coming off the island, to go twenty-five miles to Enniskillen?—It is only about eight or nine miles from Enniskillen to Lismuckish.

6119. Does not the Union of Lismuckish go four miles on the other side of Enniskillen, and it is ten miles from Lismuckish here?—It is nine miles by road.

6120. It is twenty-five miles long?—I don't know that; where do you put in the twenty-five miles.

6121. From Cavan; do you know the Cavan electoral division; how far do you think that is from Enniskillen?—I don't know; can anybody tell from Lismuckish to Cavan how far it is; it is a matter I have no knowledge of.

6122. Do you suggest that these people have any connection with Enniskillen; do they come to markets or fairs here?—Paupers don't want to come to markets or fairs.

6123. But the Guardians who represent the paupers?—A great number of them, I think, would be in the fair yesterday.

6124. And you think that because you have a fair in Enniskillen once a month and that you have here?—No, no; you are shirking that.

6125. Have they not a fair in Lismuckish once a month?—I go to it sometimes; several of us go there.

6126. Except, Mr. Jordan, that you have a fair in Enniskillen once a month and that the representative lives in Enniskillen; have they any other connection with this town?—Several of them come here to do business from time to time; why, there is scarcely a man in that district but occasionally comes to Enniskillen to do business.

6127. Do you suggest to the Commission that if they were connected with the Enniskillen Union they would be frequent attendants at Board meetings in Enniskillen?—No, I do not suggest that, because we have plenty of people here within a very short space of Enniskillen that don't attend, so it would be no security for them not to attend when the people at our doors don't attend; you sometimes can hardly get a quorum.

6128. As regards the attendances at board meetings the destruction of Lismuckish would not work out well?—I could not tell that.

6129. As regards the eight divisions of the County Cavan which still propose to come to Enniskillen, this is a very poor district?—It is poor, but it is not so poor after all; here for a long time they paid no rent at all, and then when they came to buy out their land they got it very cheap, and while apparently the country is very bad they are not so badly off as in other places.

6130. It is a mountain district?—It is indeed, and you would not live in it if you got it for nothing.

6131. Is it not so situated between two mountain ranges that it is almost impossible to get to Banbury at all except through one gap?—Yes.

6132. Don't you go to the town of Ballyvaughan, which is the Quarter Sessions town near Banbury?—I have been at Ballyvaughan two or three times at Land League meetings, and that is all I know about it.

6133. You know, at all events, that in this district of Cavan they are numerous in coming to Enniskillen?—Am I not in favour of that too; because they are compelled—

6134. They are compelled by the geographical situation to come that way?—Yes; and it is their market town.

6135. In the event of Enniskillen Union absorbing these portions of Irvinestown and Ballyvaughan which are in this county, and keeping that portion of Cavan which still comes into this town, and in the event of Lismuckish being continued and taking in that portion of Cavan which comes into the County Fermanagh, don't you think that would be a very good arrangement, and that the County Fermanagh would be well off?—I don't look at it as all as to Enniskillen being well off or ill off.

6136. The County Fermanagh being well off?—I don't look at it in that light at all. I think for the purpose of economy and efficiency this amalgamation should take place, no matter where you have the workhouse.

6137. Amalgamation is the extent I suggest, would that satisfy you?—What is that?

6138. Enniskillen absorbing Irvinestown and Ballyvaughan, and retaining portion of Cavan, which now comes in, Lismuckish being preserved and taking in that portion of the County Union which comes into Fermanagh; would not that make the County Fermanagh fairly well off as regards Poor Law?—What do you mean by fairly well off; do you mean pecuniary advantage?

6139. That there would be no hardship inflicted on the sick poor; the Guardians would be able to attend to their duties, and Poor Law administration go on with efficiency and economy?—That is a matter of opinion, but my opinion is the other way.

6140. Will nothing satisfy you except the destruction of Lismacree?—I refuse to answer that, because that assumes that anything I have said would go to Mr. Jeremiah Jordan.
 It to me. I have no interest in destroying any place, much less Lismacree.

Nov. 11, 1920
 Mr. Jordan

The Earl of BELMONT, P.C., Q.C.M.G., examined.

6141. CHAIRMAN.—For some time, Lord Belmont, you have been Chairman of the Enniskillen Board of Guardians?—I was a member of the Enniskillen Board of Guardians, I think, for about forty-two and a half years, from September, 1856, until the Local Government Act came into operation. At different times I filled all the chairs, and for about half the time, I think twenty-one years, I was chairman, but it is right to say there were two breaks in my time when I was not living in the county. But I was seventeen or eighteen years actually constantly attending as chairman, and I was, I think, three or four years vice-chairman before that, and at a very early period of the time for some time, I forget how long exactly, up to 1852 I was deputy vice-chairman, and therefore I know what went on then. I have not been a member of the board since the Local Government Act came in; therefore my knowledge does not embrace some things. I only heard Mr. Jordan mention one circumstance I was not aware of, and that was that they had abolished the rule with regard to outdoor relief, that there must be a medical certificate that the person was not fit to be removed; I don't think I knew that.

6142. You are familiar with the Poor Law conditions of the county generally?—With the centre of the county; this part of the county I certainly am.

6143. Have you formed any opinion on the question of the breaking up of any Poor Law unions?—Yes; I think an amalgamation would be advisable on the ground of economy, and I don't think there would be any inconvenience sufficiently great to counteract that advantage, but I don't quite follow Mr. Jordan in his suggestion as to how it should be done. If you will allow me I will tell you what I think might be done; I believe, I am not quite sure—I speak subject to correction—I believe the Banbury Union was not an original union.

6144. It was not; it was made in 1858?—It was formed out of Omeagh, before I was a member, and that probably was a reason why the Omeagh division came to Enniskillen. I know the country there; I have driven from Ballymacnall through Banbury to Down, and I cannot see the slightest difficulty why those eight divisions should not have been in the Banbury Union; there is a very good road over what they call the Gap—quite as good as many of the roads in our county—and it is a good deal nearer to Banbury than to Enniskillen, because the town of Down is twenty-two English miles from Enniskillen, and the Guardians of that part have to come twenty-two miles to get to Enniskillen.

6145. They come to Belmoe, I suppose?—They come to Belmoe; the poor probably have to walk and the others come by train. It is quite obvious they could not go to the Carrig Union, because they would be fifty miles, more or less, going there, but I think they might go to Banbury.

6146. But if Banbury were broken up?—I don't think it could be broken up. However that is not for me to say. I think it is so far from Carrig it would be necessary to keep Banbury. Then, with regard to the other side of the county, until 1859 we had one division that is now in Irvinestown in Enniskillen, Kilkenny Division, and I was told there are three County Tyrone divisions in Irvinestown. I don't think those could possibly go into the Omeagh Union, and if there was a breaking up of Irvinestown those four divisions must come to Enniskillen, but they would be better off even now than the Down people are. I would be inclined to put the whole of Irvinestown into Enniskillen. With regard to Ballymacnall Union I think the part that is in Fermanagh must remain with Ballymacnall; it would be more convenient for everybody it should. I don't see any difficulty in bringing Lismacree into Enniskillen. Lismacree Union comes within three-quarters of an hour's drive from Enniskillen—the nearest point—the town of Lismacree is only ten Irish miles; of course Carrig is further, fifteen Irish miles, but, even so, it would be nearer than Down at the present moment. I don't think you could take the Clones part of Fermanagh into Enniskillen—its ruin within a few miles of the town of Clones—and Clones being a rather important centre the union should still exist.

6147. Have you considered whether any general scheme of small district hospitals might not make it possible to break up some of the workhouses?—Well, I have not considered them in detail. I have a paper here that shows the accommodation in Enniskillen. Enniskillen has room for 855 persons, and I believe in the famine time, when we had a wooden auxiliary building, which has now been pulled down, but which I remember very well—not in operation, but standing on the ground—I was a member of the board; we took in a thousand people. And I find the total number on a daily average in all the five workhouses in Fermanagh, including portions of Ballymacnall and portions of Clones, is only 552. Therefore if we had them all we should still have 300 spare places in Enniskillen Workhouse. I see Lismacree could hold them also, but Irvinestown could not hold them all, but still I don't propose that you should take any part of Ballymacnall or Clones into Enniskillen, and that would take more than 200 off and bring it down only to 350 and something.

6148. Would you be in favour, Lord Belmont, of putting different classes or kinds of inmates into workhouses that might be closed as general workhouses; for instance, making a workhouse for the infirm at Irvinestown or Lismacree?—I have not considered the matter of the infirm.

6149. They are a very numerous class?—Yes; most of the people are infirm except the children, but I don't think they are many.

6150. There are a large number of children in Enniskillen at present?—I am told there are thirty-two, which does not seem a large number for this union, which, before you took Kilkenny off, was forty miles from end to end. With regard to your question I cannot give you any opinion as regards Lismacree, because I don't myself see what it could be used for.

6151. Suppose it might be used for infirm workhouse inmates?—If it was wanted.

6152. These people could be sent by train?—They could be sent easily enough; of course there is plenty of accommodation, and more than enough, in Enniskillen, but with regard to what has been said about harmless idiots I think it probably would be an advantage to have an overflow-house from Omeagh, just as in the County Dublin there is an overflow-house from Richmond Asylum, and I should suppose that the medical superintendent of the asylum would have charge of them; it would be necessary to have an assistant; there is an assistant now at Omeagh; always has been. It would be necessary to put an assistant in Irvinestown; I say Irvinestown, because it is nearer to the Omeagh Asylum.

6153. Some suggestions have been made to the Commission as to the possibility of boarding out aged infirm people?—Well, I never considered that matter. I never heard it suggested until your inquiry. Of course I have heard of children being boarded out.

6154. In some countries something has been done in the way of boarding out aged infirm people?—That is a new point.

6155. Do you think it would be a prudent or economical course?—No; I think some arrangement might be made, as is done in England, to allow married couples who are aged and infirm to spend a good deal of time together.

6156. They don't stay together very much?—I don't know; perhaps they don't wish to, but they can, I believe, if they do wish. I think they would be more comfortable than in some of the very inferior houses that they would have to live in if they were boarded out. I think the children are quite a different matter.

6157. Of course the cost of maintenance of an inmate in the workhouse at present is considerable, and they could be supported very much more cheaply by being boarded out?—That is a question I cannot form an

Nov. 11, 1905,
The Earl of Belmore.

oulion on. I see by this paper that the cost of maintaining inmates in Enniskillen is a good deal higher than it used to be. When I was that a member it did not exceed 2s. and something a week; now it is 3s. and something, and is sometimes 4s. and something.

6152. Taking the cost of maintenance under all heads, as you do when ascertaining the cost of a lunatic in Omagh and other asylums, the cost of a workhouse inmate would be £25 a year, more or less?—I should not have thought it would have been so much.

6153. That is merely for food the 4s. 6d.; the proper way to take the cost of an inmate is to take all the expenses of the establishment—salaries and everything else—and divide the expenses by the number of inmates?—If you want to get an average, it is; but in a private house, taking another person or two into a big house it makes very little difference; they share the servants and the house, and nearly everything but the food.

6154. But that is not the method adopted in an asylum; they take the entire cost?—I am not much given to statistics; I would rather not discuss them; I like talking about general principles.

6155. In the county infirmary here a great deal more is obtained by way of payment from patients than used to be the case?—I am not a member of the infirmary committee now; I have been an annual governor for a good many years. But I don't quite remember that very much was obtained in Enniskillen from the patients before the Local Government Act.

6156. Now a considerable sum is obtained?—There is perhaps a better system.

6157. I wish to ascertain your opinion whether you think it would be well to adopt a similar system elsewhere with a view to get as much recompense as could be obtained; at present the system in the infirmary is that people are asked to pay as much as they really can spare; a very poor person comes in or sends a child in, and that child will not cost a certain amount at home, and it was explained to me by some of the managing body of the infirmary that at least these people could pay what the child or person would cost at home?—That would be rather hard to ascertain.

6158. It would be; but even to the extent of 1s. a week, do you think it would be desirable to have local bodies entrusted with the power of assessing and fixing a sum which could be legally recovered, leaving it to the discretion altogether of the local bodies?—Do you mean the county infirmary or the workhouse infirmary?

6159. Both?—I don't see how the Board of Guardians could interfere with the county infirmary.

6160. Oh, no; with their own inmates?—I really never considered that question; I would rather not give an answer; that may be one of the things that has rather grown up since I was chairman of the board. I was not able to attend the board the last year I was chairman; I have not attended the board for about, I think, six years now.

6161. If people had to pay some little sum, don't you think it would take away out of their minds a good deal of the idea of pauper assistance?—Of course, if they have to pay they are not paupers.

6162. It would do away with that idea?—Yes; that would be an advantage.

6163. Was there any other point you would wish to mention?—Mr. Jordan made an observation I should like to say a word about. He suggested the mothers of illegitimate children should be boarded out in some way.

6170. Sent to penitentiaries?—I think that would be all very well in the case of the first time the woman came in, but I know something about an association in Dublin, the Protestant Girls' Aid Association, and I understand they make an absolute rule never to take a girl in a second time, and I dare say it is a very good rule, because if a girl knew she could come backwards and forwards, as in the workhouse, it would be an encouragement to her to lead so immoral life, but if she only came in once I think it would be very good to have her to go to some of these institutions under different religious denominations.

6171. Those who gave evidence in favour of that had the view that if they were taken the first time it would reclaim them?—I understand they get these situations when they have tested them a little while, and heard the children cry, and have them better educated than they would be in the workhouse.

6172. Do you know how it acts; have you any information as to how these girls turn out afterwards from that society?—I have not got any information as much about the girls; I got their report the other day.

I subscribe to the society. About the children—and it appears to be very successful as regards the children—they are not grouped together in a large establishment.

6173. That institution is in Dublin, and I dare say we shall get some evidence from it?—That institution is in Dublin.

6174. Mr. MURKIN.—You dropped a remark in connection with the Ramsey Union; perhaps you would not mind explaining why you think the Ramsey people should not go to Carran?—It is in the north of the County Cavan. I don't know Carran, but in former times—in the days before the railways—I had to traverse Carran going to Dublin, but I have known the north of Carran from Carran upwards, and I think that part too far from the town of Carran.

6175. Too far for the sick; but about workhouse inmates?—I cannot give evidence about that part of the county; I know it more from maps.

6176. Your remark would apply more to the sick than to the others?—It would apply to everybody; there is no railway connection between Ramsey and Carran without coming round here and by Flasscourt station.

6177. You heard Mr. Jordan's remark about rating, what would you think of his suggestion about an extension of the area of rating to the county?—I don't quite follow that.

6178. A question was put to him with regard to his view as to the area of rating and he said he would like to see the area as wide as possible?—I have very strong opinion one way or the other. We are union rating now, but before we had union rating I had to pay rates in two or three divisions in Enniskillen, where there were a great many parsons, where the rates were high, and in two country divisions, where the rates were low—and I really don't think it makes very much difference whether there is union rating or district rating if you have to pay rates as I had. Of course the persons who had to pay rates in the cheap part were better off, and persons in Enniskillen were worse off.

6179. Would you go outside the county?—If you had a part of Tyrone in a Fermanagh Union I would not like that for Fermanagh.

6180. Would you go as far as a national rate instead of a county rate?—Oh, no. I think the body that has to manage the affairs of the union should control the rating. I don't see how you are to make your estimates or anything if you do that.

6181. CHAIRMAN.—The same way as they are done now?—I think our estimates in Enniskillen were exceedingly well done. Mr. Morrison for a great many years was the clerk, and I thought he did his work extremely well and ran the union very cheaply considering its immense size; it only cost £4,000, and it is very little in excess of that now.

6182. The Guardians estimate what they want and send the demand to the County Council?—Mr. Murkin mentioned a general rate for all Ireland. In the same way the county would send its demand to the national body.

6183. Mr. MURKIN.—I did not think the Ulstermen would consent to a rate so widespread. In your calculation as to 551 inmates in the workhouses, you have included the harmless lunatics?—Everybody that is in it.

6184. If the children and harmless lunatics were taken out of that calculation the number would be much smaller?—Ninety-five would be taken off.

6185. That would leave 456, roughly?—Yes; 450 about.

6186. Then you think the present houses in Enniskillen would be sufficiently large to accommodate that 450?—As far as I can see it would go very nearly double; there may be more cubic feet of air in each room.

6187. Dr. BROWNE.—Do you know whether there is a certain amount of unpopularity attached to the workhouse infirmaries on account of their connection with the workhouses?—I suppose there is. I believe people would rather go into the county infirmary than the workhouse infirmary.

6188. Is that partly on account of the separation from the workhouse?—I think it is the idea that a person going into the workhouse infirmary becomes a pauper, but I only know it from hearsay. I don't know that I ever talked to anybody about it; but supposing I had anybody connected with me, a servant or anybody in my place, who wanted to go into the infirmary, they would very much object to going into the workhouse infirmary, unless it was a contagious disease, when it is understood they must.

6180. Would it enlarge the usefulness of the workhouse infirmaries if separated from the workhouse and made district hospitals?—I don't see how you could work it.

6181. It could be done?—I am not a judge, but I would see difficulties in the way. Of course if you give up one of the present houses, say Lisnakea, as a general workhouse, we might apply it to a purpose of that sort; that would involve, of course, the keeping up of another staff. I think the great advantage in amalgamation would be that you would get rid of two staffs and merely have the staff in Enniskillen.

6182. You have not considered the separation of consumptive patients?—I have not; there are a great many new theories about consumption that I never heard of until a late year, and I don't like to give information on a subject of that sort.

6183. Mr. Muldoon.—Barnboy Union lies close to the Carran Union, does it not?—I suppose part of it touches the Carran Union, but I really don't know where the division is; I don't know whether, for instance, Bellebar is in Barnboy or Carran.

6184. Are you aware that the most extreme limit of the Barnboy Union would not be more than eight or nine miles from Carran Union Workhouse?—No, I am not aware, but certainly if you had the Derris division added on it would be a great deal more.

6185. CHAIRMAN.—How many miles is it from Swanbar to Carran?

Mr. Muldoon.—Thirty, I am instructed.

Witness.—If you show me the map I can tell. (Map produced.) Are you talking of the town of Carran?

Mr. Muldoon.—The town of Carran, where the workhouse is now situated, is the extreme limit of the Barnboy Union.

6186. CHAIRMAN.—Swanbar?—I should say it would be eighteen or twenty miles (English).

6187. Mr. Muldoon.—In the event of the Barnboy Union being broken up, it would be naturally absorbed by Carran?—If it was broken up, but I assume it could not be broken up. If it was necessary to form it after the other unions were formed it is a very good proof it was wanted.

6188. If the people of Carran are in favour of the amalgamation of unions and the lessening of the number of workhouse Barnboy would be one of the doomed unions?—It might be.

6189. And, naturally, it would be absorbed by Carran?—Of course it would if it was broken up.

6190. You are aware that the local people of the district that now come to Enniskillen are almost unanimously in favour of coming to Enniskillen?—I believe they like to come to the Enniskillen fair.

6191. And if there was any order made or report made recommending the contrary it would run counter to a large extent to the local feeling?—It may; but that is not my point of view.

6192. It would not make for efficiency?—I think it would make for efficiency.

6193. A district which is unanimously in favour of coming to one place, to compel them to go to another would make for efficiency?—It would, because it would reduce the rates.

6194. Nobody has suggested abolishing Enniskillen—even Mr. Jordan?—I believe Irvinestown suggested it.

6195. Have you ever driven from Derris to Barnboy through Glas Gap?—I have driven from Barnboy to Derris through the Glas Gap.

6196. Often?—Once.

6197. Is that your experience of the drive; you have never reversed the drive?—I have not reversed the drive.

6198. What time of the year was this?—In August, twenty years ago.

6199. You have never seen the road in winter?—I have not, but I can imagine the road; I have seen other roads like it.

6200. You will never face that drive again?—I have never been but once that way.

6201. I am instructed it would be very hazardous for you to drive it again?—In Australia I have driven across roads a hundred times worse than that, and I have had to swim my horse across a river; I would say the Barnboy road is much easier than that.

6202. Are you aware that when the inhabitants have to go to Ballyconnell, their Quarter Sessions town, they have to come round by Bellebar and take the train?—No; but I would not contradict it if you say that is the case; but if I was going from Derris to Ballyconnell, and I had the means of driving, I should certainly drive instead of going round by Bellebar.

6203. You know the Lisnakea district?—Of course, I have travelled it by road and train.

6204. There are a great number of inhabited islands in the union?—I know there are; some of them once belonged to me.

6205. It would be somewhat inconvenient the transit to Enniskillen under such circumstances; at all events there would be some local reason for retaining a Poor Law administrative system?—I can understand that a people who have a workhouse in their midst are unwilling to give it up.

6206. You can see no other reason?—No.

6207. They have no railway on the west side of the lake?—No; but they can just as easily come here as go across to Lisnakea across the lake.

6208. It is only six miles across?—I have been all down the other side of the lake by road; it is a very easy road.

6209. In case the northern part of the county is looked after by Enniskillen and the southern part by Lisnakea, and that portion of Glenties is taken in, would you have any objection to Fermanagh County being Poor Lawed in that way with two unions?—I have not considered that question, but I don't see anything would be gained by doing it. I think it would be better to have one in the way I have suggested, leaving the part of Fermanagh that is in Glenties Union to Glenties and leaving the part of Ballyshannon that is in Fermanagh to Ballyshannon.

6210. That would not be much of a reform?—It would be a great reform.

6211. The county would still not be self-contained?—I don't attach any advantage to its being self-contained; it would be a compact area.

Mr. Muldoon.—Except when it is proposed to bring in Carran, then the self-contained principle is a good one.

6212. Mr. MURPHY.—Before you just leave I would like to have your view on the question of representation that has been raised here by the Chairman of the County Council. I would like to know what representation you would suggest for the localities that might lose their workhouse?—They would have to come to Enniskillen, of course. But Mr. Jordan, I think, suggested—I don't know that I quite follow him, because I think there have been some changes since I was a member of the Board of Guardians; when I was a member of the board we had one of the biggest boards in Ireland; we had forty-two divisions, and there were forty-one other members, then there were the ex-officio Guardians besides, that brought the number up to nearly ninety or ninety-two; I hardly ever saw half of them attend; perhaps on one or two occasions, when there was some great rump, these may have been a little more than half, but I don't think I ever saw fifty of those ninety attend, and, therefore, it shows the board was absolutely too large, and you could hardly have given them sitting room. I think if you have the whole of the other two unions you must, of course, reduce the numbers by having only one elected Guardian for each division, but I don't see any objection to that in any way. Probably, of course, there may be an old case where there are two people of different political opinions in each division; that would not be often the case, and I don't think it would affect party positions.

6213. That is the only change you would think necessary?—Yes.

6214. What about dispensary committees, they were very useful bodies?—I don't know much about dispensary committees; I was nominally a member of the Enniskillen one, and I was a member of the Skiddo-Cross committee in Tyrone, but I only attended the committee once, and that was for the election of a doctor; I don't know much about it.

Nov. 11, 1905.

Mr. Hugh R. Lindsay.

Mr. HUGH R. LINDSAY, J.P., examined.

6224. CHAIRMAN.—You have been Chairman of the Board of Guardians for some time—I have.

6225. And, as a County Councillor, you are familiar with the county generally?—Well, fairly.

6226. Have you formed any opinion as to whether it would be beneficial or useful in the interests of economy and efficiency combined to break up any of the unions of the county?—I have; I would be in favour of amalgamation on the ground of economy, and that the present system is not satisfactory. I would go in for amalgamating Lanesboro and Irvinestown with Enniskillen.

6227. What would you do with the Ballyshannon part of Fermanagh?—I would also take it into the Enniskillen Union and Glenties No. 2 district into Enniskillen Union, and make the county the unit, together with the eight Ovens divisions.

6228. You would propose to retain the Enniskillen Union as it is?—I would.

6229. In the event of the breaking up of the Bawnboy Union, do you think the Enniskillen Union could take some of that as well?—I am not so certain on that point; I dare say we could. We might take one or two of the divisions on this side of Bawnboy. The roads are good from here into Bawnboy and Swinburn, and thus across the market town for the whole district.

6230. If the workhouses were closed at Lanesboro and Irvinestown what arrangements do you think would be necessary at those centres?—I would abolish them entirely.

6231. And bring the sick here?—Yes; I think I would be inclined to go in for hospitals at the extreme ends of the county—one at Garrison or Belleek, one at Belleek or Blackburn, and one at Roslea or Newtownabbey.

6232. How far is Roslea from Glenties?—Four Irish miles.

6233. Would not that be a very short distance to have between two hospitals?—It would, unless you were thinking of establishing Glenties and putting it into Monaghan.

6234. How would you propose to deal with the sick of Glenties No. 2 district if the hospital were retained at Omagh?—You would treat them there.

6235. Supposing you take Glenties No. 2 into the Fermanagh Union, the new Enniskillen Union, would you oblige the sick to come here; you said you would have a hospital at Roslea?—If you had a cottage hospital at Roslea or in Newtownabbey it would accommodate the sick of No. 2 Glenties district.

6236. Supposing there was a hospital at Glenties and that the District Council of Glenties No. 2 or the Poor Law body for that district should be empowered to board or send the sick into the Glenties hospital to be treated at the average cost of maintenance in that hospital?—Yes; I should say that would meet it.

6237. And that would make it unnecessary to keep up a separate institution?—Yes.

6238. You would merely have the cost per head for the actual number of days?—Yes.

6239. Might that also be applied by the Belleek district sending their sick into Ballyshannon?—It could.

6240. So that it would be unnecessary to have a hospital at that end of the county?—Yes; you could utilize Glenties and Ballyshannon Workhouses for that purpose.

6241. What would be your view about the Irvinestown Union?—That it should be merged into Enniskillen.

6242. Would you let that part of Tyrone go to Omagh?—I would let that part of Tyrone go to Omagh; it is not too far away from it.

6243. The amount given in outdoor relief is relatively very small indeed in this union?—It is.

6244. Are you aware whether any allegations have been made as to any hardship resulting to the poor owing to any rigorous, or alleged rigorous, administration of the Poor Law under the head of outdoor relief?—I cannot say that any case of hardship has reached my ears, but sometimes the Guardians are a shade pecuniary in such cases.

6245. It has not been represented to you on any authority that any real hardship has resulted?—No.

6246. By the amalgamation of these unions you would look to a large reduction in salaries?—I would.

6247. That would be your chief saving?—Yes; it would abolish two staffs of officials. There would be a very substantial saving with regard to the teaching of the children. The present teaching of the children of the three unions costs about £200—that is the portion of this county in Glenties and the portion at Belleek. I should say that two teachers would be sufficient to teach all the children; there cannot be more than forty or fifty in the county.

6248. Would you like the children to be educated altogether from the Poor Law institution of the future?—Yes. I believe the boarding-out system is much healthier, better for the children, and they make a better start in life after; and since the lady inspectors were appointed their lot is somewhat improved.

6249. Would you think it well that the powers of Guardians should be enlarged for putting out children so that you practically might be able to board out all, if not nearly all, the children you have?—Yes; I would go still further on that.

6250. You would go to the extent of saying all illegitimate children should be boarded out?—I would if the mothers were not sufficiently careful to look after them.

6251. You would leave that to the Guardians whether they would take the children or not from the custody of the mothers?—I would.

6252. It might be feared that some encouragement to immorality would be given if it was made too easy to a woman to get rid of her child?—Yes; there would be that danger.

6253. Do you think that the Board of Guardians would consider that in each case?—I expect they would.

6254. And they would not make a loose general practice that would act unfavorably on morality?—I don't believe they would.

6255. You think the discretion might be safely left to them?—I think it would be safe in the hands of the Guardians.

6256. Do you think there would be any difficulty in getting suitable homes for the boarding out of the children you have at present in your workhouses?—I don't think there would be any difficulty.

6257. You have not experienced difficulty in the past?—No; on the contrary.

6258. Is there competition for them by suitable people?—Yes.

6259. Your poundage rate in Enniskillen for Poor Law purposes is very low?—It is.

6260. A great deal lower than Irvinestown, for instance?—Yes, in Enniskillen and Glenties Irvinestown. It is 1/6d. in Enniskillen?—They are a model board.

6261. You have a very large number of women with illegitimate children in your workhouse at present?—Unfortunately, we have.

6262. I think the members of the Commission are about twenty-two of them a couple of days ago?—Yes.

6263. There were two of the women that were then that had been married, but they had two or three children before they were married?—Yes.

6264. So that practically nearly all the female inmates of the workhouse are mothers of illegitimate children?—They are.

6265. They are a rather troublesome class?—Indeed they are, and very useless; you can get no work out of them at all.

6266. You are aware, I presume, that a great many of these women have two, three, and four children?—Yes.

6267. They keep on going out and coming back again with additions to their families?—Yes; and there seems very little chance of remedying that.

6268. In Poor Law institutions for the future do you think it would be possible, in the way we were discussing just now, to exclude these women from workhouses and treat them elsewhere?—Well, it might be; as an institution or home.

6269. These are penitentiaries at present managed by various religious associations or bodies?—Certainly; it is not desirable to have them in the immediate neighbourhood of the deserving sick in hospital.

6270. At present they are employed as scrubbers, not as attendants or wardresses?—Yes.

6271. Would you be disposed to try such a system if the religious communities were in favour of co-operating with the Guardians?—I would.

Nov. 11, 1903.

Mr. Hugh R. Lindsay.

6272. On the question whether disused workhouses might not be used, even if the union were broken up, for other purposes, Poor Law purposes first and lunatic asylum purposes in the second place, would you approve of a workhouse like Irvinestown or Lismahon being used for putting all the inmates of a certain class in, say all the inmates of the County Fermanagh—I think Enniskillen Workhouse would be quite sufficient for all purposes.

6273. You think it would be unnecessary to consider that question unless Enniskillen were too small—I would.

6274. Now, as regards lunatics, Omagh asylum is too small for its present purposes, and if this workhouse were closed and if it were considered by Parliament that lunatics for the future should not be maintained in workhouses, would you be in favour of having disused workhouses used as auxiliary lunatic asylums?—I would be in favour of two or three for the whole province of Ulster, not including Belfast.

6275. Did you think where these might be placed?—I did not; I should not like to offer an opinion on that; you would be a better authority on that than I would be. I suppose the expense of these would be decided.

6276. Part by the Government and part payment per head; each county that would need would pay so much per head?—Yes.

6277. You think that would be cheaper, or have you considered the question whether that would be cheaper than enlarging the existing asylums?—I would rather see lunatic lunatics kept away from the present Omagh asylum; the authorities there don't seem to want them at all.

6278. They are over-full, but if they got an additional building they might have no objection?—They might not.

6279. But as regards fever for the County Fermanagh, how would you propose to deal with fever cases?—As we stand at present we probably would encounter as much difficulty, or do encounter as much difficulty, or more, than if we had the whole county in one union, because we have to go to Down, which is the extreme end of the County district, and we get most of the patients in from that part for the fever hospital.

6280. How far is Down?—Seventeen Irish miles.

6281. You have patients occasionally from there?—Most of them come from there.

6282. How far would they be at Down from the other nearest workhouse, say Monaghan or Mohill?—I should think probably Banbury would be the nearest, and this road Lord Belmore refers to through Glen Gap is probably one of the worst roads in Ireland—you have to walk the bulk of the road; to go to Banbury by any reasonable road from Down you have twenty-five miles.

6283. How far would Down be from Mohill?—I cannot say.

6284. As regards fever from Irvinestown and Lismahon, do you think these cases might be treated here at Enniskillen?—Oh, yes.

6285. With a good ambulance?—Yes; the roads are much better in the County Fermanagh than probably in any other county; the road from here to Clones is quite level, and the same up to Derrylin on the west side of the lake.

6286. Your fever hospital here is large?—It is.

6287. Quite equal to any emergency that would be likely to arise in the county?—Yes; I see others of them have not such accommodation.

6288. You have a considerable number of fever cases at present?—We have a lot of diphtheria cases, and as to the occurrence of fever patients I would hope the winter might come in, because our roads are so level.

6289. They have started motor ambulances in some parts of England?—Yes; I saw that. A motor fever van would be very desirable, and would cause no inconvenience to the poor patient.

6290. Have you considered the question of the housing out of aged and infirm people?—I am afraid there would be a difficulty in that.

6291. The possibility is that the proposal would be that the people should be boarded out with relatives?—If they were well paid for I dare say it would be an inducement to the people to take care of them.

6292. Do you not think that elderly people might be treated to see that they got good food at all seasons?—I think they might, but they would be rather more inclined to take healthy children than old people.

6293. Then the proposal is not attractive to you at present?—No.

6294. As regards the question of rates, you heard Mr. Jordan's idea, which seemed to come into his mind on the spur of the moment, about having a county rate or even a national rate?—I would not be so much inclined for a universal rate, but I would go in for a union rate or county rate. There are two reasons why a union-or-large rate is more useful to us—very poor people in some of the backward districts get a little relief from the wealthier classes, and where an improvement or a sanitary good is to be carried out in one particular district, if the expense is scattered over the whole union it is not so much opposed as if the expense were confined to the district.

6295. You would think it fair that the highly-rated parts of the union and the less highly-rated part should be continued under a county rate?—I do; it comes very hard on the very poor. When it was formerly divisional rating it came very hard on the division to raise a certain amount of money to keep up the requirements of that division, inasmuch as the land was low let and the rate had to be pitched high to raise a certain sum of money.

6296. You think there are too many Guardians at present?—Yes; I would be inclined to reduce the Guardians to less than one-fourth the number that are in the County Fermanagh at present. We have in the Enniskillen Workhouse about one Guardian to every two paupers, and in some of the unions they have one Guardian to each pauper.

CHAIRMAN.—I think the County Down part has eleven paupers and seventeen Guardians.

Mr. MURKIN.—And in the Tyrone part there are eleven Guardians to seven paupers.

6297. CHAIRMAN.—As regards getting contributions from people who are not destitute, but who are poor, would you be in favour of giving Boards of Guardians a discretion in fixing some small scale on which an individual should pay?—I would; I would give them the same discretion that they have with regard to the paying patients in the hospital, and that is not abundant in any way; the charge is fixed according to the man's means.

6298. That is in the county infirmary?—No; but our own infirmary.

6299. You got very little, but if it were the rule always to examine each case and see whether that person could pay, supposing a person was earning 4s a week and had a large family he would be a poor person, but if a member of his family came in for medical relief that member would cost a certain amount at home?—So doubt.

6300. He could pay a little?—In that case we do charge a little.

6301. What is the least you charge?—3s. 6d. a week, or 6d. a day.

6302. I was thinking of a payment so low as 1s. a week?—That would be very low, but it would raise him from the standard of pauper.

6303. Make him feel more independent?—Yes; we have penance on our books, and we get from 4s. in 6d. a day from them.

6304. I observed a large number of the fever patients are entering as paying patients?—Yes. As regards tramps, I would make no provision in the workhouse at all for tramps. I think the present system encourages the tramp system. We meet always, I should say, here an honest, poor artisan or labourer coming from one place to another; I would enable the police to give that man a ticket for one night's lodging and board in a licensed lodging-house, but he should have proof with him that he was a bona fide working man, but I would not make any provision in the workhouse for the professional tramp.

6305. Dr. RUSSELL.—What would you do with him?—Leave them each in his own district.

6306. CHAIRMAN.—If it not to be feared that they might still go marching about?—I don't think so, sir.

6307. They don't stay every night at the workhouse?—The bulk of them, I think, in this county do; they get a night at Clones, a night at Lismahon, then in Enniskillen, Irvinestown, Ballyshannon, and on to Derrygal; these are all easy day's marches.

6308. Dr. RUSSELL.—Have you any limit of age for boarding out children?—Fourteen.

6309. But young children; what age do you begin?—We board them out sometimes very young and sometimes not so young.

6310. There is no limit?—No.

Nov 11, 1903.

Mr. Hugh R. Lindsay.

6311. Why are not all your children in Enniskillen boarded out?—There are many of them with their mothers, and then we have no power.

6312. Are there not some orphans?—There are some indeed we could send out, but not many with us at present.

6313. What do you think about any provision for consumptive patients?—That is more in the line of an expert witness, but I certainly say it would be very desirable to have a hospital for such patients. We have got out of a small wing of our workhouse. You have got out of a small wing of workhouses of three or four counties for that purpose. I may say further, with regard to the eight divisions of Clonon, that at the time of the passing of the Local Government Act the clergy of all denominations, magistrates, ratepayers, and the poor were very strong in favour of being retained, and got up a strong petition and gave strong reasons—much stronger than I could.

Chairman.—We will ask for a copy of that petition.

6314. Mr. Drummond.—You are in favour of the amalgamation of unions?—Yes.

6315. And one of your reasons, of course, is greater economy?—Yes.

6316. And that economy would be effected to some extent at any rate, if not entirely, by the lessening of staffs?—Not having duplicate staffs?—Yes.

6317. Supposing the Rosalia portion of the Clonon Union were taken from Clonon Union and brought into Enniskillen it could not effect that economy; you would still have your Enniskillen staff and Clonon staff left?

—Of course if you cut off part of a small union like Clonon it gives an inducement to the Commission to abolish Clonon.

6318. If Clonon were not abolished, but only this part cut off and brought to Fermanagh, it would make no addition to the staff?—Not here.

6319. Am I not right in saying that leaving on the artificial boundaries of the Clonon Monaghan and Fermanagh, the natural centre to which the people of Rosalia go is Clonon?—Yes.

6320. That is their market town?—There is a market in Rosalia.

6321. It would take a great deal longer time and occasion more expense to get to Enniskillen?—It may entail a little expense; it is eight miles from Newtownblunder to Rosalia, and there is rail down to Enniskillen.

6322. Except the fact that Enniskillen and Rosalia are in the same county, geographically, there is really no connection between them compared with the connection between Rosalia and Clonon?—That particular district about Rosalia it seems it might be better accommodated at Clonon.

6323. Am I not right in saying that the boundary of the county next Clonon is only about 300 perches away from Clonon?—I cannot say.

6324. But you seriously suggest that it may be a necessary part of this scheme to build a hospital in Rosalia and Newtownblunder?—It has been suggested, such as cottage hospitals.

6325. Do you happen to know anything as to the state of the hospital arrangements in Clonon Union itself?—I do not.

6326. Would you be surprised to know that they are more than usually perfect and up-to-date?—I hope so.

6327. If that were so do you think it would tend to economy to put up a cottage hospital, or any sort of hospital, a few miles away in Rosalia or Newtownblunder simply because it was over the boundaries of the county?—No; if you retain Clonon, and your hospital is so perfect, it is better to trust there.

6328. And supposing you increased the Enniskillen Union, would the officials be satisfied to work for exactly the same pay; would there not be a possibility of their pay having to be raised?—I take the case of the schoolmaster and schoolmistresses, they are teaching a few children, and I don't think they should get an increase if they get double the number of children to teach.

6329. Take the case of the clerk?—You might have to give him an assistant; we pay all our officials well, I may tell you.

6330. Mr. Muldon.—It was proposed in 1898 to send the Clonon divisions that now come to Enniskillen to Banagher?—It was.

6331. And the Enniskillen Board of Guardians passed a resolution in favour of doing so?—Yes.

6332. And the petition that was presented to the Local Government Board was against that?—Yes.

6333. Was not the whole matter debated then both here and at Banagher?—It was.

6334. And there was a discussion in Parliament as the result of which the petition was allowed?—It was; the petition was a very strong one, and was strongly supported by every class in the division.

6335. And are not the Guardians from this division unanimously in favour of continuing to come?—They are unanimously in favour for many reasons; Enniskillen is their market town; they have only to go to Belcoo and get the railway there, and I have heard some of them say that if they were attached to Banagher they would never go there.

6336. You are a total abolitionist with regard to all the unions except Enniskillen?—Well, Enniskillen is the centre of the county; you have the railway coming there from Clonon, Sligo, Belleek, and Bandon.

6337. That is the only reason you could put forward?—Certainly I believe it will be a matter of great economy for the subgroups. At present it will not be much of a saving, but eventually it will be.

6338. Looking at the map, Lisnaskea appears to be fairly central?—It is central between Enniskillen and Clonon.

6339. Would you be equally in favour of the abolition of the other unions if it was proposed to retain Lisnaskea as a great central union for the County Fermanagh, situated upon a hill, and such a model workhouse?—I might if all the conditions were equal to Enniskillen.

6340. Do you know Lisnaskea?—I have heard its name by which they get their water there, and it is said they have not the very best sanitary arrangements. We have spent a couple of thousand pounds on that thing in Enniskillen.

6341. Are you aware the Local Government Inspector has again and again reported about the pure air and good water they have at Lisnaskea?—I never read as of his reports about Lisnaskea.

6342. Do you know anything about the poor rate in Lisnaskea?—I have just heard it is a fraction lower than Enniskillen.

6343. Would you be surprised to hear it was 12 lower than Enniskillen in 1902, and 14 this year, because Lisnaskea spent £200 on a consumption ward? If I am right in saying it is 14 lower on an average, it would be some reason for Lisnaskea not being so anxious to join you as you are to join them?—I would not put that down as an argument; if you want reform you must pay for them; a slight increase in rate is an argument in favour of making Enniskillen the centre.

6344. Keep that point before your mind; would you not think it also some reason for making as the centre that workhouse which was most efficiently and most economically managed?—I am not wedded to my scheme. If you can put forward a better one I have no objection.

6345. Would you have any objection to a scheme by which the workhouse was retained at Enniskillen and took charge of the whole of Fermanagh in Ballymaginn and Fermanagh, and still retained the eight divisions in Clonon, and Lisnaskea looked after the lower portion of the county?—It is not for me to either object or approve. I am giving my evidence for what it is worth.

6346. Would you have any criticism to pass upon it?—It may work fairly well.

6347. You don't go as far as Mr. Jordan; do you not know anything of the district served by the Lisnaskea Workhouse—the inhabited islands. Do you spot at those islands?—No; I think there is a distillery on one of them. Unfortunately, I cannot afford to shoot at them.

6348. Would you be surprised to hear that in the district served by the Lisnaskea Workhouse there are over 200 inhabited islands in the lake?—I don't say there are.

6349. Do you suggest to the Commission that in numerous cases it would not inflict hardship on the poor?—Not in very many cases, because the whole number of inmates in Lisnaskea is not a very great number.

6350. But in their transit from these islands to Enniskillen do you not think it would be a more efficient system to leave Lisnaskea as it stands?—Referring to the eight Clonon unions, I have never heard a case of hardship in transferring patients.

6351. You have not brought any patients from these islands to Enniskillen?—I am giving you a case in point—the eight Owen divisions.

6352. How do you bring them from there; you bring them to Bellef and put them in a train?—In the case of fever patients we put them in the ambulance.

6353. And you have a good one in Enniskillen?—Yes; a new one.

Nov. 11, 1905.
Mr. Hugh R. Lindsay.

Dr. THORNTON examined.

6354. Mr. Dromgoole.—You are a medical doctor practising in Clones, and you were for a considerable number of years a member of the Clones Board?—Yes; and County Council.

6355. And you are intimately acquainted with all the workings of the Clones Union?—I am, for I act as locum tenens for all the dispensary doctors around.

6356. Before coming here to give evidence to-day, have you consulted with the members of the board as to your evidence?—There was a small committee formed, and a draft report was submitted to them at a special meeting, and it was unanimously adopted. They came to the conclusion that the real expense and saving to the ratepayers is not in the amalgamation of unions but in the amalgamation of workhouses. They consider that two for each county used as workhouses would be quite sufficient, and the spare buildings or unused buildings could be utilised—either one in each county or one in every two or three counties—for a convalescent home and for those chronically afflicted, such as cripples, and another could be used for the insane and imbeciles, because we think one of the greatest hardships under the existing Poor Law Act is that imbeciles, of which we have eight at present in Clones—they were, on the advice of Mr. Courtney, drafted from the body of the house to the hospital, and they are more trouble to the nurse than three times the number of ordinary patients; they are helpless themselves and won't attend to their own persons. We think there should be a central institution and these people taken over by the Commissioners of Lunacy and a stipendium given for them; a specially trained nurse in mental diseases should take charge of them. We consider that if you abolish a union like Clones all the saving it would be to the ratepayers would be the saving of the clerk's salary, which is only £30 a year.

6357. CHAIRMAN.—That is liberal?—He has his perquisites afterwards, and if you abolish the union all these perquisites go to the Secretary of the County Council, and if you follow Mr. Jordan's advice and send them to Clones and appoint an assistant you will get no clerk to do the extra work of Clones No. 2 and Lismacash for £20 a year, and the existing clerk will be expending superannuation. If we abolish the workhouses of the county and have only two we do away with the principal causes of expenditure—the master, matron, and schoolmistress.

6358. You speak of abolishing workhouses as workhouses?—Yes, and make each union remain contributory. As I am appointed to give evidence for the whole union it will save time if my evidence is taken to-day for the Monaghan portion of the union.

6359. Where do you see any economy?—I think the main principle in the Poor Law—

6360. Is your proposal with a view to efficiency apart from economy?—It is more for efficiency apart from economy.

6361. Do you see any possibility of economy resulting from your suggestions?—Yes; by closing up two workhouses.

6362. You would close Irvinestown and Lismacash to a certain extent?—As workhouses; I would leave them as district hospitals.

6363. You would treat the sick at Irvinestown?—A district hospital is essential in the case of accidents or fractures, or the case of a person with an illegitimate child wandering on the roads. How could you cart that off to Enniskillen thirty miles from Roslea?

6364. As far as the Roslea people are concerned, even if Lismacash were broken up could they not be received as paying patients at Clones—paid for by the Fermanagh rates at so much a head per day?—Then the question is not so much hospital accommodation; but if you take into consideration the expense Clones Union has gone to—the last three years we have spent over £1,000; in average £379, we have a perfect average, and on the hospital up to £200, and on other necessary works £200 or £300 more. We have a perfect average and a perfect supply of water at 6d. per thousand gallons; in fact if we take the words of our inspector, Mr. Lynch-Staunton, we are perfect only for the sipping of the wall.

6365. Mr. Dromgoole.—You have got a new ambulance?—Yes; we have two ambulances—a modern one, which cost £60.

6366. CHAIRMAN.—You have not worked it out in figures?—The present cost is about 8d. in the £.

6367. What do you estimate it would be in the future?—Taking away the expenses of three allocations, I should say we should go down to what we were the first year of the Local Government Act—6d. or 4½d. in the £—and the persons in the Clones Union are maintained at the scale laid down by the Local Government Board—first-class rates. In Clones we are a happy family, and wish to be left as we are. We don't want to get on a squabbling board. We say small unions could be contributory to a central place.

6368. A small union would cease to exist, and the ratepayers that used to belong to the small union would become ratepayers of the larger union?—Yes; we say that would be a hardship on the representatives and also on the poor.

6369. Owing to the long distances?—Yes; and not even that, but it is a well-known thing that the poorer classes will not go into the workhouses or hospitals unless they are convenient to their friends where their friends can see them; the poor won't go from the extreme end of the county to Enniskillen, because they will be separated from their friends.

6370. Have you any statistical evidence to show what number of visits are paid to your sick in the hospital?—I know as visiting days nearly all the sick in the hospital are visited.

6371. Are you sure of that?—I am; unless some chronic cases that have no friends. On visiting days I have seen the friends sitting around the beds.

6372. Is there anything else you would like to say?—Nothing, except that I think it is essential to classify the inmates. I don't think the virtuous aged should be put among the rest.

6373. Dr. BOGGER.—You said something about contributory; what did you mean?—If the Clones Workhouse were closed we should be made contributory to a larger workhouse. We have a cheaper rate now, and it is more economical for the Guardians to attend to their business there. It would be impossible to get the Guardians to come thirty miles to the board in Enniskillen; that would be virtually disfranchising them.

6374. CHAIRMAN.—It would be expensive and a loss of time?—In Clones No. 2 they would have to come six or seven miles to the station and spend the whole day coming to Enniskillen.

6375. Dr. BOGGER.—Where do patients come from that are admitted to the fever hospital at Clones?—It is a county hospital, and it is contributed to by the Fermanagh portion of the union.

6376. Do you take patients from Fermanagh into it?—Yes, at 5s. or 6s. a week; that is only the actual expense; we don't charge anything at all for the services of the staff.

6377. You give an advantage to Fermanagh?—We do; there is only a small river separating Fermanagh from Clones.

6378. Have you any idea of the number that comes from Fermanagh?—For the first twelve months they were nearly all from Fermanagh. There was an outbreak of typhus in Roslea and they all drifted into Clones.

6379. Then Fermanagh gets a large advantage from it?—They get an advantage. There was an old rule before this Local Government Act that Fermanagh patients should be admitted to the fever hospital on those terms.

6380. Who manages the fever hospital?—A joint committee appointed by the subscribers and the County Council, the original annual subscribers.

6381. Is Fermanagh represented upon the board?—It is not.

6382. Where do you get your rates from for the support of the fever hospital?—County Monaghan and a contributory fund from Fermanagh at so much per head.

Nov. 11, 1905.
Dr. Tierney.

6363. Therefore you get your patients supported largely out of a county rate?—Yes; there are two county fever hospitals and one hospital in Monaghan—Monaghan, Clones, and Carrickmacross. Carrickmacross is a hospital, and Clones is tabulated in the Local Government Act as one of the county fever hospitals.

6364. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—You say the committee of which you are spokesman decided there would be no advantage in amalgamating uncles?—There would not. They believe it would be a hardship on the poor and on the representatives.

6365. Do you not think that better service to the poor could be given at less money by a concentration of the system?—I do not believe in the case of the poor. If you take the ordinary hospital of the workhouse it is generally filled with the case of accidents or the aged coming in to die; the paucity might use it, but the small farmer, if anything happens him, goes to the county infirmary. It is generally only the very poor that go to the workhouse hospital.

6366. Do you not think a small hospital would suit the needs of these localities, and remove the aged and infirm to the central place, where they could get better treatment at less expense, because the staff is already there?—That is one portion of our scheme that these unions, whilst not abolished, could contribute to the aged and infirm.

6367. And in the displaced localities you would simply have a hospital for the accommodation of the sick of that locality?—We would have a district hospital.

6368. And you would have a corresponding reduction in the expense of the upkeeps?—The only reduction you would have is the master and schoolmistress. You would want a matron for a large hospital.

6369. CHAIRMAN.—Not with a head nurse?—In our hospital we have two trained nurses.

6370. The matron has no charge of anything connected with the hospital?—In all workhouse hospitals it is not fair to expect a trained nurse to cook and nurse, both.

6371. It is easy for the Guardians to appoint a servant?—Then there would not be much saving in that; our matron has only £250 a year.

6372. She does not do the cooking?—No; she takes charge of the clothes and superintends the laundry. If you appoint a cook as a servant there would not be much saving; you would want a housekeeper to look after the clothes and the laundry.

6373. There would be no difficulty about that, that is done in all hospitals?—If you were a member of the Clones Board of Guardians you would have the matron meaning about looking after the clothes.

6374. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Are there many able-bodied paupers in your institution?—There are some, and in the scheme we have drafted we think if there was an industrial home started for three or four counties they should be deported to it, and the law regarding leaving the workhouse should be altered so that they should not leave without a month's notice. It would be a hardship if you drafted an able-bodied pauper to Omagh, or somewhere where there would be a trade or industry carried on, that he could claim his discharge in three hours under the present law.

6375. CHAIRMAN.—A month would be a long time?—It would act as a deterrent from coming in again.

6376. It might keep the really destitute from getting relief?—I don't think the class of destitution that Mr. Murkaghan speaks of are destitute unless from their own faults.

6377. You would not make a man starve for a fault?—No; but on the other hand a person who is able to work can get it.

6378. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Really, as far as we have gone in our investigation we have found very few able-bodied paupers in any institution?—Very few that you might really call able-bodied.

6379. CHAIRMAN.—Except the women with illegitimate children?—Yes.

6380. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Have you any suggestion to make with regard to able-bodied women with illegitimate children?—The theory of sending women for a first offence to a home is in my opinion a very good one, but, of course, the expense of that would be very considerable. If we take it on a small scale as an industrial school—£250 a year—it would be very large.

CHAIRMAN.—The workhouse costs £200.

6401. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—You see something desirable in the suggestion if it could be worked out?—Yes; I believe there should be something done to help them, and, as regards the workhouse children, undertensely, when they do leave the workhouse they are workhouse children always. There should be something done for that, and, as far as I know, in the Clones Union the majority of the female children when they leave generally come back as mothers.

6402. CHAIRMAN.—Are you sure of that?—A lot of them do.

6403. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—If these children were taken very young and sent out amongst the farmers of the country?—We came to the conclusion that it would be much better if the children of the whole county or of two counties were controlled in an untraced workhouse, and when they came to a certain age as means of education was given them, for in some places the Compulsory Education Act is not in force.

6404. CHAIRMAN.—There is a good deal of promise exerted by the various clergy to get the children to go to school; they look after them very closely?—Yes; it keeps up the majority of the school.

6405. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—And the relieving officer a regular intervals visits the house and gets a report?—We believe if they were brought up and educated until twelve or fourteen years, and placed with farmers, they have a better chance of settling into the larger population and away to America.

6406. Where they lose the costs of the workhouse?—If a child is sent out, boarded out in the locality, he is pointed out as "Little Jimmy from the Workhouse," and when he grows up and becomes a farm labourer he is still "Little Jimmy from the Workhouse," and he never raises his head until he gets out of the locality where he is known.

6407. Dr. BROWN.—Have you known many of them?—Unfortunately, I have known too many of them—boys and girls. "Who is that girl?" "It is Orla from the Workhouse." Even their own mistresses speak the same way of them.

6408. Have you any experience of boarding out?—No.

6409. A child that is boarded out at a year old, would it not lose all knowledge of the workhouse and the people in the district disassociate it altogether before it is fifteen?—I don't believe so. I believe it will be always branded. I believe they are the only class I would encourage to emigrate.

6410. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Do you not think such a long connection with an institution would have a bad tendency—fourteen or fifteen years in an institution?—It might leave a stain on them, but at the same time you must look to the education of these children.

6411. Dr. BROWN.—A child that is boarded out his education is looked after by the relieving officer, the inspector, and perhaps the local committee?—I think we have two cases of boarded-out children in Clones.

6412. You don't know at what ages they were boarded out?—I think they were very small, and the attention applied to them was very little; the relieving officer might, or did, report in his book occasionally, but that was all the attention that was paid to them.

6413. Are you a member of the Board of Guardians?—I decline to answer that; I don't want to create myself at the time.

6414. CHAIRMAN.—You are aware that since the Act of 1839 great changes have been made with regard to the boarding out of children?—I am aware of that.

6415. And relieving officers over the country are pressed very closely to look after them, and there is a committee of ladies?—Yes; I know things are much better than they were.

6416. Mr. Tierney.—So far as your union is concerned at Clones you have an absolutely first-class union there?—We have.

6417. A large amount of money has been spent on it?—There has.

6418. And that money was raised not by loan but paid out of the rates?—Yes.

6419. And as a consequence of that your rate for two or three years went up to 8d., but your normal rate is 5d.

6420. Whatever changes should be made, as far as Clones is concerned, in your opinion, could there be a more efficient or economical administration?—We don't believe there could.

6421. As to persons who are not destitute but who would require medical aid, have you any suggestion to make as to that?—In that case one of the great hardships under the present Poor Law is that poor people who require special treatment of the eye, or operation, must be branded as paupers by coming into the house before they are sent for treatment. If they are entitled to medical relief outside they should be sent on the recommendation of the medical officers at the expense of the union, or partly at the expense of the union, to some medical specialist. A lot of bad cases to my own knowledge have refused to come into the workhouse to be treated as paupers before they are sent to be operated on for amputation.

6432. As to dealing with tramps?—I think they should not be admitted unless certified by the medical officer as unfit to proceed.

6433. CHAIRMAN.—You would have to pay a doctor one guinea for giving that certificate; would it not be cheaper to give the man a breakfast, which costs only 2d.—It is never too dear to do a good thing.

6434. Mr. Drompsdale.—Your union gives very little outdoor relief?—We give absolutely none; the relieving officers and medical officers have the power to grant relief.

6435. CHAIRMAN.—Have you based of any hardship resulting from that?—No; because the relieving officer and medical officer have power to grant relief; the medical officer has power to order it through the relieving officer until the next board day; it is generally always allowed until the doctor certifies the patient is fit to be removed.

6436. When the case is dealt with by the Guardians, if they refuse to give a weekly payment and offer the house instead, and the applicant for relief refuses the house, have you ever heard it alleged that any hardship resulted?—They never refuse to give outdoor relief so long as it is certified by the medical officer and relieving officer that the case is unfit to come in.

6437. Supposing the case can be removed, but the applicant won't come in?—In exceptional cases it is still continued; in cases of fathers of a family.

6438. Your payments are practically all for outdoor relief in Clonsilla?—No, sir, it is not; we give some; we only give it to deserving cases.

Mr. JOHN BARRY examined.

6439. Mr. Drompsdale.—You are Chairman of the Clonsilla Board of Guardians?—Yes.

6440. Your board has spent a considerable sum of money upon the drainage and alterations in your infirmary, and all that?—Yes—up to £1,200.

6441. And you have paid all that?—We have.

6442. You took it out of the current rates?—Yes.

6443. That raised your rate to 8d. for a couple of years, but now you will be going down to your normal rate of about 5d.—5d.

6444. Included in your union you have a considerable portion of the County Fermanagh?—Yes.

6445. And that is roughly represented by what we call Rosetta?—Yes.

6446. And the market town for the people of that district is Clonsilla?—Clonsilla.

6447. Would it be a great inconvenience for the people of the Guardians to have to come to Enniskillen?—It would be a great inconvenience.

6448. It would be a question of going the same journey into Clonsilla and then going into the town of Enniskillen?—Yes; twenty-two miles.

6449. Your board are in favour, I take it, of the Clonsilla Union being maintained as it is?—Yes.

6450. You have an efficient union, and think you can manage it economically and efficiently yourselves?—Yes.

6451. So far as workhouses are concerned, do you think the entire number of workhouses should be kept in the county as they are?—No; I think a portion could be done away with.

6452. How many do you think would be sufficient to use as workhouses for the county?—There might be about three.

6453. Have you any suggestion to make as to what should be done with the buildings that were not being used as ordinary workhouses?—They might be used as auxiliary asylums.

6454. Or industrial houses?—Or industrial houses.

6455. Would you be in favour of classification of inmates?—Yes. For instance, as it is you have aged people of good character mingling with people who are not of good character.

6456. You think some attempt should be made to classify those people?—Yes.

6457. What would you do with the children?—I think

6458. Dr. BROWN.—And cases that cannot be removed?—And cases of fathers of families. We look on it that if the bread-earner of the family is laid up it is much cheaper to give him, or his wife than to take the whole family into the house, and it does not cost any air on them, but we have very few applicants for outdoor relief.

6459. Mr. Drompsdale.—You are in favour of extending the present area of charges?—I am; to a union charge.

6460. As to weekly meeting of Boards of Guardians, do you consider it is necessary they should meet so often as that?—I do not; as a member of the county infirmary, I think if we are able to manage an institution like that with a monthly meeting the Board of Guardians could manage too.

6461. CHAIRMAN.—Very large discretion is given to the superintendent medical officer; would you propose that any union official should have similar discretion?—I think so.

6462. Mr. MITCHELL.—Do you not think that would introduce laxity of management?—I don't think so. In the asylum at Monaghan we have a large body of inmates and we have only monthly meetings, and there is no abuse. The medical officer and clerk have charge; it has never led to any abuse, because his books could be examined.

6463. You could hardly compare the asylum with a workhouse, there are so many questions coming up at a workhouse meeting?—At the workhouse meeting it is generally unrepresented children in the union, reports from the Local Government Board, and the average cost of maintenance.

6464. You have very cold water at Clonsilla?—Yes; that is the reason we wish to live in peace, and one of the best people that we live in peace is that we very seldom get into the public press.

all the children of the county should be confined in one separate workhouse that would be set apart for them.

6465. Until what age would you keep them?—I suppose until they would be about twelve.

6466. Then what would you do with them at the end of that time?—I would hire them out as servants to the farmers or put them to trades.

6467. They having got a certain amount of education in the workhouse up to that?—Yes.

6468. Would you have the present union-at-large charges remain as they are?—Yes.

6469. As to the unions, do you consider the present way of having the inmates in the workhouse along with the other people is a good plan?—I think that they should be removed, or, in case that there was one of the workhouses set apart for those people—

6470. Where they should get proper treatment for insane people?—Yes.

6471. You have no alternative but to have them in the workhouse as ordinary inmates or in the infirmary treated as sick people?—That is all.

6472. And neither of these is suitable to the peculiar case of insanity you are dealing with?—No.

6473. Would you be in favour of what Dr. Tierney suggested, as to being able to send poor people who require operations or require to be sent to hospitals to be able to give them relief, and send them direct to the hospital without bringing them into the workhouse beforehand?—Yes; I would be in favour of that.

CHAIRMAN.—I think you may take it for granted that the Commission have taken that point.

6474. Mr. Drompsdale.—As to tramps, how do you consider that question should be dealt with; are you greatly troubled with the question of tramps?—We are.

6475. How would you suggest that should be dealt with?—I would fall in with what Dr. Tierney has suggested that they should not be admitted except on a certificate from the medical officer of the district that they were not fit to proceed further on their journey.

6476. Do you know, as a matter of fact, that those people do abuse the privileges they get of being able to go in there and take their night's lodging as they like?—They do. It is not charity at all; it is only keeping those people in their idle ways; they go from one union to another, living on the roads.

6477. As the law is at present you cannot get at them?—Not as the law exists at the present time.

Nov. 11, 1902.
Dr. Tierney.

Mr. John
Barth.

Nov. 11, 1906.

Mr. John
Synge.

6468. As to the meetings, do you think it is necessary that the Guardians should have weekly meetings?—I think it is unnecessary. I think a meeting once a month would be quite sufficient; there is nothing to prevent them except the signing of the books.

6469. CHAIRMAN.—And if the urgency arose you think the clerk could summon a special meeting?—Yes.

Mr. Dringdale.—That is all the evidence I have to offer for the Glens Union; I think it is clear the position we take up. We have what we consider an efficient union; we have spent a great deal of money on the sanitation and proper furnishing of the workhouse, and we think that, although there is an artificial geographical boundary between Fermanagh and Monaghan, we are the centre for that district. We boast that we have achieved both efficiency and economy, and, undoubtedly, our provisions are in very perfect order and our rates low, and we would look with very great objection upon being taken from our present admirable position and put somewhere else.

CHAIRMAN.—Of course the question will arise again in Monaghan.

Mr. Dringdale.—If our boundaries were increased we would not object to take in other divisions, but we object to being wiped out, and we won't go to Lisnakeel.

Dr. Leonard
Kidd.

Dr. LEONARD KIDD examined.

6470. CHAIRMAN.—Now, Dr. Kidd, you have come views to lay before me?—I submit the general proposition that there are an unnecessary number of hospitals and workhouses in Ireland, and that if the State must support a percentage of the population represented by the sick, the insane, the aged and infirm poor, and certain classes of children, this work must be done in the most efficient way with due regard to economy, and the children educated and brought up to be healthy and useful citizens of the State. I take Fermanagh, which I know best, to prove my case. The population is 65,000. For general hospital purposes one bed per 1,000 of the population in rural districts is considered sufficient, but as the conditions existing in Ireland are peculiar owing to the emigration of so many of the family I take the standard as one bed for 800 of the population; therefore Fermanagh would require about sixty hospital beds for acute medical and surgical cases, exclusive of fever, but in order to provide for emergencies I fix the number at eighty. But there are at present three union hospitals in addition to the County Infirmary providing, according to my estimate, and exclusively of the fever hospitals, 218 beds—County Infirmary, 99; Baniscliffon Union, 88; Lisnakeel, 43; and Irvinestown, 40. I am not absolutely certain of these figures, it is very hard for me to get at them, but it is approximately 225, and I think eighty would be sufficient. These eighty beds I would divide into two classes of hospitals, A and B. A.—With provision, say for sixty beds constructed, equipped, and furnished on modern lines as a first-class medical and surgical hospital, with a house surgeon and efficient nursing staff. B.—Comprising the remaining twenty beds, divided between, say, three cottage hospitals under charge of the local doctors, and placed in such localities as a consideration of the population, area, and physical characters of the district to be served suggested as the most suitable, taking means of transit into consideration. Aged and infirm paupers—I am aware the above provision will leave a class as yet unprovided for—I refer to chronic or incurable cases, aged and infirm paupers. It is, however, obvious that there is a great deal more accommodation for such cases than is actually required. The three unions are capable of accommodating about 1,000 inmates, but last year the daily average was only 227—Baniscliffon 163, Irvinestown 88, and Lisnakeel 52. One of these buildings, therefore, would suffice for the entire county, the abolition of the other two representing a great saving in the salaries of staff and out-patients. This one union building so retained I classify as C. I believe a similar arrangement to be applicable to every county in Ireland—i.e., one large centrally placed class A hospital, while the number of classes B and C would depend on population and other local considerations. These class A hospitals would be supplied from the best of the county infirmaries or reconstructed union hospitals, such being located in the largest town of the county subject to its being central and to have a visiting staff of two or three, the medical officers of unimproved union infirmaries to be, as far as possible, transferred to the new class A hospital. All these classes of hospitals I would put under a hospital committee of the County Council or committee appointed by the County Council, and, adopting the county as the administrative unit, support them by a county-at-large rate, they and the asylums to be under the supervision of a special department of the Local Government Board to direct the local boards who, with the best intentions, seldom have a nice appreciation of hospital requirements. Much useless legislation would have to be repealed and provision made for paying—I don't know whether this is quite within the scope of your inquiry, but it is no harm to make the observation—and provision made for paying the medical men in charge of hospitals in proportion to their work and responsibilities. Infirmary surgeons are now paid on a scale fixed seventy years ago, when the practice of medicine consisted largely in bleeding, and emphysema in position and pinch plasters. Those hospitals in class A that reach a sufficiently high standard in construction, equipment, and in arrangements made for teaching, should be recognized as training schools for nurses. I submit that nurses trained in such hospitals will receive a more practical training and acquire more experience in the kind of work they will have to do afterwards in the district or cottage hospitals, where there are no students or dressers, than in clinical hospitals where there are classes of students, dressers, clinical clerks to do all the work, that in their absence must fall to the lot of the nurse. I would prefer to see the nursing arrangements of each county self-contained, every hospital in class A having a staff larger than is required for its own actual wants so as to be always able to send on emergency extra assistance to the smaller out-lying hospitals, and also contribute to the finances of the hospital by their earnings in nursing private cases. Such a plan would enable frequent exchanges to be made between the large hospital and the smaller ones, in this way keeping all the nurses up to their work. I think every nurse employed in rate-supported hospitals for the benefit of the poor should have a midwifery training, especially if there is any district nursing to be developed. The county infirmaries, up to the passing of the Medical Charities Act of 1891, had provision for a dispensary and out-patient department. I consider this out-patient, or extern, department should be revived (not only in the county infirmaries, but also in each district or cottage hospital), and put in charge of the local dispensary doctor, whether he be a member of the visiting staff in class A or not; the ordinary dispensary work would then be done in the extern department of the hospital. This would represent a large saving by the abolition of many dispensary depots and caretakers. Moreover, the want of provision in the existing county dispensary depots for the examination and treatment of surgical cases, especially females, is a grave public scandal, and sufficient to deter many decent people from attending. A properly-worked extern department in all hospitals, together with efficient district nursing worked from there, would result in a substantial reduction in the number of patients seeking admission. I do not mean that district nursing should be confined to the hospitals as centres, but worked from them it could be most efficient. The question of patients' payments in rate-supported hospitals is quite different from the same principle when applied to hospitals supported by charitable donations. I consider the rates merely supply a grant in aid. In the Fermanagh Infirmary the number of patients, taking the average number of beds occupied, as thirty-eight; the annual cost of each bed occupied was in 1898 £27 15s. 7d., and in 1899 £30 15s. 1d.; the average cost of each patient was in 1898, £27 5s. 3d., and in 1899, £27 10s. 9d. I worked out that without the smallest hardship to the patients they could give an £300 a year income, as follows:—That one of the thirty-eight beds should pay 1s. 6d. a day, or 10s. 6d. a week, six should pay 1s. a day, eight of a day, 3s. 6d. a week, ten should pay 2d. a day, and twelve 1d. a day, which comes to 7d. a week, equal to £12 a year, that is a total of £300, and I wish to remark that twelve of the thirty-eight pay only one penny a day, and these twelve don't live as cheaply at home, so that at this price there is an economy to them in being sick in the infirmary; they may make more by it. It is argued on behalf of the farmers that they should not pay, because they contribute county cess, but in Fermanagh the valuation of the county is £241,221, and it only requires 1.3d. in the £ valuation to produce £1,400, our maximum income; the average of the county is £27,756 acres, and £ of a penny per acre will produce £1,400. Thus, a man whose valuation is £3 will pay, say, 4d. annually to the infirmary, and a £5 valuation will pay, say, 5d., or a holding of five acres will pay, say, 4d., but even these small figures present the case in its most favourable light for the farmer, because by the refund from the agricultural grant they are reduced by half, and a £5 valuation pays, say, 3d., and a five-acre holding pays, say, 2d.

6471. And you think that is too little for medical attendance during the year?—I think it is very little for a man to have medical attendance and the rent of his teeth. With regard to fever hospitals, I would manage them in much the same way as the general hospital; one central, and the cottages having a wing with, say, two beds for each sex. The question of a fever hospital is more difficult than that of a general hospital. I would not, in contrast to general hospitals, charge patients in fever hospitals, where they go as much in the interests of the public as in their own, and payments might only provide an additional obstacle to the prevalent dislike to fever hospitals. The central fever hospital should provide facilities for the treatment of at least three varieties of fever in each sex, without the risk of contact. The permanent establishment to be increased by temporary erections in cases of epidemics. I think the best way to work that would be at the Local Government Board had at certain centres a depot where for hire materials for the erection of temporary hospitals might be sent wherever required. An efficient ambulance service would, of course, mitigate the drawbacks of moving patients actually sick long distances, but I am in favour of so locating district hospitals as to reduce the objection to distance to a minimum; the further away the hospital the more unwilling the patient is to go. I admit, too, that if cases were sent earlier than they usually are the objection to moving them has less reason, and also that immediate removal to hospital is often the only means of saving some cases. Now, I come to tubercular cases. Tuberculosis is a subject in which I have given some special thought. I wish to plead for special provision for the treatment of tubercular cases and to protest against the idea that the existing workhouses, unless they be completely reconstructed, are suitable for the purpose. Unless these cases of pulmonary tuberculosis are suitably housed in special buildings in selected sites, with a resident medical officer, treatment will be a failure and a reputable method brought into disrepute. I think groups of cottages should combine to promote suitable sanatoria, which, to equaise expenditure, should be placed in the counties not having an asylum. Take, for instance, Tyrone and Fermanagh; we pay large rates in support of the Tyrone Asylum. As far as I know there are no contracts for that asylum placed in this county and if consumptive sanatoria were established by counties, or groups of counties, I think they should be placed in those counties that have no asylum, so as to equalise the expenditure of public money. Then again, there are an enormous number of surgical tubercular cases, other than pulmonary, admitted to hospitals in Ireland. These are all chronic cases, and require the same hygienic treatment that lung cases require. They cause a great congestion in hospitals intended for acute cases, but have to be admitted because their home surroundings are such as to make recovery practically impossible; such cases would do best in convalescent homes near the sea-border, which could be maintained by the receipts of the patients in them and other hospitals. I suggested some five or six years ago, but I could not get sufficient support, that the Counties Fermanagh, Sligo, Tyrone, and Donegal should unite in having a convalescent home with twenty beds in the neighbourhood of Bundoran. The average cost of each occupied bed would be about £30 to £35 a year, and the Fermanagh Infirmary would always be able to support four or five beds in constant occupation. With regard to epilepsy, I consider the practice of keeping epileptics or insane of any description in unions should be abandoned unless certain unless are to be converted into auxiliary asylums, but this raises the question of increased expense for medical attendance, which such institutions should not be without. It might be more economical to enlarge the existing asylums to meet the demand. The total number of mental cases in Fermanagh was only thirty.

6472. In the asylum?—No; in the workhouse. As far as I can make out from the Blue Book there were only thirty mental cases in the three unions in Fermanagh.

6473. I think that is a mistake. Take, for instance, Ramakillen Workhouse, a large number of the inmates are at present under medical treatment in the sick wards, and they are classed as sick, not as insane. In future returns that difference will be pointed out—I got my figures from the Blue Book, and could only have thirty. Now, sir, with regard to the boarding out of children, I am very opposed to this; the one argument in its favour is the removal of children from the so-called atmosphere or taint of the workhouse. I admit children should be removed from the workhouse, but boarding them out removes them to an atmosphere very little better. Having visited children that are boarded out I could see they are taught nothing in the way of a trade; their highest objective seems to be a farm drudge or cattle-boy, nor have they even been taught the best way of doing farm work. I submit all the poorer children should be grouped in separate establishments for which purpose some of the unused workhouses would answer. Such an establishment would serve two or more counties, and should also be placed in the county not having an asylum. I would call these institutions industrial schools, in which young children would be taught on the most modern lines, and when old enough each child to receive some technical instruction so as to acquire some trade or handicraft. So long ago as the time of Edward VI. suggestions were made for the training of the children of tramps, "which being once brought up as idleness would hardly be brought afterwards to any good kind of labour or service." I consider the children of tramps should all, without option, be sent to such schools so as to be under good influence and prompt at a time when they are most impressionable that their first impressions might be of a desirable character. As far as I can see in Fermanagh—I am not quite sure about this—but there seemed to me to be about thirty children in Ramakillen, twelve in Lismacul, and about twelve in Brinkinstown, so that one large institution would perhaps serve two or three counties. On the other hand I am in favour of boarding out people at the other extreme of life, provided homes can be found for them, and I submit no system of poor relief should be sanctioned by the State, which permits or encourages people to forget or evade their moral obligations in the matter of the support of relations. The average cost for food and necessaries alone for maintaining an indoor pauper appears to be about 3s. 6d. a week. I only speak of food and necessaries, I am not talking of maintenance or establishment charges, but I only take food and necessaries to contrast it with outdoor relief. This amount, or even less, given to the relatives of the aged poor would suffice to enable them to keep the old people at home, but even this outdoor relief should only be given after, and subject to, careful inquiry. Contrast this 3s. 6d. a week for the indoor maintenance of a pauper with £5 a year, or 1s. 11d. a week, generally allowed for a boarded-out child's food and schooling. 1s. 11d. a week, or 3d. a day, is not enough to provide sufficient or suitable food for a growing child of seven or eight, much less for one of fifteen. I think that were children put in schools under sound hygienic conditions, well fed, under frequent inspection, they would escape many of the ill-effects of ignorance, dirt, and neglect, much would be done to improve the general health and physique of the people, and an important step taken to diminish the spread and ravages of tuberculous and other preventable diseases.

6474. Dr. Bowen.—You said something about every nurse having a midwifery training. How could that be accomplished in county infirmaries?—I should think it should be part of their curriculum that they should be sent to a lying-in hospital for three or four months.

6475. Have you any idea where they could be sent or whether there are any hospitals that could take them?—I should think there would be ample facilities between the Coombe and the Rotunda and the National Lying-in Hospital at Belles Street, and similar institutions in Belfast and Cork.

6476. Are they not doing their maximum of training?—I don't know that.

6477. I know in the lying-in hospital in Belfast they have a list of perhaps twenty applicants, and cannot take them all—that a great many of those people would probably become nurses in such hospitals as those if there was this system of district nurses; the number of nurses you select or appoint won't represent an additional number going to these institutions.

Nov. 11, 1903.
Dr. Leonard
Kidd.

6478. Won't the other wants still have to be supplied of monthly nurses?—No; because these people will do a great deal of it in the country at these district hospitals.

6479. How could they go off to act as monthly nurses to ladies in the district?—I would let the lady in the district provide for herself; I would not provide for her out of the rates on any account.

6480. Won't it require a large number of establishments for training in the country?—I don't think so; I think you have ample facilities at present.

6481. CHAIRMAN.—Would there be enough cases in lying-in hospitals in the shire cities in Ireland to train that large number of medical and surgical assistants?—I think there would be no difficulty about it. I want to see cases one night myself from the Coombe.

6482. Dr. BRIDGES.—Was there not a nurse at each of them?—Indeed there was not; the unfortunate student was none and everything.

6483. CHAIRMAN.—There was many a night when you get no case?—That is so; but very seldom.

6484. Dr. BRIDGES.—You got the training in a very short time?—No; I spent six months in the Coombe.

6485. You mentioned that there was a want of appreciation in the asylums and hospitals on the part of the authorities and Local Government Board?—No, I did not; I don't refer particularly to the asylums, but I say as a whole as a general expression.

6486. What is the use of a general expression unless you mean somebody by it?—I mean as a general statement there is a want of appreciation of the requirements of hospitals.

6487. CHAIRMAN.—You mean the ordinary country Guardian would not know how a hospital ought to be run?—Quite so, even although his intentions are the very best; there are a great many things they don't realize.

6488. Dr. BRIDGES.—How are the patients admitted into your infirmary; what is the mode of procedure?—They are supposed to get a line from a governor.

6489. Are the governors always available?—Oh, yes; there is no difficulty; and, as a matter of fact, there are more names passed as entered by me than by anybody else, because a great many people come without lines. I happen to be a life governor, and I admit them. On the other hand dispensary doctors often send cases asking me to take them in, and they are passed through the books in my name.

6490. CHAIRMAN.—Even if you were not a governor, there is some discretion on the surgeon's part as to admission?—Legally, there is not; the law is old and bad.

6491. Would you recommend a change in the law to that effect?—I would. At present I am supposed to have no discretion but to take them in.

6492. Dr. BRIDGES.—What way would you suggest for broadening the system of admission?—I would simply have the qualification of sickness, and no line whatever.

6493. Would you say any doctor in the county should recommend a patient?—Certainly; I would put no obstacle in their way at all.

6494. How much do you actually receive from patients admitted?—I think the maximum we got was £20 a year; when I was appointed it averaged £15 or £16, and we worked it up to about £20.

6495. CHAIRMAN.—You think it is highly desirable that people should be made to feel independent?—I think they would appreciate much more what was done for them. I don't see why pauperism should be thrust on people.

6496. Dr. BRIDGES.—You think it would also take away the idea of pauperism?—I think it would; I think it would make people more independent and self-respecting.

6497. You would recommend it for all the hospitals in the county?—Yes, except the fever hospital, and that is for the benefit of others.

6498. You did not give us any idea of the requirements for consumptives?—It is rather hard to do that. In the first place I think all tuberculosis should be made a notifiable disease; you could not put them all into hospitals at present, but if they were notified and under inspection I have no doubt an immense deal could be done to reduce the amount, and, in fact, the mortality in England has fallen considerably already as a result of their efforts.

6499. That is not due to treatment in sanatoria?—Partly, and partly to ordinary hygienic efforts.

6500. How long are cases of bone disease due to tuberculosis usually kept in?—They vary; you get rid of some very quickly, and on others you have to operate time after time. Even in London a case of the kind will require a dozen or half a dozen operations. In London now they are shifting them to places on the sea-board; they are hardly justified in operating on them in large centres.

6501. Is it your idea that the sea-board has a highly beneficial effect?—I think it would.

6502. CHAIRMAN.—On a surgical case, or phthisis is well?—Largely surgical tuberculosis; there are cases of pulmonary tuberculosis that probably will not do so well. If you want the best results you have to pick and choose your cases; some will not do in places where others will.

6503. Dr. BRIDGES.—You could not give us an idea of what the average period in hospital would be for these cases of bone disease?—I can tell you this, that coming over my beds the other day, out of thirty-five there were twenty-six surgical tuberculosis.

6504. CHAIRMAN.—On which you had to operate?—In nearly all the cases.

6505. Dr. BRIDGES.—That did not leave you many medical cases?—No.

6506. That is a very large percentage?—It is enormous. I think when we talk of tuberculosis and not taking from consumption in this country we leave out the surgical tuberculosis cases altogether; there is a appalling death rate.

6507. CHAIRMAN.—And an appalling maiming rate; people that are useless for life?—I believe if there were preventive measures taken it would in a short time result in a gigantic saving. I find in 1898 the average cost per bed occupied in the infirmary here was only £27 15s. 7d., and in 1899 it was £30 14s. 1d. per bed occupied. Of course it is more now, because in the last three or four years these alterations have been made, and the accounts are all mixed up.

6508. That is very low?—It is extremely low; and last year, in 1902, in the Tyrone Infirmary it was £40 per patient, and a bed occupied in a London hospital would run from £80 to £100 or more; it is £45 10s. in Belfast; and the average cost per patient with us in 1898 was only £2 5s., and in 1899 £2 10s.

6509. On your account for the difference between £30 in your infirmary and £40 in Tyrone?—They have larger establishment charges. The difficulty is to draw reliable figures, because the system of accounts is never uniform.

6510. Is your £27 and your £30 not the total cost of the institution; every expenditure divided by the number of patients?—With me it is, but it took me a great deal of trouble to find it out, and there is no uniform system; you cannot draw conclusions from one hospital to another; you seldom have the same basis to work on.

6511. Tuberculosis is a very great cause of disease; I suppose intemperance is also a great cause of disease?—It is indeed.

6512. You are aware of that in your practice, of course?—I am.

6513. Has it ever occurred to you the desirability of having a State or other asylum for the reception of imbeciles with a view of curing them?—It has very often; I think it would be a very desirable thing, but what I have never been able to decide to my own satisfaction is how it is to be done; how you are to get people into it.

6514. At all events a diseased workhouse assemblage might be used for that?—It might.

6515. The extent to which intemperance prevails is a serious question in most parts of the country?—It is.

6516. You were speaking just now of the management for district hospitals; would you propose that the County Infirmary should be under the same management as the district hospitals?—I think so.

6517. They would be all a part of the county system?—Yes; part of the one whole system.

6518. The hospitals would be in class A?—One only in each county; possibly some counties might require two. In this county I would have only one situated at Baniskillen.

6519. The other hospitals at Enniskillen or Irvinestown would be class B?—Yes, if there were any.

6520. They, of course, would not treat nurses?—No; but they might be supplied from the person hospital here.

6521. Do you think they would be unsuitable for training?—I do.

6522. You spoke about district nurses, did you mean district hospital nurses, or nurses nursing in the district among the houses of the people?—I know there is a large movement of the kind going on at present, and I think that district nursing among the houses of the people should be the best, worked through the means of nurse cottage hospitals, as far as it was possible, and that the nurses should be part of the staff of these hospitals.

6521. They should live in the nurses' home adjacent to the hospital?—Yes, as part of the establishment, as far as it was possible. Of course I know there are some districts in which there would be no hospital where it would be well to have a nurse.

6522. And you would have these nurses acting under the direction and supervision of the dispensary medical officer?—Yes much on the same principle as the Jewish nurses.

6523. As regards the removal of fever patients to large hospitals, we had evidence that fever patients in large numbers are removed from some parts of Essex. Union to a distance of twenty-four miles?—Yes; my impression is that if these fevers were recognized at an early stage the risk of removing them would be comparatively trifling. On the other hand I think it presents an additional obstacle in the way of inducing people to go to hospitals if you say "You have to go twenty or twenty-five miles," and I think in these districts hospitals there should be some provision for a limited number of fever patients that might be jumped on at once and brought there. As a rule the country establishments are not the very best; they might be improved.

6524. Mr. MURMAGHAN.—Have you considered the staff that would be necessary for these hospitals that you class under letter B?—Well, of course, that would depend; you would have first to fix the size of these hospitals, but I should think, for the hospital itself, supposing you had a cottage hospital for six beds, you would only want a head nurse and a probationer.

6525. Under the control of the dispensary doctor?—Under his direction.

Dr. J. Wilson examined.

6526. Dr. BROSSE.—Would you let us know your views upon the question of amalgamation?—I am of opinion that Farnham should have one central workhouse hospital, and my impression is that that workhouse hospital should be a distinct and separate institution from the workhouse proper; that it should be altogether free from control of the Board of Guardians and placed under the control of a central sanitary committee.

6527. CHAIRMAN.—Like the County Infirmary?—Like the County Infirmary, or like an asylum managed that way. With reference to the workhouse children, I am under the impression that they should be boarded out and taken away altogether from the unhealthy atmosphere of the workhouse. As regards the aged and infirm, a good many of them should be boarded out too, and provision made for them in that way; others could be made comfortable in the wards of the workhouse by a little extra attention. I think you would require an auxiliary for idiots and senile for consumption. If you could get rid of the idiots it would be easy to make provision for the consumptives in another institution.

6528. Dr. BROSSE.—You don't mean to say that you should have an auxiliary for consumptives; would that be for the county?—That would be for the county. I think you ought to have one central sanatorium for the county.

6529. Have you any idea what provision should be made for the consumptives of the county; what size hospital?—I have not any idea as to the size of the establishment; my idea is that there should be one central spot for consumptives run on the lines of a sanatorium.

6530. Do you think patients would go to the sanatorium?—I think they would, for they have been fairly well educated to that in this county; we had a local sanatorium run here by a local gentleman, and most people who had means were very glad to avail themselves of the sanatorium.

6531. CHAIRMAN.—Whereabouts was that?—At Stone-down, down the lake; and I must say the success was very fair.

6532. Is the house occupied at present?—It is not; it is derelict.

6533. Dr. BROSSE.—What was the cost per week?—I really could not tell you; the patients were charged according to means—according to their means. It is fixed now.

6534. And the larger hospital?—I should think the preparation of nurses should be there. Now, for instance, I calculate that in the infirmary here I ought to have one nurse to every five or six beds; that would give me six or seven nurses.

6535. Do you see any economy in the change you suggest?—I cannot altogether say I see an economy, because it would be a matter possibly of increased charges, but I would say increased efficiency, and, to my mind, very often increased efficiency should weigh down a matter of economy.

6536. Don't you know the rates of the country think the burden is already sufficient?—I know that.

6537. CHAIRMAN.—Even apart from that, if unions were broken up and a large number of salaries saved, would not the expense of the extra nurses, if such an expense were necessary at all, which I doubt, more than counterbalance that?—The whole thing could be worked to such an extent that any additional hands employed would be paid ten times over by the savings. Take this county, I think the number of hospitals and establishments is appalling in its extravagance.

6538. Mr. MURMAGHAN.—I thought Farnham was a model county?—I don't think they are loose in administration, but the establishments are too numerous.

6539. CHAIRMAN.—You would not consider Lanarkshire extravagant when its rate for Poor Law purposes is 5s. 6d. in the £1?—No; but I would say one institution of the kind would serve for the whole county, and you get rid of the staff, the upkeep, and the maintenance of the other buildings. I think they would make very good quarters as long as they last; they are not good for much else.

6540. Mr. MURMAGHAN.—Do you think two hospitals in addition to the main hospital would be sufficient for the county?—I think so; but that is a matter to be fixed by local knowledge.

6541. CHAIRMAN.—Do you think that is a great loss to the neighbourhood?—I think it is a loss to the community, because if a case of consumption is taken up at an incipient stage the possibility is it may be cured.

6542. Dr. BROSSE.—Are there many cases of consumption in this district?—I cannot say there are; we have very few in the workhouse.

6543. Why do they not go into the workhouse?—Beyond the cases coming in as paupers, people with means will not come into the workhouse.

6544. Is the name of the workhouse a bar?—It is a bar.

6545. And even supposing they did come in, have you a proper way of treating them?—We have not an extra efficient way; it has been improved lately.

6546. Is it really on modern lines?—I cannot say it is.

6547. CHAIRMAN.—It is just isolation?—Isolation, pure and simple.

6548. Dr. BROSSE.—You approve of boarding out children?—I would approve of having children boarded out; you never have a worse pauper than a child brought up in the workhouse.

6549. Do you think they come back to the workhouse?—Indeed they do; they lead a life of idleness and laziness, and you cannot get them out of it.

6550. It has been mentioned that cases of fever come from long distances here?—Yes; as regards enteric fever, the great majority of the cases all come from the Glen district. I have not very much idea of the locality myself, but I have seen patients coming in in a very advanced condition, and I have seen three or four cases of collapse from the journey alone. Evidently these cases are not recognized in the primary stage, and the shock of the journey killed them.

6551. Were these typhoid cases?—Yes.

6552. Has the nature of the ambulance anything to do with their dying of shock?—We have a new and improved ambulance—very different to the ambulance of former days—it is run on tyres, but it is a white sheeted. What I intended the Board of Guardians to do was to have a four-wheeled ambulance, but I was vetoed. If I suggest anything the Guardians go for something else.

6553. Do you think a two-wheeled ambulance is a proper vehicle for removing the sick?—I do not.

Nov. 11, 1906.

Dr. Lumard
Right.

Nov. 11, 1902.
Dr. J. Wilson.

6556. Do you not think the Guardians are very much to blame; did they consider the injury they were doing to many a poor patient?—I don't know what they looked at.

6557. CHAIRMAN.—I think the impression is general that these mountain districts don't permit of a four-wheeled vehicle travelling?—Yes; there is something in that; but why not carry them down on a stretcher to it.

6558. But, as a matter of fact, there are very light four-wheeled vehicles built for these mountain districts?—Yes; but if a patient is wrapped in a blanket and carried on a stretcher a short distance to the ambulance I don't see that it does him any harm.

6559. You have a large number of fever patients to deal with in Enniskillen?—Yes; unusually large. We have only two cases of typhoid now; all the others are diphtheria and scarlatina.

6560. How many cases?—I think we have eleven or twelve of diphtheria, and we are getting in a fresh case of scarlatina.

6561. What is your nursing staff?—It is very antiquated; we have only one nurse to look after the whole crew.

6562. How many night nurses?—We have no night nurse.

6563. Dr. BARNES.—Should you not have one?—I don't say we should, but I tried that before.

6564. You have the responsibility and the power of getting one?—I know I have, but things were made so unpleasant for the last nurse I had down—she would not be allowed to cross the ferry and she would not be allowed to go to a place of worship—owing to the action of some of the antiquated officials.

6565. Why would you let your patients suffer for reasons of that sort?—They have not suffered up to the present.

6566. CHAIRMAN.—Don't you think they are bound to suffer every hour of the day and night?—Yes; but really we have had no mortality. We only lost one case of diphtheria, which died shortly after coming in, and during those eight years we only lost two cases of typhoid. There is not so very much difficulty in getting a nursing staff; I have only to requisition the master and have it done, but the difficulty is as regards the general work of the hospital.

6567. But you have the power to requisition that also?—I tried that on to my heart's content; I might requisition away and get nobody.

6568. Have you ever done so and failed?—I have.

6569. Dr. BARNES.—Whose fault was that; to whom did you send the requisition?—The master of the workhouse.

6570. Did he not comply with it?—I think he did his level best; at least he says he did.

6571. CHAIRMAN.—It is altogether between you both; if an emergency arises you have got the power. You have a large number of midwifery cases too?—Yes; unusually large.

6572. By whom are they attended?—By the night nurse, who holds the qualification of a maternity nurse.

6573. Mr. MURPHY.—I am afraid that your testimony to the Enniskillen Infirmary does not speak well for the position taken up by the Fermanagh County Council and local bodies that there should be only one central institution for the poor in this county. You say the infirmary is very far behind what science requires?—Yes; it is not quite up to date; it has been immensely improved the last few years. I would not call it an up-to-date establishment.

6574. I went through the house lately and it did seem to me a great many improvements were made?—Yes; the Board of Guardians, I must say, to their credit, have done a great deal, but there remains a great deal yet to be done.

6575. But, having done a great deal in a short time, does it not promise that they would do more in the future?—I agree with you.

6576. Why do you suggest that the administration of the Poor Law should be taken out of their hands?—For the simple reason that the Board of Guardians have no idea of the care that should be taken in nursing sick patients. They come there to vapour and rest, and read their own reports in the newspapers and week; they never consider what is due to the sick poor.

6577. Do they not come there to see that the money of the ratepayers whom they represent shall be as efficiently administered as possible?—Certainly, I agree with you that, as ratepayers, they are entitled to representation on the Board of Guardians to see how the money is expended.

6578. Do you suggest they have any other object in view than to administer the Poor Law system to the very best of their ability?—No; I am not making a suggestion of that sort; you seem to misunderstand me. I think the Guardians are kind and generous enough to a fault, but if we had less sympathy and more work the sick poor would be better looked after.

6579. But the very fact that a considerable amount of improvements have been made lately shows the Guardians are anxious, commensurate with the administration of the rates that they draw their statements from, to improve the condition of the poor?—Yes; they have done a great deal.

6580. Do you not think that a little consultation with the chief men of the board would advance matters better than making wholesale charges against them?—I am not making wholesale charges against the Board of Guardians; you misunderstand me. Only for the active members of the board and the men really who have taken an interest in it you would have nothing whatever done. I am talking about a section of the Board of Guardians who don't seem to understand what is due to the sick poor. I am not talking of the Board of Guardians as a whole.

6581. The administration of the house, except as regards the infirmary, seemed to me to be very far on my inspection?—I have not very much knowledge of workhouses in general beyond the one of which I am medical officer myself and the Derradilly Workhouse. I cannot say I know much about any other workhouses in Ireland.

6582. You think the house is large enough to accommodate the whole county if necessary?—The house proper is a very large institution. I cannot tell you the number of people it was built to accommodate, or even I give you an idea, as I know nothing of the locality, nor can I give you an idea as regards the tax that will be put upon it by taking in other cases. Of course, as regards the hospital, in order to accommodate other unions very probably it would have to be enlarged by making some structural arrangements.

6583. The number in the workhouse in Fermanagh is something like 550; out of that there were probably 100 harmless inmates and perhaps fifty or sixty children; that would mean 350 for the whole county; do you think that house would be ample for the needs of 350 people?—I don't think it would; I think you would have to make other arrangements by structural alterations. You might, possibly; I cannot go into figures.

6584. How is the health of the locality?—So far as I know, with the exception of an outbreak of diphtheria, and a few cases of scarlatina, the health of the locality is very good.

6585. Water supply adequate and good?—Yes; I must say it is adequate.

6586. Good pressure for the house?—Yes.

6587. Mr. LINDSAY.—You are aware of your power with regard to having proper nursing accommodation?—Yes.

6588. Why turn the blame of not having sufficient staff on the Board of Guardians?—I am not turning blame.

6589. I say you are. Do you know of any more up-to-date workhouse in Ireland—free one and to the other than Enniskillen, so far as the Guardians have control over it?—They have done everything in their power to facilitate me.

Mr. LINDSAY.—In the name of the board, I say if the fever hospital lacks in any way it is the doctor who is to blame and not the Guardians.

Mr. PHILIP TERRY examined.

6590. Mr. Dwyer.—You are a member of the Glenties Union?—Yes.

6591. You sent in a report yourself in answer to these queries that were sent by the Commissioners?—I did.

6592. Subsequently to that did you attend a meeting of your board at which the general attitude of your board was resolved on?—Yes.

6593. That is as Dr. Tierney gave evidence to-day?—Yes.

Mr. Philip Terry.

6594. Do you agree with the other members of your board and Dr. Tierney's evidence?—Yes; I listened to his evidence, and agree with him.

6595. And you withdrew your own report?—Yes; I answered the question on my own responsibility. I consulted the referees I represent since, and there were some things in which they did not agree with me.

Mr. EDWARD M. FLEMING, CHAIRMAN.

6596. Mr. Muldoon.—You are Chairman of the Board of Guardians at Lismaskell?—Yes.

6597. And have been chairman for a number of years?—Yes; for about five.

6598. And you are a member of the Board of Guardians for over twenty?—Yes.

6599. Have you considered the question of amalgamation of unions in the County Fermanagh?—Yes; we have.

6600. Tell the Commission the result of your inquiry into the subject; do you think that Lismaskell should be preserved as a centre of Poor Law administration?—Yes, we do.

6601. For what reason do you think it should be preserved?—Owing to its geographical situation for one reason and for the convenience of the sick poor for another.

6602. I believe, on the question generally, that you are in favour of amalgamation?—Yes; partial amalgamation.

6603. But you think it is not practicable in Fermanagh to do without two unions?—No; we wish to give amalgamation a fair trial, but not to rush it.

6604. CHAIRMAN.—You would like to begin with Inverness?—Yes, certainly.

6605. Mr. Muldoon.—Do you think that the portion of Clones Union that comes into Fermanagh could be appropriated by Lismaskell?—I say it would cause no more inconvenience to that portion of Clones than portion of Lismaskell already suffers; it is a kind of home-like shape into our union, and is quite as convenient a portion of our own.

6606. Your union is situated near the Upper Lake?—Yes.

6607. And in that lake there are a large number of inhabited islands?—Yes; there are up to 220 islands inhabited.

6608. Dr. Brogan.—What do you call inhabited?—From one house to a good many.

6609. Mr. Muldoon.—Would you say it would be a good hardship to these people to have to bring them to Enniskillen?—I say it would.

6610. What procedure would have to be adopted in order to do so?—There would have to be a boat.

6611. CHAIRMAN.—No matter what union they belonged to they would want a boat?—Yes; but after entering the hardship of the boat you would be inflicting on them an additional twelve or fourteen miles per Lismaskell, and many sick people would not be able to bear the journey. I think the doctor would tell you that there are plenty of patients who arrive at Lismaskell that if they had to go an additional twelve or fourteen miles they would be dead.

6612. Mr. Muldoon.—I believe from some parts of your union to Enniskillen it would be twenty-five miles?—And over.

6613. Do you think in case of amalgamation the districts would be properly represented at Enniskillen?—I do not. I think many of the representatives would not attend Enniskillen at all.

6614. In your experience of the Lismaskell Union, has it been fairly well and economically managed?—As a union it compares favourably with any in Ulster, and as to the management it is the lowest in Ireland, as far as rates are concerned.

6615. What about the situation of the buildings?—They are all as good as any other workhouse I ever visited, and within the last two years, on the recommendation of Dr. Bigger, we have done a good deal of repairs to it. We have within the last year put in, on Dr. Bigger's recommendation, new grates; we have fitted up two portions of the house for consumptive patients at an outlay of £300 or £400.

6616. And your rate is 2d. in the £ on an average lower than Enniskillen?—Yes.

and I agree with the majority of the Guardians at Enniskillen. Ass. II, 1883.

6617. Mr. Muldoon.—In the event of your original report being acted on and Clones broken up and brought to Enniskillen, would you not have to pass Lismaskell to go to Enniskillen?—I would.

6618. Would you not rather stop there than go on?—I would rather stop at Lismaskell.

6619. CHAIRMAN.—Is that for Poor Law purposes or all purposes—medical charities?—Yes; everything taken in the Poor Law.

6620. But that is not Poor Law?—The rate leviable, provided we had no District Council, would be 2d. of a rating as against Enniskillen.

CHAIRMAN.—We only take the Poor Law expenditure.

6621. Mr. Muldoon.—The Inspector of the Local Government Board has frequently examined the union workhouse?—Yes, he has.

6622. On the last occasion did he say anything to you about the general management of the place?—Yes; he said he would make no the medium of conveying his thanks to the Lismaskell Board of Guardians for having done so much in putting the house in repair. In his last report he said he had nothing to recommend; we had done everything.

6623. In case the Enniskillen Union took in Inverness and that portion of Ballyshannon which comes into this county, and retained that portion of Clones which now comes here, don't you think Enniskillen Union would have large enough burdens on its own shoulders without taking on Lismaskell?—I think it would.

6624. Would you think that under the circumstances it would be a necessity for Lismaskell to be continued as a union centre?—I think so.

6625. About the boarding-out question, what is your view?—Well, after a certain age I would think it is very beneficial to the children to be boarded out, but not until after a certain age. I would like to see the children getting a certain amount of schooling before they are sent out. They can be more efficiently attended to within an institution than they can when sent out to the country; when they are able to walk to school they could go to the country on the boarding-out system.

6626. CHAIRMAN.—At what age?—Eight or nine. I would not say sooner.

6627. Mr. Muldoon.—Did you hear Mr. Jordan's evidence on the boarding-out system?—I did.

6628. Did you agree with that?—I did not; Mr. Jordan said he would wish to see them boarded out at the lowest possible age. I think that is entirely wrong. I would try to place them in the hands of respectable people who would give them a proper training, and it would have a tendency to render them more capable of earning their living in after life than to put them with low people who would only charge a misnomer fee for keeping them.

6629. Did you hear Mr. Jordan's evidence about the officers who would be got rid of in the case of amalgamation?—I did; but take that as against Mr. Lord's evidence with regard to the cottage hospitals and it would be largely on the other side.

6630. What officers have you at Lismaskell?—Master, matron, schoolmistress, porter, and three nurses.

6631. And some of the staff would have to be strengthened in the case of a hospital established there?—Nurses?—In the case of cottage hospitals being located over the country they would have to be made up to date, as far as the hospital is concerned; you would have to put at least two nurses in each of them, and, with five beds, I don't think it would accommodate increasing and outgoing patients, and the outlay that would be entailed and the salaries would be far more than at present.

6632. What would be your treatment for harmless lunatics?—What we would recommend is to send harmless lunatics together with other lunatics of the county to Inverness. I would be very slow to abolish any place if I could not recommend something that would be the means of economizing, and I think it would be economy to have the harmless lunatics, together with the other lunatics of the county, located at Inverness.

6633. Would you still leave the appointments in the hands of the full board?—Certainly.

No. 11, 1903.
Mr. Edward M.
Flanagan.

6634. As regards the reduction in the number of Guardians, would you go as far as Mr. Lindsay in taking away three-fourths?—No; I would say half what we have at present.

6635. You have some difficulty in getting a quorum at present?—In the outlying districts the attendance is bad.

6636. Do you think there should be more sanitary officers appointed by the Guardians?—I do; I consider sanitation is not properly attended to under the present system. I would recommend augmenting the staff and reducing the salaries. In the event of the Government so considering, I think the police would more efficiently carry out the question of sanitation than the sanitary officers.

6637. CHAIRMAN.—You would not object to the visits of the police for that purpose?—I would not; I would be in favour of abolishing the office of sanitary officer and entrusting the police to do the duty.

6638. Mr. Mulholland.—You think there is a large enough police force to take that duty on?—Quite.

6639. Are you in favour of union rating?—Certainly; I think it is the only way that we can have economy.

6640. Would you still continue the weekly meetings of the Boards of Guardians?—I think it would be requisite; I believe there are things that could not bear to be kept over. Many questions arise, and even Local Government correspondence has to be attended to that could not be left over more than a week.

6641. CHAIRMAN.—How far do you live from the workhouse?—At present I live in Lismakea. I think the business would not be properly attended to if there were not weekly meetings; if it was done monthly it could not be done in one day.

6642. Mr. Mulholland.—On the question of outdoor relief, what is your view?—I think it should still continue; there is a good deal of outdoor relief in Lismakea, and we find it is a more efficient way of serving the poor, and at the same time it does not increase the rates.

6643. CHAIRMAN.—How do you make that out?—There might be a great deal more would come into the house who are a great deal more comfortable at home.

6644. Have you fewer inmates since outdoor relief began?—There was always a good deal of outdoor relief in Lismakea, and there were more inmates then; I have seen us having 120 inmates, and we have less now.

6645. Within the last ten years?—Yes.

6646. Dr. Rogers.—In proportion to the population, has the population fallen at the same rate?—It may; it is decreasing, but the poor, I think, are not decreasing; I think they are on the increase.

6647. Mr. Mulholland.—Are you troubled with tramps?—Yes; we are.

6648. How do you think they should be dealt with?—I think they should be compelled to apply for admission to the police before coming to the master or porter; let the police beat them, and either send them to the workhouse or elsewhere. There are two kinds of tramps—the tradesman out of employment, and the knight of the road, who is always there; he was born there, and will die there, and will leave another brood after him.

6649. CHAIRMAN.—Do you see any way of taking the young ones off the road?—Yes; I would recommend that, and I would recommend even taking away the old ones. I would recommend an adult reformatory to get the tramp into. They reproduce as a matter of course, and you will still have them if you don't have some efficient way of stamping out the present tramps.

6650. You would look him up?—Certainly.

6651. Mr. Mulholland.—You know the water supply of the union workhouse at Lismakea?—Yes.

6652. Is it very good?—It is the very best water in Ireland; it is sitting practically on a fountain.

6653. And the situation of the workhouse infirmary is very healthy?—It is; you cannot sink ten feet but you get water above Lismakea. It is built on a limestone rock.

6654. I believe you have a very mixed Board of Guardians at Lismakea; you are not all of the one way of thinking?—On some matters we are not.

6655. Are you the one way of thinking about amalgamation?—We are; we are unknown.

6656. CHAIRMAN.—How do the sick come to your hospital from Derrylin?—In an ambulance; we have two ambulances—one for the fever hospital.

6657. How do they come?—Over the ferry.

6658. Does the ambulance come over the ferry?—Yes. There is a large cat; it is capable of bringing over more than two ambulances if wanted, and from the lower end they come by Inishmore.

6659. What would be the distance from Derrylin to Lismakea?—About ten miles is the furthest point we have to travel at present.

6660. Is there any difficulty about the ambulance coming over on the large ferry boat?—Not unless there was a storm.

6661. How much is it by Inishmore?—It might be three miles at an average. Then in the event of the coming from the upper end of our union down to Bannockhill it would mean a journey of something like twenty-five miles.

6662. You don't look upon the lake being between you and part of your union as being a serious obstacle?—It is a partial obstacle, but not a serious one; it entails a great deal of hardship on the people coming across; they have often to wait a little time for the conveyance.

6663. What would be the delay they complain of?—Five minutes?—Do you mean that the ferries would not be disposed to go over with a few. The people from that direction generally take it so that if they are not ready for the first they will be ready for the second, at such an hour.

6664. How long does it take to go across?—Three quarters of a mile.

6665. Would the horse and ambulance be in it?—Two horses and ambulances could be in it.

6666. How is that ferry boat propelled?—With oars.

6667. You would not propose that that dam should be thrown into Bannock?—I don't think the people themselves would like it very well; it will be more of an inconvenience to go over the month than across the lake.

6668. Mr. MULHOLLAND.—Your objection to having one workhouse for the Ovensy Farmwork is principally based on the fact that it would be an inconvenience to the sick of your district?—There are other causes as well. I said provided there was amalgamation. The question of cottage hospitals has been advocated, and I say they would entail more cost than the union hospital as it exists.

6669. If it would not entail more outlay here would it strike you?—I would like to be convinced first; I cannot see it at present. The question of amalgamation has been going on at Lismakea for twenty years; we have several times appointed committees, and we found that even with amalgamation, and the present officers dispersed with, and even pensions dispensed, we would be at the wrong side.

6670. The question of coal is a considerable thing in a large institution?—Wherever they are sent you must have an expenditure on coal, and if you buy it at the hospital at Lismakea the Local Government Board say that thirty patients are as many as one nurse can take charge of, so that there would have to be an increase in the number of nurses.

6671. If there is an adequate provision for the sick would your objection to amalgamation disappear?—I would your objection to amalgamation disappear? I cannot see that there could be any more efficient way, either through amalgamation or any other way, than there is at present.

6672. Why do you advocate keeping the children at home until a certain age?—I have given the case—the schooling can be attended to when they are small owing to the schoolmistress being on the ground.

6673. How many children have you in the house?

6674. And you have a teacher for nine children; do you consider that is economy?—It may not be.

6675. Cannot these children walk to the school as well as the children of the farmers or labourers in the country?—I find that they always compare more than favourably with the children in the country schools when they are young; they are better scholars at a younger age than the children in the country are in consequence of being quite conversant to their school.

6676. The experience of other unions is that the children that go to National schools seem to advance more in their lessons than the other children?—It is the reverse in Lismakea. At the last inspection of the children at Lismakea there was the most high reputation that could be given as to their attention and advancement in learning.

6677. CHAIRMAN.—You have a specially good teacher?—The children have been well attended to. Even at the time of the Confirmation in both churches they were better advanced than the country children.

Nov. 11, 1903.
—
Mr. Edward M.
Finnegan.

6618. Mr. MURKIN.—Are there many able-bodied in your workhouse?—Not very many, but even with the hospitals you want the able-bodied pauper to keep the ground and place trim, and you want the women to do the washing and keep the place and the patients clean. In the event of your abolishing the workhouse system you have to call in paid labour, and you would have to pay three times the amount that it takes to keep a pauper.

6619. I did not know that the object of the Poor Law was to keep able-bodied in the union?—You may call them able-bodied, and they are classed so, but there is always something the matter with them.

6620. Are there many of that class in Lismuckish?—I am not at present able to answer that. Mr. Heery has considered all those points, and so did we, but we left the taking of the notes to Mr. Heery. I say that the able-bodied pauper is needed to keep the place in trim. If he is sent to any other institution paid labour will have to come in. The women equally well are wanted in the same direction. Then as to sending the children to a central institution, I would not be for that.

6621. CHAIRMAN.—You would keep them in the workhouse?—There is a difficulty; sending children who have no father or mother to a central institution might be all right; we have not so many of that class as we have of the class that has a mother; if you take away the children the Poor Law says that the mother must leave.

Mr. HUGH KIRKPATRICK examined.

6622. Mr. Muldoon.—You are a member of the Lismuckish Board of Guardians?—Yes, sir.

6623. And you are the leader of the opposition there?—We have no opposition; when it comes to a question of amalgamation it vanishes.

6624. Are you also opposed to the amalgamation of the Lismuckish Union?—I am.

6625. On what ground?—I have considered the matter carefully, and have come to the conclusion that it would be essential to retain at least two institutions in the county—one in North Fermanagh and one in South Fermanagh. Of course we have three in it, and portions of others added. That does away with Irvinestown, but I would say if Lismuckish was in the same situation as Irvinestown I would do away with Lismuckish; Irvinestown is on the borders of the county altogether; it would be an impossibility to retain Irvinestown and Enniskillen.

6626. You think even if Enniskillen is preserved it is necessary to preserve Lismuckish?—I do. I think they are two centres, and each of them would have a very large area.

6627. Do you think Lismuckish could take in that portion of the Clones Union which comes into this county?

—I do; I know that country thoroughly well, and it would be as convenient for the people of Roslea to come to Lismuckish as it would be to come to Clones.

6628. And in the event of the Clones Union being broken up it would be essential to bring them to Lismuckish?—It would be better to have the whole county made the county as far as Poor Law is concerned.

6629. You have a number of inhabited islands in Lismuckish Union?—We have, but I think you have ignored the more important part, that is the mountainous part which lies to the north-east or south-west, which runs from Roslea along the mountains between that and Brookborough and Fivemiletown—that would be as difficult of access as the islands. From Lismuckish I should say it would be six Irish miles to some portions of the district, and in other places eight or ten miles to come to Lismuckish, not to speak of coming to Enniskillen for an ambulance, which would have no other way of coming.

6630. Do you think Lismuckish is a model workhouse and very economically managed?—As a house I think it compares favourably with any other in Ulster.

6631. You agree generally with the evidence given by Mr. Finnegan?—I do.

Mr. Hugh Kirkpatrick.

Mr. JOSEPH O'REILLY HOSEY examined.

CHAIRMAN.—The Commission don't want to ask you, as an official, your views on the subject, although you would be just the monthpiece of the Guardians.

Mr. Muldoon.—I only wanted to ask him as to rates, and I think you have that evidence on the returns before you.

6632. CHAIRMAN.—There is just one question; can you tell me when the outdoor relief began to be increased?—It commenced with very small proportions perhaps thirty years ago, or more, and it gradually increased, but it rather decreased for the last year; it was lower than for some years previously.

6633. When did it get over, say, 2250 a year?—I should think fifteen or twenty years ago; the average for the past three years has been 2235 a year; it was scarcely as much last year, it is almost stationary.

Mr. Joseph
O'Reilly
Hosey.

Dr. T. KNOX examined.

6634. Mr. Muldoon.—You know the district of Lismuckish?—I do.

6635. And the union workhouse there?—Yes.

6636. Is it in a healthy situation?—I consider it is.

6637. And it has a good water supply?—The water is very good; it could not be much better.

6638. And the atmosphere is good?—Yes.

6639. Do you think it would be any hardship upon the poor of that district to be amalgamated with Enniskillen?—I think in some cases it would cause great hardship—such as accidents. It would not be in the interests of the sick poor.

6640. And the people of that locality are unanimous in favour of that view?—I believe so.

6641. You heard the evidence of the chairman of the board?—I did.

6642. Do you agree generally with that evidence?—I agree with it.

6643. Recently the board erected a consumptive ward there?—They have two nice consumptive wards.

6644. And one is of recent erection?—Yes; very nicely done up.

6645. Dr. BROOKER.—Are there many patients there?—There is only one female patient at present.

6646. Has it been much availed of since it was opened?—It has not.

6647. What is the reason?—Consumption does not seem to be very prevalent in the district at present.

6648. Do the dispensary doctors in the union send their patients there?—They do not send many.

6649. It would be useful if they did; would it not help to prevent the spread of consumption in the district?—Oh, it would; and I believe they could be well treated in the wards.

6650. Would it not be a training for the individuals themselves?—It would.

6651. You did not think of speaking to any of the dispensary doctors and telling them what nice wards you have for treatment?—They know it.

6652. Have any of the doctors ever been in the wards?—Not in the new wards.

6653. Although they are frequently at the workhouse for registration purposes?—Yes.

6654. Do you not think it would be wise to get them to see them?—Yes; I would be very glad.

Dr. T. Knox.

Nov. 11, 1890.
Mr. James
O'Donnell.

6715. Mr. Muldoon.—You are a member of the Lismuckee Board?—Yes.

6716. You heard the evidence of your chairman?—Yes.

6717. Do you agree generally with that evidence?—I agree generally.

Mr. JAMES O'DONNELL examined.

6718. And you are opposed to the amalgamation of the Lismuckee Union with Enniskillen?—Yes.

6719. And you don't think the Guardians that would be elected there could or would come to Enniskillen Union to represent that division?—It would be impossible for some of them; some of them have to come ten miles to Lismuckee.

Mr. PATRICK CLARKE examined.

Mr. Patrick
Clarke.

6720. Mr. Muldoon.—You are a Guardian of the Lismuckee Union?—Yes.

6721. I believe you live upon the west side of the lake?—Yes.

6722. And you have to cross it to get to the workhouse?—Yes.

6723. Have you heard the evidence of the chairman of your board?—I have. I say it would be a great inconvenience for the Guardians and the sick poor on the west side of the lake to go to Enniskillen. I am for amalgamation in a general way. I think it would be a great hardship on the sick poor from the district on the west side, even for the infirm; there is no railway on that side, and it is up to twenty-three miles from that, and yet it would be worse to send them to Bawnboy. In the great of Lismuckee being abolished I would rather go to Enniskillen. The road is worse and the distance is as great and far more hardship in going to Bawnboy, and from the central position Lismuckee is in South Fermanagh I consider two workhouses are necessary. Were Erinstown situated in North Fermanagh as Lismuckee is in South Fermanagh I would say "Go away with Enniskillen and keep Erinstown and Lismuckee, and still Enniskillen for an agricultural and technical education college for the youth of the country." It would be much better, and they would not have to travel, and it would not be so great a hardship on the sick poor the Guardians to attend those two unions as for those who come from the upper part of Lismuckee to Enniskillen; but as Erinstown is so situated I say it would be impracticable. And as far as outdoor relief goes I know no abuse of it in the rural districts; there may be in the villages and towns, but in rural districts I consider there is no abuse in outdoor relief.

6724. Did you hear the evidence of your chairman about outdoor relief?—I did.

6725. Do you agree with him?—I do.

6726. Don't you also agree with him generally upon the question of amalgamation?—I do.

6727. That two unions would be necessary in the county?—For the convenience of the sick poor, and I don't believe it would be much economy.

Mr. Muldoon.—On account of the evidence you have given about Enniskillen I advise you to get home as soon as you can. Now I have closed the evidence in Lismuckee, and I appear also for Enniskillen No. 2.

Mr. FRANCIS MAGUIRE examined.

Mr. Francis
Maguire.

6728. Mr. Muldoon.—Are you Chairman of Enniskillen No. 2 District Council?—Yes, sir.

6729. That represents the eight electoral districts of Carran which come to Enniskillen Union?—Quite so.

6730. I believe that is a poor mountainous district?—It is.

6731. And Enniskillen is their market and fair town?—Their market and fair town, and the only town they have any business to outside the district.

6732. And they come constantly to Enniskillen?—They have to come to sell their pork and butter, and transact every other business.

6733. And there is always a good attendance of the Guardians of that portion of the union at Enniskillen?—Fairly good.

6734. Would it be a hardship to those people to send them to Bawnboy or any other union beyond the Glen Gap?—It would be almost impossible to get any attendance from that district in any other union except Enniskillen.

6735. You are aware that in 1893 a petition was sent to the Local Government Board to retain your divisions in this union?—Yes; signed by every household in the district.

6736. All creeds and classes are unanimous?—Yes.

6737. And your District Council is unanimous?—Yes.

6738. How far is Ballyconnell from Bawnboy?—About four or five miles.

6739. That happens to be your Quarter Session town?—It is.

6740. Tell the Commission how you have to travel from those electoral divisions round to your Quarter Session town?—The most of the Quarter Session are from that district is done in the County Carran, and we have to go about sixty miles to the town of Carran to come round by Enniskillen, Carran, and Ballyconnell to Carran—through three counties.

6741. CHAIRMAN.—Quite a circular tour?—Yes.

6742. Mr. Muldoon.—You would have to make a similar circular tour to get to Bawnboy if amalgamated with that union?—Nearly; there is only one bad road leading from that district to Bawnboy; that road is some weeks in some years is altogether impassable from some drifts.

6743. Did you hear the evidence of Lord Belmont to-day that he had gone the road once in August?—I did not.

6744. I believe that district has a mountain range on either side?—It has Ouldagh mountain on one side, one of the highest mountains in Ulster, and the only outlet from it is in the direction of Enniskillen.

6745. How do you get to Enniskillen?—By railway from Belcoo.

6746. CHAIRMAN.—How far are you from Enniskillen?—About fifteen miles, but we have no connection, commercially or otherwise, with Enniskillen; the Guardians can attend their business here, do their work in the market or fair, and attend the meetings of the Board of Guardians.

Mr. JAMES MCGOVERN, &c., examined.

Mr. James
McGovern.

6747. Mr. Muldoon.—You are not the member of Parliament?—No; not yet.

6748. I believe you are only a Justice of the Peace?—Yes.

6749. Are you a Guardian of the Enniskillen Union?—Yes, for upwards of twenty years, and ex-officio for eight or nine years until the late reform of the Local Government Act.

6750. And you represent one of those electoral divisions which are situated in Carran?—Yes.

6751. Do you think it would be a hardship upon those electoral divisions to transfer them to the Bawnboy or Carran Union?—I think it would be a very great grievance.

6752. Why?—I could hardly say it was physically impossible, but it would be very difficult to bring patients to the hospital at Bawnboy, and the Guardians would not attend at all under any circumstances. It is twenty-five English miles from the nearest part of Carran—that is from the Glacken side to Bawnboy—and, as the Chairman of the District Council said, the only means of approach to it would be through the Glen Gap, and that is in a very impassable condition during some of the winter months, and it would be quite impossible.

6753. What means would you have to adopt to get to Bawnboy in case you wanted to go there?—Except you had a wagonette or something of that kind, supposing you did not take the Glen Gap, but came round, you would have to go round to Fierroconocent and Sennelburg.

6754. You might get there at the end of the following week?—You will get nobody to make the sacrifice, financially, to go to it; you won't have it represented, and an ambulance could only go that way with the greatest possible difficulty. There was talk of a four-wheeled one; I don't know what kind of a one would go through that way.

6755. Do you agree the people are unanimous against the change?—Most unanimous—Protestant, Catholic, and Methodist. I was at a meeting of the Enniskillen Board of Guardians some ten years ago; we had the most perfectly unanimous representation of all classes and orders—the priests, rectors, and Methodist clergy of all sorts and sizes—and they were unanimous in protesting against being separated from Enniskillen.

6756. CHAIRMAN.—Where is the chief bulk of the population; does it lie along the lake?—No; it is to the south side of the lake on to Downa. As the Chairman of our District Council said, all the business, fair and market, is done at Enniskillen.

6757. The Downa people all come through Belleau on their way to Enniskillen in the ambulance—that is twenty-two miles?—It is easy getting in from Belleau.

6758. How far is it from Downa to Belleau?—Eight Irish miles.

6759. How far is it from Downa to Mohill?—We know nothing about Mohill.

6760. If you did know, how far would it be?—I could not say; we have no connection with it in any way; either Carrick or Manorbannion would be the nearest union.

6761. How far is it from Downa to Carrick?—Sixteen Irish or twenty-two English.

6762. And from Redlion to Manorbannion?—It is not very far, only there is no business connection with it; it is not more than twelve English. They ignore it in regard to business transactions. Enniskillen is the centre for every sort of business, and it is very easy of access, and the Guardians generally do have less or more business there, and there is never any paucity of members present.

Mr. JOHN MAGUIRE examined.

6763. Mr. Muldoon.—Are you a member of the Enniskillen Board of Guardians?—I am.

6764. For the No. 2 district?—Yes; Enniskillen No. 2.

6765. You represent one of the Clonan electoral divisions?—I do; I represent one of the largest of them, too.

6766. Are you in favour of retaining this portion of the County Clonan in the Enniskillen Union?—Yes.

6767. For what reason?—It is more convenient, and we have business. I come here every week on other business.

6768. CHAIRMAN.—On the board day?—Yes. Tuesday is the pork market and butter market.

6769. Mr. Muldoon.—Where do you go to Quarter Sessions?—Ballyvaughan.

6770. How do you get there?—I drive in the winter time to Drumshanbo and take the train there.

6771. How far is Drumshanbo?—Eleven miles from Downa, and I live a mile on this side of Downa.

6772. And how far in the train?—I forget; I think I had to pay for a return ticket.

6773. Do you know how far it is from Belleau to Mohill?—Over thirty miles.

6774. CHAIRMAN.—And from Downa how far?—Over twenty.

6775. Mr. Muldoon.—Would it be possible now to make this portion of Clonan to any other union?—No, it would not; Enniskillen is the only feasible union, and if any change was made on the next day I would resign my seat, and for no money would I attend any other place.

6776. You heard the evidence of Mr. Maguire and Mr. McGovern upon the subject?—Yes, sir.

6777. And you agree with them?—Yes.

Mr. PATRICK GALLON examined.

6778. Mr. Muldoon.—You are a member of the Enniskillen Board of Guardians, and come from one of these Clonan divisions?—Yes.

6779. You have heard the evidence of Mr. McGovern and the Messrs. Maguire?—I have.

6780. Do you agree with that evidence?—I do generally. I remember when this question was up before, and the best and leading gentlemen in the country came to oppose those divisions going to Bawnboy for the best of reasons; we could not go over those mountains or the sick poor could not be brought over them in the winter months without extreme hardship; they are rugged and wild, and high and impassable; there is only one gap through them; there could be no representation if we went to Bawnboy Union.

6781. CHAIRMAN.—And if Bawnboy was broken up you certainly could not go to Clonan?—No, sir; but we could go to Clonan town far easier than to Bawnboy, for we have a railway convenient, but all would not bring four men to Bawnboy every board day; they would have to pay car hire, at their own expense, to go there.

Mr. Muldoon.—Now, sir, that is my last witness, and I have very few observations to address to you. First, on the question of Clonan, I am perfectly satisfied to leave this question of the electoral divisions in the County Clonan, which now come to Enniskillen, where the evidence leaves it, and I submit, with confidence, to the court it will be very difficult to make any alteration that will be in the interest of economy or good local government in that part of the country by moving them to any other place. The geographical situation of them makes it necessary that they should go to Enniskillen if they are to be represented anywhere and the poor are to be treated anywhere. Nothing could be stronger than the evidence that has been given, and the course that was taken on the petition when this subject was up before almost determines it for us, that there is nothing for these electoral divisions but to remain with Enniskillen, no matter what reform is suggested by this Commission. Now, on the subject of the Lismakea Union, the views of the gentlemen I represent are that two unions will be necessary in a county so situated as Fermanagh, and Enniskillen, if it takes on that portion of Irvinestown which is in this county and that portion of Ballyvaughan which is in this county, and takes this portion of Clonan, will have a large enough area under its control. And it will be necessary to have another union in this county, and Lismakea should be that one. It is a mountainous and lake district, and without great inconvenience or taking a very strong step, we do not think that Lismakea can be discontinued for the present. The evidence given here to-day is uncontradicted that it is in an excellent situation, the workhouse and the infirmary in the midst of pure air and good water, and that it is a model workhouse; if it is not a model workhouse in every way I am entirely misinformed. But I submit to you that a considerable case has been made for preserving Lismakea, even in view of the reform, which everybody hopes will result from this Commission. I will not take up any more of your time. I have submitted the evidence, and know it will be received with the fullest and most ample consideration.

CHAIRMAN.—Now the Irvinestown District Council.

Nov. 11, 1902.

Mr. James McGovern.

Mr. John Maguire.

Mr. Patrick Gallon.

Nov. 11, 1902.

Mr. John Quinn.

Mr. JOHN QUINN examined.

6732. CHAIRMAN.—You are one of the Guardians of the Irvestown Union?—Yes.

6733. Which county do you live in?—I live in the lower district, Fermanagh, and the reason that I came here was I saw that when the Commission was at Ballyshannon—the district I represent is Boko, in Irvestown Union—and I saw that Ballyshannon wanted to get it put into their union; our poor and the cesspayers don't want to go to Ballyshannon, and asked me to represent their views.

6734. How far are you from Pettigo?—The division I represent is a large island—Boko Island, in the Lough Erne—it comes to within four miles from Kesh and six miles from Irvestown; we wish to be continued on to Irvestown, or if Irvestown is amalgamated we are willing to go to Enniskillen, but don't let us go to Ballyshannon.

6735. Anywhere but Ballyshannon?—Anywhere but Ballyshannon or Donagall.

6736. What do you think yourself as to closing your workhouse?—It is my opinion we never will have as little more again, for there is not a union in Ireland fairer wrought; there is not a man in the division but would be sorry to see it closed, but whatever the wise people with greater heads than ours do for us we will do with it, but don't send us to Ballyshannon or Donagall.

6737. Mr. MURKIN.—What is the reason you are so much opposed to Ballyshannon?—They have over 2000 for outdoor relief for one year.

6738. CHAIRMAN.—It is the outdoor relief that frightens you?—And many other things. I have a brother-in-law a Guardian in Ballyshannon.

6739. Did you ever give him your mind?—We have been chatting about matters.

6740. Mr. MURKIN.—Would you like to go to Omagh?—No; I would rather come to Enniskillen; I would like the County Fermanagh would be kept by itself. I would like union making, and I think there should be some outdoor relief where it is needed.

6741. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you give any in Irvestown?—We do; and I give some in my division.

6742. CHAIRMAN.—What kind of people get it in your division?—Old women and old men—helpless people.

6743. How much a week do they get each?—2s. 6d. a week—very little.

6744. There are not many cases in your union?—There are not.

Mr. JOHN QUINN examined.

Mr. John Noble.

6811. CHAIRMAN.—You also are a member of the Irvestown Board of Guardians?—Yes.

6812. Do you belong to the Tyrone part or the Fermanagh part?—The Fermanagh portion.

6813. Is there any one here from the Tyrone part?—Yes; I see Mr. McCaughey.

6814. You heard the evidence of the last witness?—Yes.

6815. Have you the same objection to go to Ballyshannon?—I don't know about Ballyshannon; I belong to the Milltown division.

6816. What do you think of keeping up the Irvestown Union?—I go in for amalgamation; I think our workhouse quite sufficient for the county.

6817. You think your own workhouse might be closed?—Yes; there is a great decrease in the paupers in the county, and the facilities for travelling are much better than they were.

6818. How many miles from Irvestown Workhouse to Enniskillen?—About ten English miles.

6819. So that there would be only that distance more for any sick person to be taken to the coast?—That is all.

6820. How far does Irvestown Union go on to the road towards Enniskillen?—Four miles.

6821. So some parts of your union would be as near as six miles to Enniskillen?—Quite so; and that portion of Irvestown—the Tyrone portion—I would send to Omagh; I would make every county support its own poor.

6822. In order to reach part of your union you have to go through part of the County Donagall, have you not?—Yes.

6823. That is at Pettigo; that is the part that is in Ballyshannon at present; but you would approve of 6795. Only forty-five in the whole union?—Quite right. And I agree with putting out the children when they are fit to go; a country life will be better than keeping them housed up if they are fairly treated and well looked after.

6796. Mr. MURKIN.—What would you do with the tramps?—I would make them break a yard of stones every time they come in before they go on.

6797. Do you do that now?—No.

6798. But the Guardians have the power?—They don't all agree on that; the tramps are very annoying.

6799. CHAIRMAN.—They don't cost much?—They are just very annoying, but they are human beings, and cannot be left to starve.

6800. Mr. MURKIN.—Many inmates in your workhouse?—I think only two.

6801. CHAIRMAN.—You have more than that. There are only two that are so, but you have a good many of their kind?—I suppose it would be wise to do something, but the cesspayers in our neighbourhood are very content with the way it is wrought since the new law came into force.

6802. Do you think there are too many Guardians there?—I think one for every division would do.

6803. Mr. MURKIN.—Do you think if Enniskillen were made the workhouse for this county you could get Guardians to come here?—Not very often from us. I live twenty-four Irish miles from this town, but I would come every year sooner than go to Ballyshannon.

6804. You would come once a month?—I would; twice a month sooner than go to Ballyshannon.

6805. CHAIRMAN.—Part of where you are would be nearer Ballyshannon?—Yes; but the upper end of my division is nearer than that.

6806. Mr. MURKIN.—Is it because they are extravagant in Ballyshannon you would not visit up there?—Certainly.

6807. CHAIRMAN.—How many families are there in your island?—The people beat all themselves; every one has a boat; there might be fifty cesspayers.

6808. And there is a road to the water's edge?—There is one goes right up the middle from the west end to the east end, then there is one across, and there is a graveyard there, and there were two National schools, but there is only one in it at present.

6809. Do the roads go down to the water's edge at the mainland?—They do; nine or ten.

6810. So it is convenient for boating inland?—Quite convenient.

taking Belleek district from Ballyshannon?—I would; because you have the train and good roads.

6824. You would have to use that into Enniskillen?—Yes.

6825. How far is Belleek from Enniskillen?—I suppose it is near thirty miles.

6826. That is a big district?—But the distance does not count so much when you have the train.

6827. Belleek is only four miles from Ballyshannon?—That is all.

6828. How would it be if there was a district hospital, say at Pettigo, that would receive patients from the Belleek district and from the parts of the Irvestown Union that would be sent between Irvestown and Pettigo, and that they would pay simply a small head for getting there?—I think Irvestown would be a good centre for a cottage hospital.

6829. But it would not be a good centre if you lay your idea of keeping all Fermanagh within the county for Poor Law purposes; you could not ask a Belleek patient to come to Irvestown for medical treatment when they have medical treatment within four miles at Ballyshannon?—That is quite so.

6830. If you only asked them to go a little further to Pettigo, which is in a different union, Donagall, that is a point midway where three unions meet, and you could have a kind of joint hospital to accommodate the poor of the three unions adjoining it?—That would meet the case.

6831. And charge so much a head; would you be in favour of that?—I would; I think even in workhouses there should be a ward set aside for paying patients.

6832. I don't mean that; you misunderstand me. Let the paupers go in there, and let the unions of Enniskillen, and Ballyshannon, and Donagall pay with a head for any sick people that the medical officer or relieving officer sends to that joint hospital?—Yes, I would quite agree with that, and I think with regard to the tramps they should be handed over to the police; either that or, supposing they were admitted to the workhouse, power should be given to detain them three or four days, or a week, and make them work, and break them off their journey.

6835. Might it not have a different effect; might they not, instead of going into the workhouse, quarter themselves behind hay-ricks and farmers' byres?—The police would soon find them out; there might be a few bad cases, but eventually they would wear out.

6836. If they were smoking a pipe behind a hay-stack they might do some harm to the farmers?—I think they would be too much afraid of the police. I have known cases where they go in gangs and have money; one will remain in lodgings with the purse and the remainder go into the workhouse for the night.

6837. Would they trust one chap with the purse?—Oh, they do; there is honesty among thieves. I consider the Irvinestown Workhouse is a very fine building; I think it would make a very good place for the insane poor from Ounagh; Ounagh is overcrowded, and it would relieve it a good deal.

6838. You would not like to see the workhouse at Irvinestown shut up altogether; you would like to see it devoted to some useful purpose?—Yes; turn it into a good factory; it is a very fine building. I have consulted most of the ratepayers in the Milltown division, and they go in for amalgamation, doing away with half the workhouses.

6837. Mr. MURPHY.—Was the question ever raised in the workhouse itself among the Guardians?—It was generally. The Guardians from the towns are not so much in favour of amalgamation as the countrymen, because they gain less or more by the workhouse.

6838. Trade influence has something to do with unions?—A good deal.

6839. Is the view pretty general that one workhouse would be sufficient for Fermanagh?—I do believe it. The population of the county is only half now what it was when the workhouse was built.

6840. You think you would require something in the way of a hospital there for the sick?—I do. It would not be under the name of a workhouse, and poor honest people would go into it. They have a great dislike at the present time to go into a workhouse.

6841. You have not very many inmates in the workhouse from the County Tyrone; see you swear how many?—I am not.

6842. I am informed there are about seven; do you think that there should be sent over to Ounagh or some institution in the county?—I do; I think the poor of that portion of the Irvinestown Union should be sent to Ounagh.

6843. CHAIRMAN.—The Trillick people are so fond of you that they would rather stay with you than go to Ounagh?—I don't know what is the cause of that.

DR. R. G. GRAHAM EXAMINED.

6844. CHAIRMAN.—You heard the evidence given here to-day with reference to Irvinestown; what is your view, knowing the country so well as you do, about the question of closing the Irvinestown Workhouse?—I would be very much inclined, from a commonsense point of view, for amalgamation, at the same time reserving the necessity of looking after the sick and infirm.

6845. You would be in favour of closing it as a workhouse?—Certainly.

6846. And making proper provision for the sick?—Yes.

6847. Do you think it would be too far to take the sick ten miles into Baniskillen?—But our union extends a great many miles.

6848. I am taking Irvinestown itself—Judging from the distances they have to be brought from other places, I think it would be a short distance; there is a good road and all that kind of thing.

6849. There is a great deal of your union on the west side of Irvinestown?—Lough Erne comes in within three miles.

6850. I mean going Dundee way?—Oh; twenty miles from Baniskillen.

6851. If there were some sort of a cottage hospital, say at Pettigo on the one side, and a large institution here at Baniskillen on the other, do you think much hardship would result to the sick poor?—Pettigo is eight miles from Irvinestown. How far would you bring them?

6852. I would leave that to the discretion of the medical officer; he would send his patient, naturally, to the nearest suitable hospital. You would have practically a hospital within eight miles on either side, so from Irvinestown he would presumably send his patients to Baniskillen, and a bit further down the line he would send them to Pettigo?—Yes, according to that arrangement. With regard to our fever hospital I think it is in a capital situation, and with regard to Irvinestown the buildings could be utilised there.

6853. How far back does your union go towards Castleblount?—Scrambling about eight miles.

MR. GEORGE ARCHDALE EXAMINED.

I am from the Kesh division of Fermanagh.

6854. CHAIRMAN.—Which way would you go?—I am in favour of amalgamation on certain conditions if it would reduce the rates and also be a benefit to the sick poor.

6855. Do you think it would be any hardship to the 6854. How far is Ederney?—Five miles, and until you come into Tyrone there are three miles more.

6855. How far would Ederney be from Pettigo?—Six miles.

6856. So that a hospital, if there were one there, would serve that far and?—Some of the part of the union beyond Leck would be farther.

6857. That is high land, without much population?—Well, it is a good deal of it mountainous.

6858. How far would Leck be from Pettigo?—Nine miles by Kesh, and then the union would extend for two miles beyond that. If I might be permitted, with regard to the nursing business, I must say that with regard to the nursing of children in workhouses I have a very unfavourable opinion of it. I have some forty years' experience, and they do badly.

CHAIRMAN.—We noticed your children at Irvinestown the other day and came to that conclusion ourselves.

6859. Mr. MURPHY.—You believe in sending them out early?—I do. I don't believe in allowing them to grow up in workhouses; I would rather have them out, both for their health and morals.

6860. CHAIRMAN.—When they are a year old?—Certainly.

6861. Dr. BROWN.—Do you board out any?—We do, but only foundlings, orphan children, or deserted.

6862. You would like to extend the boarding out as far as possible?—I certainly would; our experience in Irvinestown is favourable.

6863. Do you have many fever cases there?—Very few.

6864. How often is the fever hospital used?—We had some cases six or seven weeks since, but we might have months here without a case.

6865. Would it be a year without any?—Probably; almost; but that is a very strange thing; our cases come from other parts of the union; we never have a home case at all. I heard some evidence here to-day about water. Professor Cameron says he never examined a better specimen than our water.

6866. CHAIRMAN.—Is there anything else?—No; except with regard to the children.

6867. You are strong on that?—Very strong.

sick poor to have to go a distance not exceeding ten miles?—I think that is more a question for the doctor.

6870. If the doctor thought it was no harm, you would be willing to agree with him?—I would. I certainly am in favour of boarding out children.

Nov. 11, 1906.

Mr. John Noble.

Dr. R. G. Graham.

Mr. George Archdale.

Nov. 11, 1903.
Mr. George
Archdale.

6871. As regards tramps, have you much experience of them?—We have a good many.
6872. Are you in favour of rigorous treatment, or are you disposed to let things go on as they are?—Rigorous treatment, certainly. I would admonish them before the Bench and prosecute some of them.
6873. You would make the law of vagrancy more stringent?—I would.
6874. It is a little difficult to prove vagrancy; at present you would throw the onus of proof on the prisoner?—No; it could be left to the doctor to prove that he was fit to work.
6875. Would you keep him in the workhouse?—Not if he was able to work.
6876. What would the medical certificate be for?—To prove that he was an able-bodied man; that he was not a fit inmate for the workhouse.
6877. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Would you not modify that to some extent by allowing admission the first or second time he came, and then if he was a frequent visitor use a different system?—It might be modified a little.

6878. CHAIRMAN.—Give him a caution the first time!—Yes.
6879. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—There is danger of these men going to haystacks at night and perhaps setting fire to them, or going to barns or hen roosts, and doing mischief in the locality. Some Guardians have said they would do more harm that way than they do the ratepayers by the small money it takes to pay for their lodging.
CHAIRMAN.—Hardly any union pays as much as £5 a year for tramps.
Mr. MURKAGHAN.—The tramp question is not as much as the ordinary man thinks it is—that is from the point of view of expense.

Mr. Samuel
Armstrong.

Mr. SAMUEL ARMSTRONG EXAMINED.

6880. CHAIRMAN.—You are a member of the Inverness Union?—Yes.
6881. Are you in the County Tyrone part?—No, sir.
6882. What is your view about keeping up the union?—I want to keep my own union; I am thirty years a Guardian; it is well worked with a good staff of officers, and I want to keep it as we are.
6883. How far do you live from Inverness?—About four miles.
6884. You don't see any reason for breaking it up?—No.
6885. You heard two or three of your colleagues give evidence in favour of breaking it up?—I would rather keep it on.

6886. Even if you would save a little on the rates?—Yes.
6887. You think it is wiser to have a hospital among your people?—I would rather keep it on, if not I would amalgamate with Enniskillen.
6888. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—You would not go to Ballyshannon?—Indeed I would not; many a time I was in it.
CHAIRMAN.—Well you would find it difficult to get a better-managed hospital.

Mr. Patrick
McCaughy.

Mr. PATRICK MCCAGHY EXAMINED.

6889. CHAIRMAN.—We had you before at Omagh, and I think you did not want to go to Omagh; you would rather stay at Inverness?—Certainly.
6890. What is your reason?—Convenience, and also the interests of the sick poor.
6891. What would be the greatest distance the poor would have to go to Omagh?—Fifteen Irish miles.
6892. I think you were also afraid of outdoor relief at Omagh?—I thought it was too large.
6893. And you were afraid it would spread in the Trillick district?—Yes; the rates are higher there; we manage to keep the rates lower in Inverness. I would suggest there should be no such thing as idiot wards in a workhouse; they should be in the asylum.
6894. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Supposing Inverness was amalgamated with Enniskillen, would you prefer coming to Enniskillen rather than to Omagh?—I would; it would be nearer. I have more interest in Fermanagh than in Tyrone.
6895. Has the question ever come up before your colleagues in Tyrone?—It did; we had a special meeting for that purpose.
6896. But they only came to the conclusion they would stick to Inverness; did they consider the question of connection with Enniskillen?—They did, in the event of its being amalgamated with Enniskillen.
6897. What is your objection to going to Omagh?—The distance.
6898. There is not a great difference in the distance?—There is in the Irish fare.
6899. CHAIRMAN.—What is your nearest station?—Banford Junction.
6900. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Are you aware there are only seven paupers from the Tyrone portion of the union in Inverness?—I am not aware of it. I was there this day.
6901. Do you think a separate establishment should be kept up for these seven people?—I did not say that at all.
6902. No, but I ask you do you?—I do not; but I don't think it should be done away with; there are eight-seven in that place altogether.
6903. There are only seven Tyrone people according to the clerk's return in Inverness Workhouse; do you think there would be any great difficulty in these seven people being sent to Omagh?—It occasionally happens from time to time that people get sick, and taking them in an ambulance fifteen miles I would consider a great hardship.
6904. Won't you have to send them to Enniskillen if Inverness is done away with?—That would be only eight or nine miles.

6905. CHAIRMAN.—How far is the most distant part of the Trillick rural District from Inverness?—About six miles.

6906. Is it not more, the most distant part to the east of Trillick?—It would not be six miles.
6907. How far would that point be from Omagh?—About nine miles; that is the furthest point.
6908. Trillick itself; how far is it from Omagh?—Twelve miles.
6909. And from Inverness?—Five Irish.
6910. So that there is just that difference between the two; that is not every much?—It is for a sick person.
6911. When you get them into the ambulance it does not make much difference?—We have heard of a new system of ambulance, but we have not seen it yet. Dr. Thompson referred to it.
6912. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—Are you aware that there is an improved ambulance in Omagh—four-wheeled?—It would not fit some of our roads.

6913. CHAIRMAN.—Is there anything else you would like to add?—No; only to do away with idiot wards in unions. They should be in an auxiliary asylum, for they are not needed as they should be.

6914. Do you think there are too many Guardians?—I don't think there is a bit.
6915. Have you not eleven Guardians to look after seven inmates from the Trillick district?—Eight.
6916. And how many do you co-opt?—Three.
6917. You have eleven Guardians for seven inmates?—And one of the witnesses said he would cut off Tyrone altogether. I suppose he wanted to get rid of me.
6918. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—All he wanted was to keep Fermanagh a self-contained county?—There was more than that in it.

6919. Mr. Muldoon.—I believe you have an excellent little District Council there?—Yes; Trillick.
6920. If you had some guarantee that that District Council would be preserved you don't care what happens the Guardians?—I did not say that; I don't say that at all.

6921. Is it not the District Council that you are concerned about?—It is the distance.

6922. CHAIRMAN.—Are you at all anxious about the District Council?—I am, surely; that would be one reason that I would not like we would be amalgamated with Omagh, because when we get the roads they were retained, but the District Council improved them.
6923. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—What surprise me is that any Tyrone man would want to go anywhere but Tyrone?—Did you hear the Tyrone people anxious to come to Fermanagh for co-rentence sake? I am not surprised at you, being an Omagh man would wish to catch all.

Viscount Cokay, D.L., CHAIRMAN.

Nov. 11, 1903.

6034. CHAIRMAN.—Lord Corry, you are a member of some of the local bodies in Fermanagh?—Several of them.

6035. What bodies do you belong to?—I belong to the Enniskillen Board of Guardians, and, of course, the Enniskillen Rural Council, and to the County Council, as CHAIRMAN of the Enniskillen Rural Council.

6036. You are aware of the discussion that has taken place on the question of amalgamation?—I am.

6037. Have you got any views on the amalgamation of unions within the County Fermanagh?—It would be a good thing if it could be done. You would think it the obvious thing to cut the Cavan divisions off Enniskillen, but the question is where they are to go to. If they could be cut off we could take part of Irvinestown or Laneshaes.

6038. Dr. BARNES.—Could you not take Irvinestown, in any case?—We could, but it would make our board enormously large; we have ninety-four members at present.

6039. CHAIRMAN.—Unless you made it co-member constituencies?—That would be a very great mistake. Some divisions might do with one member; some of the divisions certainly ought to have two; we have one division with only thirty voters and others with three or four hundred voters. There ought to be some arrangement by which there should be, say, one representative for every 100 voters. Lisbellaw and Rosslea have three or four hundred voters, and there is a division near Belleek with thirty voters and another near Belleek with twenty-five or thirty.

6040. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Would you take a basis of valuation or population?—I would combine both; the number of electors principally.

6041. CHAIRMAN.—Would you not be disposed to add to the area of Enniskillen unless the Cavan part of the union could be cut off?—Not if we could manage to reduce the numbers of the board a little, but I would not be disposed to do it by cutting it down half. The old board consisted of ninety members, but very seldom as many as that turned up. The day the doctor was elected we had eighty-one; now we don't have very many, for the Cavan men attend very seldom.

6042. As regards Laneshaes, what do you think of it?—I don't know much about Laneshaes; one hears stories about it in the papers sometimes.

6043. Would you like to take it into your union?—I would sooner perhaps somebody else took it in. I don't know much about it really, only what I read in the papers, and you cannot believe all the papers say.

6044. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—The Laneshaes Guardians claim that they have the best-managed union in Ireland?—The Cavan Guardians also, I think, claim that.

6045. Every board has a right to claim it?—Yes. I believe the Grand Board do that too, but I would sooner keep the Cavan divisions than take Laneshaes. I don't see the good of putting Irvinestown and part of Laneshaes into Enniskillen, and leaving out the rest of the county.

6046. CHAIRMAN.—A great number of witnesses were in favour of having a county union and also having the Cavan portion?—Yes, if you take the whole county, but it would be a mistake to put in three-fifths and not have the remainder.

6047. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—The Cavan Guardians say mountains stand in the way as much it would be impossible to send them to their own county?—I believe they do. I remember a big deputation came before us five or six years ago to discuss this very question; they had three priests, and three parsons, and three Methodist ministers, and a lot of blackthorns. Most of our Guardians came in; we had a room as full as it could be; we went fully into the matter; they all protested against being sent to Bawnboy, and I think the majority decided on sending them, but they did not go. However, the Killybegs division (which is in County Tyrone) was taken off us. You might as well give us that now as the whole of Irvinestown.

6048. CHAIRMAN.—As regards the Cavan part of the union, if they had a hospital established for them at Belleek as a union-at-large charge?—It would be a great help, for they are a very long way from hospital now; their distance is very great.

6049. Would you be disposed to think that no matter what is done with that union it should have a hospital somewhere about Belleek?—It would be a very good thing if it could be worked.

6050. Dr. BARNES.—Do you know what the population is?—There are a good many people up that way I believe.

6041. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Laneshaes has a very bad name about Enniskillen?—I believe it has now.

6042. Would you be surprised to hear that it is much more economically managed than the Enniskillen Union?—I should be very much surprised.

6043. CHAIRMAN.—It is 1d. in the £ lower?—That is not much; we have had a lot of expense in the last few years doing up our workhouse; that won't come again.

6044. They are in the position of having spent £1,000 extra?—1d. in Enniskillen, 1d. in Laneshaes?—If Irvinestown and Laneshaes were closed what would the Local Government Board propose to do with them?

6045. They are open to receive suggestions, Lord Corry; harmless lunatics and technical schools?—Certainly the asylum at Omagh is rather crowded. While I would be very much against a separate asylum in this county, still if we had an auxiliary asylum for harmless lunatics it would be a very great help.

6046. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—I have no doubt that there are people from Fermanagh that could be sent to an auxiliary asylum from Omagh?—Yes; I see the Cavan people are objecting strongly to building a separate asylum, and it is a big county, paying more to Monaghan than we do to Tyrone; so I think it would be a very great mistake to start a separate asylum here.

6047. Have you any views on the boarding out of children?—I have not studied the question, but it would be a very good thing. They would be better brought up and would not have a workhouse stigma on them.

6048. The doctor from Irvinestown was very strong on that; you heard what he said?—I heard some of it.

6049. A suggestion has been made in regard to these unfortunate women that go to workhouses to send them to some kind of religious institution for reform?—Would that do them any good, do you think?

6050. CHAIRMAN.—The way it would work out would be that a woman would never go to a workhouse at all; at all events, for her first baby, she would be sent at the expense of the rates to a penitentiary managed by religious people of the same persuasion?—That would be a help certainly.

6051. She would be there for three or four months before she was confined, afterwards she would be there a month, or a year, or whatever time would be necessary in the judgment of the managers of that place to try to set her right, and give her a fresh, good start?—That would be a good idea, and would help to relieve the workhouse.

6052. It would take out the most objectionable class?—Yes; some of these respectable poor people don't like to go into the workhouse on that account.

6053. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—With regard to tramps, what would you suggest should be done with them; do you think the law should be made more stringent?—I think so; they should be made to do a certain amount of hard work when they came into the workhouse before they go out.

6054. Already, I suppose, they are compelled to break some stones?—At various in different workhouses; some make them do very little and some make them do a lot, and the workhouse where they have to work hard they avoid, and here where they have three workhouses within ten miles from each other, if they thought Enniskillen too hard they would go to Irvinestown, and if Irvinestown was too hard they would go to Laneshaes.

6055. CHAIRMAN.—Would you go so far as to let the police deal with the tramps, giving them an order for lodging if they were respectable people in the judgment of the local officer of police, or if they were regular tramps giving them the lock up and bringing them before the magistrate next day?—If the police would carry out the duties properly it would be a good thing, but the police here so much to do already.

6056. You think they are an overcrowded body?—In some ways they are; they have so many different duties; still if it could be worked it would be an advantage, but there are difficulties.

6057. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Have you any idea as regards the area of rating; which would you prefer?—For some things I would sooner have a smaller area. For instance, about sanitary matters, it is very hard to get a drainage scheme passed for some small village, because the rest of the district object to pay for drains.

CHAIRMAN.—That does not come under our Commission.

Nov. 11, 1902

Viscount
Cory.

6568. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—In regard to Poor Law, to corroboration relief, do you think union rating tends to extravagance?—I think divisional rating would be fairer.

6569. You think there would be a closer eye kept on the expenditure?—I think there would. It would make each member of the Board take more interest in a particular division had to pay for the outdoor relief—they would go into the merits of the case much more. 6570. We had that before us; some of the old Guardians thought that divisional rating was better.—On the whole I would prefer divisional rating; but that applies more to sanitary matters than Poor Law matters.

Mr. W. R. COCKEY examined.

Mr. W. R.
Cockey.

6561. Dr. BROWN.—You wish to give some evidence?—The point I wish to make specially is that if any of these workhouses became available they should be used as a convalescent hospital; it is greatly needed, and the approved treatment—the open-air treatment—is not within the reach of the poor at all; it is not within the reach of the middle classes, and I think when these gentlemen arrange to have this amalgamation take place among the houses one might be available. The minimum cost of this treatment has yet to be ascertained. Everything up to the present has been done so expensively that the poor have been deterred. I think the experiment might be tried by utilizing one of these workhouses and bringing down the cost to the lowest possible limit; the medical men would be equal to dealing with the subject. I don't think there is anything so much needed as something of that sort.

6562. Have you any idea yourself what might be the probable cost?—We were able to bring down the price of food to 4s. a day—the actual cost of the purchase of the food per patient—but that included luxuries. I am not a medical man, but I should think the food necessary to give weight might not consist of these luxuries. Milk, for instance, is a weight-giving food, potatoes, I believe, are very nourishing, and other vegetables, turnips and cabbage, are weight-giving, and it would be for the medical supervision to settle whether the weight given by this food would have the result of weight given by expensive animal food. If it was the fact that an increase of weight and blood would combat the disease, no matter what class of food, it would be an unquestionable benefit; but up to the present nothing has been done to save the lives of these people. The treatment is not on the open-air system for the poor. I have been looking anxiously for some years for the time when this would take place and one of these workhouses would be available.

6563. CHATELAIN.—If you had your choice of institutions, as far as you know of them round the country, what one would you like, having studied the question as you have done?—I am afraid that Barnaby seems to be the one that would be squeezed out. I would like Dr. Rigger and the Commissioners would go over it and see.

6564. We were over it yesterday!—Fresh air and isolation are the two things necessary.

6565. You know Irvinestown?—I do.

6566. What do you think of Irvinestown?—I should think any of these houses would do admirably; it seems to me a question of knocking plenty of windows into them.

6567. You want fairly reasonable railway communication?—Some of the sanatoria are placed at a great distance from a railway. Cotswold is seven miles from Cheltenham. I would not think the distance so vital; convalescent patients can be conveyed any distance, and the travelling does not injure them.

6568. It would run up the cost very much if you had to bring them in a vehicle from here to Barnaby?—They can go on an ordinary outside car.

6569. An ordinary outside car costs money?—Well, they could be brought on a cart.

6570. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—A suggestion has been made that near the sea would be a suitable place?—I attended the Congress in London, and we had all sorts of opinions, but to sum up, it was that the locality does not matter if you have pure air and food, as a matter of course, but that given you will find doctors advocate all sorts of places.

6571. Your place was on the lake, with plenty of open air?—Yes. I am afraid to talk of the results, because the medical profession don't like that, but our results would encourage the extending of it. My first idea was to open a free hospital; I took the house with that view, and brought a specialist over from England, and then when we had everything settled he said "I won't take charge of it as a free hospital," so I was compelled to change my plans and open it, trying to charge a minimum—we charged half what they were in the habit of charging in these places, and it filled immediately.

6572. Dr. BROWN.—What was your charge?—Two and a half guineas a week, and the place filled at once; they were as well treated as the doctor wished; a large proportion of them yielded to the treatment; some we could do nothing with.

6573. CHATELAIN.—Was it for one sex or both?—Mixed; it was just conducted like a hydra.

6574. Dr. BROWN.—What was your number?—Fifteen was the maximum.

6575. CHATELAIN.—How long was it opened?—Three years altogether; we treated sixty patients.

6576. Dr. BROWN.—Some of them stayed six months?—Nine months; we had one man from Scotland, who brought his fortune over here and stayed until it was nearly spent, and went back to his work—an artisan.

6577. Have you heard anything of him since?—Yes; he has corresponded with us. And we had a clergyman's wife. I had letters from her husband; she is quite well. There was a lady from Irvinestown—one of Dr. Graham's patients—and her husband came to me and told me that nothing could be better; she became a strong healthy woman, and has maintained that up to the present, and is doing very well indeed.

6578. CHATELAIN.—Was that in a very early stage of the disease?—We found, I think, that mature people were more amenable to the treatment—seemed to be able to combat the disease better than a young girl of twelve or thirteen, or a young boy. They did not seem to be sufficiently hardy.

6579. Dr. BROWN.—Did you get them in the very early stages?—We had them in all stages.

6580. I think they are not recognised very often sufficiently early?—We had them of seven years' duration—some of them.

6581. That must have been a very chronic case! CHATELAIN.—Was the disease related in that case?—That case did not stay long enough; but the evidence we had with that was that after some time this patient recommended another one.

6582. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—What was the average daily number in the institution?—During the whole time I could not tell you exactly the average.

6583. CHATELAIN.—About how many would you have as a rule?—Fifteen for the first four months; then our numbers ran down owing to a very peculiar circumstance—our doctor opened another sanatorium, and carried away all the patients.

6584. Mr. MURKAGHAN.—What was your staff?—A doctor, matron, and two trained nurses from Dublin, and cook; four housemaids with them as servants.

6585. Dr. BROWN.—That was a very expensive establishment for such a small number; the establishment charges would be very high?—These all might be economized, and I think that is what is desirable on different lines—give them the fresh air, give them the food, and regulate their exercise and rest, and it is only a medical man can do that. If you had a resident medical man to do that for them I think a great deal might be accomplished.

6586. That is why, if it is payable off the rates, it must be worked on a large scale as to work it down to a very low cost per head per week?—The necessities of life are very cheap—potatoes are cheap, milk is cheap, and butter and white bread. I wish very much that there could be some of these houses utilized for that. There is another thing I want to give an opinion on as a quins. I quite disagree with these gentlemen about the tramps. I think the safest and best place for a tramp is in the workhouse; if you let him go to the workhouse he gets nights lodging and his food at a very low cost; if you don't allow him to go into the workhouse he probably goes to some hayrack or bog between two or three people, and these two or three charitable people bear the cost of what might be distributed over the union. Then if you put it into the hands of the police they cannot possibly obtain for him a night's lodging so cheap as in the workhouse. The house is there, the staff is there, the provisions are bought at a minimum cost, and there is no place they can be so cheaply lodged as in the workhouse. I am sorry to see so great a prejudice against these unfortunate people getting a night's lodging.

6987. CHAIRMAN.—Have you looked at the question that some of these tramps are not people who are accidentally out of work, but people who from generation to generation walk about the roads leading an objectionable life?—I think the great majority are tradesmen out of work, and drink every farthing they get.

6988. But the ordinary people are mostly driving on the road don't look like tradesmen?—I think all vagrants should be taken up by the police.

6989. A great many of these people are vagrants?—Oh, a great many are tradesmen.

6990. The people you meet walking from one union to another, a great number of those are hereditary tramps?—I live in town and see a great deal of the workings out of this thing. I was for a long time in the labouring business, and our workmen are a most wretched lot. They will drink until they drink their last penny; they are turned out of the town, and they go to the next town absolutely destitute. I met the case of a millwright once and other tradesmen who drank their money. I think really the Government ought almost to provide lodgings for them in the workhouse, as they get their money; they get an enormous revenue from them.

6991. You think the Encise ought to look after these people?—I think so; but I think they are safer at present. I don't think you can improve on the present state of things; once a man is in the workhouse he is safe for the night.

6992. What view would you take about the children of those people, who have been led round the country—poor little things—staggering after their parents?—That is rather a large question.

6993. It is, but those are the coming generation of tramps?—Suppose they are taken in; there is the Poor Law, which, I take it, decrees that no man shall starve while there is food in the land.

6994. There is no such law in this country?—I thought everyone was entitled to food.

6995. No; it is in the discretion of the Guardians; if the Guardians find anyone destitute they are to provide for them, but it is in their discretion?—That is new to me. I thought they were compelled; the rates are compulsory.

6996. The rates are compulsory, but the relief is not?—That is a pity; we are supporting people belonging to other districts and other districts are expecting ours.

6997. Mr. MURKIN.—Have you any views about the boarding out of children?—I think if you can get a child out of a workhouse before it has received any impression I think it is a great advantage. In this district the Protestant Ophelia Society is a very good example of what can be done; they board their children out, and so see them come in on a show day—the children all look comfortable and well.

6998. CHAIRMAN.—How much a year do they pay?—£20 a year.

6999. How much do the Guardians pay?

Mr. FERGUSON.—£8.

Mr. MURKIN.—£7, with clothing.

Witness.—Perhaps I am wrong about that.

7000. CHAIRMAN.—I had an idea it was 29 or £101.—Perhaps you are right. What I wanted to tell you was an affection springs up between them. I have a man working with me at present; he does not know at the present moment that he is not a member of the family; the family never told him; he believes he is a full brother of the children about, and he is going on earning his living honestly and fairly. I think boarding out is very humane.

7001. They get absorbed into the ordinary family life of the country?—I think so.

MR. THOMPSON TAYLOR EXAMINED.

Mr Thompson Taylor.

7002. CHAIRMAN.—You are the Chairman of the Urban Council?—Yes.

7003. What is the view of your council if they have considered the matter on the question of amalgamation of unions?—The view of our council principally is amalgamation.

7004. To what extent would you be in favour of it in the County Fermanagh?—I could scarcely answer that question, but I know that the members of our board are principally in favour of it. I, personally, as an ordinary business man, would consider it advisable.

7005. To have fewer union workhouses in the county; do you think you could spare one in Fermanagh?—I think we could very conveniently.

7006. Or two?—Or two.

7007. Which of the two could you spare best?—That goes without saying.

7008. The unions you think might be spared are Irvinestown and Lisnakeilly?—I think so.

7009. Have you considered the distances the sick would require to be brought?—I have.

7010. And you don't think it would be too far?—I don't think it would be much of an inconvenience.

7011. If it were considered to be an inconvenience, would you be in favour of having small, cheap, local hospitals at two or three points in the county?—Yes; I think that would be very feasible.

7012. Dr. BRUCE.—Did your council pass any resolution at all on the subject?—They did not; they simply appointed Mr. Cooney and myself to attend here to give evidence if necessary.

7013. It is only merely on the question of amalgamation?—Merely on the question of amalgamation. I am not a member of the Poor Law Board, and have never been a member.

The Sitting terminated.

Dec. 24, 1903.

FIFTEENTH PUBLIC SITTING—TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 24TH, 1903

At the Courthouse, Monaghan.

Present:—Mr. MICKS, (Chairman), Mr. MURTAGHAN, and Dr. COREY BEEGER.

Mr. John Muldon (instructed by Mr. M. E. Knight) appeared for the Monaghan Board of Guardians.

Mr. Charles Dromgoole (instructed by Mr. D. X. Keenan) appeared for the Clones Board of Guardians.

Mr. James Augustine Murnaghan (instructed by Mr. Grant) appeared for the Carrickmacross Board of Guardians.

Mr. William Martin appeared for the Monaghan County Council.

Mr. Murphy appeared for the Rural District Councils of Clones No. 1 and No. 2.

CHAIRMAN.—Gentlemen, our general procedure is to invite the County Council to give their views at the start, but I understand that owing to a funeral Mr. Bussie and some of the members of the County Council are not here yet, but I believe the Clones Guardians are represented.

Mr. Dromgoole.—Yes, sir. I appear for the Clones Guardians, and here my witnesses ready.

Mr. Martin.—I appear on behalf of the County Council for Monaghan the officials will be here in a few minutes.

CHAIRMAN.—Then we might take up the Clones evidence.

Mr. Murphy.—I appear on behalf of Clones No. 1 Rural District Council and also on behalf of Clones No. 2 Rural District Council—the Fermanagh and Monaghan sections of Clones Union.

Mr. Dromgoole.—I appear for the Clones Board of Guardians, and the matter in many respects has been so recently before you in Enniskillen that it will be scarcely necessary for us perhaps to go into such detail as we went into there. The position we take up is this, we are one of the unions on the borders of the County Monaghan, we stretch over into the County Fermanagh, and although the part in Fermanagh is of greater area, at the same time the population of the substantial portion of the union is in this county, Monaghan. In Clones we have spent a very considerable sum of money during the last two or three years, over £100, and we have brought our buildings, and especially our hospital accommodation, to a very high pitch of efficiency. We have done that in an economical way, we have done it, too, by spending the money at once and raising it immediately out of the rates, and we have not incurred any debts, so that we will be in a position after the current year to have all these buildings paid for. In consequence of the expenditure which has been necessary for us during the last couple of years our poor rate has gone up to 8d. in the £, but that is a very moderate poor rate, considering the exceptional expenditure; our normal rate is something like 5½d., and after this year we expect it will be that. We have a workhouse capable of accommodating 644 inmates, which is a large number of persons than there are in the whole County of Monaghan in all the workhouses put together, although the average number in the houses with us is only eighty-three, and about thirty-five of these are in the infirmary. We are exceptionally well situated, although on the border of the county in one sense, at the same time under the existing conditions of travel, more important perhaps than the actual distance from place to place is the railway accommodation, and I think we will be able to satisfy the Commission that as far as railway accommodation is concerned there is no place that would so well serve the different portions of the county as Clones. It lies on the main line connected with the different parts of the county in a way that no other town is. I will call Dr. Tierney, who will give you evidence as to those matters, and give you the views of our council upon them. We are not, I may say, or—although we think the number of workhouses might be decreased and a less number of workhouses might do for the different counties, say one or two for Monaghan—we are not in favour of abolishing the union that we have. We can only, of course, judge from our own experience, but we think that the abolition of the union in our case would not lead to any system of economical expenditure, and with our present system we can manage better and more economically than if thrown into a larger area, whatever may be done with the buildings themselves.

Dr. Tierney examined.

Dr. Tierney.

7014. Mr. Dromgoole.—You are here on behalf of the Clones Board of Guardians?—Yes.

7015. You gave evidence for them at Enniskillen?—Yes.

7016. You are a medical doctor residing at Clones?—Yes.

7017. CHAIRMAN.—You are also a County Councillor?—I was for years, and an ex-officio Guardian for ten years.

7018. Mr. Dromgoole.—Tell me what are the views of your board as to the amalgamation of unions and the amalgamation of workhouses?—I think, sir, I have made the opinion of our board clear—or I endeavoured to do so—in Enniskillen. Whilst we think that the number of workhouses in the union are too many—

7019. CHAIRMAN.—You have got four?—We think two is quite sufficient for any county, but we do not believe that dissolution of unions would be of any benefit to the ratepayers. In fact the benefit that would accrue in the case of Clones would be about a farthing in the £, and we don't think that efficient service should be sacrificed for a farthing in the £. If you dissolve Clones Union Workhouse you will do away with the services of the clerk, the matron, the master, and the teacher, and also the expenditure on salaries for those officers; that would bring in a sum of £144 12s. or a saving, but then we must take into consideration that if we dissolve those officers we must give those superannuation; each of those officers has a service of about seven years; we will take it on an average, six. In the case of the clerk his annual salary is £20 a year, the Franchise and Jurors Act being his £70 a year, and an executive sanitary officer, £15; his total salary would be £105 a year; he has about seven years' service, and on the Civil Service scale would bring him to £11 of superannuation.

7020. You propose to give him only the Civil Service scale?—It appears that is all they are entitled to.

Mr. Martin.—There would be something added.

Witness.—I am only taking it on the Civil Service scale; it would be £11. In the case of the matron, whose salary is £20 a year; the last matron we had she retired and she was allowed superannuation on her salary of £25 a year, and £21 a year for matrons and £10 for fuel; light and rooms were allowed to her by the Local Government Board, which brought her salary to £52 a year. In this case if you give her Civil Service scale she will be entitled to £5 a year, and the total superannuation in Clones on the lower scale would be £20 a year. We maintain that if you dissolve Clones Union the clerk of whatever union we would be added on to would be entitled to an assistant, and the smallest thing you could contribute from Clones would be £25 a year towards an assistant. Once a union is dissolved the Franchise fees go to the Secretary of the County Council, which is a great instrument to the Clerk of the County Council. The clerk of the union it would be added on to would not get that; he would only get a small increase, say £25 a year. The office of executive sanitary officer would be dissolved too, and that would go to the secretary of the County Council, £25 a year. We put down £25 a year for extra carriage of paupers, for from the extreme end of Clonsilla Union you would have to carry them by road nine miles to Clonsilla and thirteen miles by railway to Monaghan; we say the extra cost would be £10 a year, and deducting appreciation and extra increases would bring down the net saving to Clonsilla to about 505 a year. Now the valuation of Clonsilla Union is £22,545; i.e. in the £ 8 hangs in £253 a year; so that in reality the Clonsilla Union, if it were dissolved, would save £1, in the £, and we believe hardship on the poor and loss of efficient service would result; the poor here are in immediate touch with their relatives, and there is an efficient service for Poor Law Guardians themselves, for we believe it would be impossible to get Guardians to take a weekly ticket to Monaghan or any place else, and travel eight or nine miles of a morning; they would not attend.

7021. We might not take, personally, your figures of £1 in the £ as what the result would be if I were to work it out on other lines. You make the calculation in a way that is never adopted for the purpose of amalgamation—I make it from my knowledge of the system.

7022. I know, but it has to be done in a different way—by taking the expenditure and the valuation of the union to which you go; it is not simply what you save in Clonsilla—you get into a new area altogether, and the rates are struck not on the Clonsilla valuation alone?—We say this is the immediate saving to us.

7023. It is not necessary to discuss it, but I only wish to say I don't quite adopt the figures—it is stated by persons who I might say are experts on such houses and houses, that a house with over 500 inmates becomes unworkable. I have heard it stated since after this—I saw it in the Medical Press—that a house of over 500 is unworkable for management; a small house under 500 is more manageable and more economical.

7024. Mr. Dromgoole.—Your calculation would be taken upon the assumption too that the management of the larger area which you suppose yourself given over to be as economical as the management of your own union at present?—Yes.

7025. If the result was that there was not such good management?—The saving would be less.

7026. It might be wiped out altogether; taking Clonsilla Union as it is managed and worked at present, what is your average poor rate?—Under the old Guardians and under the new it always varied about 5d. or 6d.

7027. You have now in your workhouse the new dietary scale?—We have; I believe we were one of the first Boards of Guardians in the North of Ireland to adopt it.

7028. Have your workhouse buildings in a very perfect condition?—I think the Commissioners visited it.

7029. And your infirmary?—I believe, without boasting, that our infirmary is as up-to-date as any other workhouse hospital in Ireland.

7030. And your sewerage and all that kind of thing is in a perfect state?—We have spent up to £1,500 in water, sewerage, and new buildings.

7031. Was I right in saying the capacity of the houses is 644 inmates?—Those capacities, I think, should be taken for what they are worth. Under the old system of hygiene these houses were built to hold 650 and 700, but I think under the present system they would not be fit to accommodate that. I think for Clonsilla you might put down 500, but that 500 I would wish to print out to you in Clonsilla would be for the body of the house alone, as the hospital accommodation is quite new. The present hospital was the union fever hospital, and in the case of another union you might say that it was built to accommodate 800; it would now accommodate 600. But Clonsilla, you may say, is a net 500, because the hospital accommodation does not come off it.

7032. Have you any idea of the number of paupers in the county?—I have.

7033. Do you think there are more than Clonsilla Union itself would accommodate?—About 400 would be the number of real paupers; if you deduct the children from that it would be much less.

7034. I just want to ask you a word about the position of Clonsilla and the convenience of access from the other parts of the county. Take first of all that northern union, Monaghan?—If it is considered wisdom to confine unions to the margins of the county, Cootshill No. 2 would have to become a Monaghan Union or be attached to some union in Monaghan; Cootshill No. 2 goes up to the extreme end of Clonsilla at Red-hill; it would be about thirty miles to Monaghan and to Clonsilla about eight. The extreme end of Cootshill No. 2 at Ballyhay would be thirteen or fourteen miles, and every part of Cootshill No. 2 touches upon or adjoins railways—Scribble, Monaghan Road, and Ballyhay. There is no part of Cootshill I think at a greater distance than four miles from a junction of a railway.

7035. When you get at any of these railways must you go through Clonsilla before you can go to Monaghan?—Yes; you would be just doubling the journey.

7036. Take Castledown and Carrickmacross, the same thing applies to them?—I think Castledown would be central for the two, and if the workhouse there was retained the extreme end of Monaghan, such as Clonsilla and part of Traugh, could be taken into Castledown. In Monaghan you have Monaghan Junction and Smithborough in the centre and Glasslough the extreme end. From Clonsilla to Bracken is six miles; the other portions on Monaghan Union are about three miles from the Junction, so that they could be brought in by train much cheaper than by road. This county is an exception to any other county in Ireland in the sense that we are threatened with an immense expenditure on asylum buildings. If we have a separate asylum for Curran it will mean, according to all the people of authority—

7037. Chairman.—Do you want us to go into that? No, sir; but I say the expenditure would be immense, even if we have never a separate asylum; we are threatened with an expenditure of from £2,000 to £10,000 for additional buildings as we stand at present. I maintain that this expenditure in Monaghan could be saved by immediately taking possession of Monaghan Workhouse. It is built, I believe, to accommodate up to 1,000; you might say 800 roughly, and the medical officer that supervised the asylum could supervise it; it is only just across the road, and, moreover, Monaghan has ample accommodation for hospital purposes. They have a fever hospital and the county infirmary, which could be used for the poor, and, if necessary, a cottage hospital could be established at Aughanador for Traugh, and could do for the lower end of Tyrone. We say it would be a great saving on the County Monaghan and also Curran—that £10,000 could be saved by immediately taking possession of Monaghan Workhouse buildings for asylum purposes.

7038. Really, every railway in Monaghan communicates directly with Clonsilla?—They do; there is no portion of Cootshill No. 2 at a greater distance than four miles from a station on a line of railway.

7039. Mr. Dromgoole.—471 is the total number of paupers in the county?—Take the children off that and it is, roughly, 400.

7040. Chairman.—You are anxious to say something about the boarding out of children?—I think, in answer to a question in Keshidale, I did not express why I was against it. Unfortunately, a number of children in the workhouse are generally illegitimate, and a respectable man, no matter how humble his position—a labourer—would be the very last to adopt an illegitimate child into his family.

7041. Do you speak from conjecture or experience?—Experience; the few cases we had at Clonsilla, the people who adopted these children were generally persons whose reputation would not stand investigation.

7042. Is that a case of hiring out or boarding out?—Boarding out.

7043. Did you hire them out?—No. They put the children into the workhouse, and when they grew up their immediate relatives will across the Guardians to get them out as slaves and work them. That is the reason I would be against boarding out children, because even if they were not stigmatize their own relatives would take them for the purpose of gain, not of philanthropy.

7044. Have you had any instances of that?—My experience of workhouses is that it is a field day when a child comes to fourteen to see which friend will get him.

7045. For the hiring out?—That is the hiring out. 7046. We are speaking of boarding out?—I think the class of people who would take those children—

7047. Now, are you speaking from experience about the boarding out?—Our experience is limited.

7048. To what extent?—We had only two children boarded out in Clonsilla.

7049. That would be rather small to generalize from?—I think, from my knowledge of the county, you would not get respectable people—no matter how poor—to take children, and if they did take them it would be for the purpose of gain.

Nov. 24, 1903.

Dr. Tierney.

7050. I think the evidence is overwhelmingly strong against your view—I mean legitimate children.

7051. Mr. Dromgoole.—What would you suggest to do with them?—My suggestion is there should be one dressed workhouse for a county, or for two counties, which should be used principally as an industrial school, and these children, if possible, should be learned some trade, and, as I said before, they are about the only class of the community I would encourage to emigrate, because if they don't get out of the district in which they are known they are branded.

7052. Would there be a necessity for adding to the existing industrial schools?—I would not consider that the existing industrial schools are on the lines that we should adopt; there is a difference of opinion about industrial schools.

7053. What is your opinion?—I would not be in favour of sending children there.

7054. CHAIRMAN.—Why?—If you read the Commissioner's report on industrial schools they are not up to my standard of industrial schools for children.

7055. The education?—The education is good enough, but Dr. Fogin has condemned the food and the care and attention paid to them. I think if we had smaller industrial schools—one for every two counties, where they would be under the care of the Guardians and their friends—it would be much better.

7056. Is it your impression that he has condemned industrial schools generally as regards food?—No; but he has condemned some, and some of the principal ones that are looked up to. I believe class D is not sufficient for any industrial school; they should be all class I.

7057. Mr. Dromgoole.—You would give in these schools a trade to these children?—I would, and I maintain they should be taken entirely out of the hands of the Guardians; there should be a joint committee for the two counties to take charge of the children of the two counties.

7058. CHAIRMAN.—Do you know that there are such schools at present?—I believe there is a school of that class in the South of Ireland, and there is a female one on the Shannon.

7059. That is the one at Glin, and there is one at Trim?—And these children are trained as servants, and sent out, and they do well.

7060. Mr. Dromgoole.—You think the other system only brings them up as labourers?—I believe so.

7061. CHAIRMAN.—Would not that be a very useful career for a workhouse boy to become a labourer—a class that is scarce and difficult to get?—I would limit the labouring class as much as possible, because, as far as I know, the labourer is only one degree above slavery from childhood to death.

7062. But the labourer is necessary?—He is, but I would limit it to the lowest class of intellect in the community. If a boy had more intellect than an ordinary labourer he should be encouraged to rise above that position.

7063. Even at the expense of the rates?—We should not live on the slavery of our brothers; we should encourage them to rise, and, moreover, machinery at the present time has limited the market for labourers.

7064. There is a great scarcity of agricultural labourers at present?—There is, but the work in Ireland for them is limited to about two months in the year, and the farmer cannot expect the labourer to sit down and starve for two months in order to get work for two; if they gave them constant employment they could have plenty of labourers, but they give them an empty house and charge 25 an acre for potato ground, and give them two months work only.

7065. Mr. MURKIN.—Is it your experience that there is only employment for labourers for two months in the year?—There is a scarcity of labour, and agriculture has gone down one-third of what it was; the farmers, to my own knowledge, who were agriculturists, have now become graziers.

7066. Is not that largely due to the scarcity of labour?—It is not; it is due principally because they don't think it will pay to raise crops and send them to market to sell and compete with the foreign markets.

7067. Have you any practical experience?—I have, unfortunately; and I know that the crops you raise yourself will not pay for the labour.

7068. Still with all that, don't you think the country should be kept cultivated?—It should; but if you take your own country, Tyrone, and take your ordinary farmer, let him raise whatever crop he likes, both animal and otherwise, will he utilize it for his own use; surely not; he will go for the Yankee produce and sell his own.

7069. Still don't you think it would be a desirable thing to utilize the young of the country who have no special gifts for higher walks of life?—That is what I say; that should be limited to persons with very low intellects.

7070. Don't you think the children raised at the expense of the rates would be suitable subjects for such purposes?—If they follow the natural ability of some of their fathers they would be much higher than labourers.

7071. Why should their fathers be in such a high position?—Some of them, to my own knowledge, are very clever men.

7072. That is not very creditable to them?—If a child comes into the world against his own wish, and if he has natural intelligence, you should not brand him as a slave.

7073. I would like to know on what ground you think it right that the children raised at the expense of the ratepayers should be placed in a higher position than the children of those ratepayers?—I don't mean to say so; unfortunately, that is one of the reasons of the dearth of labourers at the present time. Take your smallest farmer, or an ordinary cottier, will he be content to have his children in the position he was himself? I understand he won't. Even in the servant market in this county at present, which is recruited from the very small farmers and cottiers, they will never think of sending their children to a position they hold themselves; they always try to better them.

7074. Why do you say the farmers only employ the labourers for two months in the year?—Unfortunately, that is the fact.

7075. Don't you know that there are eight months of busy time for the farmers?—The ordinary farmer sows March and April getting his crops in and July and August getting them home.

7076. Is it not the experience of most farmers that they find it impossible to get hands to stay with them?—Any farmer, if he treats his labourer well, will get him to stay with him.

7077. Are you aware hired boys are getting 65 and 70 a half-year, or 111?—I am aware of that.

7078. That speaks to the contrary? Yes; because, unfortunately, the farmer prefers to give 111 to a boy, and only 25 a week to a married man.

7079. Then you would educate these children of the State and give them a trade, and then encourage them to emigrate; do you think that would be fair to Ireland?—My belief is that we should take as the first plank in our platform the benefit of the children, not the benefit of Ireland or any other country.

7080. Then in your calculation of the saving, I think you forget to take into consideration the great saving in fuel and on the upkeep of the buildings?—The fuel at Clonoe we might, roughly, put down at 650 a year.

7081. In the neighbouring Union of Omagh it is 2400?—We generally contract for 100 tons, and get it eighty or eighty-five tons.

7082. That seems very strange indeed?—I think we should be regarded as a very economical and wise union.

7083. The poor people are not shivering under it?—They are not.

7084. Don't you think economy could be pushed to starvation?—I don't think you could say so in Clonoe. If the inmates we have in Clonoe were drafted to a neighbouring union there would be extra wards required, and the number of extra wards required for our poor and for the poor of the neighbouring unions would also have to be heated, and there would be extra fires; in a ward that would accommodate sixty or seventy you could not burn 120 for the sake of saving extra fuel.

7085. CHAIRMAN.—You have no such wards as that?—No; but if we drafted seventy from Clonoe to Monaghan the Monaghan expenditure of 120 or 130 tons a year would be raised to 300.

7086. You might not want the extra wards; the wards are not full in any case at present?—You might save a little, but you could not fill the wards; you could only put a certain number into every ward.

7087. Mr. MURKIN.—If you had some form of concentration, don't you think the classification could be better, and the arrangements internally very much improved on the present system?—That is what I

Nov. 24, 1905.

Dr. Tierney.

maintain that concentration of workhouses—two workhouses would do, but the unions should not be dissolved; they should be contributory.

7022. You are in favour of these—?—Concentration of workhouses, but not of unions; we say the unions should remain as they are, and be contributory to these concentrated workhouses.

7023. CHAIRMAN.—That the Guardians should meet and deal with the poor in the central workhouse?—Yes; in the same way that the County Council conducts the system.

7024. What would be the business of the Board of Guardians meeting at Clones if their inmates were at Castleblayney or Monaghan?—To receive the reports of the unions to which they contribute; the numbers lodged to the rates of the district.

7025. Would they have anything to do except to read reports?—That is what they have to do at present.

7026. They could not give directions as to what was to be done in workhouses remote from them?—Generally in all workhouses that is left to a few men.

7027. You could hardly have three or four Boards of Guardians interested in a distant workhouse and all giving contradictory orders?—You could not; if we sent our poor to Castleblayney, and the average cost of the maintenance of the paupers was 4s. 6d. a week, and we sent ten or twenty chargeable, what is the money we could not draw a cheque for twenty paupers at 4s. 6d. a week?

7028. If you were only there for the purpose of drawing a cheque, I don't see what you would be?—We could see to other union affairs and the district hospital, which would be essential.

7029. What would you do at Clones for a distinct hospital?—We would still retain our hospital.

7030. And close up the big main building?—Let it go to the rate and fall, or sell it for road material; that is the only thing you could do with it; it is essential to maintain the district hospital.

7031. And at Clones you could easily do so, because it is detached from the rest of the building, and has a separate entrance?—It has a separate entrance.

7032. If the other building were knocked down and the site sold?—If we take the example of the old jail in Monaghan—one of the finest of buildings—it only brought in £300 to the ratepayers. Would it not be better to let it stand as an old curiosity and charge 1s. a week in 100 years for the benefit of the ratepayers.

7033. The site would sell for something material?—Very little.

7034. Is the land round Clones not of much value?—I don't think you would get people to buy land convenient to a hospital.

7035. There are a good many buildings near the hospital here in Monaghan?—I don't think so, unless at a convenient distance.

7036. Mr. Dransfield.—There never was any complaint as to the way that your inmates were treated in Clones?—We never had any complaints.

7037. CHAIRMAN.—Except giving tramps the cold bath?—That was done away with.

7038. And I believe I did it myself?—You may have been the man doing, but I was the person that worked it with the Guardians.

7039. Mr. Dransfield.—Any regulation the Local Government Board made was always complied with?—Yes.

7040. These Boards of Guardians are also District Councils, and they would have to meet in any event?—Yes; the Guardians could remain, because you would have District Councils meeting as usual, and the Guardians' business could be done once a month.

7041. Dr. Brogan.—You know the fever hospital at Clones?—I do.

7042. Do you think it is suitable for the requirements?—It is, unfortunately, not up to date as it should be.

7043. How would you suggest it should be made up to date?—They are repairing it at present. When the present joint committee got possession of it four years ago it was dilapidated completely; we have spent over £150 in repairs the last three years.

7044. Is it suitable now?—It is not up to date but it is suitable enough as a building.

7045. CHAIRMAN.—Are you one of the committee?—I am not; but Mr. Knight is here. It is supported both by private contributions from subscribers and from the county.

7046. Dr. Brogan.—Does the county give a large annual grant to support it?—No, sir; the annual grant is sufficient with the private subscriptions to maintain the hospital, but, unfortunately, the Act of Parliament lays down that the County Council cannot give a greater grant than was given a certain number of years before the passing of the Act.

Mr. Knight.—It is not that; but not less than the average for the years preceding the Act.

Witness.—In the case of Clones it is £500 a year the county contributes; the rest is made up of private subscriptions, and, unfortunately, we cannot do what we would wish to do at Clones, because we can only utilise what we can save; we cannot get a grant for repairs.

7113. You would require something to put it in proper order?—Mr. Knight is the secretary of the present committee, and he will tell you that they have expended over £250.

7114. Was it the joint committee that appointed the nurse there?—It was.

7115. Did they not think it advisable to appoint a nurse with a fever training?—We considered her a brilliant improvement on the old woman of sixty-five who was there; we considered her a brilliant success, and, moreover, to get a nurse for the county fever hospital you would have to expend £40 or £50 a year, and it is doubtful whether you would be recouped.

7116. It is a long distance from a doctor?—If we were to appoint a nurse with fever training and give her £40 out of a county contribution of £50 the private subscribers would leave very little for the poor.

7117. Does not that point to the fact that you have not a large enough grant?—If we had the hospital in proper repair the grant would be quite sufficient, for the fever cases in Clones are very few; we might not have more than half a dozen in the whole year, and we were at a considerable expenditure last year; we had an outbreak of typhus, in which we had to get a second nurse from Dublin or Belfast, and that came out of the subscriptions from the county, which narrowed the amount we could have expended on the place, so that everything worked against us since we got possession.

7118. You say you believe in the amalgamation of workhouses; what workhouses would you suggest?—I say under the circumstances of Monaghan that Clones should act as a workhouse for Clones, and Monaghan, and Cheshill No. 2, and that Castleblayney should act for the lower end of the county.

7119. CHAIRMAN.—You would close Carrickmacross and put it into Castleblayney?—Yes; and close Monaghan and make it a portion of the asylum buildings, and bring the poor to Clones, and take in Corvhill No. 2.

7120. About this nurse, you say she has no fever training?—The only training she had was that she was a nurse in an Asylum or some place in Scotland.

7121. Are you sure she was not an assistant housekeeper?—I don't know what she was; that was what she told us.

7122. Don't you think, as a medical man, it is rather a terrible responsibility to leave fever patients in charge of a woman whose only experience as having acted as assistant housekeeper in a hospital?—I think it is only right we should have a trained nurse, but the grant would not allow it.

7123. Would it not be better to appoint nobody than such a woman?—If any difficult fever case comes they immediately get a trained nurse, and she is more used as a matron.

7124. Has not this woman nursed herself, without assistance, two cases of fever?—She nursed two cases—one of scarletina and another a doubtful case, whether diphtheria or typhoid—that is all she has nursed inside twelve months.

7125. Mr. Muldoon.—I think you commenced by saying you were opposed to amalgamation entirely?—Of unions.

7126. In the event of amalgamation being agreed upon you would keep two in the County Monaghan?—I would keep all the unions, but only two workhouses.

7127. Then you think amalgamation is entirely unnecessary?—Amalgamation of unions is not necessary, but I believe less workhouses would do.

7128. And, so far as the Commission is concerned, Ireland could not be benefited by amalgamation of workhouses?—Less workhouses in Ireland would do, but the amalgamation of unions would be no benefit.

7129. In the event of amalgamation being recommended by this Commission, and that they would be in favour of having only one union in Monaghan County, where would you say that union should be

Nov. 24, 1923.

Dr. Tierney.

suggested—When that comes very likely we will have Mr. Muldoon representing North Monaghan, and we will get him to run Clones.

7153. That would be poaching on your preserves, for if you are made for anything it is for Parliament!—Unfortunately, the County Monaghan won't touch medicine again for a while.

7154. In the event of one workhouse being retained for Monaghan, where would you keep it?—I would certainly say there should be two.

7155. In the event of one?—There is no one workhouse in Monaghan would fold this day.

7156. And we know from your evidence in Banishillen that Clones is still to retain the portion of Fermagh that goes to it?—If, unfortunately, the unions were content with counting the ratepayers would a thousand times rather go to Lanesboro.

7157. They have a splendid workhouse at Lanesboro—was good at Clones?—Indeed it is not.

7158. Clones has a small valuation?—The County Monaghan portion may be small; the valuation of Clones Union is £28,000.

7159. What portion of that is in Monaghan?—Over half.

7160. In the event of its losing that portion that goes to Fermagh there would be a very small reason for retaining it in this county?—We might open our arms and take in the whole County Monaghan if you wish.

7161. You think that public money should be spent on the education of pauper children where you have promising children, regardless of Poor Law principles?—Oh, no, I would not; I would say they should be raised above being slaves for their lives; they should get an education.

7162. And where you have a promising boy you should not stint money upon the education of the boy?—Oh, no.

7163. Would you go so far as to make lawyers or doctors of them?—They might become judges if all care if they had ability to go ahead.

7164. And you can see no objection from the public point of view to lavishing money on boys like that?—I would lavish no money. I would say we should have a central industrial school for a couple of months in which the education of these youths should be taken care of; you could give them a trade suitable to them. If these boys could have ability afterwards to become doctors I don't see why they should be kept down. My belief is that professions should not be limited to any class of the community.

7165. Would you make their position better than that of the children of independent labourers in the community?—I would not; the children of labourers in the present system of education, and if they have the ability to go ahead afterwards what is so precious then?

7166. If your theory is carried out, can you not so that you would be producing proper children from the facilities you would be affording for their education; would that be desirable?—No, sir; you would be putting no premium on pauperism, because the children that would go to those establishments would be the inmates of the workhouses, and it is one of the greatest blots on the Irish character, that of pauperism—to be branded as a pauper is the last thing they wish. I am told here by the secretary of the County Council that Clones fever hospital can get up to £200 a year.

7167. CHAIRMAN.—You think Clones won't be long until it takes advantage of that?—I am perfectly sure we will get it into repair straight off.

Mr. John Smyth.

Mr. JOHN SMYTH examined.

7168. Mr. Dransfield.—You are the Chairman of No. 1 District Council of Clones?—Yes, sir.

7169. That is the portion of the Clones Union that is in the County Monaghan?—Yes.

7170. You have heard Dr. Tierney's evidence here today, do you agree with that evidence?—I do.

7171. And, as far as you know, these are the views of your board?—Yes; the views of the board I represent.

7172. I don't want to go through it all in detail, but taking the position of Clones with regard to the county, so far as railway communication goes, all the railways of the county converge on Clones?—They do.

7173. And from every part of the county it is easy to get to Clones by railway?—It is.

7174. And does that apply to any other place?—Not to any other place so much as to Clones.

7175. Take, for instance, Monaghan, except the eastern portion of its own union, is it not inconvenient to get at from any other part?—You would have to come via Clones; taking the Sheshin part of Monaghan Union, that is just as convenient to Clones as to Monaghan.

7176. You think that there could be less workhouses in the county than there are at present?—Yes; I should say two workhouses would be quite enough for the county.

7177. Would you suggest what workhouses would be most convenient?—I would agree with Dr. Tierney—Coolshilagh for the South of Monaghan and Clones for North Monaghan.

7178. Otherwise you are in favour of the amalgamation of unions?—No, certainly not; it would be impossible to get the Guardians to come a long distance.

7179. CHAIRMAN.—As to Monaghan, and how do you expect the Monaghan men to come to Clones?—The Guardians from the further end of Clones are further off now than the men who would have to come from Monaghan.

7180. Mr. Dransfield.—Take Coolshilagh No. 2, the people from that, in order to get to Monaghan, except they took a long journey by road, would have to go to Clones first?—They would.

7181. And then to travel on to Monaghan?—Yes.

7182. That would be a longer journey than from almost any part of the Monaghan Union into Clones?—It would.

7183. Mr. MURPHY.—You say it would be impossible to get the Guardians to attend from a distance?—

I think it would; the majority of the Guardians are farmers and labouring men, and they could not afford to attend.

7184. Does not that apply to all large unions even existing at present?—Yes.

7185. Has any disadvantage arisen owing to that?—At the present time there has not.

7186. Of course, the further from the place of meeting the more difficult it is to get to it, and the more the attendance of the Guardians?—Yes.

7187. That exists already; in order to remove that difficulty you would have to have workhouses scattered all through the county. The desire is to try and concentrate, if possible, the Poor Law services in such a way that it will be better than it is at present, and at a less expense. There is no other way that I can see done except by bringing under one control a large number of the inmates. How are we to get around that?—I think the meetings should be less than they are at the present time; I would say once a month would be quite enough.

7188. Would that get rid of the difficulty of attendance?—It would; it would be much easier for them to go once a month instead of once a week.

7189. I know that in the case of a union that has been amalgamated with another union no difficulty has arisen, although the distance is very considerable.

Of course it depends on who the Guardians are.

7190. You think two workhouses would be sufficient?—I do.

7191. Do you not think one would be enough?—I don't know how you would arrange the one.

7192. Supposing you had the children taken out and boarded out, as there seems to be a very general demand and supposing the lunatics were taken out, you would reduce the number of paupers to 400?—I would not agree with boarding out the children. I think they would not be put in proper places.

7193. Do you come from Clones?—I do.

7194. Are you aware in Clones Workhouse there is a boy there fourteen or fifteen years old, and he cannot be kept out of the house, simply looking to that place at his home?—I know that.

7195. And the master of the house says he is of no service at all, and won't go out and stay only do you think it would be a desirable thing to keep that up?—I would not.

7196. That exists in your own workhouse?—I know that.

7174. Mr. Dromgoole.—You know this boy?—I think it is Mallicky; he is insane.

7175. CHAIRMAN.—Oh, no?—Then I don't know him.

7176. Mr. Dromgoole.—Do you know the case Mr. Monaghan is referring to?—I do not.

7177. The boy you speak of is a boy called Mallicky, who, I understand, is an imbecile?—I think so.

7178. CHAIRMAN.—It is not the boy we refer to; it is possible the boy may be somewhere else, but wherever it is it is the same for the purpose of the argument; possibly it is not Clones.

Mr. Muldoon.—In the event of only one union being left in this county, where would you place it?—I don't believe one union would suit.

7179. Do you understand that question, in the event of one union being left in this county where would you leave it?—I would leave it in Clones; it is the most central place for railway communication.

7180. Mr. J. A. Monaghan.—You say that the County Monaghan is very well served with railways?—Yes; it is very well.

7181. Can you get easily from South Monaghan to Clones from the Carrickmacross district?—Yes, you can.

7182. Would you not have to go all round about? There is no direct way to get from South Monaghan to Clones?—Oh, yes; it is direct.

7183. Mr. Muldoon.—You would have to pass Monaghan?—Certainly not.

7184. Mr. J. A. Monaghan.—Would you not have to go down to Enniskillen and round?—Yes; but it is not an inconvenient way.

7185. It is inconvenient to get from South Monaghan to Clones?—It is not.

7186. CHAIRMAN.—Would you have a good attendance of Guardians from Carrickmacross?—I am afraid not.

7187. Mr. Dromgoole.—If it is inconvenient to come to Clones would it not be more inconvenient to go to Monaghan?—Certainly; you would have to go by Clones.

Nov. 24, 1906.

Mr. John Smyth.

MR. JOHN SMYTH EXAMINED.

7188. Mr. H. Murphy.—You are the Chairman of the Clones Board of Guardians?—Yes.

7189. And you are resident in the rural district of Clones No. 2 in the County Fermanagh?—Yes.

7190. That is slightly the larger portion of the Clones Union?—Yes; it is the largest portion.

7191. And you have, of course, always co-operated in the best manner with the Monaghan portion of the Clones Union?—Always.

7192. There has never been any friction?—No.

7193. Now, the district that you reside in is in the district of Banislee?—Yes.

7194. And the union stretches for a very considerable distance there?—Five miles beyond Banislee.

7195. And Banislee itself is four miles from Clones?—Yes.

7196. Was it with the hearty co-operation of the Fermanagh Guardians as well as of the Monaghan Guardians that this large sum of £200 was spent on the hospital?—It was.

7197. And not only on the hospital was the money spent, but in putting up a system of sewerage—the latter system?—Yes.

7198. The whole of that benefit would be lost to your people if this system of making union boundaries with only areas were adopted?—Certainly; it would be lost to Clones No. 2.

7199. As a matter of fact, does the commerce of the district, the attendance at fairs and markets, follow the county boundaries?—Certainly not.

7200. And the commerce of the people of your county is in the town of Clones?—Yes.

7201. Clones is the centre in which they buy and sell?—Yes; it is their principal fair and market.

7202. You also know some portions of the County Cavan?—I do.

7203. Are you not aware, of your own knowledge, that a very large area of the County Cavan considers Clones as its centre for dealing as well?—Yes; all round Banislee and there.

7204. The Guardians elected from your side of the county find it very easy to attend in Clones, because they can combine public business with their private business?—Yes.

7205. If, with these new-fangled notions of efficiency, these very twisted and convoluted county boundaries were adopted and a member of your principal intelligent farmers were forced to go to Banislee, would they not be simply losing their day there, except as far as discharging a public duty; they could serve no private end?—They could not, because they would have four or six English miles to Clones and twenty-two miles by rail to Banislee, and they would not be able to stand, and would not go.

7206. What would be your suggestion, supposing amalgamation were at all desirable; what amalgamation would you propose?—I would not be in favour of amalgamating the unions; I would say that less work would be done in the county would do.

7207. But supposing a great number of people are possessed with this fancy for amalgamation, and it were to be carried out in the way that would be least injurious, as you might put it, or most beneficial, as the advocates of it would put it, what would you propose should be done?—I would dissolve Lisnaskea and take that portion from Lisnaskea and add it to Clones, and send the other portion on the other side of the lake to Banislee.

Mr. John Smyth.

7208. Lisnaskea is divided by Lough Erne, and you would give all on the right hand side of the lake to Clones?—Yes.

CHAIRMAN.—That is going into what we have already dealt with in Enniskillen.

Mr. Murphy.—I am not doing more than drawing your attention to the evidence given at Enniskillen.

CHAIRMAN.—You are going into Lisnaskea Union.

Mr. Murphy.—Yes; I suppose something will be done with Clones Union; we will either be amalgamated with somebody else or somebody else amalgamated with us; that is the way the tide is flowing. I will tell you shortly what Mr. Smith's views are: His views are, if you want to enlarge the area, then enlarge the area by first retaining the existing Clones Union as it stands in the two counties of Monaghan and Fermanagh, adding to it that portion of Lisnaskea Union on the north-east side of the lake, adding to it the district of Banislee and sweeping round Outehill in the County Cavan, perhaps an electoral division deep of Cavan; and with regard to what would remain of Outehill Union, there it takes Banislee, and takes in Rural District No. 2 of Outehill, which is in the County Monaghan. And Mr. Smith's contention is that all that area at the present time, physically and commercially, regards Clones as its centre.

7209. (To the Witness).—Are not these the views not merely of yourself, but of the entire of the Guardians elected by the Fermanagh portion of Clones Union?—Yes.

7210. How many Guardians are elected by the Fermanagh portion of Clones Union?—Twenty-five.

7211. And they, practically, all hold these views?—Yes.

7212. And you also say that you would be put to a considerable lot of inconvenience by having to go a great distance, because you anticipate if Clones were extinguished you would be sent to Banislee?—Yes.

7213. And you also consider that you would be at the dead loss of all you have expended on the hotel?—Yes; we have contributed over the half from Fermanagh.

7214. But you would also have to bear your share of the expense of the building of the cottage hospital that was proposed at Newtownbutler or Bonmahon?—Yes.

7215. And in neither of those towns is there at present any large building that could be taken over?—None.

7216. Mr. Muldoon.—All roads lead to Clones?—Yes.

7217. It is the centre of Ireland?—No; it is not.

7218. In the event of only one union being left in the county, where would you place it?—I would say one union would not be enough in the county.

7219. But in the event of the Commission differing from you, and thinking one union would be enough, where would you advise them to place it?—Clones.

7220. Clones would be quite sufficient?—Not at all; no, sir; but in the event of your saying one workhouse would do.

7221. Whatever scheme is adopted Clones must be, serious cases in the hospital or any outbreak of fever Dr. Henry has power to requisition any trained nursing he wants and the committee will pay for it. It is not an ad-hoc case as it might be, but the joint committee have spent a good deal of money on it, and tried to make it better than it was. I think it is only fair to them to say that, because I was there in the old days.

7252. Dr. BAKER.—The contribution you receive is from the County Council?—Yes.

7253. The hospital only serves the union?—The patients only come from the union.

7254. Do you think that is fair or equitable to other portions of the county that have to keep up their own fever hospitals?—There is a fever hospital here, and they get a contribution from the County Council; there are three in the county.

7255. There is none in Castletown, and therefore they help to support your fever hospital in Clonac and there in Monaghan and Carrickmacross—I take it that if a fever case came from Castletown it would be removed either to Carrickmacross or Monaghan.

7256. It is an advantage to the County Fernagh also to have that hospital?—It is a great advantage to them; they pay nothing. I think I am right in saying that a good many of the fever cases come from Fernagh. Last year we had a bad outbreak from Roslin.

Mr. Murphy.—With reference to the question about Castleblayney fever hospital, as far as I can read the Act our hospital is a county fever hospital, and we would have no power to refuse a patient from Castleblayney supposing they thought it a proper thing to send us down a patient.

Witness.—I don't think the question has ever arisen as to from what district we were entitled to take a patient.

Mr. Martin.—The fever hospitals in the county are maintained out of county-at-large charges, and not by any particular portion.

Mr. Knight.—Castleblayney has a union fever hospital attached to the workhouse, but the others are county hospitals.

7257. Mr. Martin.—Do any of your patients come from Fernagh?—They do in the fever hospital.

7258. How are they paid for?—In theory, the County Fernagh should contribute towards that.

7259. It does not?—It does not.

7260. Do you see any objection to that system?—It is an unfair system that they should not contribute; I quite agree with you about that.

Dr. FERRIS.—The secretary of our County Council applied to the County Fernagh to pay. The County Council of Fernagh passed a resolution that they were willing to contribute at the rate of 5s. a week.

Mr. Murphy.—It would be the treasurer's business to ask for this, but no report was ever sent him by the medical officer that there was a Fernagh patient in.

Mr. Drommond.—That is the case for Clonac.

Mr. Martin.—Perhaps you would allow me to examine the County Council officers.

MR. DEVIS CAROLAN BEING EXAMINED.

7261. Mr. Martin.—You are the Secretary of the County Council?—Yes.

7262. They have had before them this matter of the reduction of the number of workhouses in the county?—Yes.

7263. Are the County Council of opinion that there are too many workhouses?—Yes.

7264. And that, with advantage to the ratepayers and without disadvantage to the inmates, the number could be reduced?—Yes.

7265. There are four workhouses at present in the county?—Yes.

7266. There is also Outehill Workhouse outside the county and part of the union is inside the county?—Yes.

7267. Do you think that at least two of the four workhouses in the county might be dispensed with?—Yes; it is not what I think, but what the County Council think.

7268. Now, with regard to the locality; we have heard a great deal of discussion as to the particular place in which it would be desirable to place whatever workhouses are left; have you anything to say on that subject?—The County Council did not express any opinion on that subject.

7269. With regard to the amalgamation of unions, the County Council have not expressed any opinion on that subject?—No.

7270. It was merely with regard to the workhouses?—Yes.

7271. And, of course, the great extra expense is on account of the number of workhouses?—Yes.

7272. And not so much on account of the number of inmates?—No.

7273. By reducing the number of workhouses you would largely reduce the staff of officials, and thereby reduce the rates?—Yes.

7274. CHAIRMAN.—Had the County Council any idea in their mind about closing workhouses and retaining inmates?—No.

7275. They meant to break up the unions and close the workhouses?—Closing the workhouses is all the length they went.

7276. And breaking up the unions?—You see really the District Council's meetings rather clash with each other. I don't think they discussed that question; it was merely closing the workhouses.

7277. Once you close a workhouse it is rather difficult to say where the functions of a Board of Guardians come in?—I heard some theories about that this morning.

7278. Mr. Martin.—There has been a considerable discussion, and likely to be more, with regard to the county system for the counties of Monaghan and Carrickmacross?—Yes.

7279. Some people have been advocating a separate system in Carrickmacross?—Yes.

7280. That was partly grounded on the large number of inmates in the Monaghan asylum and the difficulty of providing accommodation?—Yes.

7281. If some of the workhouses were closed for their present purpose they would be left available for some of the inmates of the asylum?—Yes.

7282. And that would get rid of a good deal of this question of extra building for asylum patients?—Yes.

Mr. Martin.—I suppose you have the areas and the valuations of the different unions.

CHAIRMAN.—We have.

7283. Mr. Martin.—Can you give the Commissioners an idea of the union rates?

CHAIRMAN.—We have that; we know the rate is 5s. 6d. for the last audited year for the Union of Monaghan for Poor Law purposes?—On buildings it is 7s. 6d.

7284. That includes a lot of other things?—It is our demand.

7285. For Poor Law purposes it is 5s. 6d.?—The union demand on us comes to a certain sum.

7286. Mr. Martin.—How many county fever hospitals are there?—Two—Monaghan and Clonac.

7287. And there is one baronial fever hospital?—Yes—Carrickmacross.

7288. Whatever funds are supplied to them are supplied equally out of the county-at-large rates?—Yes; and charged on the county at large.

7289. CHAIRMAN.—Nothing charged on the barony of Farnley?—No; all on the county at large.

7290. There is really nothing in the names baronial and county?—There is in the finances.

7291. Mr. Martin.—The County Council have not power to prevent as much for the baronial hospital as for the county hospital?—No.

7292. CHAIRMAN.—What is their limit for Carrickmacross?—Under £100; it is regulated on the three years before the standard year; but the other two are held to be county fever hospitals—they can get up to £200 per annum. Carrick, unfortunately, is limited to the standard year; it is £50 odd. There is a clause introduced into the Act of 1902; the second section empowers the auditor when it is proved to him—unfortunately we have not been able to work that yet with the Local Government Auditor—whether it is the county auditor or the union auditor, whoever it is, who is to take it up has not yet been finally decided; nothing has yet come of it.

Mr. MURPHY.—That only enables the County Council, if they think fit, if they are satisfied there is a good reason for increasing the grant, to do so?—Yes; they must get the certificate of the auditor.

7293. Mr. Martin.—There is no baronial or county 2 K

Nov. 26, 1923.

Mr. Michael R. Knight.

Mr. Denis Carolan
Becks.

Nov. 24, 1901.
Mr. Devlin
Chairman
Rush.

fever hospital at Castleblayney?—No; they have a perpetual grievance in Castleblayney; they have nothing but their workhouse fever hospital.

7294. And, of course, that is supported by the union?—Yes.

7295. Mr. MURPHY.—So Carrickmacross has a perpetual grievance, Castleblayney has a whole grievance, and the others have advantages?—Yes.

7296. Did the County Council, in considering this matter, name any distasteful workhouse suitable for an asylum?—No. Unfortunately, there were too many friends of every workhouse present. With reference to that question the County Council were very anxious to assist Carrickmacross; there were resolutions passed at the County Council to assist Carrickmacross.

7297. Still, would it not be better to have them all placed on the same basis?—I believe the County Council are of the same opinion. With regard to the resolution of which Dr. Tierney spoke about the County Fernagh contributing towards the patients sent to Clones, a resolution was passed, on the motion of Mr. John Smith, Chairman of the Clones Rural District, and sent to Fernagh, and we received a reply from Fernagh, consenting, and it was that, I believe, named the sum of 4s. or 5s. for each patient, and I believe there has been no patient since.

7298. Has the question ever been looked into seriously whether it was possible for the Fernagh County Council to act on that resolution?—It was a matter for the Clones people to look into; not us.

7299. I know in the neighbouring county there was a resolution passed to give a contribution to a hospital outside their borders, and the legal opinion was that there could be no annual contribution; it should be per head?—Yes.

7300. There may be something different in the laws regulating the fever hospitals and county infirmaries?—It is hardly so strict, but a county infirmary is very strictly defined.

7301. There are altogether in the County Monaghan 465 inmates of workhouses; out of that number there are about fifty or six children and thirty harmless lunatics; do you not think some workhouses in the county could accommodate that 400?—I don't like giving my private opinion. My own opinion is if it were not for the inconvenience of conveying patients long distances, it would be rather long, I am afraid, to convey them from one end of the county to the other—helpless creatures like you see drawn into the workhouse.

7302. The largest proportion of the inmates of a workhouse are the sick; take away the sick, the lunatics, and the children, and you would have only about 200 in the whole county?—It was the sick I had in my mind when I spoke of the conveyance of these poor creatures such long distances. It is a great stretch to draw them from the extreme northern part of the county into Monaghan—where these poor people come from there are very few railways.

7303. CHAIRMAN.—You have nothing to do with the administration of the Guardians?—No; except they send the demand to me.

7304. But before you become secretary to the County Council?—No; I was a solicitor.

7305. Have you ever heard of any complaint against the Monaghan Board of Guardians for their administration of the Poor Law as regards giving or not giving outdoor relief?—No; I knew in old times they used to complain there was no outdoor relief given; that was on a question of principle, I expect.

7306. But as resident for a long time in the neighbourhood, have you ever heard of any alleged individual cases of hardship?—I don't think I did; if there was there were other charitable societies to step in privately—charity frequently did step in. I have known instances of that sort myself, but there was no case of a person dying of want in my memory.

7307. Or of any terrible suffering?—There might have been if there had not been local charity, but it is a good many years ago since I remember a thing of the kind. In 1879 I remember being secretary of the relief committee when the potato crop failed; it was private assistance. A great many people in the district would not care to let it be known that they were in straitened circumstances—people who were just as badly off as some of these who were publicly relieved.

7308. That was a special season, but in the ordinary times?—No; there is only the usual reluctance of some poor people to go into the workhouse, and private charity generally finds them out. But there is a great difficulty in dealing with certain individuals who have the old-fashioned dislike for the workhouse; they would die of starvation sooner than go in; that is only my private opinion.

7309. Mr. DUNNE.—With regard to the convenience of access by railway in the county, is it not a fact that the only railway lines in the county run north-east and south-west from Clones?—Yes.

7310. The lines converge upon Clones?—Yes; the railway lines.

7311. And, so far as the railway accommodation goes, no other town is at all so well accommodated as Clones in that respect?—No.

7312. And, taking the whole south of the county, they could only get to Monaghan by railway by going through Clones?—Well, the railway is not often used; the tendency of the Great Northern Railway is not to concentrate the people coming this way.

7313. If you go so far away as Castleblayney or Carrickmacross it is by railway they must go?—No; many people come by road; it is eleven Irish miles to Castleblayney, and to Carrickmacross twenty Irish miles by the coach-road to Carrickmacross through Castleblayney, or it is shorter by Ballybay.

7314. The north-western section could as easily get to Clones as to Monaghan?—They would have to come to Monaghan first to get to it.

7315. About Rostown?—Yes; that is a mountain part; that is uninhabited; it is nine miles from where they live to Monaghan by road.

7316. County Clerks paid, I believe, £20,000 as its contribution to the erection of the asylum buildings here?—They must have paid a good deal more.

7317. They contributed a large amount at any rate, and if there was any scheme by which Clerks had to make an asylum of its own it would probably look for a refund from you?—I am afraid so.

7318. If there is no such scheme carried out the asylum buildings are not sufficiently large to accommodate the number of insane people?—So it is said.

7319. And your board were of opinion that some of these workhouses might be used for asylum inmates and prevent the necessity of further expense?—Yes; for the inmates.

7320. If a workhouse were devoted to that, what workhouse do you think would be most convenient?—My board did not decide that question.

7321. What would you think in your private capacity?—I would not like to give an opinion; I don't know them well enough.

7322. But Monaghan would be the nearest?—I won't give you any opinion.

7323. CHAIRMAN.—How are the lunatics brought in?—Principally on outside cars.

7324. For what distance?—Long distances.

7325. Down near Clones?—The people from that point come by rail through Clones, but from the western part of the County Monaghan, and Clones, Carrickmacross, and Ballybay, you see them on cars coming through the town; some come by railway.

7326. Are they paid for by the asylum committee?—I don't know.

7327. Does it come into the accounts?—It does not come to me. I only get a demand for a certain sum of money.

7328. Mr. MULLEN.—How far is it from the town of Monaghan to Monaghan Road station?—Five Irish miles.

7329. What town would you say in Monaghan is the most central town; this is a matter of geography?—The most central town of the county is Ballybay; I know that from political reasons; we always met for political purposes in Ballybay.

7330. That is the political centre?—No; it is the geographical centre.

7331. How far is Ballybay from Monaghan?—About eight Irish miles by road.

7332. Therefore when you want a town which is a union centre Monaghan would be the union centre of the county?—For the northern part of the county.

7333. Take that County Council map in your hand.

CHAIRMAN.—It is hardly fair to ask Mr. Rush. The County Council have not gone into this, and Mr. Rush is only here to give evidence officially.

7334. Mr. MULLEN.—Perhaps it would not interfere with the views of the County Council if you pointed out Clones to me on that map; is it on the borders of the county?—On the borders of Fernagh and Clones.

7335. If you wanted to select an out of the way place could you select a better town than Clones?—Well, I won't press you!

Mr. THOMAS TOL, J.P., examined.

Nov. 26, 1900.

Mr. THOMAS
Tol.

7334. Mr. Martin.—You are the Chairman of the County Council?—Yes.

7335. You have heard the evidence of Mr. Rushe, the secretary?—Yes.

7336. And you agree with what he said?—Yes.

7337. The County Council are in favour of a reduction of the number of existing workhouses; they consider there are too many?—Yes.

7338. And it would be an advantage to the ratepayers to have them reduced?—Yes.

7339. How many do you think there ought to be?—There should not be more than two.

7340. You don't say either, I suppose, which two that ought to be?—No; the County Council did not wish to take sides.

7341. But, of course, you have your own private opinion, but don't wish to express it?—No.

7342. Mr. Dransfield.—When you would have only two workhouses would you contemplate doing away with the existing unions?—Really, I would not go in for amalgamated unions at present; the principal thing that concerned the County Council was to reduce the rate, and the doing away with two workhouses would considerably reduce the rate.

7343. How would you utilize the workhouses?—I don't see why they should not be worked by a joint committee.

7344. You think that would accomplish all the economy that would be required, and there would be no necessity of doing away with the unions?—If the joint committee worked properly I think the unions should not be done away with.

7345. You have not got sufficient accommodation in your county asylum in Monaghan?—No.

7346. Do you think that any of these buildings that would be thus done away with could be utilised for the purpose of supplementing that?—That is the opinion of the County Council.

7347. Have you any idea as to which of these workhouses would be most convenient for that purpose?—I decline to express an opinion.

7348. CHAIRMAN.—If the union is kept on and the workhouse closed, what would be the duty of the Guardians of the union that lost its workhouse?—Their business would be to look after the affairs of the union, and I think if a joint committee was formed—

7349. That is what I want to know; what would the duties of the Guardians be?—They must meet to discharge the business of the Rural Council.

7350. I am speaking of the Board of Guardians?—They could look after the business of the union itself.

7351. Mr. Martin.—Mr. Tol's suggestion was that there should be a joint committee to manage all the business and do all the duties of the Guardians. Mr. Tol does not suggest that the union should be kept up.

7352. CHAIRMAN.—I think he seemed to say he would not touch the union; he would break up the workhouse. I don't see how, when you come to deal with it as a practical case, how you could manage it?—How can Clons and Monaghan work the Lunatic Asylum with a joint committee?

7353. If you propose to do it that way that is all right; then the Board of Guardians would go with the workhouse?—No; the Board of Guardians could appoint so many members from their own body.

7354. Could not the County Council do that?—Well, even if the County Council so arranged, it would have to be wrought by a committee from some body.

7355. Mr. Dransfield.—Who would administer the outdoor relief?—That would be a matter to be settled afterwards.

7356. That would be a matter that could be more easily administered by people having a small area to control?—With proper supervision, I don't see that that would affect it.

7357. Mr. Martin.—The relieving officer could report to the joint committee?—Yes; the Guardians have very little to do if there is a competent relieving officer.

7358. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Your idea is that every union should remain intact and be responsible for its own expenditure under the Poor Law?—Yes.

7359. Your idea is that there should be some representative body to look after the interests of each union?—Exactly.

7360. To see that the people from that union were properly treated and the cost was properly placed upon the union?—That is my idea.

Mr. THOMAS CHATFIELD, J.P., examined.

Mr. Thomas
Chatfield.

7361. Mr. Martin.—You are the Chairman of the Council No. 2 Rural District Council?—Yes.

7362. Just tell the Commissioners what your views on this subject are?—Well, the majority of the Council is in favour of amalgamation.

7363. CHAIRMAN.—Would you wish to break up Cooteshill?—I don't exactly say that, because there appears to me to be a body of selfishness in the thing all round, and every one wants to keep their own, but certainly I would be in favour of amalgamation for a reduction of taxation. I think the majority of our Council are for that.

7364. Mr. Martin.—You don't charge the County Council with selfishness?—Oh, no; certainly not.

7365. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—How many workhouses do you think would suit the needs of the county?—I think two would be quite sufficient.

7366. CHAIRMAN.—You would be willing to go into Clons or Castleblayney?—I don't say that, or the Cooteshill people would be down on me for that too; but if Cooteshill is going to be closed up we would like to be in the County Monaghan.

7367. Mr. Dransfield.—Supposing you had to go into some other union, which would be more convenient for you—Clons or Monaghan?

7368. CHAIRMAN.—On Castleblayney?—There are seven districts in Cooteshill No. 2; there are two of these nearer to Castleblayney and there are five of them nearer Clons.

7369. Mr. Dransfield.—They are all on the railway line that runs through Ballybay as to Clons?—Yes; some of them come from Rockcross on the Great Northern Railway.

7370. Which is the more natural town for you to go to—Clons or Monaghan?—Clons, surely, from each side.

7371. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—Castleblayney seems to have the largest number of inmates of any union in the county?—Yes.

7372. Is there any reason for that that you know of?—No; except that it is a poorer country.

7373. It seems to have almost double the number of inmates of the other unions?—I think that although we would be in favour of the amalgamation of workhouses, I don't think it would be prudent to have amalgamation of unions, as far as I can see.

7374. Mr. Martin.—There is a large portion of Castleblayney in Armagh; perhaps that accounts for the number?—Most of our Council would be in favour of having rural district rating.

7375. CHAIRMAN.—You want to close workhouses; for what purpose would you keep up unions?—We think the smaller they are it will be to the interest of the people who represent them to look better after them with regard to outdoor relief and everything of the kind; the smaller the division is the people who represent that division are more in favour of looking after it and keeping down the rate; when it goes into unions rating they are not so anxious.

7376. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—And while you would like to see the inmates put together and classified in the large institution, you would like to retain for the Guardians the supervision of the out?—Yes.

7377. The question of outdoor relief has been raised here?—Yes; we don't go very much in for it at Cooteshill; not in No. 2; they do in No. 1 a little.

7378. Are there many labourers in your district?—They are very scarce.

7379. CHAIRMAN.—You have to pay your share of the No. 1 outdoor relief?—Yes; that is our grievance.

7380. It would rather encourage you to get additional cases in your district so as to equalize the balance?—Yes; certainly; I think it does. If it was a rural district rating I don't think there would be the same extent of outdoor relief.

7381. Or dispensary district rating?—Yes.

7382. Mr. MURTAGHAN.—The smaller the better for you?—Yes.

7383. CHAIRMAN.—Take, for instance, Monaghan Union and Monaghan rural district, which, with the exception of the town, are identical, and in Cooteshill you have two equally-balanced rural districts, but in the

Nov. 24, 1905.
Mr. Thomas
Crawford.

other places you have not?—They are not equally balanced—No. 1 is considerably larger than No. 2. It is the opinion of No. 2 that we are the milch cow for No. 1, and we would be inclined for amalgamation.

7394. Mr. MURPHY.—Is that because No. 1 includes the town of Coothill?—Yes.

7395. CHAIRMAN.—That is where a good deal of the outdoor relief is?—Yes; a good deal is in the town of Coothill.

7396. Mr. Martin.—Some of these divisions of Coothill are actually nearer to Monaghan than to Clones; do you know Letterkeeny, for example?—Yes.

7397. Is not that nearer to Monaghan than to Clones?—There may be a few outlying townlands, but certainly, if you take in railway accommodation, it is six miles from Mr. Swan's Cross to Monaghan.

7398. How far by direct road is Clones away?—It is about six or seven.

7399. By road?—Yes; about eight miles.

7400. How far is it from Monaghan Road to New Blinn?—Four.

7401. How far from New Blinn to Clones?—Four more—Irish miles.

7402. How far is it from Monaghan town to Monaghan Road?—Six miles, I believe.

7403. Did you hear Mr. Roche's evidence that it is five?—I believe it is six; I understood it to be six miles.

Mr. Martin.—That is all for the County Council.

Mr. Muldoon.—I repeat, sir, the Monaghan Board of Guardians, and I will examine some witnesses before you, principally upon this question of amalgamation. I have but very few observations to address to the Commission. The Monaghan Guardians are in favour of amalgamation, and they submit to the Commission that they are situated in the centre of the county for all practical purposes; that they have already the most important union in the county, the valuation of which is over £100,000. The valuation of any other union situated alone in the county is not more than half that. Carrickmacross—and there is this to be said for Carrickmacross; it is the only other union after Monaghan that is situated entirely in the County Monaghan. The view of the Monaghan Guardians is this—that that portion of Castleblayney Union which goes into the County Armagh might be utilized in the Armagh Poor Law system, and that portion of Clones Union that goes to Fermanagh might be left there, either to Lomahoe or Keshmullen, and the present workhouse in Monaghan would be ample for all the Poor Law needs of the county. The valuation of the Clones Union is only about £62,000—I am not at this moment familiar with the actual figures of the valuation of the portion of the Clones Union which is in this county, but I should imagine it is about half that, and at this stage I desire to say that I think the Clones Union has acted very skillfully in this matter, because it must have seen early from its own and important that it was one of the doomed unions, and it forthwith commenced to see what portions of other unions it might absorb, and has been here and in Fermanagh courageous enough to say that it should come into the very centre of the County Monaghan and absorb the union, which is the largest and most important union in the county. I think that was a very bold scheme worthy of Dr. Tynan at his best. I think it will be observed that all the evidence here, sir, is in favour of amalgamation, but, of course, when it comes to the amalgamation of particular unions then we have considerable objection, but there is underlying all the evidence that has been given a strong idea that two unions upon the County Monaghan are an intolerable imposition, and the Monaghan Guardians look to the Commission to suggest a remedy for this state of things, and we trust you will report in favour of one union workhouse being sufficient for the entire county, geographically and every other way; then we suggest the most important one should remain—that is Monaghan. They have excellent buildings there, they have accommodation there for more than three times the average number of paupers resident in all the union workhouses of the county. Under these circumstances they think their union should remain and the others should be absorbed. We don't go into the question of sharing unions and leaving Guardians; we think the workhouses should go, and the Guardians should go. Of course, this won't interfere with the ordinary Local Government business of the county, for the District Councils will remain for the administration of the Acts which have been entrusted to them.

Dr. HALL examined.

7394. Mr. Muldoon.—Are you medical officer of the Monaghan Union Workhouse?—I am.

7395. How long have you filled that position?—About twenty-three years.

7396. Have you yourself considered the question of amalgamation of unions in this county?—I have.

7397. What is your view?—I think one union quite sufficient for the county—one workhouse.

7398. And do you think that one should be situated in the centre of the county?—As near the centre as possible.

7399. I believe Ballybay is actually the geographical centre?—So I have heard from Mr. Roche today.

7400. But they have no union workhouse there, and how far is Monaghan from Ballybay?—About seven miles.

7401. It is your view then that the union workhouse should remain at Monaghan?—Either Monaghan or Castleblayney.

7402. The workhouse has good buildings?—Yes.

7403. And it would accommodate far more than the number of paupers which are now in all the workhouses of the county?—It would probably accommodate 600.

7404. What would be your proposition as regards lunatics confined in the workhouses of the county?—I would like to see them under the lunatic asylum authorities.

7405. What would you do with the idiots in the workhouses?—Well, send them to lunatic asylums.

7406. CHAIRMAN.—Do you mean all mental cases?—Yes; should be transferred to asylums.

7407. Mr. Muldoon.—As to the boarding out of inmates, what is your view?—I would certainly board out children when they come to four or five years of age.

7408. CHAIRMAN.—Or even younger, would you think?—As soon as they can safely be boarded out.

7409. As soon as they can eat what is going?—As early as possible.

7410. Mr. Muldoon.—You think the boarding out of inmates would lead to some abuse?—I am afraid it would. I am afraid it would lead to the extension of outdoor relief—that is to grown-up inmates.

7411. CHAIRMAN.—It would be outdoor relief in another name?—Yes.

7412. Mr. Muldoon.—Would you be in favour of boarding out harmless lunatics?—That might be done with advantage.

